RICHARD SHORT, the dynamiter, who inflicted eleven knife wounds on Captain Phelan in Rossa's "den," has been held for trial.

WILLIAM C. KINGSLEY, chief stockholder of the Brooklyn Eagle, and constructor of the East River Bridge, died on the 20th, aged 52.

HORACE FERREN, deputy postmaster at Batavia, N. Y., committed suicide last Saturday. A discrepancy had been discovered in his accounts.

HEBER NEWTON preached last Sunday on the subject of "Materialism." There was no heresy in the discourse and consequently little of interest.

THE English troops sent to Africa to subdue the False Prophet of the Soudan were at last accounts on the retreat with heavy losses of officers and men.

THE spinners of Fall River are still on strike. The horsecar drivers of the same place hav been notified that their wages will be reduced 10 per cent. It is thought that they will strike also.

SIX Parsees from Bombay, India, arrived in this city on the 22d. Three of them are oculists, two physicians, and one is an interpreter. They hav come here to cure the sick, and tackle the cholera when it arrives.

THE Rev. William T. Osman, of Stamford, Conn., who was bound over in the Superior Court in September last charged with criminal assault on a six-year-old girl of that place, has been sentenced to one year in the Bridgeport jail.

AN Ohio tramp one day last week saw a broken rail on the Cincinnati, Hamilton, and Dayton road, and flagged an approaching train, thus preventing a disaster to the vice-president of the company. He was rewarded with a place on the road.

THE Washington monument was dedicated last Saturday with civic pomp. This monument is the highest in the world, its cap-stone being 555 feet above the ground. It can be seen at a distance of twenty miles in all directions. The corner-stone was laid July 4, 1848. Robert C. Winthrop, then speaker of the House of Representativs, made the principal address. The cap-stone was put in position Dec. 6, 1884. The entire cost of the monument was $1,187,710. Congress contributed $900,000. At its base the obelisk measures 55 feet square, and the walls are 15 feet thick, and at the roof 7 inches thick. The pyramidal top begins at the 500-foot mark, where the dimensions are 34 feet 6 inches. The roof is 55 feet high, the weight of the crown piece is 3,300 pounds, and the weight of the entire shaft is 82,000 tons. The area covered by the foundation is 16,002 square feet; the subfoundation is composed of Portland cement concrete, 15,000 barrels of which were used in the work. An iron stairway of 900 steps and an elevator of 7 tons capacity furnish facilities for ascending the interior.

Communications.

Too Much Faith as Bad as Too Little.

Faith is a power; ignorance is a great power; knowledge is a greater power; love is the greatest power. Faith is powerful for good or evil, as the case may be; so is ignorance; but often evil takes the lead. It has been said by an old saint, "Love and do what you please, for love never did wrong." Genuin love never did wrong. Faith is only the love of belief. Neither faith nor love has eyes. Love and faith are both blind, and both powerful for good and evil. The intellect is often the slave of one or the other, or both. Here is a strange proposition, that shows the power of faith, and at the same time refutes the absurd notion that faith cannot remove mountains. The mountains are mental ones, not physical ones. A belief in a proposition of any kind, whether true or false, has the same effect upon the believer, so far as acts of volition are concerned. Whatever a man believes, it appears true to him. His belief, whether built upon evidence or not, is acted out by him. Let one man believe in one world at a time, and he will act for one world. Let another man believe in two worlds at once, and he will act for both. Should his faith lead to one world, in preference to the other, he will giv the most of his time and ability to the world he thinks the better. The Spiritualists think summer-land better than earth, and spirit better than body, therefore two worlds claim their attention, this world and the spirit world. The spirit world being far better than this, claims the preference.

The Atheist or Materialist believes in this world, knows nothing of another world, therefore concentrates all his powers on this. Thus stands the difference between the Atheist and Spiritualist. One givs the better part of his time and the better part of his love to the spiritual world, while the other consecrates all his life-energies to this life. They may both be good and useful men, but the Atheist is a better man for this earth than the Spiritualist, who divides his time and love between this world and the one built upon faith. The man who believes in another world will act for the other one, and in proportion to his belief will this fair world be neglected. Too much belief therefore becomes injurious. To believe, or not to believe, and what to believe, apart from evidence, are considerations for both the Spiritualist and Atheist.

If the proposition is true that a conscious belief has the same effect on the believer, so far as acts of volition go, then the Atheist is justified in saying that faith leads to erroneous acts, and erroneous acts to misery. Let it be taken that a spiritual life does exist; that being granted, then the belief is not erroneous, and the acts of Spiritualists do not lead to misery. Let it be granted that Spiritism is false, then it must lead to misery.

This is certain, the man who givs his love, his time, his energies, to the improving of this world, instead of dreaming by a medium's dark cabinet, or a kicking table, is the better man for earth and humanity. The other may be in his heaven of fancies. He may hav acquired the power to giv his fancies a form and locality, and by so doing estrange his love of this world, to the extent of his faith in the other.

It is supposed by the Spiritualists, and they aver it to be true, that the spirits are as wise as mortals. That being so, let the argument stand upon the wisdom of the spirits. Belief has no virtue, disbelief no crime, because man believes upon what appears to him evidence. If the evidence is at fault, that is not the man's fault; he did not make the evidence. Thus man believes, or disbelieves, in accordance with the evidence. When the evidence is in the balance, then man waits for more evidence. The belief of the doubter is evidence wanted; hence he believes he doubts, and wisely says that he knows that he does not know. If the spirits are philosophers, they will know that a belief in a proposition of any kind, whether true or false, has the same effect upon the believer, so far as acts of volition are concerned.

It has been shown that a belief in Spiritualism, whether true or false, is not as good for this world as the faith of Atheism. Atheism teaches the duties of this life are primary ones, and whether there is another world or not, there is no virtue in believing it, and no vice in disbelieving it. If spirits are wise, they ought to know that to believe does not prove, to disbelieve does not disprove; and as their presence here upon earth only abstracts man's time, love, and energy from earth, therefore, if true, the spirits are doing man an injury.

There is no virtue, or vice, in a belief of any kind. Whatever a man sincerely believes, he will allow to be practiced upon himself. If he will not allow his own doctrin to be reduced to practice upon himself, he does not believe in what he teaches. The spirits are here truly unphilosophical; they will not allow their own doctrin to be reduced to practice upon themselvs, and they make belief a virtue, and disbelief a crime. They claim the right to make all the conditions, and allow no one to make conditions but themselvs. They thrust conditions upon man, but man must not thrust conditions upon them. They ask for right and privileges for themselvs they will not giv to another. They are our guests; they come uninvited, and demand to hav their own ways. They are only spirits without bodies; we are both spirits and bodies. We hav a better right to this world than they. If we make conditions, the conditions would be to expose trickery. The conditions of the spirits smack of deception. They never say a wise thing, and seldom a good thing. They all appear to be a little short of honesty, and very much in the rear of wisdom. They are genuin prohibitionists; they prohibit all conditions, only those they make. They are spirits without brains, as well as bodies, or else they would see the tyranny of their acts. The Christians hav a tyrant, who says, "Believe or be damned." The Spiritualists hav a host of tyrants—spirits who say, "Believe or be damned." The Christians hav priests, as embassadors from heaven. The Spiritualists hav mediums, as embassadors from the spirits. Both parties are with their credentials—one from heaven, the other from summer-land. If the priests and the mediums were authorized, the one set by God, and the other by the spirits, both would be able to show their authority. Granting that both hav received their credentials from the courts in the other land of the dead, even then their faith in the dead-man's-land abstracts man's love and energy from this life. Let it be granted that the dead are alive, that is of no importance to the people of earth, because belief is no merit, and disbelief no crime. If dead-man's-land is a fact, then all will go to it, because nothing should be punished but crime. Disbelief is not a crime, therefore the unbeliever cannot be punished, and will enjoy dead-man's-land as well as the believer.

Belief is not a virtue. When the believer goes to dead-man's-land he cannot be rewarded for his faith, because belief is neither a merit nor a virtue. Hence the less faith in dead-man's-land, and the more knowledge in this, will be the better for the inhabitants of this world.

The folks who believe they will be alive when they are dead lose their time in churches, in seances, giving their love and money to keep the embassadors teaching that to believe is a merit, and a reward will be given in the other world for so much faith, and punishment for so much disbelief. Here the Christian and the Spiritualist meet; both teach so much pay for so much faith. The Christian is bribed with a crown of glory; the Spiritualist with the bribe of a summer-land, and the power to come back to earth, where he can take his choice of materializing at a seance, or kicking beneath a table for the amusement of believers.

If faith is no virtue, then the believer will not be any better in dead-man's-land than the man who did not believe. Belief depends upon evidence. Evidence commands belief or disbelief, and the want of evidence causes doubt. How foolish it must appear to reward or punish the believer, doubter, or disbeliever! Allowing dead-man's-land to be a truth, we hav nothing to do with it until we pass over Jordan. "Make the most of this world, and leave it better than we found it." This world is enough for this life. He who cannot be content here, and keeps looking for another world, loses the pleasure of this to a great extent. And as spirits remain human, he will carry his passion for another world into dead-man's-land, hence after he has gone through all the spirit spheres he will be looking for some other dead-man's-land to remove to. The man who is content with one world will strive to be happy and make the most of his lot, and if there should happen anything wrong, he will do his best to put it right in the world in which he livs, whether that world is dead-man's-land or the land of the living. Belief is very powerful, although no merit lies in it. It is so powerful as to influence men to see their fancies as realities. Experience teaches whatever a man believes it appears to him as a truth; that faith, like the muscle, grows in strength by continual exercise, and in length of time not only produces belief in spirits, but the belief begins to present the spirits to the eyes, first of the mind, then to the eyes of the body, and things that are not are seen as if they were realities, while realities are seen not. This is removing mountains by an act of faith. Mountains can be cast into the sea by Spiritualists as well as by Christians. When a Spiritualist refutes a Christian's absurd ideas of the other world's affairs, he is only refuting himself. They are both sailing in the same stream of faith. They both reward and punish for faith and doubt. Here is one absurdity in Spiritualism not to be found in Christianity. Spiritism ignores the power of love, while Christianity acknowledges it. Christianity teaches love begets faith; faith and love win heaven. In Spiritism, love does not win the spirits. Your wife, your mother, or your child, the being for whom you would hav laid down your own life, has gone to dead-man's-land. You loved dearly the departed. The departed truly loved you. Here are the two strong loves existing between two beings, one on earth and the other in summer-land. These two powerful, honest loves can not bring you two together. Yet there is a man called a medium. He is the high priest of dead-man's-land; he can summon your dear departed to come to him. The departed one never loved him, but, on the contrary, always despised him. The medium always feared the departed one. Between the medium and the departed one existed a great dislike. Between you and your dearly beloved one there existed the pure honest love, yet your love and the love of the departed one are not strong enough to attract you two together. The dislike existing between the medium and the departed one attracts the two. Upon earth dislikes always repel. If dislike repels upon earth, why does it not repel in dead-man's land? Loves attract upon earth; why cannot loves attract in dead-man's-land? There is your love to attract, there is the love of the departed one to attract; yet these two honest, pure loves can not bring you two together. There is the dislike of the departed one to the medium while the departed one lived upon earth; that one always despised the medium, and the medium feared that one. Hence dislike and fear can and do bring the medium and the departed one together, while pure, noble love can not. Christianity is bad enough, but not half as bad and foolish as this Spiritism. If there is any truth in Spiritism, the loves would attract, and the occupation of the mediums would be gone. As spirits retain their affection, their likings and dislikings, hence the spirits would come to those whom they love, and not to those whom they hated and despised. Let all admirers of faith learn to know that too much faith is as bad as too little, and that the right faith is a handy one, because it is built upon evidence only, finding no merit in belief, or demerit in doubt or disbelief; looks for no reward on account of faith, either in Christian or spiritual dead-man's-land. If there is a heaven, knowledge, the foundation of genuin faith, sets it open to all honest men, and welcomes all, whether they be believers, doubters, or disbelievers, to that world of shadows.

JUDAS.

Social Problems.—No. I.

The Irishman who told his shoemaker to make his boots as large as he could afford for the money has been laughed at a good deal for his folly. So the man who builds a house much larger than the needs of his family require, because he can afford it—or thinks he can—is generally supposed to lack brains. But is it not equally foolish of a nation to try to occupy a country from two to ten times as large as they can use? How foolish it would hav been of the Pilgrim Fathers if they had tried, on first landing, to occupy the whole continent, and started at once to build roads from Boston to San Francisco, and from the Gulf to the lakes, in order that they might open up the country! But this folly would only hav been greater in degree than that of trying to occupy even now more of it than we hav people to fill up. See what it costs us now to build railways through vast tracts of country inhabited only by Indians. A railroad is not needed now where nobody livs any more than it was two hundred years ago. We are told that a railway opens out a country; that people will go a long way from settlements to locate on land as soon as there is a railroad for them. But why should we want people to go far from settlements? Why should we want people to scatter so much? Why should people go west of New York to settle so long as there are plenty of good lands there lying idle? Why should people go west of Ohio until all the good lands in Ohio are cultivated?

Horace Greeley advised young men to go West, but why should they go West so long as there are thousands of acres of land lying in sight of their paternal homes unused? Why should they go West to put in fields of wheat where it will cost them thirty cents a bushel to send it to market, when there are thousands of acres of unused lands lying where it would only cost three cents a bushel to send wheat to market? Is it not as foolish of a nation to want to fill up a country larger than they need as for the Irishman to want boots larger than he needed? See what it costs the government to send mails hundreds of miles to places where almost nobody livs.

What is the cause of people scattering so much? And why do they huddle and crowd together so much as they do in the large cities? Why do they go either to one extreme or the other? This is the greatest of all social problems. Whatever is the cause of this state of things is the main cause of all our social evils. Whatever will cure this evil will do more for the human family than the invention of the steam-engin and printing combined. I hope my readers will take the pains to study out this important problem.

Let me advise you, then, instead of going West, to take a walk out in any direction, and continue to walk until you come to a piece of land lying idle, lying unused from year to year. Then make a halt. Look it over and see if it is good land or not. Call upon the family living nearest to it, and inquire why that land is lying from year to year in an unoccupied and unimproved condition. They will stare at you, and probably think you hav fallen from the moon. But you must tell them that you are trying to solve a great social problem; that you want to know why it is that people pass by good unoccupied land, and go beyond it to locate. In short, you want to know why people scatter so much. If you are living in a city you will be told a story something like this: "John Smith, a banker down-town, bought that lot fifteen years ago for $400. He has been offered $4,000 for it by the man who built just beyond it on the next lot, who wanted to build there, but Mr. Smith wanted $5,000 for the lot, and wouldn't take any less."

"Why did Mr. Smith buy the lot when he didn't want to use it?" you inquire.

"He bought it," you are told, "to make money out of it."

"How can he make money out of it and not use it?"

"Because he knew the lot would rise in value."

"He has to pay taxes on the lot, has he not?"

"Yes, but it has risen in value so fast that it has paid him well to pay the taxes on it and hold it in idleness. You see, he could sell it any day for ten times what he paid for it. He could sell it and make $3,000 on it after paying the taxes."

You may now start home; you hav found out the solution of the whole problem. Land is taxed so low that it pays rich men to buy it when they do not want it, and hold it for its rise in value. This is why people buy land they do not want; this is why the young man must go West, while millions of acres of land lie unused in the East. This is why people scatter so much.

The cure for this evil is to increase the tax on land so as to make it impossible to make money by buying it and holding it in idleness for its rise in value; if people would not do this we would not occupy a larger country than we need to use. No person would go far from home to locate, so long as there was room for him near home. J. G. MALCOLM.

Hutchinson, Kan.

In Re Malcolm.

When a man builds a foundation that is far out of plumb, or is defectiv in consequence of great holes in it, people are very apt to regard the superstructure reared thereon as an undesirable and even dangerous habitation. Mr. Malcolm admits that he probably made an "oversight" in the statement of his fundamental law of political economy. People hav a habit of losing confidence in those who say one thing and mean another, whether the mistake is the result of design or carelessness. Allow me to gently inform Mr. Malcolm, and his interested correspondent also, that it was not a question of style, nor of argument, that I had in mind when I criticised the former article, but a question of facts. These are truly said to be stubborn things, and they are not the least affected by what Mr. Malcolm "presumes," nor by the opinions of nine-tenths, or any other fraction, of readers. In the facts lay the force of my criticism, but if Mr. Malcolm feels any happier for speaking of these as "sophisms," I am willing that he should be so pleased. He might call this earth a sophism and feel better afterward, and no one would wish to deprive him of his harmless pleasure. Facts are the things that crush the life out of styles, arguments, opinions, and theories.

The case is very simple. Mr. Malcolm made some statements that were positivly misleading. I knew they were. I did not say what I thought I had heard some man say. I corrected those errors in the interest of those who are seeking homes instead of studying theories. I had no other object. In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 20th Mr. Malcolm says: "There is very little waste or useless land in Michigan, and I see no reason why private individuals should seek to own it." Now, if he wished to giv prominence to the idea that no person ought to hav property in land, and had made a remark to that effect uncoupled with the direct statement immediately preceding the remark about ownership, I should hav paid no attention to it. But when he says that there is very little waste or useless land in Michigan, duty constrains me to say positivly and finally that Mr. Malcolm knows nothing at all about Michigan, and his random statements only sink him deeper in the mire of confusion and error. Why doesn't he take his own state, or his own county, or some place he knows something about, for his illustrations? Does he fear that home critics would be more severe than I hav been?

Some people believe that there should be no such thing as absolute ownership of land. I hav never attacked nor defended that idea. Mr. Malcolm's peculiar views in regard to government and taxation I hav neither time nor inclination to discuss, but I cannot refrain from saying that there are a few sentences in his article of Dec. 20th that are so exceedingly "rich" that the richness oozes out at every pore. For instance: "The government should therefore only grant privileges for brief periods, probably for not longer than one year. Governments hav no right to giv privileges to anyone, and if they do giv privileges to any one citizen for less than the privilege is worth"—etc. Surely, a man capable of constructing an all-embracing and elaborately finished system of political economy ought to hav seen that if he had put the second of the above statements first, he might hav saved the trouble of writing the other. If governments hav no right to giv privileges at all, what in the name of one of Thomas Paine's works is the use of talking about granting them for a long or short time, for more or less than they are worth? If you admit that government has an absolute right to grant privileges for one year or any other time, why deny that right in the very next sentence? If government has no right to grant a privilege, it cannot acquire that right by demanding what the privilege is worth, or more than it is worth. Deny the right of government to grant any privilege, or to exist at all, and leave out everything about time and value, and you are consistent.

Surely there must be an "oversight," or an overskirt, or some overshadowing thing, here, that excludes the light from the "true inwardness," the true kernel, of those statements above quoted. There are other "good" passages, but notice of them must be omitted. Mr. Malcolm's articles, owing to his too numerous oversights and certain idiosyncrasies, lead the reader off, as it were, from the true drift of the argument, and cruelly leave him in the gloomy land of quandary. They hav an unfortunate resemblance to the minor premis of the syllogism without major or conclusion. When you hav finished one of them, you cannot tell exactly where you started from, and there is much uncertainty as to your whereabouts when you stop. But the writer's motivs are undoubtedly philanthropic, and he may expound his views at great length without criticism from me, provided he does not introduce unwarranted statements about real things. N. G. W.

Religion in Politics.

For over one hundred years the Constituion of these United States, as created and acquiesced in by our forefathers, has stood the test of each and every contingency that has arisen. The fact that it has stood such test speaks to the sound discretion and discernment of its framers. If, in their judgment, it had been deemed necessary that we, as a people, should recognize a religious originator of all things, that through his workings this government had its inception and birth—if, as the result of this overruling providence, we should hav expressed our allegiance and become outwardly bound, then our forefathers would hav taken such steps as would hav accomplished that object. The framers of the Constitution, knowing the futility of uniting church and state, the consequent evils that necessarily follow such union, and the classes represented by them, recognizing the result, desiring peace for themselvs and posterity, created, passed, and acquiesced in the articles of the Constitution, leaving out all recognition of religious supremacy and religions of every sort and kind. It would seem that any objection of the character sought, if worthy of consideration, should hav been remedied at that time, and not after a hundred years of acquiescence, when it has become a matter of national life. I thoroughly recognize the fact that because a thing has been endured and acquiesced in for years is no sufficient reason why it should still be continued, or why it should not be done away with. But when we take into consideration the fact that at the time of the adoption of the Constitution the people were more orthodox than at present; that they enacted harsher and stricter religious laws, were more superstitious as to their dependence upon a god for existence; when we recognize that from that day to this orthodoxy has been on the gradual decline, that liberality of thought and religious ideas hav been on the increase, we are led to the conclusion that if a people hidebound as they were in religious matters could exist and prosper with such a deficiency as claimed, certainly we, at this day, should be equally as able to do so. As a nation we hav prospered, grown rich, and progressed with a rapidity unequaled by any nation on the face of the earth, the wonder and admiration of all. Shall we check this flow by placing impediments in the road, destroying the peace that now exists, creating petty turmoils and wars of extermination? The recognition of a God in the Constitution is one step toward the accomplishment of such a result. This country was settled by those who sought to escape religious intolerance and a God in the Constitution. Shall their descendants be subjected to the very evils they sought to evade? As we now are, all religions stand upon an equal footing, none having authority over another, tne one gaining converts as against the other by reason of some principle or thing contained therein that attracts, each standing upon the merits involved in its particular creed. It is better that it remain thus than that a recognition of a supreme being be incorporated into our national life. If Congress has the power to make such incorporation, it has the further power to incorporate a certain one as the established religion of the nation, and there will be no rest until that object is accomplished. I doubt peace will then be attained. The one having the greatest influence, force, and power will become the religion of the country, although forced upon the people. The other sects, being dissatisfied, will seek its overthrow. The following, taken from the Cairo, Ill., Bulletin of July, 11, 1884, is a sample, though on a small scale, as to what the result will be:

"Several months ago, in the town of Columbus, Ky., it became necessary to elect a new set of officers to run the city government, and the election was run by the Methodist denomination there to such an extent as to elect all the officers from that religious body. Not long after, great persecution was enacted upon other denominations, such as arresting and fining them for little things of no consequence. These persons so fined were the leading and most prominent men of the city. Following upon the track of this the Methodist authorities, through their minister, commenced a war upon all the other Christian denominations of the town, even going so far as to say that the Methodist church was the only gate that stands ajar to admit all to the heavenly beyond, and as to liken that denomination to a huge elephant, and all other Christian bodies to so many little boys with pop-guns shooting wads at them."

Another result of the coalition of church and state is readily recognized when we take into consideration the course pursued by such of the clergy as participated in the late political campaign. Personal invectiv, indiscretion, puerility, a lowering of personal dignity, stirring up contention, producing fear and instability in political circles lest their efforts should prove abortiv, are only the stepping-stones to what would result should the uniting of church and state be accomplished. Why cannot well-enough be let alone? All enjoy the privileges that are awarded to others. Having equal rights with others, we should hav the discernment not to endeavor to establish that which will prove a detriment to the best interests of the country. Of what practical benefit will be the incorporation of God in the Constitution? Will it make the crops any better? Will it ease our financial market? Will it increase the productivness of our mines? Will it enlarge our manufacturing interests? Will it increase our importance among the nations of the earth? Will it enhance the value of our bonds? Without such addition our 4 per cents are quoted at 120. Will it increase our stability? Will it furnish renewed activity to our idle shops? Will it decrease our mortality? Without it our average lease of life is rapidly increasing. Will it increase our morality? If it will not do these things, of what benefit is the proposed change? Why occupy the time of Congress in the discussion of a matter that will in no way benefit the people? Is it to flatter God; to let him know how much we appreciate his accredited efforts? If he is possessed of the powers ascribed to him this is wholly unnecessary, as he sees and hears all we do without putting the same in black and white, or sending special messengers to notify him of our actions. Will it make us any the more law-abiding citizens? Will it elevate our moral standard? If we make this addition, what further steps are to be taken? Having acknowledged him to be the supreme ruler and head of our nation, his law must be the supreme law, the guiding-star of our daily life. This must necessarily be so in order to be consistent with our former declaration. Where are these laws to be found? In the book called the book of divine revelation, said to contain them direct from his majesty. And what are these laws? We find that lying, cheating, and deceiving, adultery, murder, war, and extermination, outrages against women, cruelty to children and animals, cannibalism, slavery, polygamy, poverty, and vagrancy, intemperance, obscenity, ignorance, and idiocy are winked at and admonished, and are the most prominent of those divine laws inaugurated by the supreme ruler. Has it not been the endeavor of our lawmakers to remedy the evils above named, to crush out these crimes—for crimes they are considered at this day—God to the contrary notwithstanding? Has it not been our aim to obviate war and extermination by peaceful arbitration? Is it the desire of the American people that the wheels of progress be turned back to a time when religious intolerance was dominant, or is it the wish of all that peace and an increase of knowledge shall predominate? The latter can only be procured by letting this particular subject remain as it is. C. W. A.

The League Secretary in Seaforth.

From the Seaforth, Ont., Sun.

On Wednesday night Mr. Putnam, as announced in our last week's issue, delivered a lecture in Cardno's Hall. On account of the inclemency of the weather there was a small audience, and quite a number who had intended to be present were no doubt prevented from being there from this circumstance. On account of the small attendance, the lecturer, with the consent and advice of the audience, changed the program, and, instead of a discourse on "Humanity in American Poetry," gave one on "The Coming Religious Demands." During the course of the lecture, which was delivered with much grace and in a clear and forcible style, and was listened to with close attention by the small but select audience, the accomplished lecturer contrasted the religion of humanity, which he defined to be an enthusiasm for truth and devotion to the cause of humanity, and assuaging human suffering in this world, with the religion of the churches, which was specially directed to the attainment of an imaginary state of bliss beyond the grave, at the sacrifice of happiness in the present state of existence. The lecture was delivered throughout in such a gentlemanly manner and with such choice language that the most sensitiv need not hav been afraid of having their religious feelings shocked. Should he ever again return to this town, we hope the public will not let the occasion slip without hearing him.

CATALOG of the Truth Seeker Company's publications sent free upon application.

The Liberal Club.

Dr. D. G. Mayo, of Newark, N. J., lectured before the Manhattan Liberal Club at its last meeting, Friday evening, the 20th. The cold snap that had kept New Yorkers shivering for the past week extended its demoralizing influence to the frequenters of the club, and not more than one hundred and fifty persons were present.

Previous to introducing the speaker, the chairman directed attention to the literature from THE TRUTH SEEKER office upon the secretary's table. This included the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL containing Mr. Wakeman's able article on the "New Apostolic Succession," the continuation of which was printed in Mr. Green's magazine, also in this paper last week. Out West, the chairman said, these articles were appreciated, but only two persons here had bought them. This went to show that a prophet was not without honor save in his own club. Dr. Mayo was then presented and received with applause. He is still a young man, of pleasing appearance and at home upon the platform. His subject was the defects and absurdities of the Bible and the Christian religion, which he examined and commented upon. His method is something like that of Mr. Reynolds —a mingling of humor, sarcasm, and ridicule, with an occasional period of sentiment and pathos. His language is rather flowery and his style sufficiently dramatic to arouse the admiration of a less coldly philosophical audience than that which attends the Liberal Club, but even upon this immobile body it was not altogether without effect. He spoke rapidly for an hour and a quarter, and any synopsis of the lecture for which room is here afforded could do it but faint justice. It is appropriate to say, however, that the Christian religion received a scorching such as it seldom experiences. The lecture should be repeated in every community in the country as an offset to the present revival craze. As the time of lecturers at the Liberal Club is restricted to one hour the whole of Dr. Mayo's discourse was not given.

The first speaker to offer criticism was Mr. Robert Blissert, who said, of all the educational institutions in the world, there was none to him like the Liberal Club. He never failed of learning something there. The words of the chairman had always been of especial value to him, and were to his mind like a cup of water to a thirsty man. Having said this, he made an excited attack upon the lecturer of the evening, and a general defense of the priests. The latter, he said, were the friends of the poor and the advocates of human equality. When Mr. Blissert had concluded his speech, it was observed that, in spite of the cold weather, he perspired copiously.

Dr. Weeks's criticism lay chiefly against the lecturer's attack upon the Bible. It was not the Bible, or the Christian religion, he thought, that should be attacked, but the authority which the church exercised over the minds of others. This was reprehensible.

Dr. Kinget said that the time for serious criticism of Christianity was past. Ridicule was the best weapon with which to assail it. Those who could reason had already discarded this superstition, and those who were incapable of reasoning could be reached only by ridicule.

Mr. Wakeman reminded Mr. Blissert that he must learn to play on the harp of a thousand strings, and that forbearance was one of those strings. He must be charitable. The lecturer was open to criticism. He had evidently fallen into the hands of an elocutionist from whom he had acquired an efflorescence of style which the subject and place did not call for. Mr. Wakeman hoped, however, that he would overcome that weakness in time, and learn to condense and deliver what he had to say in a business-like way. With this improvement the lecture would be admirable, and it was a mistake on Dr. Kinget's part to believe that the time for destructiv work against superstition had gone by. It was needed as much as ever, and the humor and wit which seemed natural to Dr. Mayo should continue to be employed. The salvation of the workingman must come through Liberalism, not through the teachings of Christ. A toiler striking against a reduction of wages would never recite to his employer with any effect the Sermon on the Mount. The lesson of that sermon is, if your wages are cut down ten per cent, throw off twenty. The laborer has no basis upon which to place his demands except in the rights of man. The lecturer had done grandly in showing that the brotherhood of man was the only true basis of religion in the world. Industrial progress was involved wholly in the success of the Liberal movement.

Dr. Mayo in his closing remarks said that the audience had heard only the worst half of his lecture, and he thought that was as good as could be expected considering the subject it dealt with. He did not know that he was to be confined to so short a time. When New York lecturers came over to Newark to speak they were given all the afternoon to free themselvs, and might, if they so desired, extend their remarks far into the night. It was then the custom of the audience to ask for more. If the chairman had allowed him to finish his discourse, he would hav saved the critics their waste of breath in attacking what he did not say. His points and arguments had not been touched. Mr. Blissert had said that the priests taught the equality of men upon earth. That was true only in the sense that when a man chanced to rise above the rest, the priests had usually effected an equality by cutting off his head. Dr. Mayo asked Mr. Blissert to look at his own country (Ireland) if he wished to see how much the priests had done for mankind.

The speaker did not allow any of the criticisms to escape his notice. They appeared to furnish him with inspiration according to their severity, and to that extent served a good purpose. His replies were appropriate and pointed.

The Kramer brothers closed the meeting with a good song. Next Friday, Ex-Governor Hoyt, of Wyoming, will speak on subjects allied with woman suffrage.

Canadian Notes.

Last evening the Rev. C. B. Reynolds, in Albert Hall, gave his reasons for leaving the pulpit. He said it was because he found many statements in the Bible which science and experience contradict. He quoted a multitude of passages to that effect, giving chapter and verse for each. The hall was crowded in every part. The audience listened with delight to the eloquent orator for two hours, which appeared only a few minutes, so spell-bound were they kept; smiles, tears, and uncontrolable mirth were at the beck and call of the magician of the rostrum. Mr. Reynolds possesses great dramatic ability. He personated in a most life-like manner the characters of a Dutchman, an Irishman, the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, and a nigger. The audience found their risible faculties excited to an uncontrolable degree, the fun was perfectly irresistible. At the close of the lecture Mr. Reynolds received an ovation. He was greeted with round after round of tremendous applause.

Gananoque and vicinity, of late, hav been the scene of many desperate battles between the champions of Freethought and the devotees of the Christian superstition. The Salvation Army invaded that region, and, after field operations on an extensiv scale, including many furious engagements, the Superstition Army finally closed around the entrenchments of Gananoque, got their siege guns in position, bombarded the town (a perfect Feu d'Enfer), and finally carried the place by assault. The Toronto headquarters of the Secularist grand army of Canada are hurrying off reinforcements to the battle-ground, and hav telegraphed instructions to the Emancipation Army, of Gananoque, to contest every inch of ground with the Superstitionists until the Toronto Freethought Army arrives. It is surmised by some that perhaps the devil is fighting on the side of the Superstition Army.

On a recent afternoon "Hell and the Devil," and in the evening "Civilization," were the subjects of the lectures of Charles Watts. Civilization consists of (1) Order, that is, security for life and property; (2) Law, that is, justice for all classes, high and low; (3) Arts of Daily Life, that is, improvement of the physical comforts and luxuries and general well-being of man; (4) Activity of the Mental Powers, that is, an expansion of the speculativ faculties—skepticism—a disposition to question and inquire into the usefulness or otherwise of existing institutions and opinions; John Stuart Mill says that no considerable improvement of any kind has ever taken place among men except being preceded by a change in speculativ opinion; (5) Civil, Religious, and Political Liberty; these are the bulwarks of all improvement, that is, civilization; (6) Ethics, that is, activity of the moral faculties—extreme sensibility as to the very highest principles of right and wrong. All these six principles of civilization were in activ operation many long centuries before the first line of the Bible was written or Christianity ever was heard of.

In the city of St. Catherines two or three Freethinkers, seekers of truth and light, hav borne the whole burden and heat of the day of the attacks from the lovers of the darkness of Christian superstition. They hav carried on a lively discussion in the public press with the clergy of the district, and challenged them to a public debate on the platform. Words of encouragement from Toronto hav been sent to the St. Catherines brethren to "fight the good fight;" be not discouraged by the smallness of your numbers; "Many are called, but few are chosen;" "Run not with the multitude to do evil;" "Hav no fellowship with the unprofitable works of darkness; don't be fainthearted because you are only two or three—"Where two or three are gathered together for the cause of emancipation from Christian superstition there is the Spirit of Humanity in the midst of them."

The platform of Albert Hall was occupied on a late occasion by J. I. Evans. His subject was "Evolution vs. Creation." Many of the orthodox clergy adhere to evolution—among others, Prebendary Lancy of Exeter cathedral. Evolution was taught by St. Augustine and other of the ancient fathers of the Christian church. Many thousands of scientific facts verify evolution, which is a scientific theory based on a countless number of analyzable, demonstrable, positiv facts. The hypothesis of creation recognizes the fact that creation took place according to the order of evolution.

Sometime since the Toronto Secular Society lost one of its brightest ornaments by the death of Mr. Charles A. Seadding, a nativ of Chepstow, Monmouth, Wales, and whose early life up to manhood was passed amid the romantic scenery of the river Wye. At a meeting of the Toronto Secular Society, the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "That in the death of Charles A. Seadding this society and the community hav suffered an irreparable loss. His genial and happy disposition, his love of liberty, his hatred of shams, superstition, and ignorance, were qualities that made him an exemplary man and Freethinker. Every act of his life showed that he was a man who possessed the courage of his convictions. And in the final act of all that severed him from loving relativs and friends, he bore the strongest testimony to the mental honesty and sincerity of his life; that principles that are good to liv by are good to die by. Such a man has not lived and died in vain. His influence and example will liv after him and will infuse courage into the minds and lives of those who think similar thoughts. For this legacy of example, and for old associations, we will hold his name in grateful remembrance. While this society mourns a great loss, we do not forget those who feel the loss still more keenly. To the family of deceased, in their affliction, we tender our sincere sympathy and condolence." The remains of Mr. Seadding we buried with the full Secularist honors and funeral ceremonies.

R. B. BUTLAND.

Toronto, Feb. 21, 1885.

Tent Fund.

The following sums hav been subscribed to provide Mr. C. B. Reynold's with a tent for summer campaigning in the interests of Freethought. Mr. Reynolds seeks to adopt popular methods for making the cause popular.

Previously acknowledged,	$38.90
J. Francis Ruggles,	1.00
Chas. Nelson,	1.00
Dr. E. F. Beale,	1.00
M. G. Shoemaker,	1.00
Alex. Risk,	1.00

Mr. Reynolds has received the subjoined letter from the corresponding secretary of the Altoona, Pa., Liberal League:

ALTOONA, PA., Feb. 15, 1885.

MR. C. B. REYNOLDS, Dear Sir: Our League, at a meeting held to-day, agreed to pay when called on the following sum for the Tent Fund, to wit:

Lewis Plack,	10.00
H. K. Filler,	1.00
Geo. Bisocker,	1.00
James Moore,	1.00
John G. Kline,	5.00
Wm. J. Burns,	1 00
D, R. Cristian,	2.00
A. H. Mehaffey,	50
Total,	$21.50

May be more to follow. Wishing you success, I am,

Respectfully, JOHN R. KEMP.

NOTICE.

All mail for C. B. Reynolds should be addresed until further notice, Box 104, North Parma, Monroe Co., N. Y. Matters of pressing importance, duplicate letters and address also, to care of THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Work in Cleveland.

Yesterday Messrs. Watts and Putnam lectured to our citizens; and their work was a flattering success. Mr. Putnam's lecture in the morning was on "The Coming Religious Demands," and was well appreciated by all present. The attendance in the morning was not large, but in the evening the Academy of Music was filled to hear Mr. Watts, styled by the Herald of this morning "the Ingersoll of England." His lecture was on "Christianity and Civilization." It was our hope to obtain an opponent to debate with Mr. Watts, but we were unable to find a willing victim to the speaker's eloquence and logic. But his lecture was well received, and many hav already asked me how soon the two speakers will return, as they wish to hear them again. We regret very much that their engagements prevented them from arriving Saturday, as we had arranged a reception in their honor. Many of our citizens would be pleased to meet them in social discourse and become acquainted with the gentlemen personally as well as by their work. We hope to hav them with us again soon, and can, no doubt, better entertain them, as the friends now are acquainted with them and their work.

We hope the next session of the League congress will be held in this city, as it will giv an impetus to the work that nothing else can. There is a large Liberal element here, that only needs to be stirred up; and then we will be as strong as any other city in the League. Messrs. Watts and Putnam hav the sincere wishes for success of the Cleveland friends.

W. I. IRVINE, Secretary.

Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 16, 1885.

MRS. SLENKER sends us word that Jeremiah Hacker is still distressed by poverty and debt, and that his little home is in danger of being sold to keep him and his wife from actual starvation. Those who hav plenty should send a little of the superfluity to J. Hacker, Berlin, N. J.

The League.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$3,267.34
Massilon,	35.00
Medina,	15.00
B. F. Lewis,	1.00
Cleveland,	20.60
J. L. Moore,	5.00
Charles J. Clark,	1.00
F. H. Hawkins,	1.00
A. Ewing,	1.00
J. H. Page,	1.00
Thomas Carter,	1.00
George T. Hogle,	1.00
W. B. Knolle,	1.00
D. M. Whitney,	1.50
Alex. Risk,	1.00
Total,	$3,353.44

News and Notes from the Field.

The second meeting at Massillon, Feb. 13th, was a marked success. The opera-house was nearly full. A new impulse has been given to the Liberal movement in this place, and an auxiliary League will be formed. Mr. Pocock, Mr. Hunt, Robert Bell, Alfred Pierce, and others, hav been for years in the ranks of Freethinkers, and are heartily in favor of the present forward step.

Mr. Watts found many of his old friends here who had heard him fifteen and twenty years ago in England, and who came—some of them—many miles to hear his ringing words again and grasp his hand.

From Massillon we went to Medina, Ohio, and here we struck a goodly company of Liberals, who were hungry for some Freethought lectures, and ready for organization and work. This town is on the Western reserve, and its leading citizens are outspoken in our cause. We felt at home at once, such a cordial welcome was given. Judge Lewis, George Hayden, J. H. Green, W. L. Farnsworth, J. Andrew, A. V. Asire, C. G. Codding, J. H. Brodley, C. J. Warner, Fremont Phillips, and others, men of character and influence, will make Medina a splendid rallying-place for Liberals. The county is full of them, and of the kind that will do something, now that the golden opportunity has come.

Our meeting on Saturday evening was most auspicious. Three or four hundred were present, and the lectures were received with the utmost appreciation. Mr. J H. Greene, editor of the Medina Gazette, introduced us, with a felicitous address. An auxiliary League will be formed, and the banner of Freedom be thrown to the breeze. The following report of our meeting we find in the Medina Gazette:

"Phœnix Hall was comfortably filled, Saturday evening, with an intelligent audience from this village and the country, to hear the lectures of Messrs. Putnam and Watts, previously advertised. These gentlemen are lecturing in the interest of the National Liberal League, of which Col. Robert G. Ingersoll is president. Mr. Putnam spoke first, and was listened to with the closest attention, and frequently applauded, as he set forth the principles and aims of the League. He is a very pleasant speaker, earnest and effectiv, and impresses the hearer with his entire sincerity. Mr. Watts, who has been in the lecture-field for twenty-five years, followed in a masterly discourse on 'Secularism and Christianity,' aiming to show the superiority of the former. Both gentlemen occupied the most advanced and radical Infidel grounds, and their expression of views and opinions, illustration and argument, called forth the most general and hearty applause. At the close, a vote of thanks was tendered the speakers."

After this brilliant meeting came the "tug of war." It was eleven o'clock at night, and the next morning at 10:30 we were to speak in Cleveland, and there was no Sunday train nearer than Grafton, a small village eighteen miles away; and so we were obliged to front the wintry breeze and the cold stars in an open sleigh, and traverse that distance. Of course there is a great deal of poetry in such a ride beneath the diamond-lighted heavens, amid the shadowy hosts of trees, over the shining snows, behind jingling bells and gallant steeds. The journey was quite enjoyable for the first half hour, as if passing through some gorgeous palace. Even the icy wind seemed like a breath of enchanting music. But, alas! we did not hav cast-iron bodies, and the frost began to penetrate our bones, and we were glad when it came to the homestretch of this difficult and dangerous traveling. Long after midnight we drew up before a melancholy-looking hotel. Not a soul was to be seen, nor a light burning. We dared not trust ourselvs in the hands of such sleepy inmates, for we must be up and off at five o'clock in the morning; so to make sure of our train for Cleveland, we trudged to the station, where one or two faint red lights were gleaming, to find some good camping-place, hard by a red-hot stove, and try the soft side of a plank for a couch. After eighteen miles' ride, with old Boreas for a close companion, this did not seem a cheerful prospect. But heaven helps those who help themselvs, and good fairies—alias luck and chance—are working for Liberal lecturers as well as other folks, I suppose, for though we did not pray—our thoughts being too deep for utterance—yet no sooner had we reached the ghastly station-house, which appeared to my imagination very much like the outskirts of the fabled hell, an express, several hours behind, came thundering along, and in one minute we were in its bright and warm embrace, and in one hour were landed in beautiful Cleveland, and on a downy bed where we slept faithfully until the church bells began to ring, and then we thought it time to go to "our church," at the Academy of Music, and see our own congregation.

Our Cleveland friends were generous. They are not behind hand in work and devotion. W. I. Irvine, the enterprising secretary, with J. M. Wilcox, vice-president, and others, planned for a great success, and a great success was achieved. It was intended to giv Mr. Watts a reception on Saturday evening, but the lecture at Medina prevented. I lectured on Sunday morning—Mr. Watts in the evening. There were nearly a thousand people at Mr. Watts's lecture, and it was received with enthusiastic applause. We hav had no more encouraging signs of the times than at Cleveland. The League is bound to go successfully forward. Mr. J. M. Wilcox, the vice-president, is author of that instructiv pamphlet "After Christianity, What?" which points to the new order after the old has vanished. He is an earnest and brave Freethinker and will do invaluable service. W. I. Irvine has the fire of youth in his veins, ability and determination, and will make one of our best officers. T. F. Lucas, a stanch English Liberal and co-worker with Bradlaugh, is also a cordial helper in this advance movement. We must not forget our good and noble friend Thomas Lees, a Liberal Spiritualist, broad-minded, and great-hearted. We had the pleasure of visiting on Sunday afternoon his Children's Progressiv Lyceum, one of those beautiful institutions which we long to see established all over our land, wherein our noblest hope and aspiration are blended with science and nature. Mr. Watts and myself addressed the teachers and children, and felt at home amid our more believing friends, for between us and such Spiritualists there is a profound harmony of aim. It is the glory of character, of human fellowship and advancement here and now that both seek, and, therefore, both are in the same great army of Freethought, of civilization, of humanity. Thomas Lees is one of our wisest leaders, for his faith does not take the place of his knowledge, but is a beautiful illumination—a spirit and not a dogma—and so we can work joyously together both for the present and the future, for the dream or the perception of immortality shall not make us any the less human, any the less faithful, or any the less in love with the beauty and grandeur of this world. Thomas Lees was chairman of the evening meeting and introduced Mr. Watts with cordial words of approval for the great work that he is doing. He pronounced Mr. Watts one of the most eloquent advocates of human liberty to whom he had ever listened.

The Cleveland daily papers gave very favorable notices of Mrs. Watts's lecture. He was also interviewed by a reporter of the Herald, an exceedingly interesting account of which was published. He was proclaimed as the "Bob Ingersoll of England."

Cleveland has scored a victory for Freethought, and the outlook is most promising.

At Upper Sandusky, Ohio, we found some good friends, and no doubt a League will there be organized. George Beery, Sr., George Beery, Jr., L. B. Harris, Dr. Keenan, Messrs. Norton, Henderson, Sturgis, and others will rally around our illustrious president, who lectured here a few months since to a large and delighted audience. Ingersoll has won the heart of this people, and lighted fires that will never die.

Mr. Sturgis is an enthusiastic worker—an artist of ability, as his crayon of D. M. Bennett in the TRUTH SEEKER office shows; and we hope for him a brilliant future in his chosen profession. He has youth, energy, and pluck, and the genius of Freethought; and these are the conditions of success.

As the Christians refused to debate, and time was precious, we decided to hav but one meeting, which was on Tuesday evening, when Mr. Watts and myself both lectured. Arrangements were made for future lectures, and we expect to greet friends again at this place on our return trip from the West.

From Upper Sandusky we hastened to Toledo to greet our president, talk business, and listen to his marvelous lecture, "Which Way?" I was hungry for the feast, and never did the golden moments fly so fast as when I was thrilled to my innermost being with that wondrous speech. What voice was ever so exquisitly modulated as that, like the harmonies of some mighty instrument! What emotions were expressed in its infinit variety of tone, emphasis, and movement—now like a cataract, now like a river, now like a breath of summer's softest wind, like the delicate voice of the flute, and then like a crash of thunder! Wit, sarcasm, pathos, lightning of lofty thought, the humor of wisdom, the indignation of justice, the music of love, were mingled in transcendent oratory.

Never shall I forget the picture of the slave-mother—so weak, yet so mighty in her pleadings. Oh, how the hot tears flowed and the heart burned as that faint and trembling voice rose against huge injustice. It cannot be—it shall not be, this outrageous insult to humanity—that the Christian's God was ever on the throne of this universe. What shall I say of the peroration—that perfect poem of the past, the present, and the future. To read it was like reading the great song of Homer, or the unequaled lyrics of Shelley. It is full of music, deep-heaving like the sea, yet bursting like the rainbow colors of the wave. Yet, to hear that poem given with the graces of a matchless rhetoric—a voice responsiv to every note of human passion—was a surpassing delight. We touched the hights of human thought; the universe was outspread before the midnight, and the morning, and the day; the lark was singing in our soul, and every pain was forgotten.

But as Milton says it was "another morn risen on mid-noon" to be with Ingersoll in the charming moments of private conversation. He never flags. A thousand fancies are constantly coming like the restless bursting and many-hued billows. He is thoroughly cordial, democratic, at home with everybody, absolutely sincere, and thoroughly natural. His judgment of men and things, of poetry, art, of the whole scope of human experience is amazing. His insight of events, personalities, and relations is the most comprehensiv. Ingersoll is not simply one of the most eloquent, he is one of the wisest men that ever lived.

Mr. Watts and myself had a long talk after the lecture with Colonel Ingersoll in regard to the policy and affairs of the League, the holding of the next convention, etc. The colonel is in hearty co-operation with our movement, and I know that his ideas as to our practical work will meet with the warm approval of Liberals. They will find in Ingersoll a fearless champion, a far-sighted leader who knows the world he livs in, the elements with which we must deal, the path to success, and that honesty is the best policy. Every issue will be met frankly, and for the truth and nothing but the truth.

We are now at Indianapolis, where we expect to lecture on Sunday, Feb. 22d, and on this anniversary of Washington's birthday push on the cause of genuin American liberty; for Watts is a thorough-going republican, and does not believe in an earthly king any more than he does in a heavenly one.

I hav just met Dr. Monroe, captain of the good ship, Ironclad Age, who takes care of the body, and givs to the mind the best of nourishment. He is a sterling advocate of mental emancipation. He always keeps the flag a flying, and his ship goes bravely on. Long life to the energetic commander!

Mr. Watts and myself lecture at Hagerstown, Ind., on Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 23d and 24th; at Detroit Feb. 25th and 26th. Mr. Watts returns to Canada for a month's work. There is to be a lively debate between him and Elder Walker, of Indiana, at Welland, Ont. I lecture at Saginaw City on March 1st; shall try to be at Adrian during the week, and other places. I shall lecture at Lexington, Ky., on March 8th, and at Cincinnati, at Robinson's Opera House, on March 15th. Will the Liberals of Cincinnati please take note and do their best to advertise this meeting, so that a large audience may be present? Fraternally yours, SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Feb. 20, 1885.

The Coming Church.

From the Montreal Gazette of Jan. 10th.

Mr. S. P. Putnam, of New York, delivered the second of his three lectures last evening in the Freethought Hall. His subject was "The New American Church." The world, said Mr. Putnam, is passing through a profound change. The old ideas are fading and vanishing, and so the old institutions founded upon them are losing their power and beneficence. We must lay the foundations of a fresh institution, that, expressing the deep heart and hope of the people, shall be for coming ages a blessing and a power. We hav duties to fulfil our fathers never had; we must unfold the spirit and the purpose of this progressiv world, so that all mankind will be brought into unity, that the least shall be an inspiration to the greatest, and the greatest be bound in love and service with the least. It is supposed by some that diversity of thought will prevent harmonious action, but there is not so much diversity as was imagined. On questions of real, practical importance people are generally of the same mind. In the church to come we shall unite on the basis, not of any opinion, but of aims; all who mean well, who hav any hope or aspiration, will be members. Our individual life must flow in unison with the life of all. Individuality is a grand thing; we want more of it. The life of all, however, is one. We cannot strive and struggle alone; we need the helping hand and must giv it. Such a church would not be organized simply on the basis of opposition to orthodoxy. Men could not be argued out of orthodoxy, for generally such were guided by feelings and opinions and not by logic. Orthodoxy itself was continually changing, the arguments of the Infidels of twenty-five years ago were the arguments of the orthodox to-day, so it would do but little good to organize to oppose orthodoxy, for that which they opposed to-day, to-morrow orthodoxy itself would oppose. Their grand object was, not to remove the ruins, but to build a temple, and only so far as the ruins were in the way would time be spent in their demolition. The character of the new church will be democratic, various societies will meet in joint association for mutual improvement. But this association will hav no authority which will abide with the local societies. The architecture of the church of the future will be the embodiment of modern ideas. There would also be an ever-enlarging sphere for the scholar and thinker to unfold the ever-fresh stores of literature and science. The Bible would be a valuable book when studied for the life it exhibits, and not for the theology it is said to contain. They would throw nothing aside; they had duties toward their children, they had to make their growing lives bright. They must giv them of their best thoughts and train them in their noblest acquirements, and then the bright child would become an accomplished man or a brilliant woman.

One of the instruments of the church of the future would be music. Poetry was not to perish with the lovely superstitions of the past. And out of the facts of nature and life man shall make a melody and a power. Another instrument of the church of the future would be the drama; the theater will be found one of the divine helpers of the race; he who walks upon the stage shall be more honored than any priesthood; he shall be the interpreter of heart to heart, the unfolder of divinity within whose wonder-working faculty was the flash of genius and not the sacramental rod. The church of the future would also cultivate social life and make it more inspiring and delightful than ever. Not in loneliness, but in companionship, do we catch the brightest vision. It will be a varied, brilliant society, where there will be no dividing lines and all will giv and all will receive. With his great intellectual advancement man most grow more friendly and neighborly, and heart must flow to heart as in the olden time. The church of the future must be free from the chains of dogma and the clouds of superstition. There must be no sects, but the whole family of man must toil together in unity of spirits. It is for this a church existed, not to promulgate a creed, not to build up a priesthood, not to establish outward authority, but to unfold the kingdom of heaven within, to make each man free, not to selfishness and ignorance and evil, but to generosity, culture, and virtue.

The lecture was listened to by a good audience, which showed much interest.

A Hindoo's Narrow Escape.

A. K. Basu in Madras Philosophic Inquirer.

I mixed up, by the end of 1883, with a certain gang of missionary gentlemen, with a view to study the holy Bible. But after a few months, one of them tempted me that he would send me to England if I became a Christian. But fortunate it was for me that this news reached the ears of my superiors—who prevented me from mixing with these gentlemen who for themselvs earn their bread by the public alms. But along with it I must not hesitate to admit that I had a very firm faith that Christ would save me, though I hardly understood by that time what "save" meant. I did not see those tempters any more, but I began to see another gentleman of the English church from whom I expected to hav my salvation. But fortunate it was for me that the curtain from my eyes was dropped. I came to light, the darkness vanished from my mind. I hav no more faith in the divinity of Christ.

CATALOG of the Truth Seeker Company's publications sent free upon application.

Communications.

Mr. Watson—Mr. Wettstein.

Did it ever occur to you that only the purest motivs and most intense yearning for truth, and nothing but truth, regardless of inherited notions and beliefs, regardless of likes and dislikes, and regardless of benefits and sacrifices, could ever induce anyone to accept the doctrin of radical Materialism? You must admit that if Spiritism taught an eternal condition of misery and pain, as old theology teaches that of hell, very few indeed, nowadays, would believe the obnoxious doctrin. But you must admit that, on the same principle that our good brethren in the church hav now, in large majority, consigned the "hellish doctrin" to realms of fiction, simply because they do not like it, while still clinging to that of a heaven simply because promising celestial mansions and eternal bliss—though both doctrins hav the same origin, are supported by the same evidences, and based upon identical proofs—a vast majority of Spiritists hav accepted the new faith simply because it is entirely in conformity with their fondest hopes and most fervent desires. This being the case, the efforts and arguments of the Materialist, who has nothing to lose, and acts from no selfish motiv, are generally more conscientious, impartial, and thorough than those of his Spiritual brother, who, with every new idea advanced, and every new fact demonstrated, beholds the dreaded decree of man's mortality, very much as a prisoner receives the verdict or sentence of death pronounced upon him. And conceding, for the sake of argument, that—as Spiritists insist—eternal life is a very desirable boon, it becomes self-evident that, when we further investigate, you, my brother, hav an eternity of happiness to lose, while I, if you doctrin is true, will suffer no worse fate than to enter paradise with you.

Now, while I think I hav made clear that Materialism is a continual incentiv to continued and honest research, and Spiritism a continuous restraint to the same end, it becomes, also, my painful duty to speak here of another secret factor largely tending, in an illegitimate but potent manner, to support this mystic faith, namely, human pride.

A new convert to Spiritism, realizing the large number of unbelievers existing among his friends and neighbors, who continually challenge the truth of his new faith, is, naturally, very anxious to present the "proofs" leading to his conversion in as favorable a light as possible; this fact is a continued incentiv to invent, add to, or exaggerate facts and phenomena. For the purpose of justifying his course, he is forced to tell a plausible story, which, if true, would "convince any man;" and who can doubt that many good men and women, strictly honorable in all else, hav often resorted to such means to justify their course, and to accomplish their own glorification?

I here say these unpleasant things to you, Brother Watson, because I am satisfied that your belief also is principally based upon hope, desire, and impulses, largely augmented by still clinging fragments of inherited notions, instead of the result of a thorough and unflinching investigation. You don't go, you don't want to go, to the bottom of things. You attempt to dispose of my last letter by entirely ignoring its strongest points; but these problems must be made clear to the understanding, or the material philosophy is established forever. Can you, will you, do it? If so, I will be a grateful convert; but you must answer my arguments, or retire from the arena of debate.

I requested an answer to the profound problem how a man when he is dead, when each and every particle which made him a man has assumed other forms, when his whole being is annihilated, and he has vanished, he, the identical man, can still liv. Your only answer to which is, "Spiritualists claim that it is the wonderful and subtle organism, the spiritual part, which still livs after the body." But this "spiritual part" is precisely what you assume, which needs proof, but which you sadly fail to prove. Submitting this "spiritual part" to an analysis of logic and reason; to define it intelligibly, precisely as we define any other organic body of which we speak knowingly—this was the sole object of my former letter. Wiser men of your faith hav not ventured upon the hazardous undertaking you hav ventured on but sadly failed in.

What is a "spiritual body?" It is said to possess a shape, outline, and size of a man. What makes it look like a man? There is no flesh, bone, muscle, which generally in large proportion constitute a man. What makes it act like a man? There is said to be life, color, intelligence, prespiration, but no heart, blood, lungs, brain, or nervous system, all of which are generally supposed to be necessary to an activ man. What constitutes this man when all that constituted him in life now lies moldering in the grave? Whence the outline, with no flesh and bone to shape it? Whence life, with no blood to course through his veinless form, or to color his fleshless cheeks? Whence his senses, without the wonderful eyes and all other organs which also lie under the sod? Whence his thoughts, memory, his love for his wife and children, without a brain—upon which, it is an absolute scientific fact, all mental action is dependent? What forms his hair, teeth, finger and toe nails, if not composed of like material as usual in life? What is it when the flesh, and blood, and bone, and hair hav vanished, that still looks like flesh and blood, and bone, and hair? What is it of which, when all is taken away, all remains? What substance or elements is it composed of? What chemical or physical law givs your supposed spiritual matter the form and functions of a human being? All other physical bodies can be dissected, weighed, analyzed, and resolved into their original elements. Can a spirit be subjected to like process?

No! Spirit matter, bodies, or particles are absolutely beyond the reach of science and the human understanding. A thousand spirits would not weigh a grain, or fill the eye of a needle! All the elements, forces, and potencies known to science are never known to form a spirit. Everything known is never a spirit, but something else. Only the unknown, utterly incomprehensible, miraculous, can be spirit, if anything. Bacon, Humboldt, Darwin, Liebig, and hosts of other scientists hav now had access for nearly a century to the accumulated wisdom of all ages, and if Spiritism were indeed true, these dead-alive philosophers would at least communicate to an ignorant world a rational definition of spirits. But, alas! in vain do we listen for a voice from these realms from whence no wanderer returns!

And this is why I ignore all so-called phenomena, "proofs," etc., because until the human mind can obtain a reasonable understanding of spirit existence, its nature and attributes, how and where it exists, etc.—until then, to me, all phenomena, no matter how mysterious, are easier explained upon any other hypothesis than that of spirits. This mystery towers over all, like the Himalayas over an ant-hill.

Rochelle, Ill. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

The Oath.

The Christian Statesman says:

"We see that a petition is in circulation in Massachusetts for the abolition of the civil oath. The signers ask that all distinction between witnesses who qualify with an oath, and those who decline to do so, be ignored by the law. Here, as at other points, the real question is whether the Bible is true. If God has ordained the oath as a means of bringing the human conscience face-to-face with himself, and awakening a solemn fear of punishment in case of falsehood, then courts of justice are bound to use the oath as an 'instrument of investigation' into the truth. If the people believe in the divine authority, and in the efficiency of the oath, they cannot but prescribe its employment in their constitution and laws. Few intelligent and candid Infidels will deny that this is the teaching of the scripture in this matter. Why, then, do they shift the question to other grounds? If the Bible is true, our laws requiring the use of the oath ought to stand. Let our Liberal friends first convince the people that the Bible is a relic of superstition, and then ask for the abolition of our Christian usages. Unbelief in Christianity is the basis of their own action in the premises. Why do they ask us to join in their action while we do not share their unbelief?"

This is a specimen of ambiguity which is something of a surprise, coming from an able God-in-the-Constitution writer. These gentlemen are usually very logical in their reasoning, though their premises are at fault. They object very strenuously to being accused of favoring a union of church and state. They say that they are as honestly and earnestly opposed to such union as is the most pronounced and radical Freethinker. They protest that it is very unfair of us to charge upon them a desire to combine the ecclesiastical and the civil in our government. Entire lectures by their accredited agents, whole pages of their newspaper organs, are devoted to repelling this charge.

But what shall we think and say of arguments such as I hav quoted above? Do they harmonize with their pleas against the union of church and state? In the light of the above argument of the Statesman, and measured by the logic of their demands, can we regard their protests as other than Jesuitical? What do they mean when they denounce the secular idea of government? Do they not regard a theocracy as the only true government? And what is a theocracy other than a combined state and church? This being so, what becomes of their emphatic denial of an intention to establish here in these United States such a double-headed concern?

By the reasoning of the Christian Statesman every religionist is bound to demand that the dogmas of his creed, the teaching of his sacred book, be incorporated in the fundamental law of his country. The only question is, Is this dogma true? Now, what is this if it is not the closest kind of a close union of church and state? What rank hypocrisy, then, to claim that they are opposed to such union!

There is not a single feature of the old actions and cruel union of the powers of priest and king which would not be exhibited in all its hideous deformity were the program of the Christian Statesman to be carried out. Every essential doctrin of Theism and Christianity would be enforced by all the powers of the state. Heresy would be hunted in the same remorseless way that it was in the palmy days of church domination. It is all hypocritical gammon, this loud pretense of the self-styled "national reformers" that they are opposed to a consolidation of church and state. It is impossible for them to be opposed thereto if they are sincere in their contention that it is simply a question whether the Bible is true, and that if it is, the faithful Christian is bound to demand that its commandments and ordinances shall be recognized by, and be parts of, the Constitution, laws, and judicial procedure of the land. Of course the Christian at once assumes that it is true, and hence he must favor all existing features of Christian government, and such additional ones as may be necessary to bring our laws and usages into complete harmony with the Bible. Indisputably this is nothing more and nothing less than a united church and state, and none know it better than do these "national reform" advocates who are trying to make the people believe that they are the true Secularists, though they in almost the same breath bitterly denounce the secular state as "godless" and "immoral." In trying to simultaneously occupy these fundamentally antagonistic positions, they presume much, very much, upon the ignorance and stupidity of the Christian and nothingarian masses.

Another thing: the Christian Statesman avers that "unbelief in Christianity is the basis of their [our] own action in the premises," and assumes that none but Infidels are opposed to the judicial oath, and that oath-taking is clearly and unqualifiedly enjoined by the Bible. It is not necessary to say to ordinarily intelligent persons that not one of these assertions and assumptions is true. There are many Christians who, to their honor be it said, do not believe that it is any part of their duty to compel their fellow-citizens to do violence to their own consciences in this matter of the oath. Entire Christian sects, as the Quakers, refuse to swear, but affirm instead, believing that, in so-doing, they are obeying the scriptural command which enjoins them to "swear not at all."

Very astute are the leaders of the National Reform movement; very reactionary and vitally wrong are its demands; and very dangerous is it in its present stage of development, and in its accessories and adjuncts. Allied with the prohibition crusade, it is rallying beneath its black flag very many men and women who claim to be, and doubtless think they are, the friends of freedom. Every enactment like the Comstock postal statute, the Sunday law, and the prohibitory liquor law, takes it a step nearer the goal of complete victory. Inch by inch, foot by foot, it is pressing forward, and the time is not so very far distant when every man and woman in America must choose for it or against it. There is no possible middle ground. Liberals who to-day are its allies though their support of its accessory measures, such, for instance, as prohibition, postal legislation in the interest of "morality," rigid marriage laws, etc., must, ere long, join hands with the theocratic champions, and labor with them for the establishment of the hierarchy which they seek to set up upon the ruins of the civil republic, or they must cut entirely loose from their present contaminating and reactionary surroundings, and come squarely over to the side of liberty and progress, joining hands with us in the cause of physical, mental, moral, social, and political emancipation from the degrading dogmas, customs, and laws of the ignorant and despotic past. It is useless to hedge and haggle, to hope to stand erect upon an inclined plane of logical ice, to try to put the new wine of liberty into the old bottles of tyranny. The ranks are swiftly forming, the lines are being more and more sharply drawn, and Liberals must face the truth and realize fully the fact that he who would force his ideas of morality and of health upon dissentients is twin-brother to him who would force his religious creed upon his unbelieving neighbor, and that his place is in the camp of the God-in-the-Constitution legions. EDWIN C. WALKER.

Death of John S. Verity.

From the Boston Investigator.

We mentioned last week the sickness of this very worthy friend and efficient associate in the Liberal movement, and expressed the wish that he would recover. But we were disappointed, and now it is our painful duty to record his death, which occurred on Tuesday, the 10th inst., at his residence in Lynn. He was 62 years of age.

Mr. Verity was a man of many excellent qualities, greatly respected by all who knew him, and his death is deeply regretted by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Possessed of an intelligent mind, a benevolent disposition, pleasant manners, and sterling honesty, he was a thoroughly good man, whose life was useful and blameless, and whose name and memory will long be cherished by all who knew him best. In the relations of husband, father, friend, neighbor, and citizen, he discharged all his duties with remarkable fidelity, and we think it may truly be said of him that the only grief he caused was when he died, Death is the common lot, and from it there can be no exemption, but it seldom happens to anyone who exhibited in his life more genuin or manly virtues than marked the career of John S. Verity.

The funeral took place on Friday last, the 13th, from Paine Hall, which was draped in mourning, and there was a large attendance of friends. For the following report of the exercises we are indebted to the Daily Herald of Friday, the 13th:

JOHN S. VERITY AT REST.

Paine Hall was the scene of a funeral this afternoon, which was in perfect keeping with the life of one who, for many years, had stood upon its platform and enunciated the principles of the man for whom the hall was named, and who was the champion of the labor movement in Massachusetts. John S. Verity, known to all workingmen, was the person over whom the services were held, and the hall was tastefully draped in mourning for the occasion. The blinds were closed, and the lights turned on. The remains were encased in a broadcloth casket, and rested at the head of the hall just in front of the stage. The floral display consisted of a beautiful wreath and sheaf of wheat, the gift of the Ingersoll Secular Society, and a pillow and anchor from the children of the deceased.

Seated in the hall were many ladies and gentlemen who knew Mr. Verity in his lifetime, while upon the platform was Horace Seaver, who conducted the services, Mr. J. P. Mendum, of the Investigator, and the Temple Quartet. The services were opened by the quartet, which sung the hymn, "Death, What Art Thou?" after which Mr. Seaver read one of Bryant's poems on death. The quartet followed with, "The Flower at Sleep," music by Buck; after which, Mr. Seaver delivered an appropriate address. The closing piece by the quartet was the hymn, "The Long Day Closes." At the close of the services the remains were taken to Cedar Grove Cemetery for interment, Messrs. Galen Coffin, Isaac Monroe, W. M. Chandler, Ernest Mendum, L. S. Meston, and John A. O'Malley being the pall-bearers.

At the meeting of the Boston Liberal Club, Feb. 15th, the following resolutions were offered and adopted by a rising vote, as the unanimous opinion of the club:

Resolved, That the Boston Liberal Club deplores with enduring sorrow the sudden death of its worthy member, John S. Verity, whose memory we must cherish as a faithful and genial friend, and earnest and honest thinker, and whose ability as a pleasing and ready debater always enlivened our debates; and whose untiring passion for reform, and constant efforts for human good, entitle him to the lasting gratitude of mankind.

Resolved, That in the death of our long-time friend and member, Mr. John S. Verity, the Boston Liberal Club is placed under a double sorrow, he having been, not only a most honest, pleasing, and ready debater, but also, what is of still more importance, a deeply earnest friend of that humanity which it is our aim to benefit by means of the public discussions which we constantly maintain.

Resolved, That our secretary be requested to forward a written copy of these adopted resolutions to the widow and family of the late Mr. Verity, as some expression of our sympathy with them in their sad bereavement.

Charles Watts on English Politics.

During Mr. Watts's recent visit to Pittsburgh he was interviewed, the following account of which we take from the Leader, published in that city:

WHAT A PROMINENT LIBERAL HAS TO SAY ON ENGLISH AFFAIRS.

Mr. Charles Watts, first vice-president of the National Liberal League, who is now touring through the United States, lecturing for the benefit of the League, was found by a reporter at the Central Hotel last night. Mr. Watts is a typical Englishman, with a round red face, dude whiskers, appearance such as John Bull is usually pictured out to be, and a gentleman of education, well versed in English affairs, with social qualities that make him quite entertaining. His headquarters on this continent are, for the present, at Toronto, Canada, but he contemplates a general tour of all the states under the auspices of the National Liberal League, lecturing upon advanced ideas in Liberal religion. During the hour's conversation, Mr. Watts expressed the following views: "I see that Mr. Bradlaugh has been refused a new trial by the Court of Appeals upon the charge of voting with the House without taking the oath, or rather for administering a mock oath to himself. His only appeal now is to the House of Lords, and we may expect what its decision will be. The fine imposed for such an offense as he is charged with is, I believe, £500, but it is not likely to be imposed in this case. He has one other appeal, I may say, and that is to the people at the general election, which will undoubtedly be held next year, in consequence of the new Franchise bill. Bradlaugh has nothing to hope from the present Parliament. With a new Parliament he can take the oath again among the first forty members, though, of course, he can just as easily be expelled again after the House has taken its seat. The election next year is going to be a very important one, as the new Franchise bill passed last year creates two million new voters, who will go to swell the Liberal ranks (politically speaking, remember, for I am not talking religion, but politics, now). This new electorship is created by extending the same franchise to counties as is at present enjoyed by boroughs. Heretofore there has been a property qualification in counties which did not exist in boroughs, so that a lodger paying a small sum for rental in the boroughs was entitled to a vote for members of Parliament, while his neighbor just across the boundaries in a county, who perhaps paid out ten times the sum in rental of a large estate, was denied this electoral privilege. The new franchise will not affect the voting of women in the counties, who, while they could vote on some local matters, never had a voice in the election of members of Parliament. The new electors become an important factor, who must be taken into account by Radicals, Liberals, and Tories or Conservatives—though the latter hav nothing to hope from them, and for that reason hav done all they could to defeat the bill. The ministry, you understand, depends upon the party in power. If the Tories are in the majority, it is a Tory ministry, and if the Liberals prevail, it is a Liberal ministry. The Liberals at present are very largely in the majority, so much so that even if the Radicals were to vote with the Tories, which is something rarely done, the Liberals would still hold the balance of power. Although the Gladstone ministry is the Liberal party, and public opinion is somewhat divided upon the Egyptian question, yet the mass of the English people are opposed to England's foreign policy in relation to Egypt, and think she ought never to hav entered Egypt. When Parliament votes condemning the ministry, the prime minister either resigns or appeals to the people at an election.

The Tories during last session two or three times attempted to pass an act condemning the ministry, but failed for want of a majority, but they will certainly attempt it again, and a few more defeats in Egypt, or inactivity there, will probably result in its passage. One thing is sure: If it is learned beyond question that General Gordon is dead, the people will demand the resignation of the present ministry in language there is no mistaking. If the Tories pass a resolution of want of confidence in the government Gladstone will resign, as he is, I think, tired of public cares in that position, and will scarcely appeal to the people. If Gladstone resigns, the queen could call the Tory leaders to form a ministry. The Radical body of the House of Commons is composed largely of Irish, and the larger portion of the Irish members are Radicals. There are but few Irish Tories, as the most of the members are either Liberals or affiliate with the Liberals as Radicals. The Irish always vote with the Liberals upon all matters except such as refer to Ireland; then they vote as they think is to the best interest of Ireland. With them it is Ireland first, and the general good takes a secondary position. There may be two or three Irish members in favor of the dynamite methods, but I believe the large majority of the Irish, as well as all English Radicals, are opposed to force, and in favor of moral influence to accomplish reform in the administration of Irish affairs, which undoubtedly need it. While many of these wrongs are undoubtedly grievous, yet if they cannot be righted by moral force the privileges asked are not worth the sacrifices that would be made in trying force. The Gladstone ministry has done much to relieve the distress and oppression of that unhappy country, and would do much more, but these dynamite outrages are doing more to hurt the Irish cause than anything else, and retard legislation which would be favorable to Ireland. I believe a large majority of the liberal English are in favor of measures that will relieve the oppression of Ireland, even to the extent of giving her local government; as to separate government, that is out of the question, and I think that will never be. While the tendency is thus toward relieving of Ireland, no government will permit coercion, and the dynamiters are impeding progress in the direction of legislativ relief. The agrarian troubles, and other outrages, I think, are largely traceable to Ireland itself, and her people, who are under the power of the priests. They hav implicit confidence in their religious instructors and will do anything they command, and the priests deny the people the right of liberal education. I was in Dublin, and other towns of Ireland, and found the people warm-hearted and generous. There is a bad class among them the same as in any other country, but I think if a generous education was given the Irish they would be able to see what was their advantage and come nearer to the realization of their desires than they can hope to do without such an education.

The Effect of Reynolds on Frackville, Pa.

Special Correspondence Shenandoah Evening Progress.

Frackville is in a perfect ferment. Every fervent believer in Christianity is quickened by the fact that one of the greatest opponents to the received faith of civilization has been in their midst and planted the banner of Secularism right in what had heretofore been considered as one of the strongholds of Christianity. "Hav you been there? Did you hear the lecture? Isn't it fearful?" meet the ear on all sides. Upon getting an introduction to this being that was creating such a ripple in the church circles of the town, we found the object of this curiosity and anxiety to be the Ex.-Rev. C. B. Reynolds, of Rochester, New York, chairman of the executiv committee of the National Liberal League, and next to Colonel Ingersoll the greatest Secular gun in America. This card of introduction was certainly enough to arouse one's curiosity who knows little or nothing of the knotty questions of theology beyond the opportunity afforded while studiously pursuing a third reader in one of our grammar schools. Socially we found the gentleman to be everything that education and experience could desire, able and willing to answer any question you might be pleased to ask, and if not able, candid enough to acknowledge his inability to do so. Prior to the gentleman's apostasy he had been known as a most powerful and successful evangelist, distinguished for his brilliant oratory and wonderful dramatic power. He delivered three lectures here: Saturday evening: "What Liberalism Teaches;" Sunday afternoon, "Why I Left the Pulpit;" and Sunday evening, "Salvation." The Liberals all rallied, and the novelty and ability of the speaker caused a very large attendance.

After giving a quite lengthy synopsis of Mr. Reynolds's lectures, the correspondent concludes:

We hope some able divine will giv full and satisfactory answers and refute the assertions made by this follower of Secularism, for the powerful dramatic oratory and great magnetism of the speaker deeply impressed all who heard him.

A local League has been organized, and some of the most sober and reflecting citizens of this place hav subscribed to its rules, and they will hold science schools every Sunday in lieu of Sunday-schools, and as they propose to promote sociability by providing a constant succession of exciting amusement, they are likely, unless their position is refuted, to draw all the youth into the fearful vortex of Infidelity. This is an aggressiv movement against Christianity which we hope those who are able will repel, for the sake of a common and weak humanity tottering in our midst upon the verge of utter destruction.

"REX."

Closing Scenes at a Revival.

Associated Press Dispatch from Wheeling, West Virginia, Feb. 16th.

The country for many miles around is disturbed by a demonstrativ revival which has been going on for some days at Wall's Bottom, a small town in Monroe county, Ohio.

The climax of excitement was reached last night, when the revivalist minister announced to the congregation that Chris. Dongel, a notorious Infidel, had seen God and was ready to espouse the gospel.

At the moment of the announcement, Mrs. Margaret Miller, the wife of Jackson Miller, a justice of the peace, sprang upon a bench and uttered a piercing shriek. This was an impromptu signal for a joyous outbreak. The man at the organ planted his feet on the pedals and let the big instrument "go" for all it was worth. The Rev. Dr. Dodge, in a loud voice, commanded the people to shout with all the power of their lungs, that the Lord might hear of his triumph over Bob Ingersoll and the devil.

The command was obeyed to the letter. Men and women left their seats and began to dance up and down the aisles, calling upon Christ to descend upon them and giv some manifestation of his approval. A rush was made for the pulpit, from the top of which the minister, in a delirium of excitement, dived headfirst into the surging mass below. The pulpit was then torn down, the Bible ripped into shreds, and the minister hurled through a plate-glass window into an adjoining graveyard.

The work of demolition thus inaugurated spread with increasing fury and lightning rapidity. Backs were kicked off the pews and even the flooring of the church was partially ripped up.

One woman keeled over in a trance, and remains under the influence yet.

A procession was formed, and Dongel was lifted upon the shoulders of the women, who marched up and down the center aisle shrieking, "Rock of Ages."

The meeting did not close until 4 o'clock in the morning, at which time the interior of the church was a complete wreck. The following day, Saturday, Dongel, who had not ceased howling one moment from the time of his "conversion," became violently insane.

He went to the bank, drew out all his money, and took it to the preacher. Then he locked Jacob Meiser in the cellar and compelled Mrs. Meiser to surrender what money she had at hand, which he also took to the preacher. The latter appeared greatly delighted, and slapping Dongel on the back, told him to keep up the good work.

At the night meeting Dongel appeared in the fantastic costume of an Indian chief. He wore a crown of wax flowers and carried a heavy club.

After a few murderous flourishes of the latter, he ordered the minister, whom he addressed as Judas Iscariot, to leave the pulpit. The latter protested, whereupon Dongel hit him over the head with his club, almost crushing the poor man's skull.

Dongel mounted the pulpit, and menacing those before him announced himself as Christ, and said he was not only to judge the world but to knock it out at the same time. His manner was so violent and his voice so shrill that many women fainted and others made a desperate effort to crowd out of the church. This precipitated intense excitement and aroused Dongel to the fever-heat of frenzy.

Springing from the pulpit, he began using his club with murderous effect upon men and women alike. He seemed possessed of supernatural strength, and threw off those who attempted to seize him as if they were pigmies. One woman, Mrs. Dilton, he beat into a shapeless mass, and broke her brother's nose with a single blow when the latter interposed to save her life.

It is believed that Mrs. Dillon must certainly die.

It was fully twenty minutes before Dongel could be secured, and only after a struggle which resulted in the fatal wounding of at least three of the deacons. When overcome the maniac, in whom no vestige of reason now remained, was bound hand and foot and afterwards gagged.

With this scene of bloodshed and misery the revival terminated, and the physicians of neighboring towns hav been kept busy ever since patching up the victims.

Fears are entertained that the excitement has dethroned the reason of the minister and several members of his flock, and that further distressing trouble will follow unless the commotion subsides.

In other places, we understand, this work of developing lunacy is still permitted to go on.

Church Property Exemption.

From the Boston Journal.

The committee on taxation heard Thursday morning the petitioners for a repeal of the law exempting church property from taxation. Following is the report:

Richard P. Hallowell was the first speaker, who said the exemption law was in effect a subsidy. As such, he was opposed to it. The result was a direct tax on all people of the state for the support of religion. But religious corporations ought to pay their share of protection. Exemption was a vicious principle, and a violation of the spirit of our free institutions. He argued from the theory on which our government was based, that the taxation of all for the support of churches was unjust, though religion in a community was a good thing. He was opposed to any discrimination or compromise on the matter. The whole thing was wrong.

Mr. F. M. Holland said that the petition had been signed by 1,060 citizens of Massachusetts, among whom were Prof. W. T. Harris, the Revs. M. J. Savage, W. T. Gill, J. S. Bush, F. Frothingham, W. J. Potter, and J. K. Applebee. Four hundred and sixty-one signatures were collected in Newburyport by a gentleman who wrote that the opposition there was very weak. "If the case were left to the people I think there would be a vote of four to one in favor of this amendment in Newburyport." A friend in Sterling says, "If the state were canvassed it would astonish the representativs."

A letter was read from the Rev. Dr. Stebbins, successor to Starr King in California, saying of the taxation of all property there the past twenty years: "I do not think that the law has any effect to hinder the churches in any work or influence for human welfare." He also read an argument for taxation drawn up by the Rev. J. S. Bush, an Episcopal clergyman recently settled at San Francisco and a signer of the petition.

The Rev. W. T. Hill, of Lawrence, was in favor of the petition on statesmanlike principles; churches should bear their own burdens; the present system was a heritage of the past tyrannical ages. If the churches could not support themselvs under a system of taxation they ought to go out of existence. It would be a good thing for both the church and the community. Churches were only educational to a degree—not enough so to demand to be exempted as an educational institution.

B. F. Underwood felt that a principle was at stake. All the churches were on an equal footing, and what is the difference between compelling a man to support all churches and compelling him to giv $100 for any one? Indirect taxation was just as bad as direct taxation. He read an extract from a speech of Gen. Garfield in Congress in favor of this idea. The church and state ought to be entirely separated. There is no difference between church exemption and compelling a man to support any individual church. He cited as one case of discrimination the fact that Paine Hall paid taxes while Parker Memorial Hall paid nothing. He had no hostility to any ecclesiastical sect or theory; it was the principle at stake.

Mr. F. Frothingham said this was a simple case of justice, and the attitude of equal justice to all was the theory of the state. Suppose in a large community one institution acquires property to the extent of millions of dollars, and holds that property exempt from taxation; that particular body is at a great advantage; the rest of the community has to pay a very much higher rate of taxes. Such a case is not a mere supposition. A serious injustice results in such cases, and the principle is the same whether the religious body is large or small, rich or poor. As a minister, he could see in his own denomination how desirable it would be to hav some small churches exempted, but after all there was the principle at stake, and after careful and earnest consideration he was bound to stand for principle and right. The idea of entire justice to all religious institutions was the basis for treating all alike. He admitted, in reply to a question from Mr. Cummings, of the committee, that there was a possibility of bringing religion into politics through Protestant assessors valuing Catholic churches high and Catholic assessors valuing Protestant churches high. The speaker, on the other hand, thought that was a minor evil compared with the great principle at stake. He thought the taxation of churches would prevent the building of such costly churches, in which the poor could hav no part, and were even practically excluded from worshiping.

There was no opposition.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - FEBRUARY 28, 1885.

A Favor Asked.

Will the friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER in every state of the Union (and especially some friend in every place in which an institution is located) send us the latest report of the officers of the penal and reform institutions of their states? We wish to compare the religious proclivities of the inmates, and to giv the statistics as full as possible. No matter if reports are duplicated; it will serve our purpose much better to hav a dozen reports of one institution than no report. We ask every person able to get one of these reports to send it to this office.

Tax Them All.

Ministers and priests in this state are allowed exemption from taxation on fifteen hundred dollars of personal property and real estate. It is now proposed to make this foolish piece of legislation a little more stringent by providing that the house shall only be exempted if "actually and personally occupied by the priest or preacher as a residence."

Upon this subject the New York Herald has said our say pertinently and forcibly. "The best thing," it says, "to do with that exemption is not to amend, but repeal it. As it stands, and to the precise extent to which the return of taxes is less on account of it, it constitutes a state church."

And a state church in this country is unconstitutional.

Catholicism in Ecuador.

The Catholics in this country talk a great deal about freedom of worship, religious liberty, and the bigotry of those who would keep the "mother church" out of our public institutions. But in countries where Catholicism is all-powerful religious liberty means to Rome precisely what it meant to the Massachusetts puritans—liberty to worship in her own way, and force everybody else to worship with her. And having once obtained a grip upon a country, Rome never releases it. Poor Ecuador is realizing this.

By the terms of a concordat ratified in 1863, one-tenth of the products of the estates and manufactures are devoted to the church; the schools, journals, and literature are all subject to the approval of the church—the church exercising a censorship; and no marriage ceremony is legal not performed by a Roman Catholic priest. When Veintemilla, the dictator, was deposed in 1883, a national convention was held which adopted a constitution. This constitution, however, had to be subordinate to the concordat, which condition of affairs has led to the division of the people, and signs are not wanting that it may lead to civil war. Two parties hav sprung up, the Conservativs and Liberals. The former, led by the priests, support both the concordat and constitution; the latter only the constitution, the leaders avowing that when they get into power the church rule shall be overthrown. At present the Conservativs outnumber the Liberals two to one, and control the government. It is because of this priestly control that the attempt to hav the terms of the concordat modified has failed. The church clings to her tithes, and though they be raised by coining the heart's blood of the country she will not relinguish her claim.

Where Rome is comparativly powerless she talks about freedom. When in supreme control she would murder her own children for gold, and ruin a nation to preserve her power.

"Men Shall Hiss Him Out of His Place."

When Talmage broke out against Colonel Ingersol, he evidently thought the latter had left Brooklyn for good. But he never was more mistaken in his life. Mr. Ingersoll visited the city of churches last Sunday night, and replied to Mr. Talmage. Incidentally the lecture afforded Mr. Talmage an opportunity to judge of how far he had won the hearts of his townsmen, but if he judges by the vigorous hissing that followed the mention of his name, he will be sad for many a day. Mr. Ingersoll's lecture was upon "Blasphemy." Toward the close he referred directly to Talmage in these words:

"Dr. Talmage [hisses] wants to crush all Infidels. There hav been other times when it has been sought to crush the Infidels. I want to tell him to-night, and all others like him, that day has passed. [Cheers.] I want to tell him that all the churches in the United States can't even crush me. [Renewed cheering.] That day has gone never to return. Superstition has cost too many tears; it has broken too many hearts; it has filled too many insane asylums; it has kept this world in darkness long enough. If they think they can crush Freethought in this country, let them try it."

We shall next week print a lengthy abstract of the lecture.

An Invitation Declined.

The "church militant" is a phrase the meaning of which seems to hav passed from the understanding of the preachers and priests. Mr. Watts is rusting for the lack of a worthy Christian opponent. He has advertised far and wide for one, but, alas and alack! no knight accepts his wager of battle. Recently we bethought us to help him in the search. As he goes back and forth to Canada, Mr. Watts must pass through Buffalo. Waterloo, N. Y., is not far from Buffalo, and at Waterloo livs the Rev. L. A. Lambert, Catholic priest, and author of "Notes on Ingersoll." Mr. Lambert is so courageous when the Infidels are a good way off that it occurred to us to test his bravery at close quarters, as he is a trained speaker. To this end we wrote him a letter, which, with some comments by the editor and a reply by Mr. Lambert, appears in the Catholic Union and Times, of Buffalo, as follows:

"INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE.

"For upwards of two years, Father Lambert's scathing review of Ingersoll's blasphemies has been piercing the very marrow of the little Infidel and his applauding gang; and they hav since been sullenly vowing vengeance. But how to wreak that vengeance—hoc opus hic labor. To refute the 'Notes' they are not able; to remain longer silent they are ashamed. Something, therefore, must be done to keep the 'orator of laughter and applause' on his tottering legs a little longer; and to lay Lambert's ghost that so cruelly haunts the mercenary vendor of Infidel persiflage, whithersoever he goeth. Hence they hav scoured the country for a loud-lunged Goliath whose vox et prœterea nihil would make the galleries howl and down the Waterloo priest with argument!

"The following challenge from the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER—an Ingersoll organ which we hav often chastised in these columns—seems to indicate that they hav found the desired champion at last:

"NEW YORK, Feb. 6, 1885.

"REV. L. A. LAMBERT: At the close of your 'Notes on Ingersoll' there is expressed an intimation (rather coarsely worded, however) that you are ready to uphold your faith against all comers.

"Now, will you debate orally for three or four nights with Charles Watts?

"Place, Buffalo, if arrangements can be made.

"Time, sometime the last of March or first of April.

"Subjects and arrangement of proposition to be hereafter made. Very truly yours, E. M. MACDONALD.

"To this note Father Lambert has sent the following characteristic reply:

WATERLOO, Feb. 11, 1885.

"EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: In the closing paragraphs of 'Notes on Ingersoll,' I called upon his disciples and admirers and all the little whiffets of his shallow school to rehabilitate his smirched character. For the statements and conclusions in that book I held myself responsible. I do so still.

"The conclusions I refer to were as follows:

"'We hav said enough to convince our readers that Mr. Ingersoll is profligate of statement; that he is not to be trusted; that he is unscrupulous; that as a logician and metaphysician he is beneath contempt; that he is a mere galvanizer of old objections long ago refuted; that he is ignorant and superficial—full of gas and gush; in a word, that he is a philosophical charlatan of the first water, who mistakes curious listeners for disciples, and applause for approval' (Notes on Ingersoll, page 202, 7th ed.).

These were the conclusions to which I challenged a reply, and to which, so far as I know, none has as yet been made. You will therefore see that you are entirely mistaken in imagining that I made an egotistical and vainglorious challenge to all comers and wished to pose as a champion of Christianity. I am certainly ready to answer for my convictions, but I object to your inference that I stand before the public with a theological chip on my shoulder, daring some one to tip it off.

"The question raised by me was not as to the merits of Christianity, but as to the demerits of its loud, pretentious, unscrupulous enemy, Ingersoll—his want of candor, his disposition to misrepresent, his utter unreliability in stating fact and principles, his sophistry and shallow philosophy.

"True, I used strong, truth-bearing words, but when your champion calls ministers of religion 'hypocrits' he should not complain when he himself is properly labeled. Those who forget the social amenities must not expect to receive them. Infidels of the kind must not be shocked when Christians, annoyed by their insuperable blasphemies, present not the 'other cheek' but the other boot. If I mistake not, this misunderstood doctrin of the other cheek, by which the hands and feet of Christians are supposed to be tied, has encouraged a good deal of Infidel bravado, because it leads to the belief that Christians can be insulted with impunity."

"I hav met some of this noisy kind occasionally on the trains. They rarely fail to make it known that they are abroad and rampant. They advertise themselvs by their loud conduct and noisy, coarse talk; they swell with conceit at their imaginary superior wisdom, and as a rule monopolize the car, shocking the quiet, unobtrusiv passengers by their garrulous chattering and blasphemies—the latter being their strong card. When they buy a ticket they forthwith imagin they hav hired the car and that the passengers are legitimate victims who hav no longer the right not to be annoyed. They are too asinine to understand that their most popular performance in the car is their exit from it. They mistake Christian patience and forbearance for cowardice or pusillanimity, and act accordingly. When, in return, they receive a little truthful, plain English, they are terribly shocked at its coarseness—the hypocrits.

"You and Mr. Watts no doubt condemn the disgraceful and vulgar conduct of these impudent and ignorant fellows, but they are, in their little sphere, what Ingersoll is in a broader sphere, namely, the spirit of modern Infidelity incarnated and individualized. They are Ingersolls seen through the little end of the telescope. It is well known that Ingersoll, notwithstanding his gushing professions of love for his fellow-men, delights in insulting and wounding the most sacred Christian feelings by his shocking blasphemies and coarse jokes about everything deemed holy by a patient people.

"The spirit that results in such conduct cannot be the spirit of truth—nor can such conduct be inspired by the love of truth.

"Now as to your proposition. I object to an oral discussion for the reason that it givs too much room for loose, indefinit, profitless, and, if with an infidel, blasphemous declamation, to which I cannot consent to be even an occasional cause or party, directly or indirectly. Besides, it smacks too much of gate-money and Marquis of Queensberry rules.

"If Mr. Watts will write what he has to say, and publish it in your paper, I will reply in the same way. He will thus hav the advantage of an audience already in sympathy with him. A little Christian truth scattered here and there in your columns will prove a refreshing novelty.

"Yours, etc., L. A. LAMBERT.

"Doubtless the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER and the other Ingersollites will regard this trenchant letter as adding insult to injury. It is surely not calculated to assuage their wounded feelings. And yet, what are they going to do about it? One thing they won't do, we venture to predict, and that is to accept Father Lambert's offer. They hav had quite enough of his terrible pen already."

The Rev. Mr. Lambert has mistaken the drift of our inquires. We did not ask him to discuss Colonel Ingersoll's character. No attacks from any priest can make that necessary. We did not ask him to discuss the colonel's abilities as a logician or as a metaphysician. Of the former those who hav read Mr. Ingersoll's writings or listened to his oratory can judge; to the latter we doubt if Mr. Ingersoll aspires. In his book Mr. Lambert is so vociferous in charging him with lacking every quality necessary to let daylight through the darkness of Catholicism that we thought, perhaps, the priest would prove some of his charges by attempting to show that Christianity—and especially Catholic Christianity—is not the dangerous foe to liberty and to science which Colonel Ingersoll alleges it to be. Our letter contained the plain intimation that Mr. Lambert's faith was to be discussed, not his book nor its subject. In his reply he uses the old legal device, resorted to when the case is bad, of abusing your opponent's attorney. A similar course was recommended recently in a Catholic magazine to be the proper one for ignorant Catholic laymen, but we hardly supposed the advice would be so quickly adopted by priests.

Before making a return proposition, we wish to assure Mr. Lambert that with Mr. Watts as an opponent he would hear no "loose, indefinit, profitless, and blasphemous declamation." On the contrary, Mr. Watts is a close and logical reasoner, states his positions accurately, speaks to the subject under discussion, and insists that his opponent shall do the same. His vox, so to speak, is by no means prœterea nihil. We really wish Mr. Lambert could overcome his scruples and meet Mr. Watts; but if he is afraid, why of course that is the end of it. *Heu pietas! heu prisca fides!

Now for our second proposition: We presume Mr. Watts will take the same pleasure in enlightening Mr. Lambert on some theological points through the press as upon the platform. Judging from the promptness with which letters to Mr. Lambert find their way into the Catholic Union and Times, the editor of that publication is his chief "whiffet." If that paper will print Mr. Watts's and Mr. Lambert's letters, THE TRUTH SEEKER will do the same. The two papers go to press about the same day of the week; the letters can be sent to us, we will put them in type, send "proofs" to the Catholic Union and Times, and the articles can be published simultaneously. This will giv Mr. Lambert, as well as Mr. Watts, whatever advantage can be gained from having an audience already in sympathy with him; and a little Freethought truth—we had almost said truth of any kind—will prove a refreshing novelty to the readers of the Catholic Union and Times. If Mr. Watts's numerous engagements should make it inconvenient for him to discuss with Mr. Lambert, there are others who could be relied upon to conduct our side of the debate with good effect. Liberalism has never lacked a defender against all comers, "barring none."

* Webster's Unabridged, 1875 ed., p. 1680.

This is a fair proposition; what say you, priest? what say you, paper?

The Dynamiters of New York.

There came into this office the other day an old friend whom we had not seen for months. We heard of him at the Milwaukee League Congress, at which he was activ in inducing the League to add anti-prohibitory and Socialistic planks to the platform, but since then he had dropped out of Freethought work. We were glad to see him, for W. J. Gorsuch is not the kind of a man who surrenders principles, and he is as stanch a Freethinker as of yore. But, he informed us, he is now not only a Freethinker, but an Anarchist and Socialist and dynamiter, and his business in this city was to address his fellow-dynamiters at Concordia Hall, in commemoration of Reinsdorf, recently executed by the German government. He had come on at the importunate solicitation of Herr Most, the leader of the dynamite party of this city. We were invited to be present at the meeting. Now, much as Mr. Gorsuch's talk would enlighten and instruct, the idea of going to Concordia Hall was not to the liking of one who desires to preserve his skull intact. The last meeting held there had been broken up by the police, who had incidentally broken some dozen heads in the proceeding. It is our opinion that in so doing the police exceeded their duty and authority, and committed a foul and unconstitutional outrage in depriving the people there assembled of the right of free speech. But when clubs are trumps the game is not pleasant to play, and it was with considerable trepidation that we concluded to risk it, together with the reporter of the Liberal Club, who considers himself ironclad.

Concordia Hall will hold about a thousand, and its space was four-fifths occupied by as orderly an audience as usually assembles in New York. True, the hall was thick with tobacco smoke, and the proprietor had opened a keg of beer in the rear of the room, but nobody was intoxicated, nobody noisy or in the least disorderly. Not a policeman was in sight, and there appeared to be no need of one.

Herr Most, the leading spirit in the meeting, was found upon introduction to be as mild mannered a man as ever scuttled ship or cut a throat—or threatened to, which seems to be the extent of his villainy in this country. He is an educated gentleman, a Freethinker, and one of his pamphlets against the church has had a circulation of thirty-five thousand copies in this country. He talks and writes in German better than in English, though his knowledge of the latter tongue is sufficient for all practical purposes. So far as we could gather from this meeting, the dynamiters are content to take it out in talk. Their oratory, however, is blood-curdling.

Mr. Gorsuch was the English speaker of the evening. He characterized the taking-off of Reinsdorf as "an act of damnable, despotic, outrageous murder; one to be avenged, though the avengers were forced to wade through blood, through hell, through damnation! We hold," he added, "that the action or the attempted action of Reinsdorf in his effort to remove the crowned tyrant was justifiable, because that crowned head represented the evil that has grown and that is enslaving the world, sapping the life-blood and the energies and the power of the people; and it is an evil that is increasing, crushing out all that makes life desirable; and in the name of liberty, equality, and fraternity we, the Internationals, demand the removal of all tyrants, whether they pose in Europe as kings, or here in America under the form of constitutional republicanism." This was greeted with tumultuous applause. Mr. Gorsuch then added that, as an American citizen, he demanded the destroyal of "every system of government the world at present witnesses." He further demanded the abolition of all private property; denounced the ballot as a fraud; said no honest man could be elected to office, and that if one could be he wouldn't remain honest; and told his hearers that to right their wrongs they must resort to "blind, brutal, barbaric force," as the only argument the capitalists and "middle-class bourgeois" (who, he alleged, were the workingman's natural and eternal enemies) could understand. He went on to say that there are two million tramps in this country who are forced to wander from place to place because ten per cent of the population of the world receive as their reward for doing nothing five-eighths of all that is produced, while ninety per cent receive for their unending toil, from six years of age till death, as their reward but three-eighths of the product. Mr. Gorsuch held that it would be better for the Internationals to kill, right here and now, a million of men, women, and children than that the present state of society should exist ten years longer. After he had said this, it seemed to occur to him that it was too mild, and he amended it to read that "it would be better to destroy ten millions of men, women, and children than to allow society to continue a week longer." This sentiment was also loudly applauded.

Mr. Gorsuch then read resolutions to the effect that the Internationals in this country are a unit in action with "our never-to-be-forgotten comrade, August Reinsdorf, pledging devotion equal to his to the cause of the social revolution; that they condemn the judicial murder of August Reinsdorf, and rejoice that the villain who was instrumental in his condemnation has fallen at the hand of the avenger, meeting a richly deserved fate; that, knowing full well the position of the oppressed of all countries in their struggle against the oppressor, they heartily indorse the Irish in their use of dynamite against the too long endured brutality of Britain, holding that any means are justifiable to achieve the independence of a people, and that we execrate and condemn the infamous action of the police lately perpetrated in this hall against a peaceable assemblage of workingmen who were but exercising their natural and constitutional privileges; that we heartily indorse the propaganda of action and welcome with joy the dawn of the social revolution." The resolutions were adopted.

Herr Most repeated these sentiments in German and Herr Schlang in Bohemian. The audience was about ninety-eight per cent foreign, mostly German. In religion, Mr. Gorsuch told us, the Internationals are about half Atheists and half Christians. But the Atheists never attend Freethought meetings, read no Freethought papers or books, of course take no interest in constructiv Liberal work, and remain Atheists for the same reason the French peasant did—"if there were a God, he would giv us bread, wouldn't he?" Not getting bread, the peasant was an Atheist.

So far from having any matured or coherent plan of action, the speakers at this meeting might as well hav been "brutal, barbaric" savages. Except the demand for the abolition of private property, no word was uttered calculated to furnish a clue to the ultimate designs of the dynamiters; and it is our opinion that if the audience had asked the orators what they proposed to do about the monstrous injustice under which they said the ninety per cent labored, or how they proposed to equalize things, the orators would hav been stumped. We recommend to the earnest consideration of Mr. Gorsuch and his confreres the homely New-Englandism that "Talk is cheap, but it takes cash to buy real estate."

The Minneapolis Tribune has sung the dynamiters' song with considerable insight:

Oh, I am a bloody old dynamitard!
Sing biff! bing! fizzety-bang!
The hand-grenade and the big petard
I'm fixing to fling in the queen's front-yard!
Sing ho to the lad from Skibberdedang
Who'd demolish the queen's dominions!

Nitro-glycerin is my daily drink!
Sing smash! crash! lickety-slash!
And the daintiest food is powder, I think;
I can chew up a cartridge without a wink,
Blue vitriol I use to season my hash,
For my appetite's like my opinions.

Ah, here comes a girl with a little gun;
Sing help! murder! call the police!
Whatever I've done was always in fun,
And rather than fight I'd always run.
Sing ho to the lovely paths of peace,
And blessed be the queen and her minions.

We call special attention to Mr. E. A. Stevens's advertisment of the Paine statuet. It is a fine work of art, and now that Paine is being publicly honored all over the country, it will be very appropriate that Freethinkers should prolong the honor by purchasing one of these statuets and placing it in their parlors. The likeness to Paine is accurate, the position graceful, and the sculpturing splendidly done. The design is the one that has been accepted for the Lincoln Park Monument, in Chicago, to be erected so soon as money enough has been raised to defray expenses.

Editorial Notes.

The second number of Mr. Roberts's Mind and Matter has appeared. The paper is substantially the same as before its suspension. Mr. Roberts is a stalwart defender of Spiritualism and mediums, and uses plain English to convey his thoughts.

Messrs. Watts and Putnam were in Cleveland, Sunday the 15th. In the evening Mr. Watts visited the Spiritualist Sunday-school and addressed the children for a few moments. To a Herald reporter he afterward said: "I regard the Spiritualists as very good Secularists, but I do not agree with them. There are, you know, two divisions of any class or sect, the orthodox and the heterodox. I think I could agree in a measure with the latter class of Spiritualists." We recommend those Spiritual papers who hav denounced Mr. Watts as the incarnation of anti-spiritual dogmatism to revise their opinions, even if they hav not the courage to take back their offensiv words.

When a jury panel was called for excuses before Justice Willard Bartlett the other day in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn, a Scotchman refused to take the oath. "Then you must affirm," said the judge. "Affirm? What's that?" inquired the juror. "Here, Mr. Clerk, affirm this man," said the justice, and the clerk did it, after which the justice asked him what his excuse was. "I'm an Infidel, sir," said the Scotchman, with the air of a man sure of getting rid of jury duty. "Well, you look like an intelligent man. I think you will make a good juror, and you must serve," said the judge, much to the Scotchman's surprise. Judge Bartlett is an improvement on the Brooklyn justice who, a few years ago, denied (at the instigation of Victoria Woodhull) the right of Joseph Treat to testify because he did not believe in "Gaud."

Liberals, we think, should deal with one another so far as they can, other things being equal. And those wanting goods of the description Mr. Wettstein deals in will find him reliable, according to Mrs. Fisher, who writes:

"Shell Rock, Iowa, Feb. 1, 1885.

"I wish to say to The Truth Seeker readers that I bought goods of Otto Wettstein, jeweler, Rochelle, Ill., and on comparing them with other jewelers near here, I find Mr. Wettstein's goods much cheaper than those of the same quality and brand here. I am certain Mr. Wettstein is a reliable dealer, and a truthful, honest man. Liberals ought to patronize him.

"M. E. Fisher."

We may add that a friend, through us, bought some goods of Mr. Wettstein which are in all respects satisfactory. He also received, by way of Mr. Wettstein's annual drawing, a gilt and silvered statuet, a very pretty parlor ornament, showing that in all things Mr. Wettstein keeps his word.

By a recent disaster to a pork house in Sioux City, Iowa, several people were rendered dependent upon aid from their neighbors. The ladies of the Christian Association of Sioux City proposed to hold a ball to raise money for the sufferers, when the clergy of the place came out in the city papers exhorting the "dear sisters in Christ" not to resort to such means to alleviate suffering, and assuring them if they persisted the support of "many warm Christian people" would be withdrawn from the association. This card of the clergymen led to sharp retorts by S. W. Park and James Jared. Mr. Park called the attention of the reverends to their own church fairs at which lotteries, grab-bags, and kissing at a quarter a kiss obtained. He also called their attention to the pertinent scriptural statement that while it was written that "My house shall be a house of prayer," they had made it a den of thieves. Mr. Jared twitted the clergy of the same inconsistencies between their preaching and practice, doubting if the ladies were kept within the limits of solemn begging, whether the sufferers would realize much from the "warm Christian's" charity—and the dance went on. To use a "down-east" expression, the ministers of Sioux City now roost lower.

If it was Mr. George Gray's desire to harm The Truth Seeker by stopping his paper because we admit articles by Spiritualists and Prohibitionists, his efforts hav failed by the large majority of four to one, as is seen by the subjoined letter:

"Modesto, Cal., Jan. 25, 285.

"Mr. Editor: Inclosed you will find $12, for which you will please send The Truth Seeker to each of the parties named below. I send you these subscribers in place of the subscriber that you lost a few weeks ago in the illiberal Liberal (?) who stopped his paper because, as he said, he could hav nothing to do with either "Spiritualists or Prohibitionists." I wish I could send you a hundred real Liberal subscribers for every so-called Liberal that withdraws on such grounds. Can he not see that if all the Materialists and anti-prohibitionists were, like him, to withdraw their support from the various Liberal papers, those papers would be either all broken down or turned over entirely into the hands of the Spiritualists and Prohibitionists, who then would be their only supporters? Let us outdo our opponents in the supporting of the Liberal papers, and the papers will certainly never discriminate against us.

"My sense of manhood would never permit me to strike an adversary if he were denied the opportunity to return the blow. While I cannot believe in Spiritualism, I recognize most of the Spiritualists as true and earnest Liberals. I can heartily join with them in any Liberal work. Giv them an equal hearing. Who knows but that there may be some truth in their teachings? And if there be not, let us refute their arguments, and not refuse them a hearing.

"I am heartily opposed to the principle upon which Prohibition is based. I am prepared to combat that principle in fair debate, but I am not prepared to combat it from any coward's castle. Giv its advocates a fair chance. They are generally honest and earnest friends of humanity. They simply err in their modus operandi of benefiting the human race. They need to be convinced of their one error by sound arguments. They never can be convinced by being denied a hearing.

"Yours for fair play, John R. Kelso."

Mr. Kelso has our heartiest thanks. It is not the first good turn he has done for The Truth Seeker and for Liberalism. He is full of good works. May his shadow never grow less and his books sell by the million.

Letters from Friends.

HARWICH, MASS., Jan. 5, 285.

MR. EDITOR: You will please find within $6 for yearly dues on THE TRUTH SEEKER for myself and Eben Bearsa, and fifty cents for dear old Father Hacker. I'll try to be a little more self-denying, so as to be able to send him more some time. I suppose you can get it to him without much trouble. I hope, if there is to be a continued individual existence beyond this present one, and we are to hav homes there, that mine will be close by that of Brother Hacker.

My liking for THE TRUTH SEEKER does not abate one bit; it rather increases. It is well arranged and wisely conducted. Where can we find another paper fairer to all parties? Prohibition and anti-prohibition, Materialism and Spiritualism, hard money and soft money, and both hard and soft—all sides hav an airing, and no partiality. For this reason, if for no other, we should be gentlemanly and respectful toward each other. There are presented strong arguments on both sides, notably in regard to the liquor traffic. W. S. Bell, it seems to me, does as well as any man can against Prohibition. One on the fence would be very apt to tip over to his side by reading his arguments alone, but let him cling on long enough to read "L.'s" arguments, and he might continue on the fence, or tip over to his side. Without speaking disparagingly of the moral effects that might and should be made in other ways than by legislation, which I consider far more effectual in suppressing intemperance than by law, should we not avail ourselvs of what aid we can get from legislation? Can we afford to giv it the go-by when we see the magnitude of mischief intemperance is doing? "But," says the anti-prohibitionist, "it makes encroachments upon our personal liberties. Shall we hav governments to interfere and decide what we shall eat and drink?" I know it does seem too much of an assumption to subject men who need no law to government control, but since society is composed of ten rascals to one good man, there must needs be some protection against crime, and the best men must submit to the law that is made for the lawless and disobedient.

If, as Mr. Bell tells us, "passing prohibitory laws does not prevent the sale and use of intoxicating drinks," then I would not advocate them, but I think they do, even when partially executed. How much more effectual they would be if, as they should be and might be, they were carried into execution! Is New York or Massachusetts so weak in practical government as not to be able to cope with anarchic evaders of law? "Nearly every state that has tried Prohibition has repealed its laws." Yes, but that does not prove that they did no good while they lasted.

Mr. Editor, I did not mean to go on at this rate, but I wish to make one more point, for I run no risk of being annihilated by Mr. Bell, since he will not trouble himself to notice such "small fry" as I.

There are some inebriates whose appetites are stronger than their powers of resistance. An ungovernable appetite planted in the constitution of a man whose bump of firmness is small will carry him away captiv every time if he comes within a stone's throw of its locality, but if the man is made to know that the article is not obtainable, he will content himself with the inevitable, and keep sober. I do not like too much government, but I am one of those that believe the manufacture and sale of intoxicants should be carried on exclusivly by government, and only so much should be manufactured as would be needed for medicinal and mechanical purposes. Then we might possibly get the pure article instead of "rot-gut."

B. F. ROBBINS.

MT. SUMMIT, IND., Jan. 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The sample copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER came in due time. I am much pleased with its contents. Inclosed find $1 for four months' subscription, at the end of which time I hope to be able to renew.

If it will not be impertinent in so new a subscriber, I shall say a few words to H. H. Hutcheson, of Leavenworth, Kansas, in regard to his letter of Dec. 1st, in THE TRUTH SEEKER. His is the universal reasoning of the "moderate drinker;" in fact, we guessed as much before reading the shameful confession he seems called upon to make. Is it not a little inconsistent for him to commence his remarks by saying that he knew there was a great evil in the rum traffic (a truth which all lovers of humanity must confess), and ere he winds up make the ridiculous statement that the rum-dealer can prove his usefulness to society in the same degree as can the shoe-dealer, butcher, or other useful tradesman?

He seems to ignore the fact that intoxicants contain within themselvs the very cause of intemperance, in so much as the use of them in most cases creates an appetite for more, which is at length insatiable, outweighing all other desires or objects of life. For this reason it is generally only a question of time between the condition of the "moderate drinker" and that of the poor, miserable, drunken sot.

It is this stealing away, unawares, of manhood, honor, and all that constitutes happiness, that makes the rum traffic a crime above all crimes—in short, the father of crime. If the object of law is to preserve the peace, protect property, and prevent crime, surely the rum business should be first in consideration.

He who opposes Prohibition is apt to show by his conduct that his appetite is stronger than his principle. Would Mr. Hutcheson consider it an insult to his manhood to hav that removed which causes his neighbor's family a life of privation and misery? How much better that such manhood suffer "insult" than that little innocent, helpless children suffer neglect and want, more or less examples of which may be found in every neighborhood, simply because the father has fallen a victim to the snares set at every turn by the rum-seller, and has become a slave to the drinking habit! Would Mr. Hutcheson's manhood be gratified in having a privilege spared him (because he can use and not abuse), to the utter degradation of two-thirds of his neighbors, who are less fortunate as to the possession of will-power? Then, too, we would like to warn Mr. Hutcheson that a man's life-history is never all told before he is dead.

It is always easy enough to tell upon which side of the fence a man like Mr. Hutcheson will take his final stand, even before he ascends to the top to "view the landscape o'er." If there is anything upon this fair earth typical of an orthodox hell, it must be the groggery, the saloon, where the sly demon, Drink, is slowly but surely stealing the bread from the innocent, and the honor and manhood from its victims, where issue forth half-crazed and bloated specimens of humanity in an irresponsible condition, well calculated to render uncertain the safety of both life and property. He who patronizes any such an abode of shame and vice is not as worthy of respect as he who has the manhood (and we mean the genuin kind) to shun it as he would the sure way to destruction.

As to corsets and high heels, there is need of reform here in Indiana, but I fail to find the parallel mentioned by Mr. Hutcheson. At any rate, I hav not read nor heard of any instances of brawls, disturbances, murders, failures in business, loss of situations, destitution of families, separation of families, and the spreading of wholesale misery in which corsets and high heels were mentioned as the cause; but perhaps it is different in Kansas.

MRS. LOU LEATH SNYDER.

BENWOOD, W. VA., Jan. 12, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $2, which please use as directed.

I take considerable interest in the discussions that are continually going on in THE TRUTH SEEKER between Materialists and Spiritualists. I am glad to see that you giv both sides a hearing. In fact, if you did not do so THE TRUTH SEEKER would be of little value to me, or any other honest truth seeker.

Mrs. Slenker's tour of investigation was rather an unsatisfactory one, I think, though it seems she did the best she could under the circumstances. Isn't it strange that men should differ so widely upon that most important of all questions, "If a man die, shall he liv again?" But men will necessarily differ in opinion and belief so long as they differ in mental development. What is true in relation to one mind may be false in relation to another mind. Some ancient philosopher said, "Man is the measure of all things." While I do not regard that as altogether true, yet I incline to the belief that man is one end of the measuring-stick, or, in other words, two pecks of the bushel measure.

I wish to say a few words in regard to Materialism, and what I wish to say is this—whether true or false, it furnishes a poor basis for virtuous conduct or humanitarian effort. The Materialistic martyr to reform principles is for the most part a fool, for the moment that death claims him for its own it will be altogether immaterial to him then what he was or what he did in life.

The logical position of the Materialist, and the logic of Materialism, is, "Eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die." I do not blame the Materialist for being such, but I do blame him for trying to pass his ism for more than it is worth. It's the doctrin of despair, not of hope.

As there are but few here in sympathy with my views, I sometimes feel lonesome, and would therefore like to correspond with a few Liberal ladies between the ages of twenty-three and thirty, if any are willing.

C. HERMAN.

NOVA SCOTIA, Dec. 1, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read THE TRUTH SEEKER for the last year. Some friend has sent it to me. I know it is second-hand, and some time three weeks old in the bargain, but for all that it is a splendid paper, and is death on the sky-pilots. I think that they ought all be sent to the workhouses. I hav read Billings's book about them. If my unknown friend don't send me THE TRUTH SEEKER next year I will hav to subscribe for it myself. You are doing a noble work for a poor man. I hope that you and THE TRUTH SEEKER may liv until the last priest is gone.

Can't some of the able gentlemen who are reading THE TRUTH SEEKER send ten, twenty-five, or fifty cents to help to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER for E. W. Councilman, in Newark Valley, N. Y. See TRUTH SEEKER for Nov. 22, 1884, page 747.

JACOB HUNTERMAN.

U. S. COAST SURVEY OFFICE.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 21, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just received a notice from you that the portion of my subscription to Man which was transferred to THE TRUTH SEEKER has now expired. It was sad news when I heard of the death of Man, for I had taken a deep interest in its issue, but since THE TRUTH SEEKER has been coming so regularly, and always presents such a fresh and "newsy" appearance, supplying instruction as well as entertainment, I begin to think that after all the Liberal cause has not lost much by the failure. We are not numerous enough to support many journals as our orthodox oponents can, and our interests will be best upheld by throwing our whole support on a few well-managed publications, thus enabling the publishers to liv on a plane above personal anxiety. Unless our periodicals hav support enough to insure their regular and prompt issue, we cannot hope to compete with the opposing hosts of other papers. It givs me pleasure to be able to renew my subscription, and, as a convenience in keeping the account, I want it reckoned from the first of January 1885, to the first of next January. I hav already received the numbers thus far in the year, and you can just continue sending until the end of the year, when, if all is well, I will again remit to you. I inclose a postal note for $3.

In closing allow me to congratulate you upon the management of the paper, which you hav maintained in the most satisfactory manner, making it a journal of the first rank among the host of other Liberal papers which are competing with it. If wishes were an endowment, you should be richly provided for, but unfortunately I hav nothing except my bare subscription to spare to prove my appreciation of your noble work.

L. P. SHIDY.

SALLIS, MISS., Jan. 21, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER for three years, and do not in that time remember having seen a communication in our valiant journal from this state, and I presume that Mississippians are thinly represented in the ranks of the favored TRUTH SEEKER readers. I hav traveled extensivly in the state, and hav met perhaps twenty persons who were avowedly, uncompromisingly antagonistic to any orthodox religion. Of course, I may hav met many whose views I did not ascertain—for I made no habit of doing so—who were our friends. For the religious adventurer, the theological quack (faith-cure man), this country holds out first-class inducements. I saw an ignorant mulatto negro this summer who was being boarded around and treated with much reverence by those who believed in his miraculous power to heal. He has disappeared from the community, and I hav yet to hear of any benefit derived, notwithstanding the always ready disposition to magnify the slightest indication of improvement into a wondrous cure. Freethought here grows slowly. When the North and West shall hav stepped forth into the light of reason, the sure result of a higher general education, the South, and Mississippi in particular, will be but emerging into the twilight.

I first saw a copy of your most excellent journal in 1880, in Cheyenne, Wyoming. It was handed me by a Mr. William Hardesty, a perfect gentleman, and a man who subsequently became my partner in business. Up to that time I had never met anyone or read any author who gave me any light upon a subject to which I had devoted much earnest thought myself. Some article—I do not remember the subject now—caught my attention, and I eagerly read it through. With an inward ejaculation I exclaimed, "Them's my sentiments."

Your paper comes to me now promptly every Monday morning, and is read through by myself and wife and carefully filed away. We cherish it as among the things we could not do without, and were THE TRUTH SEEKER to cease to exist we would feel that our cause was waning. We count ourselvs life-subscribers, and hope to witness, as others hav in the past, its growth and steady spread of influence.

Inclosed find three dollars for a new subscriber. A prominent and intelligent physician, and his son, a lawyer, are added to your list of readers, and, I think, permanently. I read them last night Ingersoll's "Which Way?" and they concluded that the right way was to send for the best literary journal they had ever seen.

J. H. COMPTON.

IRWIN MOUND, KAN., Jan. 6, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot refrain from giving my full and complete indorsement of W. S. Bell on "Anti-Prohibition." I do not know who "T. E.L.," that has written a tirade of abuse for a reply, is. It certainly cannot be a woman. If it were, she would hav written her full name. I am surprised to see a man of such intellect, or a woman so grand and so noble as Mrs. Slenker, resorting to law and coerciv measures in the temperance question. Do they not see that they are adopting the same principle and spirit (only less in degree) that burned Bruno and millions of others at the stake? We hav too much law already; we are governed too much; all the good that ever was accomplished was not done by law, but in spite of it. I could smell orthodox brimstone hot all through "T. E. L.'s" communication. Giv him unlimited power, and Mr. Bell and thousands of the best men in the country would soon be tied to a burning stake.

HENRY HIATT.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb. 15, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Glad to say the ANNUAL came all safe, for which many thanks. It is a beautiful specimen of the printer's art, and a credit to your office. The portraits are just splendid, and make one think he has known the originals as old-time acquaintances. The ANNUAL will be a source of pleasure and profit to every Freethinker. I cheerfully recommend it to all my friends.

W. F. PORTER.

IRWIN, PA., Jan. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Having a little leisure, I will improve it by writing a few lines to my Liberal friends, and letting them know I am still numbered among the living. Some about here hav said I had a notion for some time of joining the church again, but I think I shall continue that notion, like those long stories in the story-papers, until it wears entirely out. We can sport two skating-rinks and one ten-pin alley here. Mr. Wm. Crookston's rink is the second transformation of our old Baptist church building. Its first transformation was an opera house. We hav seven church buildings here, but I believe the skating-rinks and ten-pin alley are the best patronized—which, I think, is likely to make the churches jealous.

Times are getting so hard here I had almost concluded to hav my paper stopped on account of funds, but I don't see how I can do without it. So I inclose $2 to pay as far as that will go, and I will try to keep it going as long as I can go myself. I hav been a subscriber nearly seven years, and it is still a welcome visitor.

WM. N. RIDINGER.

PASSAIC, N. J., Jan. 21, 1885.

MR EDITOR: Will you kindly send me your catalog of books? Very likely I shall want your "Liberal Hymn-Book," providing you hav tunes set to them. I am a violinist and a singer, and as I hav children growing up, it has long been my intention to teach those of my children who may hav musical talents either some instrument or singing, and so make my home as bright and cheerful as possible. If a secular hymn-book with tunes be within my reach, I shall be highly pleased.

In reading the account of Mr. Remsburg's lectures at Montezuma, Cayuga Co., N. Y., sorry reflections came to my mind of a similar occurrence at home. If any other subject but Christianity were under discussion, a man who conducted himself as the Rev. Hull did would be set down a lunatic at once by the audience. As it was, many, no doubt, who had calmly listened to Mr. Remsburg would be logically impressed, but immediately that fool put himself in such a maniacal fashion upon the platform would be awed into fear of the old faith. We sometimes say to ourselvs, when no other consolation is left, "The logic of facts must prevail in the end. Universalism must reign supreme." I believe it—but the time it will take!

T. D. HATFIELD.

BRADFORD, PA., Feb. 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: My attention was called to a criticism in the last Sunday's Mail, of Bradford, Pa., upon Colonel Ingersoll's lecture. The article contains as much spleen to the square inch as I wish to see. It was bigotry and falsehood personified. It is said that lies are the most mischievous when they come the nearest to the truth. Almost every sentence contains a thought of untruthfulness. Editors are supported by the people, and the people hav the right to expect the truth from. The notice in the News was just and truthful. It is surprising how much falsehood can be contained in so short a space. The editor of the Mail said the audience was slim, and the subject devoid of interest. If the gentleman who penned the article was present he knew better, and if not, the lack of truth and sense may be accounted for; but in either case it was not justifiable.

Colonel Ingersoll spoke for more than two hours, and he was so interesting and fascinating that only one person left the house (a lady with her restless child in her arms). I can only fancy the editor with his spectacles trying to enchain the same audience for two hours. I fancy, instead of one person leaving, no one would remain to behold the spectacle.

There was no profanity, ribald jokes, or ghastly witticism, as stated, nor was there one impure thought uttered. A more respectful audience I never saw. Colonel Ingersoll is admitted to be one of the brightest of living orators of this age. His lectures are not a rehash. They are remarkable for their distinctiv characteristic features. His lectures will always remain fresh until answered.

The New York and Western papers declare that he is the best drawing card on the continent. The Sun said the people of New York appreciated Colonel Ingersoll at the Academy of Music. It was filled to overflowing, some paying three dollars for a seat.

Beecher introduced him recently as the greatest orator of any language or tongue. The Rev. Newton said he was doing immense good in destroying eternal hell. The editor of the Mail would belittle the great orator, and I learn, to my surprise, that I cannot go to the depot without a personal attack in public print. The News says truthfully that fifty ladies and gentlemen called upon Colonel Ingersoll and wife at the St. James. If the colonel had lost his reason and self-respect, and had called upon the editor and said, "I am prepared to believe the absurdies of revelation, with eternal punishment included," a warm reception (according to the Mail) would await him. It is astonishing to see what belief and credulity can do. How charming in these grand and scientific times to see an editor in superstition's lap, nursing its withered breast!

The editor's spleen seems boiling, and there is no escape, even for a "hoary-headed" alderman. If gray hairs are honorable, and mine should by some freak of nature grow black, I would dye them gray and make them look natural. It is fearful times when a man cannot walk the streets free from the vile comments of an editor. I was pleased to meet so congenial a friend and family at the depot, and I hav lived long to learn that for friendly motivs one may be classified in public print as a hoary-headed saint.

We should boast of free speech, and no one should be ostracized for his opinions and his honest thoughts. He should be respected for his honest views upon all subjects, and a free press should be the faithful chronicler of opinions with fairness.

Thinking people in this age of enlightened reason and common sense know that this world has been humbugged by kingcraft and priestcraft. The philosophers and scientists of this century are trying to dispel the phantoms, dogmas, and superstitions of the age. Thoughtful people are tired of teachings that a belief is better than knowledge, and that to seek knowledge is a crime.

I wish to hav no controversy with anyone, unless in a friendly manner, to improve the intellect, but if an editor will so far forget the sacredness of truth and common politeness, and pour out the vials of wrath upon good men, I must adopt the words of the great poet,

"I'll publish right or wrong;
Fools are my theme—let satire be my song."

O. H. WHEELER.

CENTREVILLE, UTAH, Jan. 18, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The inclosed 25 cents I send you for the pamphlet, "Bible Morals," by Mr. Remsburg, for I think this territory sadly needs moralizing—more so, in my opinion, than any other part of the union. And I just wish Mr. Remsburg and Mr. Reynolds, and another or two of the same stamp, were here to giv some good lectures on morality and evolution, and help to break the infernal priestly shackles that bind the reason of the people. There are many well-meaning people in this territory, but they are bound with this infernal, personal Jew God idea, so that it seems to me they are afraid to plant the standard of their own reason and stand by it against all odds.

The spelling of the name of Judge Zane, whom I mentioned in my letter to THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 13, 1884, I see you hav spelled "Lane."

I must tell you I admire the article on "Evolution" in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 20th; I like also the letter of T. Winter in the number of Jan. 3d, for priestcraft is a sore curse to all civilized peoples. It has drenched this world in cruelty, crime, torture, and blood. Here are many of the gospel instruments of torture in the Tower of London to-day.

I am glad you hav published Mr. Winter's letter, for there is good reason in it. But I will say, Mr. Winter, your Materialism don't grasp all the sublime truth there is in this mighty universe; but I am glad to see you are an enemy to superstition. But, bear in mind, you don't know it all. I should like to write a little a little more on this some time when I hav a good chance.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

A LETTER TO THE LABORING CLASSES ON POLITICS AND RELIGION.

LA CROSSE, WIS., Feb. 16, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The progress of poverty appears to keep pace with the progress of wealth and power. Now, it appears to me there will a day come when a collision must take place. When it does come it will be fearful. Let us endeavor to nullify the result by breaking down the influence of God and religion. Let us teach mankind to reason, and make good sense catching, and not crouch like children. Let us be determined to giv the utmost publicity to Freethought sentiments, as correctiv of the train of evils resulting from the slave-bigot notions of our sky-pilot and God-led usurpers. It becomes Freethinkers at this time to inculcate the first principles of government, which concern human happiness and cannot be neglected with impunity. I want to show the laboring classes that did they but think and reason they never could be kept pining and in want by a few drones, Shylocks, and thieves lording it over them. If men did but reason, they never would allow a corrupt faction of tyrants, lords, and priests—a trinity of despots upon earth, only equaled by the pernicious trinity in heaven—to lord it over them; a faction which riots in church and commercial spoliation, which maintains a few in debilitating luxury, and condemns the many to endless toil and lowest penury.

Men hav never seen clearly the source of their miseries; they hav attributed to the will of a God what was only the effects of despotic laws. Do we not now see it is an unjust government and sky-pilots which are reducing the industrious to poverty and degradation, shackling human thought, and inventing all kinds of barriers to the progress of true knowledge? The ruling power of this country is an imbecil bauble; the lawmakers, a band of brigands and humbugs; and the sky-pilots, or priests, a pack of knavish, cold-blooded hypocrits and cowards; our Congress, a lot of contemptible tools of hideous profligacy; whilst the laboring classes are ignorant slaves, who vote and lick the hands that scourge them, in order to conciliate their tyrants' favor. An intelligent portion know full well that the government we hav is not deserving of support, for it knows nothing but stealing and speculating in land and money in interest with Shylock.

"But shall it ever thus remain?
Shall man contented be
To starve, creating wealth for those
Who mock his misery?
No; every hour of time improves
The mighty wing of mind,
And man shall learn his power and leave
His woes and wants behind."

Yes, let us hasten the day for destroying the whole pile of religious and political rubbish, together with the putrid corruptions engendered by its atrocious absurdities, "and leave our woes and wants behind."

Workingmen, your labor is your property; an unjust government deprives you of the fruits of your labor; they rob you, and afterward apply the ill-gotten wealth to demoralize and crush you. What alternativ is there left? None, but that of taking your own as soon as possible, or your fellows will perish for want (see what a state they are in in the Hocking Valley"—starving to death in the midst of plenty). Workingmen, think of the motto, "The greatest good to the greatest number." Demand that the tyrannical and useless few shall succumb to the useful many. Humanity (if we hav got any) ought to make us shudder to hear and read daily of numbers of our countrymen sinking into the graves and starving for want, victims of our damnable religious and political impostures; yet the blood runs cold through our veins. Pshaw! our blood, like our morality, is so tainted with impurities that we are only the remnants of things that were.

Why do we see mothers and their infants sink into early graves for want by the oppressor's hand, and yet leave the oppressors quiet? Simply because we are ignorant and disunited, or we would soon owe no allegiance to the bigots that do not protect, but rather destroy them. Look at the Comstock rotten law, for instance, a disgrace to any civilized nation! Workingmen, did you ever ask yourselvs why this world should ever be a scene of triumph for the haughty tyrant, the hypocritical cut-throat, and sky-pilots, for them to lord it over you? But,

There is unseen power lies in the mass
Of human slaves, which, if aroused, would sweep
Not mortal tyrants only from their thrones
By one blind crash, but all their blind supporters.

Workingmen, did you ever ask yourselvs why you are made in every age the playthings of ambitions, the pasture of tyrants, or the fettered slaves of capital, the victims of grasping avarice? The earth is cultivated by your toils, and adorned by your hands; shall its fruits, then, ever accumulate in the hands of those who employ them in the punishment of your unmerited poverty, and virtue go without encouragement, and industry without reward? When in work, your labor is incessant, and your remuneration scanty; when you hav produced an abundance, you hav to sit down and starve until others see fit to consume it. Hence, distress, the messenger of death, passes over your homes, not because of your idleness, but because of your industry! Hav men ever thought why they are content to hold their lives at the breath of a few cold-blooded monopolists, banded under the title of priests, shysters, and aristocrats, who convert our cities into dens of vice and wretchedness, receptacles of tyranny, "where wealth accumulates, and men decay;" the charnel-houses in which men, women, and children are by thousands steamed and sweated into eternity?

No; men hav not given the matter a serious thought, or they would hav swept the whole complicated machinery of cunning, fraud, force, and tyranny, yclept priesthood, yclept government, into oblivion long before this; but ignorance is the cause—they hav not given it a serious thought. The objects of government were for providing justice, and for the protection of all, or for the promotion of the general welfare of all. When a government neglects this duty its people degenerate into mere slaves. It requires no arguments, when we view the vast amount of poverty on the one hand, and luxury on the other, to prove that governments do not exist for the millions, but for the aggrandizement of a band of tyrannical ruffians.

Oh, this would be a happy world
To all who may partake it;
The fault's our own, if it is not—
This life is what we make it.

Yes, this life is what we make it when we fight among ourselvs as to whether God prefers men being ducked over head and ears, or sprinkled on the face; and whether God damns to all eternity children of a "span long."

Thus are men turned from their interests, and set by the ears about chimeras, which are encouraged by priestly sky-pilots and believed in by silly dupes. Workingmen, drop all nonsensical appeals to Gods and governments; up from your knees—depend on yourselvs for your liberties! If you depend on Gods and governments, you depend on broken reeds, and deserve your fate. Gods and governments never yet cared for workers, who were always doomed to a life of toil and combat so long as they left their affairs in the hands of others, and did not, like Æsop's wagoner, put their own shoulders to the wheel. In ancient, as in modern times, the religious and aristocratic butchers led them in thousands to slay and be slain. What was, or is, the value of human life to those yclept monarchs, priests, and aristocrats? Yet we admire these devils, treat them with respect, erect monuments, mausoleums, and giv them power and riches to convert this earth into a howling wilderness, check education, and stifle human reason. They were

Fierce as ten furies—
Terrible as hell!

Yes, men hav become the dupes of a set of sharpers who, under the name of religionists, hav fleeced them of their reason. Surely God-belief is a horrid delusion and a terrible curse. Governments and religions are nothing but despotisms engendered in ignorance, perpetuated by blood, and existing only by force and fraud. Do not the people know that our shysters, priests, and sky-pilots laugh in their sleeves at the absurd tales of heavens, hells, Gods, and devils, which they hav imposed on the ignorant, and, at the same time, despise them for it? The first thing the people should do is to discover the best mode of government suited to the advancement of men in every country—a government that will giv facility for its being molded at will to fit the knowledge of the age, and bear within it perfect principles of improvement. The struggles of the press for unlimited freedom of speech forctell a revolution. Yes, the patience of a famishing people is wearing out; the weapons of war are in the hands of the oppressors, but they must be wrenched from them, and those who expect liberty must win by intelligence and good sense. Yes, workingmen, hav good sense and make it catching, and then you will despise all Gods, all Christs, all priests, all sky-pilots, all monarchs, and lords, and lay them in one common grave, and be rid of such a nest of vampires and hideous monsters. I am the well-wisher of the whole human race.

J. PETTEY
(aged 70 years, who never went to school in his life).

WEST GARLAND, ME., Jan. 19, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I see that I, for the first time, am a little negligent in my renewal, but here it is, three dollars to renew till Jan. 1, 1886, and also one dollar for which you will please forward to my address six copies of "Bible Morals," by John E. Remsburg. I will not think for a moment of getting along without THE TRUTH SEEKER, to read which is my greatest enjoyment, and I get more benefit and instruction from it than all other papers. I would like some of the discussions better were the disputants a little more lenient; not quite so positiv as they seem to be that they know or hav learned all, when, in fact, they know but little of the real facts of the subject matter of which they are writing.

I think until they can produce some stronger and better arguments than slang, or calling those with whom they honestly differ idiots and cranks, they had better retire for awhile and try and post themselvs on what they don't know, or what others hav had the opportunity of learning, or really do know, which they do not. Our great and best speakers and writers do not resort to such, but rather to good sound logic. Arguments that are convincing are what I like, and am ready to receive.

For thirty years I hav spent much time, and some money, trying to get satisfactory proof that we liv on when this flesh is dropped, but, as yet, lack satisfactory evidence. Also the same with Materialism, with about the same result, and at last hav come to the conclusion that neither Spiritualists nor Materialists can solve the problem they hav undertaken. However, I think one or the other may be right in their conclusions, but which I am not prepared to say. I find myself, with what little evidence I hav been able to gain from Spiritualism and Materialism, oscillating between the two, waiting patiently for more and better evidence. Am now rather inclining to Materialism. To-morrow, should I get something more satisfactory than I now hav from my Spiritual friends, I may find myself inclined to Spiritualism—am liable to these changes simply for the want of more real, tangible evidence than I now hav of the future of mankind.

In this condition am quite as unconcerned as an idiot possibly could be, quietly receiving the curses of church, and the fierce denunciations of Spiritualists for the simple reason that I cannot accept their crude, unreasonable ideas in full of past, present, and future. Truth is what I am seeking for, and am searching THE TRUTH SEEKER for it.

J. C. LAWRENCE.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Guilty or Not Guilty.

She stood at the bar of justice,
A creature wan and wild,
In form too small for a woman,
In feature too old for a child.
For a look so worn and pathetic
Was stamped on her pale young face;
It seemed long years of suffering
Must hav left that silent trace.

"Your name," said the judge, as he eyed her
With kindly look, yet keen,
"Is—Mary Maguire, if you please, sir."
"And your age?" "I hav turned fifteen."
"Well, Mary"—and then from a paper
He slowly and gravely read—
"You are charged here—I am sorry to say it—
With stealing three loaves of bread.

"You do not look like an offender,
And I hope that you can show
The charge to be false. Now tell me,
Are you guilty of this or no?"
A passionate burst of weeping
Was at first her sole reply;
And she dried her tears in a moment,
And looked in the judge's eye.

"I will tell you just how it was, sir—
My father and mother are dead,
And my three little brothers and sisters
Were hungry and asked me for bread,
At first I earned it for them,
By working hard all day,
But somehow the times were hard. sir,
And the work all fell away.

"I could get no more employment;
The weather was bitter and cold;
The young ones shivered and cried
(Little Johnnie's but four years old);
So what was I to do, sir?
I am guilty, but do not condemn;
I took—oh, was it stealing?—
The bread to giv to them.

Every man in the court-room—
Gray-bearded, and thoughtless youth—
Knew, as he looked upon her,
That the prisoner spoke the truth.
Out from their pockets came handkerchiefs,
Our from their eyes sprung tears,
And out from old faded wallets
Treasures hoarded for years.

The judge's face was a study
The strangest you ever saw,
As he cleared his throat and murmured
Something about the law.
For one so learned in such matters,
So wise in dealing with men,
He seemed on a simple question
Sorely puzzled just then.

But no one blamed him or wondered
When at last they heard:
"The sentence of this young prisoner
Is for the present deferred."
And no one blamed him or wondered
When he went to her and smiled,
And tenderly led from the court-room,
Himself, the erring child.

NEWPORT, ME,

DEAR CHILDREN OF THE CHILDREN'S CORNER: I send to Miss Wixon the above poem, because I love you, and because I want to do you good.

I hope you will commit it to memory, and speak it in public.

There are many sad cases like "Mary Maguire's" all over the world. I wish you all to try to become benefactors of suffering humanity all through your lives. Your friend, SEWARD MITCHELL.

Edwin's Genie.

"I tell you, Marian, Edwin has a genie! He must hav, or he never could get those hard examples through his head the way he does—just as e-a-sy as can be, without a bit of trouble, while we hav to work and work, and then fail to get them."

"I shouldn't wonder if he has a genie, or something of the sort," said Marian in reply, "for our Jim has seen him many a time walking with his hands behind him and talking to himself—or something."

"Of course 'twas the genie—no doubt of it; dreadful thing to think of, Marian."

"Yes, but I wish I had a genie, too; I can't bother over this hard old problem any longer. I'm going to ask Edwin to help me;" and Marian crossed over to where Edwin was sitting at his desk, studying his Latin lesson just before school time.

"Edwin," said she, "will you show me about this example? I've tried and tried, and I can't get it."

"How long hav you been trying it?" asked Edwin.

"Oh, ever and ever so long—as many as fifteen minutes!"

Edwin muttered as he took the slate, and performed the example in less time than it takes to tell this story.

"It proves it!" said Emily; "he is in league with some genie, as sure as you liv!"

"I'll tell you how we can find out," whispered Marian. "His sister, Dora, thinks there may be something of the sort, for he sits up so late nights. She said we might come and sleep with her some night, and find out all about it."

"Agreed. Suppose we go to-night! I fairly shiver, though, to think of seeing the genie," said Emily in a low tone. "We must be brave, and not scream out when it comes. Dora says he has a silver ring made of their great-grandmother's thimble, and she was called a witch; and Edwin has been seen to twist and turn it on his finger a good many times; and who knows that it is not a magic ring, and that his old grandmother comes and helps him! He is working on the box problem in the old Greenleaf's arithmetic, and it is so hard that nobody in his class can get it; but Edwin has promised the teacher he will hav it to-morrow morning! There now! Doesn't that show he is in league with genii, or something?"

"Will find out to-night, anyhow," and Marian shook her head thoughtfully.

That evening the three girls, Dora, Emily, and Marian, might hav been seen snugly stowed behind an old dresser in the kitchen of Dora and Edwin's home, as still as silence, and breathing very softly.

Presently Edwin came in, and, with book, slate, and pencil, seated himself in front of the big kitchen table, and went to work on the famous box problem.

"He is scratching his head awfully," whispered Emily, peeping out from behind the dresser.

"I guess it will come pretty soon," said Mariam, softly. "My heart beats wildly—don't you hear it thump?"

"Jehosaphat! Je-rusa-lem! Me-thuselah!" ejaculated Edwin, "but this is a tough one! I've squared it, and cubed it, and twisted it in every way, and I can't see through it, nohow. I wish I had some help."

"O Lordy Jenkins!" said Marian in a whisper. "He's conjuring the genii now, I know. Oh, keep still, don't speak for the life of ye! Oh, I'm so scared! I'm all of a quiver!"

"Oliver Quiver! Who's he?" and Dora giggled.

"'Sh! said Emily; "he will hear us, and then the old genie will come and kill us, likely as not. But what is he doing now? Peep out and see."

"Figgering just as fast as his fingers can fly," replied Dora, looking slyly out from behind the dresser.

Edwin whistled a long, low whistle, and leaned back in his chair with hands clasped above his head. Then he opened the window and looked out upon the starlit night. The cool breeze tossed his hair about, and cooled his heated brow. Shortly after he went back to his work again.

"I'll hav it to-night if I stay up till broad daylight," and down upon the table came his clenched fist, whack, whack, whack.

"Did the genie come in at the window?" tremblingly asked Marian.

"I didn't see it," said Emily. "Oh, I'm getting so sleepy, and maybe it will not come till twelve o'clock! Oh, dear! I wish we could get out of this and go to bed."

Just then Edwin jumped up and commenced to dance and leap wildly about the room. "O Jack Horner! Tom Thum! Robinson Crusoe! Don Quixote!

Te um, te um, te dil de um!
I knew 'twould come, I knew 'twould come!
Te um, te um, te dil de um!

So he jumped, and sang, and danced, while the old black-and-white cat stood up in the old-fashioned rocking-chair, and hooped up her back and stared at him as if she would say, "I think your antics are very funny, Master Edwin."

All at once there came a scratch on the door. "Oh! oh! oh!" almost screamed Emily. "It is coming now, sure enough. Be brave, don't speak! Oh, I dare not look! Oh, the terrible genie!"

Edwin danced to the door laughing and singing, "Te um, te um, te dil de um!" but as he opened the door a sudden gust of wind blew out the light.

The girls were in mortal terror. Something had come in, sure enough, and they crept close together and shivered with fear.

"Wait till I get a light old fellow!" and as soon as the light was procured he commenced to jump, and dance and sing as before; but the girls were so frightened they dared not look to see the genie, now that they thought it had come.

"I wonder what the dresser is pulled out like that for!" exclaimed Edwin, and he gave it a great push, and, of course, the girls were pinched terribly thereby. They had hidden their faces on each other's shoulders, and stuffed their aprons in their mouths to prevent their voices being heard in screams. But just as something, some object, pounced upon Marian, she uttered a prolonged shriek, which was echoed by Dora and Emily.

Edwin was frightened, just the least bit, for a moment, as he hastily ejaculated, "W-wh-what's all this? Hello! come out here!" and he pulled Dora out first, and then dragged Emily and Marian to the light.

"Don't let it hurt us; oh, don't! Good Edwin, please don't let it eat us up!" they exclaimed in concert.

"Let what eat you up—what do you mean?" he asked wonderingly.

"Why—the—the ogre!—the genie!" said Emily. "Wh—where is it?" she inquired, looking around, and seeing nobody but Edwin.

"The ogre! the genie! what are you thinking of?" he questioned.

"Why—we—we thought you let a genie in! We—we heard—it scratch on the door!"

I let the dog in—here Rover! come here and bite these three foolish girls. Dora, I thought you had more sense. But—whoop la! I've solved the problem! I hav! I hav! It was the dog scratching the door to get in, and you thought it a genie! Hooray, Rover! you are a genie—do you hear?" and Edwin commenced capering and dancing again.

"But now, tell us, Edwin," said Marian, havn't you a genie, truly, that comes and helps you solve those hard problems?—they all say so at school."

"Well, now—I'll tell you. I hav a genie that helps me! So, come now."

"Oh, a real genie! Do tell us, Edwin. Why, it is like the 'Arabian Nights,' truly. How long hav you had him? Will he hurt us? Has he green eyes? and does he spit fire?" they all talked and questioned at the same time.

"You just be patient, and I'll tell you. He hasn't green eyes, he doesn't spit fire, nor will he hurt you—so. He is with me a good part of the time, and he helps me solve problems—there now!

"There's that example I showed you how to do, to-day, Marian, that you worked on for fifteen minutes!—he did that for me; but I had to work four hours on it first, though.

"Now this box problem—how long do you think I've been trying on that?"

"Don't know, I'm sure!" said Marian.

"Well, I worked on it, off and on, out of school hours, ten days, and I couldn't see through it at all; but to-night I was bound to hav it, anyway. I tried and tried, till my head ached, and I opened the window to let in some fresh air; and while I was looking at the stars, all at once it came to me, like a flash, just how to work it; and there 'tis, on the slate, all right!"

"And did the genie really help you?" asked Emily.

"S'pose so. He sticks by me, I tell you, like a trooper."

"What is his name? what do you call him?" inquired Marian, while Dora stood by, laughing.

"His name!—let me see. The first of it is Per—se," and Edwin looked very wise and solemn.

"And the rest?—Oh, tell the rest!" said Emily.

"Well, it is—verance—Perseverance. Never giv up! Try, try again! And now go to bed; and don't you be ever so silly as to believe in genii again. There are none, such as you fancy."

Our Puzzle Box.

1.

WORD SQUARE.

1. Dissension.
2. A kind of dragon.
3. Small eggs.
4. Anything remaining.
5. A luminous exhalation from marshy grounds.

Pittsburgh, Pa. H. E. JUERGENS.

2.

CHARADE.

Is found in "Story Hour,"
The first letter of my name;
Add six and five hundred,
You hav a Roman author of fame.

Newburgh, N. Y. ROBT. BERNHEIM.

3.

A HARD NUT TO CRACK.

One Rekab, a Turk, as I understand,
Out West on the "plains," owned a square piece of land.
Like all other Turks, as I hav been told,
This Rekab Semaj is an Infidel bold.
In favor of learning for women and men,
To help found a college he gave acres ten.
From one side of his farm, in the middle fair,
This land was measured out perfectly square.
He made one condition on signing the deed,
Which was no more than right, as all are agreed,
That the trustees should build a good board fence
Around the ten acres at their own expense.
"Now," said worthy Rekab, "I'll measure and see,
The fence I must build is shaped like an E.
If the land I hav left was square as before,
I think I could fence it clear round with no more."
He measured, and found he was right in his guess,
For it took just the same, no more and no less.
Now tell me, kind friends, exact to a fraction,
How much land he had before his kind action.
If you tell correctly, you need no college
To teach you more mathematical knowledge.

Grand Rapids, Mich. ESPRIT FORT.

4.

A BATCH OF PI'S.

Ereht si a prerae soehw eman si thead,
Dan si sih klesic neke;
Eh pears het dedreab raing ta a reathb,
Nad het srewofl hatt rowg neweteb.

Our sevil are srevir dingild reef
Ot taht nohtafudem, sesldnoub eas,
Het tnelis aevrg.
Threiht lla yhltrea mopp dan tsoab
Lorl ot eb dewollaws pu dan tsol
Ni eno kard evaw.

Thomaston, Conn. BENNY DICTION.

[There is no certainty that the above puzzle is put correctly in type. "Benny Diction" might do something toward illustrating the appropriateness of his name by writing plainer. —UNINSPIRED COMPOSITOR.]

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, JAN. 24, 1885.

1. Life. 2. The recent strike in Hocking Valley. 3. Revolver.

IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, FEB. 14, 1885.

1. Cerebus—Erebus—rebus, bus, us (U. S.), S. Observe the reversed spelling of the last half of the name, "S-u-r-e." 3.

A T T I C
T A R R Y
T R E A D
I R A T E
C Y D E R

4. Pennsylvania.

Correspondence.

MY DEAR CHILDREN OF THE CORNER: The study of Nature in any of her varied forms and phases is always interesting and ennobling to the pure-minded seeker after truth and knowledge. I hope you, my young friends, will pursue this study whenever you hav the opportunity. There is a lesson in everything; from the tiniest flower to the loftiest tree, from the coziest valley to the grandest mountain, from the silvery brook that flows and sparkles like a shining ribbon through the dear old farm and down yonder by the forest to the mighty ocean.

Many years ago I lived by the sea; I often rode upon its waters. I believe I loved it better than any other natural object, and spent many hours and days in studying its wonders.

If your "Dear Miss Wixon" pleases, I will tell you something about the grand, lovely ocean world, from time to time:

THE NAUTILUS.

The sea is full of wonder, delight, and romance; a very interesting object of study is the nautilus. The most beautiful species is the pearly nautilus; the shell is lined with a thin layer of glossy, pearl-like substance, and is so thin and delicate as to be almost transparent. It is of a convoluted form, that is, in whorls round and round, the last whorl being equal to all the others. The orientals gather these shells from the waters, or from the shores where they are often thrown up by the waves, and carve upon them pretty, fanciful designs, and then use them for drinking cups and flower vases. Hindoo priests use them as trumpets to call their people together to attend their superstitious ceremonies. It makes me feel sorry to think so beautiful an object should be used for so degrading a purpose.

I hav told you of the shell, but the little sailor who livs in this frail boat is more wonwonderful still. He has eight arms, two of which are furnished with thin membranes. These he hoists above the opening of his glistening shallop for sails, the other six he throws over the sides for oars.

When the skies are clear and the waters smiling, he rows and sails about, hither and thither, as if rejoicing in the glad sunshine; but let the storms arise and ruffle the surface of the sea, our wise little mariner folds up his sails, takes in his oars, turns the opening of his boat down, and takes up water enough to make it so heavy it will sink into the placid depths beneath, where it will remain till the little seaman can feel by the vibrations of the waters that all danger is over, when he empties out the water he took into his boat, and again comes to the surface to bask in the delicious sunshine and to renew his sports.

MRS. BUCKNER-JOHNSON, M.D.

Central City, Colorado.

STATUETTE OF THOMAS PAINE.

This Statuette of the author-hero is a fac simile of the model of Prof. Richards for the monument proposed to be erected in Lincoln Park. It is admitted to be a fine work of art, and is the only correct outline of Thomas Paine's head and face in existence being executed from a mask taken at the time of his death, and sent, with other effects, to a friend in France, from whence Prof. Richards procured it for his design.

Size 20x16 inches, weight 35 lbs.; finished in the same style as Rogers's groups.

Price reduced from $14.00 to $10.00. Sole agent, E. A. STEVENS, 480 W. Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

A BOOK FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

PRICE, $1.25; TWO COPIES, $2.00.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

FACTS.

A Magazine Devoted to the Statements of Mental and Spiritual Phenomena.

Single Copies 10 cents.

39tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THIRD EDITION.

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions

Being a Comparison of the Old and New estament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

The object of the work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.

"It has long been acknowledged by the most eminent biblical students that the Hebrew scripture contain a large mythical element; but, so far as we know, the present is the first complete and scholarly atttempt to trace these myths to their source, and ascertain their original signification."—Boston Courier.

"Never before has there been given a volume to the reading world that shows the research for the origin of these myths as does this one just published by J. W. Bouton, of New York."—Boston Times.

"It is unquestionably true that the results of a rationalistic study of the Christian scriptures are nowhere else so accessible as they are now made in the work before us.—N. Y. Sun.

1 Vol. Royal 8vo. Cloth. About 600 pages.

Price, - - - - - - $3.00

Sent postpaid, on receipt of price, Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.

Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place. New York.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY.

OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who have helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

PRICE, - - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Will Cure all Forms of Disease Without Medicine.

CONSULTING ROOMS,

471 WEST MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Something for Invalids to read and study over.—Stop Drugging and try Nature's Remedy, MAGNETISM.

For years past it has been known to the profession that Magnetism and Electricity were powerful agents for imparting vital force and energy to the worn-out sufferer from disease. Many humanitarians in the profession, thinking more of the alleviation of suffering than they did of the code of ethics by which they were bound, have resorted to magnetic treatment as a last resort and found themselves astonished at the effect upon their patients. They had been taught that medicine was an absolute essential in all cases, and that that failing, the patient must die, as nothing more could be done. Here and there an advanced thinker has flung aside the tie which bound him to his dogmatic brethren and has resorted to other and more scientific methods of treatment. As a result many, having broken the bonds which bound them to a system as barbarous as it was unscientific, have used their best energies to devise means for the alleviation of human suffering. Here and there the wondrous power of MAGNETISM was established, and many diseases hitherto classed as incurable readily submitted to its mild but potent influence. This agent to the intelligent observer was found everywhere. Being, as it is, the very essential of all life, it was found that the human body when in a diseased condition was almost bereft of this vital principle. If we can supply this vital force to the worn-out body the patient will get well.

And but how is it to be done, says the physician. Science, however, came to the rescue, and solved the problem. Here and there throughout the world are fields of what are known as magnetic ore. It was observed that the ore, when carried upon the person, was found to be a safeguard against disease, and to this circumstance we are largely indebted for magnetic wearing apparel, for it was an easy transition from carrying magnetic ore to covering the body with permanently charged magnets, placed in garments fitted to every part of the body. Since the first introduction of magnetic appliances as a curative, there has been a number of these so-called magnetic garments foisted upon the public by men whose sole object was gain. Unscientific in construction, and having little if any magnetism in them, their life was of short duration; it was long enough, however, to demonstrate that when constructed upon scientific principles there was scarcely an ailment that human flesh is heir to that would not submit to their healing influence.

THE EUREKA MAGNETIC APPLIANCES are superior to everything of a similar character heretofore offered to the public, being the only scientifically constructed appliance in the market; it is now two and a half years since they were first offered to the public, and during that time we hav treated thousands of patients, and not a single case of failure to receive benefit reported to us, while we are in daily receipt of testimonials of cures from all parts of the country. We know that disease cannot exist where these garments are worn in quantities as advised by us.

To all who may be afflicted with any of the following complaints, we say unhesitatingly, the Eureka Magnetic Garments will cure you:—Paralysis, Rheumatism, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Bleeding at the Lungs, Spinal Disease, Gout, Asthma, Bronchitis, Congestion of the Kidneys, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Loss of Energy, Heart Disease, Constipation, Consumption, Prolapsus Uteri, Chronic Peritonitis, Cancer, Ovarian Tumors Syphilis, Epilepsy, St. Vitus' Dance, and all form of chronic invalidism.

PRICE LIST.

Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6 00
Gentlemen's Body Belts,	6 00
Sciatic Appliances, -	5 00
Knee Caps, - - - -	3 00
Leg Belts, - -	4 00
Anklets, - - -	4 00
Shoulder Appliances,	4 00
Wristlets, each, -	1 50
Hat Bands, - -	1 00
Head Caps, - - -	4 00
Sleeping Caps, - -	4 00
Abdominal Belts (ladies), -	6 00
Gents' Vests, - -	15 00
Ladies' Jacket and Corset (combined), - - -	18 00
Superfine Insoles (all leather),	1 00

While these garments can be procured at the above low prices no one can afford to be ill. Our ladies' supporters are just what every lady in the land needs, as it will be found a great assistance at certain periods; all these garments are made to measure, and a fit guaranteed. To ladies who are all dragged out a combination jacket and corset will restore you to new life and energy, and pay for itself an hundred fold in a few weeks' wear. This garment is only made from actual measure, and a perfect fit assured.

All communications answered free of charge. Address, DR. L. TENNEY, 471 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill. ☞ Agents wanted for Boston, New York Brooklyn, and Philadelphia.

Poetry.

Only a Woman.

Only a woman, shriveled and old,
The prey of the winds and the prey of the cold,
Cheeks that are shrunken,
Eyes that are sunken,
Lips that were never o'erbold.
Only a woman, forsaken and poor,
Asking an alms at the bronze church door.

Hark to the organ! Roll upon roll
The waves of the organ go over the soul!
Silks rustle past her,
Thicker and faster;
The great bell ceases its toll.
Fain would she enter, but not for the poor
Swingeth wide open this bronze church door.

Only a woman! In far-off days
Hope caroled to her happiest lays;
Somebody missed her,
Somebody kissed her,
Somebody crowned her with praise.
Somebody faced up the battle of life,
Strong for her sake who was mother or wife.

Somebody lies with a tress of her hair
Light on his heart where the death-shadows are.
Somebody waits for her,
Opening the gates for her,
Giving delight for despair.
Only a woman—nevermore poor—
Dead in the snow at the bronze church door.

The Rows of Orthodoxy.

I notice, Jack, they're keepin' up their orthodox conniption
Amongst the city churches, an' it passes my description,
To tell how unenticin' to the unelected critters
The gospel's made to 'pear by sich as Parson Newman's hitters.

These fokes are brothers in the Lord—of sweet religious union,
An' hold themselvs as patterns of the good of church communion,
But let 'em strike an issue 'bout some sneakin' triv'al matter,
An' fightin' cats ain't ekal to the venom that they'll scatter.

Now, Jack, the pizen 'bout this cur'us modern church example
Is this: these chaps contend that they're the very purest sample
Of what the poppylation of the upper realm is made of—
A sort of angel caravan the devil is afraid of.

But gosh! if heaven's gonter be infected with such ructions
As late events show up to us as orthodox productions,
There's some of us at judgment day that thinks they're 'mong the 'lected
Will git up quite a protest 'gainst their bein' resurrected.

For my part, Jack, I'd ra'her sleep with worms and sich creations
Than wake amongst a lot o' fokes that's sot on disputations,
For wheresumdever wranglin' seems ter be the people's motter,
No matter how they calls it heaven, I calls it somethin' hotter.

Books.

The stories and sketches in the "Story Hour," though different from Sunday-school literature, are entirely original, pure in tone, and well calculated to broaden, lighten, and strengthen the growing mind.—Rhode Island Pendulum.

There is no book for children and youth of greater beauty, more charming text, or more fascinating pictures than the "Story Hour," by Miss Susan H. Wixon (New York; published by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place). The reading of these stories, the study of these illustrations, must be a long delight to the happy children who get hold of them; and Miss Wixon must forever remain the sweetheart and charmer of every youthful reader. The print is large, the paper thick, and no more enjoyable present can be given to any child.—John Swinton's Paper.

The "Story Hour" is a book for children and youth, and one that deserves the patronage of every father and mother in the land who believes in bringing up children free from the taint of superstition. It contains thirty-five story-tales, each of which is a gem in itself, and each inculcating beautiful and noble moral teachings. In a literary and artistic sense it reflects the highest credit upon the great and growing power of Agnosticism.—San Francisco Universe.

MR. H. L. GREEN'S OPINION.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., Feb. 13, 285.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I am sure that injustice is very often done to the public by the too common error of praising a new book just to please the publishers and get a sale for it. Book notices and reviews should be truthful to be of any value. And now, with these introductory words, I desire to speak to your readers what I feel to be the exact truth in relation to your new publication, "The Story Hour." I certainly think it the best juvenil book that has ever been issued from the Liberal press, and one that should be in every Freethinker's family where there are children. As you know, I drop you this line unasked, and do it just because I fear some of our Freethought families may not fully understand what a magnificent book this is, and will, therefore, not think to order it from the publishers. All who do fail to procure this book will certainly deprive themselvs of a most valuable intellectual treat for their children, and, I think I can justly add, for themselvs, too, as the stories are interesting reading for adults also.

Now, Mr. Editor, allow me to suggest a plan which may prove mutually beneficial to the publishers and the Liberal public. It is this: Can't you say that you will send 5 copies of this book, (well worth $1.25) to one address, for $5? If you will publish these lines, and will, at the end, so consent, I am sure that in many places five families will join together in a neighborhood and send for five copies. During "hard times" we know that everyone desires to save a cent where they can. I make this request for the reason that I am very desirous that every Liberal family hav "The Story Hour." H. L. GREEN.

[We will be happy to mail any number of copies of this book from two upward at $1 each.—ED. T. S.]

WAIFS AND WANDERINGS. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

Hav just perused "Waifs and Wanderings." Words of ours cannot add to the fame of the gifted author, eloquent orator, and the genial companion. To read, to hear, or to know, is to admire. He impregnates each sentence with the grand convictions of his own soul. He is truthful to nature. In human acts and expressions he traces the counterpart or simile in the external world. In Mrs. Cupples with her ruffled nightcap he sees "a line of breakers on a dark and stormy sea—her eyes, lanterns on a heaving ship." Then his conceptions of the baby—"fresh as a rose-bud, dewy with tears, with the light of heaven on its velvet face;" while the burden of its cries is as a "Niagara suddenly plunged upon the unoffending Cupples, transforming him into a 'Teneriffe,' and leaving him like a wreck stranded upon the shores of morning." How many a mother has felt herself a "stranded wreck" after nightly vigils! The author comprehends the conditions attending all the phases of life—his characters are true to life. The Rev. Hapgood "does nothing on the reserve, ever aiming to be on the safe side." Mrs. Hiram Binney "knows how to say nothing with awful ponderosity," evading, shirking duties, trusting all to somebody else—"standing on respectable selfishness." Who has not met just such characters! Billy Stubbs is a fair representativ of justice as exemplified in human affairs—"you can't right a wrong so long as there's money to be made out of it;" "only when wrong is poverty-stricken, will people demolish it."

When reading from his versatil, gifted pen, or listening to his eloquent oratory, one feels that he is superior to the ills flesh is heir to; but how human he seems when he says: "What slaves we are to our poor flesh after all—how soon it gets the better of our spirits; for who can think of beauty and joy when his corns are aching!" How, too, he solves the riddle of such lives as "Tony Lumkins's," the object of whose existence seems merged in furnishing the "wheels" for the escaping fugitivs. Such detached, isolated lives, which seem to hav no earthly mission, are yet "links in the chain that goes shining on."

The escape of the fugitivs; the baying of the bloodhounds as they anxiously await the expected train at the lone station; the alternate listening, auribus rectibus, for the longed-for rumble of the train; then the deep-mouthed baying of the approaching hounds—the one a source of hope, joy, and deliverance, the other, suffering and death—are moments of the most intense agony. As the sensitiv soul reads, the respiration is stifled, the nerves wrought to a high tension, and a sigh of relief ends the agony when the puffing, thundering train wins the race, and Amy and her child are safely on board! Poor, corpse-like Cupples may then hope for a modicum of sympathy, which is an unction to all mortals when nature succumbs to over-taxation.

Again, at the steamboat wharf, when the soldiery embark—so vivid, lifelike, the description, the partings, the adieus, that the reader feels the actual pangs wrung by separation; the crowded docks, the rending good-byes, the clang of the bell, the splash of the iron wheels, the growing, somber twilight, the begemmed heavens, the vast gulf of separation, the smokestack lost to sight, oppress till we feel we are one of the aching hearts left behind.

On every page we are impressed with his deep insight into human nature, that mankind are creatures of circumstances—what we condemn to-day we do to-morrow.

Truly has he embodied the ideal woman in Amy, the personation of grandeur and grace—powers born only of struggle; that "woman should be as universal as man in knowledge and capacity;" that the imperial gifts of humor, wisdom—that the intensity of the volcano and tornado and the calmness of the summer's sea belong equally to both sexes.

We hav aimed to indicate briefly some of the strongest, most beautiful features of the work. To be appreciated it must be read. Every Liberal should possess himself of the book.

In conclusion, as Mr. Putnam is "doing the continent," imparting joy, knowledge, and cheer wherever he journeys, lighting up and blazing the highway for Freedom, let every one resolve to hear him and to aid the cause he so gloriously champions.

GRACE L. PARKHURST.

ENGLISH BOOKS & PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

ANCIENT MYSTERIES DESCRIBED; Especially the English miracle plays, as "Fools and Asses," "English Boy-Bishop," "Descent into Hell," "Lord Mayor's Show," "The Guildhall Show," etc. By Wm. Hone. With engravings on copper and wood. $3

THE APOCRYPHAL NEW TESTAMENT. Being all the gospels and epistles not included in the New Testament. By Wm. Hone, London, 1820. $2 25

DESERT LIFE. Recollections of an Expedition in the Soudan. By B. Solymos, C.E. Cover slightly damaged. $3 50

EUROPEAN CIVILIZATION. Protestantism and Catholicism Compared in their Effects on the Civilization of Europe. By Rev. J. Balmes. $2 50

JEWISH AND CHRISTIAN ETHICS; With a Criticism of Mohammedanism. By E. Benamozegh (translated from the French). 75 cents

THE DEVELOPMENT OF CREATION ON THE EARTH. The Process of Creation. The Antiquity of the Earth, and Its Human Inhabitants, etc. By Thomas Lumisden Strange. $1 25

THE LEGENDS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT, traced to their apparent primitive sources. By Thomas Lumisden Strange. $2 50

THE SPEAKER'S COMMENTARY. Reviewed by Thos. Lumisden Strange. $1 25

RIG-VEDA-SANHITA. Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans. Vol. I., Hymn to the Maruts or Storm Gods. By F. Max Muller, M.A., LL.D. The oldest collection of religious poetry published. $3 75

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIGION. With Life and Writings of Berkeley. By John Stuart Mill. 2 50

A RETROSPECT OF THE RELIGIOUS LIFE OF ENGLAND. By John James Tayler, B.A. With Introduction by James Martineau. $2 50

THE ESSENCE OF CHRISTIANITY. By Ludwig Feuerbach. Translated from the German by George Eliot. London, 1881. $3

THE PEDIGREE OF MAN, and other Essays. With 80 wood cuts. By Ernst Haeckel. Translated by Edward B. Aveling. $2 50 Among the contents are "Cell-Souls," and "Soul-Cells," etc.

MIND IN ANIMALS. By Prof. Ludwig Buchner. Translated from the German by Annie Besant. $2 50

TRANSLATIONS FROM THE HAKAYIT ABDULLA (Bin Abdulkadar) Munchi. With Comments by J. T. Thompson, F. R. G. S. In consequence of being slightly damaged, price reduced to $1

HAFED, PRINCE OF PERSIA. His experience in Earth-Life and Spirit-Life. Being Spirit Communications Received Through Mr. David Duguid. With Appendix containing communications from Spirit-artists Ruisdal and Steen. Illustrated by fac similes of various drawings and writings the direct work of the spirits. 580 pp. $2

A TREATISE ON THE NATURE OF MAN; Regarded as Triune. With an Outline of a Philosophy of Life. By Thomas B. Woodward. $1

HISTORICAL STUDIES and Recreations. The World's History Re-told in two vols. Vol. I., in two parts: 1. "The Ancient World;" 2. "The Modern World." Vol. II., "Bengal," "The Great Wars of India," "The Ruins of the Old World Read as Milestones to Civilization." By Shoshee Chunder Dutt. Price reduced on account of being damaged from $16 to $8.

JESUS: His Origin and Career, Opinions and Character, from a Psychological Point of View. By Wm. Renton. $1 50

THE DATHAVANSA; or, the History of the Tooth-Relic of Gotama Buddha. By Mutu Coomara Swamy. $1 75

THE INDIAN SAINT; or, Buddha and Buddhism. A sketch Historical and Critical. By Chas. D. B. Mills. $1

THE COMING ERA. By Alexander Calder. $3 50

SERMONS NEVER PREACHED. By Richard Phosphor. $1

IDOLS AND IDEALS, with an Essay on Christianity. By M. D. Conway, M. A. $1 50

IN SEARCH OF TRUTH. Conversations on the Bible and Popular Theology for Young People. By Amy. 75 cents.

NEW RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By Douglas Campbell. $2

CREDIBILIA; or, Discourses on Questions of Christian Faith. By Rev. James Cranbrook. $1

FOLK SONGS OF SOUTHERN INDIA. By Charles E. Grover. $3

MY VISITS TO THE SUN; or, Critical Essays on Physics, Metaphysics, and Ethics. By Lawrence S. Benson. $1 50

HEBREW THEISM. The Common Basis of Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism. By Francis W. Newman. $2

THEISM. Doctrinal and Practical, or Didactic Religious Utterances. By Francis W. Newman. $2 25

HINDOO MYTHOLOGY, popularly treated. Being an Epitomized Description of the various Heathen Deities illustrated on the silver Swami tea-service presented to the Prince of Wales, by H. H., the Cackwar of Baroda. 75 cents

DAYS OF ROMANCE AND CHIVALRY. By W. Stewart Ross. 75 cents

NAGANANDA; or, the Joy of the Snake World. A Buddhist Drama in five acts. Translated into English prose, with explanatory notes, from the Sanskrit of Sri-Harsha-Deva. By Palmer Boyd, B. A. With introduction by Prof. Cowell. $1 50

LIFE AND MIND ON THE BASIS OF MODERN MEDICINE. By Robert Lewins, M. D. 50 cents

EXTRACTS FROM THE KORAN in the original, with English Rendering. Compiled by Sir. William Muir, K.C.S.B., L.L.D. Slightly damaged. 75 cents

REVERBERATIONS; to which is added "The growth of opinion which made me leave the church." By W. M. W. Call, M.A. $1 50

SCENES FROM THE RAMAYANA, ETC. By Ralph T. H. Griffiith, M.A. $1 75

AFRICAN SKETCH BOOK. With maps and illustrations. 2 vols. By Winwood Reade. Damaged, reduced to $8

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE INDIAN PEOPLE. With map. By W. W. Hunter, C.I.E., LL.D. $1 75

THE JADE CHAPLET, in 24 beads. A Collection of Songs, Ballads, etc. From the Chinese. By Geo. Carter Stent. $1 50

THE BIOGRAPHY OF CHAS. BRADLAUGH. By Adolphe S. Headingley. $2 50

BIOGRAPHY OF W. E. GLADSTONE; What he has done. By Sam. Bennett. 75 cents

ESSAYS AND LECTURES. By Charles C. Cattell. $1

THE LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE OF CHINA. Two Lectures Delivered in London. By Robert K. Douglas. $2 25

LIFE OF JENGHIZ KHAN. Translated from the Chinese, with an Introduction. By Robert Kennaway Douglas. $1 50

REMINISCENCES OF SARATOGA AND BALLSTON. By Wm. L. Stone. 75 cents

ENGLISH LIFE OF JESUS. By Thomas Scott. $1 50

THE JESUS OF THE GOSPELS AND THE INFLUENCE OF CHRISTIANITY. Being a Two Nights' Debate between the Rev. A. Hatchard and Annie Besant. By A. Besant. $1 25

ESSAYS, POLITICAL AND SOCIAL; Marriage as it is, etc.; England, India, and Afganistan; Law of Population, etc. By Annie Besant. $1 25

THE TRIAL OF THEISM. Accused of obstructing Secular life. By Geo J. Holyoake. $2

STRAUSS AND RENAN. An Essay by E. Jellar. With introductory remarks. $1 25

A FORECAST OF THE RELIGION OF THE FUTURE. Being short Essays on some Important Questions in Religious Philosophy. By W. W. Clark. $2

SUTTA NIPATA; or, Dialogues and Discourses of Gotama Buddha. Translated from the Pali, with Introduction and notes by Sir M. Coomara Swamy. 1 75

MORNING PRAYERS IN THE HOUSEHOLD OF A BELIEVER IN GOD. Clo. 50 cts.

RELIGIOUS AND MORAL SENTIMENTS, Metrically Rendered from Sanskrit writers, with an Introduction and an Appendix containing exact translations in prose. By J. Muir, D.C., LL.D., Ph.D. 75 cents

REVIEW OF THE WORK OF JOHN STUART MILL, entitled, An Examination of Sir Wm. Hamilton's Philosophy. By Geo. Grote. $1

A RATIONAL VIEW OF THE BIBLE. A Course of Lectures by the Rev. Newton M. Mann. $1 25

THE CATECHISM OF POSITIVE RELIGION. Translated from the French of Auguste Comte by Richard Congreve. $3

THE VALUE OF THE EARTHLY LIFE. A Reply to "Is Life Worth Living?" by W. H. Mallock. By Edward B. Aveling. 40 cents

LIFE AND TIMES OF ULRICH VON HUTTER. Describing Life in the Middle Ages. By David Friedrich Strauss. 75 cents

HISTORY OF RATIONALISM. Embracing a Survey of the present state of Protestant Theology, with an Appendix of Literature. By John F. Hurst, D.D. $2 50

THE FREETHINKER'S TEXT BOOK. Part Part II, "Christianity, Its Evidences, Its Origin, Its Morality, Its History." By Annie Besant. $1 25. Part III, Freethought: Its Rise, Progress, and Triumph. By Charles Watts. Price, $1 25

HEROES AND MARTYRS OF FREETHOUGHT. Voltaire, Spinoza, etc. By G. W. Foote and Charles Watts, 75 cents

CHRISTIANITY AND THE BIBLE. Christian Evidences Criticised. A Reply to the Christian Evidence Society. with Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh "Origin of Christianity," Miracles," "Prophecies," "Progress of Christianity," etc. By Charles Watts. $1

SECULARISM: Its Principles and Its Duties. By Charles Watts. 75 cents.

THE SECULARIST'S MANUAL OF SONGS AND CEREMONIES. Edited by Austin Holyoake and Charles Watts. 50 cents

THE SECULAR SONG AND HYMN BOOK. By Annie Besant. 40 cents

THE LIFE AND STRUGGLES OF WM. LOVETT, In his Pursuit of Bread, Knowledge, and Freedom. With some short account of the different associations he belonged to, and of the opinions he entertained. $3

Pamphlets.

Can Miracles be Proved Possible? Verbatim report of the two nights' public debate between Messrs. C. Bradlaugh and W. R. Browne, M.A. 20 cents

The Population Question, according to R. Malthus and J. S. Mill. Giving the Malthusian Theory of over-population. By Chas. R. Drysdale, D.D. 50 cents

Human Sacrifices in England. Four Discourses. By Moncure D. Conway, M.A. 50 cents

The Religion of Secularism and the Respectability of Man. By the Marquis of Queensberry. 15 cents

Life and Character of "Saladin" (W. Stewart Ross). By Gordon W. Flaws. 10 cents

Christianity. By Moncure D. Conway, M.A. 50 cents

The Foundation of Christianity; A Critical Analysis of the Pentateuch and Theology of the Old Testament. By Geo. B. Jackson, A.B. 60 cents.

A Dissertation of the Being and Attributes of God. By T. Simmons-Mackintosh. 25 cents

The Antiquity of the Human Race. By Geo. Sexton, M.A., M.D. 15 cents

A Letter Addressed to the Abbe Raynal, on the affairs of North America in which the mistakes in the Abbe's account are corrected and cleared up. By Thomas Paine. London. 25 cents

Is it Reasonable to Worship God? Verbatim report of two nights' debate at Nottingham, Eng., between Rev. R. A. Armstrong and Chas. Bradlaugh. 35 cents

Taxation; How it Originated and Who Bears It. By Chas. Bradlaugh. 20 cents

Thoughts on Popery. By the Rev. Wm. Nevins, D.D. 20 cents

The Belief in a Personal God and a Future Life. Six Nights' Discussion between Thos. Cooper and Joseph Barker. 40 cents

The Meaning of History. Two Lectures. By Frederic Harrison, M.A. 50 cents

The Gospel of Spiritualism. The electric light of the new era. By W. Stoddart, B.A. 10 cents

Practical Grammar, with Graduated Exercises. By G. J. Holyoake. Reduced, 50 cents

Wealthy and Wise. A Lecture. Introduction to the study of Political Economy. By Joseph Hiram Levy. Damaged. 20 cents

The True Source of Christianity, or a Voice from the Ganges. By an Indian officer. 50 cents

Tobacco and the Diseases it Produces. By Chas. R. Drysdale, M.D. 10 cents

Witchcraft in Christian Countries. By Saladin (W. Stewart Ross). 10 cents

Organon of Science. By Jno. Harrison Stinson, Esq. 25 cents

The Education of Girls. An Extract from an Essay on Woman. Henry R. S. Dalton. 20 cents

The Claims of Hindooism and Christianity. An Address delivered in India by Kedarnath Basu, M.C.A.S. 10 cents

Holy Darkness. W. Stewart Ross. 5 cents

The Fruits of Christianity. Annie Besant. 10 cents

Catholicism and Rationalism; a Review of a two nights' discussion on this subject between Chas. Watts and "a Catholic." Annie Besant. 5 cents

The Gospel of Atheism. Annie Besant. 5 cts

Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion: An Essay. Annie Besant. 10 cents

An Essay on Prayer. Annie Besant. 10 cents

Is the Bible Indictable? Annie Besant. 10 cts

The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought. Annie Besant. 10 cents

An Essay on Eternal Torture. Annie Besant. 10 cents

The Church and Education. "Anti-Jesuit." 10 cents

The Religions of the World, their Basis and Tendency. By "Pioneer." 5 cents.

The Education and Position of Woman. Kate Eunice Watts. 10 cents

The English Church a Failure. Charles Watts. 5 cents

Verbatim report of the Four Nights' Public Discussion between the Rev. Alexander Stewart and Mr. Chas. Watts. 35 cents

The Bible and Christianity. By Chas. Watts. 20 cents

Merits and Demerits of Secularism. A verbatim report of a discussion between the Rev. Thomas Crow and Chas. Watts. 20 cents

Secularism in its Various Relations. By Chas. Watts. 20 cents.

Debate on the Christian Evidences. A verbatim report of the two nights' discussion between Mr. Chas. Watts and B. H. Cowper, Esq. 20 cents

American Freethinkers. Sketches of Ingersoll, T. B. Wakeman, B. F. Underwood, Geo Chainey, and S. P. Putnam. By Chas Watts. 10 cents

The Training of Youth; Secular and Theological. By Chas Watts. 10 cents

Defense of Secular Principles. By Chas. Watts. 5 cents

Atheism and the Gloucester Execution. By Chas. Watts. 5 cents

Philosophy of Secularism. By Chas Watts. 5 cents

Secular Ceremonies. The Naming of Infants. By Chas. Watts. 5 cents

The Moral Value of the Bible. By Chas. Watts. 5 cents

Morality Without Religion. By Chas. Watts 5 cents

The Irish Question and the House of Lords; a Plea and a Protest. By Chas. Watts. 5 cents

Freethought and Modern Progress. By Chas. Watts. 5 cents

English Nonconformity; What Has It Done for Mental Freedom and National Progress. By Chas. Watts. 5 cents.

Christianity; Its Nature and Influence on Civilization. By Chas. Watts. 5 cents

Reasons for Not Accepting Christianity. By Mrs. Chas. Watts. 10 cents

Religion. Secular and Supernatural. By Chas. Watts. 10 cents

The Working Classes. By Charles Watts. 5 cents

The Secular Duties of Life. By Charles Watts. 10 cents

The Bible: Is It Reliable as a Guide? By Charles Watts. 3 cents

Theological Persecution and Freethought Martyrdom. By Charles Watts. 10 cents

The Modern Defense of Christianity; A Change of Front. By Charles Watts. 5 cents

The Spirit of the Age: Is It Christian or Secular? Charles Watts. 5 cents

Secular Morality: What Is It? An Exposition and a Defense. Charles Watts. 10 cents.

The Alleged Resurrection of Jesus: Was It a Fact? Charles Watts. 10 cents.

What is Secularism? Letter to the Rev. T. Fordyce, M.A. Charles Watts. 5 cents

The Character of Christ. Charles Watts. 5 cts

The Christian's Notion of Man's Ultimate State of Existence. Charles Watts. 5 cents

The English Monarchy and American Republicanism. A Refutation of the Earl of Beaconsfield's (Rt. Hon. B. Disraeli's) Tory Fallacies. Charles Watts. 5 cents

The Christian Scheme of Redemption. Chas. Watts. 5 cents.

The Christian Deity. Chas. Watts. 5 cents.

Science and Bible Antagonistic. Chas. Watts. 5 cents.

English Secularism and the Progress of Society. G. J. Holyoake & Chas. Watts. 5 cts.

Why am I an Atheist; or, Theism Criticised. Chas. Watts. 10 cents.

Sketch of Life and Character of Chas. Watts. By Saladin. 10 cents

Lithographs of Chas. Watts. Price, 15 cents.

MEDICAL and HYGIENIC WORKS

Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Sent on Receipt of Price.

Trall's Sexual Physiology. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. $1.

What Our Girls Ought to Know. By Dr. MARY J. STUDLEY. Price, $1.00.

Hygiene of the Brain, and the Cure of Nervousness. By M. L. HOLBROOK. $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. A Code of Directions for Avoiding most of the Pains and Dangers of Child-Bearing. Edited by M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D. Price, $1.00.

The Relations of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. DUFFEY. Price, $1.00.

Fruit and Bread. A Natural and Scientific Diet. By GUSTAV SCHLICKEYSEN. Price, $1.00.

The Better Way. An Appeal to Men in Behalf of Human Culture through a Wiser Parentage. By A. E. NEWTON. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

New Hygienic Cook Book. Containing Receipts for Preparing a Hygienic Food, By Mrs. M. M. JONES, M.D. 30 cts.

Talks to My Patients. Hints on Getting Well and Keeping Well. By Mrs. R. B. GLEASON, M.D. Price, $1.50.

Chastity; or, Our Secret Sins. By DIO LEWIS, M.D. Treating of the Sexual Relations in their Higher Aspects. $2.00.

Prenatal Culture. Being Suggestions to Parents. By A. E. NEWTON. 25 cents.

Aids to Family Government; or, From the Cradle to the School. By BERTHA MEYER. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

Youth; Its Care and Culture. By J. MORTIMER GRANVILLE. Price, $1.00.

Eating for Strength. Including the Science of Eating. Five hundred Receipts for Wholesome Cookery; One Hundred Receipts for Delicious Drinks; One Hundred Ever-Recurring Questions Answered. By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D. Price, $1.00.

Marriage and Parentage. In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations, and in their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability. By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D. Price, $1.00.

Our Girls, and Some of the Things They Ought to Know. By DIO LEWIS, M.D. Price, $1.50.

Dr. Foote's Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. By E. B. FOOTE, M.D. Price, $1.50.

Hand-Book of Health Hints. By E. B. FOOTE, M.D. Price, 25 cents.

Science in Story; Teaches Anatomy, Physiology, and Hygiene. 5 vols. in one Price, $2.00; extra cloth, gold back, 5vols. bound separately, $5.00.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

A NEW BOOK OF DIRECTIONS FOR

CLEANSING THE BLOOD,

And Curing all forms of Disease that the Human Family is Subject to, Without the Use of Any Medicine Whatever.

By Professor Nathaniel Pierce.

Price, 30 Cents.

6tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

WANTED.

A person whose time is not fully occupied, to associate in business pertaining to dramatic profession. Must be affable, shrewd, prompt, and business-like, and possessed of considerable familiarity with dramatic fraternity-managers, agencies, etc. To right party good opportunity for leisure time to be profitably employed. Address J. B.

6tf THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Four numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

CHRISTIANITY

A REWARD FOR CRIME.

Substantiated by the Bible.

BY

O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.

Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1 00

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

ALL in a LIFETIME,

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay.

"ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S

Popular Jewelry Store

Rochelle, Ill.

A FEW OF MY PRICES;

Solid silver stem-winding American Watches, hunting or open case; 2 oz. 7 jeweled, $10; 3 oz., $11; 4 oz $12; 5 oz. $14. Same cases with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13.50, $14.50, $16.50. Same case with full (15) jeweled movement, patent regulator, $17, $18, $19, $21. Same cases, with full jeweled adjusted patent regulator movements, $22, $23, $24, $26; key wind, $2 to $5 less; for best cases, silver caps and gold joints add $1.50, and for best filled gold cases (warranted for 20 years) add $10 to best silver cases, making a 11 jeweled hunting (filled case) stem-wind quick train watch only $28; same for ladies, $23. Ladies' solid gold stem-wind watches, latest styles, good American 11 jeweled movements, 10 kt, $24; 14 kt, $32; same full jeweled, $32 and $40—for fancy engraving add $3 to $5.

Prices and specifications for finer ladies' and gents' watches, including all the finest, richest, and most elaborately finished watches in the world, sent upon application.

Watches cleaned for $1; main springs, $1. Bank time-locks, chronographs, music boxes, etc., repaired at lowest rates, and all work warranted the best in the world or no pay.

Best steel spectacle made, $1; genuin pebbles, $2; good common, 25 cents. Best tripleplated teaspoons, $2; tablespoons, $4; knives, $1.75; forks, $1.75—all per set of six.

Parties desiring silverware, jewelry, diamonds, etc., for presents will do well to order sample package on selection and save money. Cash will be refunded on all goods not satisfactory.

Watches, etc., may be safely sent in unsealed packages per registered mail, and will be returned at my expense. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

P. S.—Stop over and see me when near Rochelle, Ill.

NOW READY!

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED LITHOGRAPH

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, $22\frac{1}{2}$ x $28\frac{1}{2}$.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 cents.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y8

ONE MILLION COPIES will soon be sold TWENTY YEARS OF CONGRESS—By James G. Blaine. The only history of our Government from 1861 to 1881. Hon. John S. Wise, M. C. from Va., says: Whoever takes it up, no matter whether he be Mr. Blaine's friend or enemy, will never put it down until he has read the whole." $200 per month to good agents. Apply at once, The Henry Bill Pub. Co., Norwich, Ct.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

Gems of Thought.

WE see standing before us the teachers of nature's truths, and the teachers of the falsehoods of gods and devils. It will not require long for us to be able to choose between them. When once understood one class cannot be mistaken for the other. Then let us be wise and embrace the truth. Let us take the students of nature by the hand. Let us commit to heart the lessons they teach. Let us learn all we can of nature; and let us forever discard her enemy supernaturalism, with all the false teachers who promulgate it.—D. M. Bennett.

THE Old Testament filled this world with tyranny and crime, and the New givs us a future filled with pain for nearly all the sons of men. The Old describes the hell of the past, and the New the hell of the future. The Old tells us the frightful things that God has done—the New the cruel things he will do. These two books giv us the sufferings of the past and future—the injustice, the agony and tears of both worlds. If the Bible is true—if Jehovah is God—if the lot of countless millions is to be eternal pain—better a thousand times that all the constellations of the shoreless vast were eyeless darkness and eternal space. Better that all that is should cease to be. Better that all the seeds and springs of things should fail and wither from great Nature's realm. Better that causes and effects should lose relation and become unmeaning phrases and forgotten sounds. Better that every life should change to breathless death, to voiceless blank, and every world to blind oblivion and to moveless naught.—R. G. Ingersoll in the Christian Religion.

IN the middle age of Western Christianity the people were more religious than moral. Piety was often made a substitute or atonement for virtue. Belief in the supernatural and miraculous was universal; skepticism and unbelief were almost unknown. Men feared purgatory and hell, and made great sacrifices to gain heaven by founding churches, convents, and charitable institutions. And yet there was a frightful amount of immorality among the rulers and the people. In the East the church had to contend with the vices of an effete civilization and a corrupt court. In Italy, France, and Spain the old Roman vices continued and were even invigorated by the infusion of fresh and barbaric blood. The history of the Merovingian rulers, as we learn from Bishop Gregory, of Tours, is a tragedy of murder, adultery, and incest, and ends in destruction.—Philip Schaff, D.D. of the Union Theological Seminary, New York city.

THE question of divorce is one of such complex practical bearing that a solution of it is only possible by the most varied experience and not by mere feeling, however highly pitched, or at the dictum of a single general principle. Such experience, however, was not possible to Christ, not only because he himself was unmarried, but also because, on his own showing, he was adverse to interfering with the family concerns of others. To this may be added that although in modern times and conditions adultery only might hav been a sufficient cause of divorce, yet, with the progress of civilization, a multitude of subtler distinctions hav been superadded, which may render a beneficial continuation of conjugal life as impossible as adultery.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

THE principle which demands uncontrolled freedom of action in all that concerns only the agents themselvs, requires that those who hav become bound to one another, in things which concern no third party, should be able to release one another from the engagement; and even without such voluntary release, there are, perhaps, no contracts or engagements, except those that relate to money, or money's work, of which one can venture to say that there ought to be no liberty whatever of retractation. Humboldt states it as his conviction that engagements, which involve personal relations or services, should never be legally binding beyond a limited duration of time; and that the most important of these engagements, marriage, having the peculiarity that its objects are frustrated unless the feelings of both the parties are in harmony with it, should require nothing more than the declared will of either party to dissolve it.—Mill's Liberty.

THE apostles held several opinions which we believe to be erroneous, but only one which, as it related to a matter of fact, we know to hav been erroneous. They unanimously and unquestioningly believed and taught that the end of the world was at hand and would arrive in the lifetime of the then existing generation. On this point there appears to hav been no hesitation in their individual minds nor any difference of opinion among them.—Greg's Creed of Christendom.

I SEE not any road of perfect peace which a man can walk, but to take counsel of his bosom; let him quit too much association; let him go home much and stablish himself in those courses he approves. The unremitting retention of simple and high sentiments in obscure duties is hardening the character to that temper which will work with honor, if need be, in the tumult or on the scaffold. Whatever outrages hav happened to men may befall a man again and very easy in a republic, if there appear any signs of a decay of religion. Course slander, fire, tar-and-feathers, and the gibbet, the youth may freely bring home to his mind and with what sweetness of temper he can and inquire how fast he can fix his sense of duty, braving such penalties, whenever it may please the next newspaper and a sufficient number of his neighbors to pronounce his opinions incendiary.—Emerson. Father Taylor, the Methodist preacher to seaman, became acquainted with Emerson and was so impressed by his Christian character as to say that, if he were understood to be going to hell, the tide of emigration would set strongly in that direction.—Oliver Johnson.

HE who throws dirt must expect that dirt will be thrown back at him; and when it comes to mud-throwing, the blackguard has, as it is right that he should hav, the best of it.—Pattison's Milton.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1834,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine, R. G. Ingersoll, D. M. Bennett, T. C. Leland, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, James Parton, Parker Pillsbury, S. P Andrews, W. F. Jamieson, G. H. Walser, John Peck, J. H. Burnham, J. R. Monroe, H. L. Green, Chas. B. Reynolds, Chas. Watts, W. S. Bell, S. P. Putnam, J. E. Remsburg, Courtlandt Palmer, Lucy Colman, John R. Kelso, Elmina D. Slenker, Amy Post, Helen H. Gardner, Mattie Krekel, Horace Seaver, Luther Colby, J. P. Mendum, J. L. York, Chas. P. Somerby, E. M. Macdonald, Juliet H. Severance, Susan H. Wixon, Wm. Denton, Mrs. H. S. Lake.

Man. Whence and Whither.
By R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.

1 vol, cloth. Price, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
PROBLEM OF THE UNIVERSE,
AND
Its Scientific Solution,
WITH SOME
CRITICISMS OF UNIVERSOLOGY
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.
Price 20 cents. For sale at this office

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

WRITTEN CARDS,—For 25 cents I will send one dozen elegantly written plain white cards; gilt edges, 30 cents; one dozen different styles of cards, 35 cents. Send postage stamps or postal note. Do not send coin. Address

S. Harris,
119 Station "D" New York city.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.
By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline, history the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1833, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The BIBLE—WHENCE and WHAT?
BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B,

A Book of Hints and Suggestions Concerning the literature contained in the Old and New Testaments. 12mo. 232 pages. Price, $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, N Y

Odds and Ends.

THE DELUGE.

A Truly Modern Scientifico-Ecclesiastic Sermon.

BY THE REV. NEWTOWN SHEBER.

My Dearly Beloved Brethren: After reading the story of the deluge so naively told in the primitiv patois of the Israelitic race, it is well to suspend judgment for a time before you pass upon the veracity or unveracity, the comparativ ignorance or knowledge of the alleged author or authors of that remarkable tale. I do, myself. Of course, my reasons are much stronger than yours, involving, as they do, a certain social and ecclesiastical status, not to speak of a —ah—a salary of $8,000 a year.

In the first place, I desire to warn you against the pernicious teachings of Mr. Ingersoll and others of that sort, who denounce the deluge as an impossibility, and the historians of the fact as retailers of premeditated inexactitudes; because, you know, it is bad form socially to subscribe to such doctrins, and is also opposed to the traditions of that magnificent church of which I am a representativ, and you faithful adherents. Besides this, these notions or ideas, as it were, are but rehashes of Voltaire and Tom Paine, and belong to a dogmatic age which has little or nothing in common with the illuminated present of which we hav the honor to be part and parcel. You all know I am a large part of this present, and occupy a commanding position therein.

In the second place, do not assume a supercilious attitude toward this beautiful allegory, and pronounce it an absurdity. In all candor I admit that such a judgment would to a great extent be natural, and in a law court or a mathematical forum would be borne out by the testimony—but—ah—it conflicts with the articles, the creed, and dogma to which we hav assented, and from an estoric standpoint embody our present cultus.

In the third place, let us approach this story prayerfully and in all sincerity. We realize, of course, that no flood could cover the world; that no vessel constructed by human hands could contain a pair of every living species; that no rain-storm could continue for more than a week, and that no boat could land on Ararat above the snow-line.

Shall we, therefore, say that the story is a vain myth? No, my friends, for such an assertion would be heresy. On my part, it would deprive me of the position which I ornament, and on your part, would compel me to sever those charming relations which hav so long and profitably held us together.

What, therefore, shall we say? What under the circumstances can we say, except that the tale is one of those Oriental images, figures of speech, or flowers of rhetoric which in some quaint concrete form convey a profound ethical thought?

The deluge thus viewed is no longer an absurdity but a solemn fact. It may mean, as you are pleased to interpret it, a big flood, a little flood, a spiritual flood, or no flood at all. So the ark, viewed under the light of highest science, may be a barn, a stable, a hotel, a ship, a schooner, or even a hole in the ground. Noah thus is resolved into a man or woman, a tribe, nation, or race, an individuality or a nonentity. Ararat is metamorphosed and becomes elastic. As you prefer, it is here or there, somewhere or nowhere, a mountain or plain, hill or chasm, forest, marsh, or lake. And thus, my beloved, the interesting procession of animals resolves itself into a dream without an object, and without a dreamer who dreams that dream.

And thus the old story is transformed into an exquisit fabric of spiritual light and loveliness for the edification of the race.

And this, my hearers, well illustrates the reconciliation between science and religion. It makes no difference what discovery and research may bring forth—we are secure. If to-morrow a lost gospel or a book of the Old Testament were unearthed from the dust and debris of centuries, it would affect us not. Sixteen deluges would be the same as one; a royal fleet of arks, stemming a thousand years of rain and storm, landing on the highest peak of the Himalayas, and carrying a million stock-yards and menageries in their capacious hulls, would be as acceptable as the small-sized affair we hav discussed this morning.

I feel happy at having made clear what has so long baffled our finest intellects. It is true that I do not understand my own explanation myself; but this is a paltry trifle you will overlook in the beauty and grandeur of my conception. I fear that my foes will, in their malignity, endeavor to make this statement a basis for new charges and complaints against me in my heroic work; but if they can make any more out of it than I hav done, I shall be under obligations to them that words can never express.—W. E. S. F. in Puck.

John Swinton's Paper,

PLAIN, PRACTICAL, GENUIN, STRONG, AND FREE.

A WEEKLY PAPER OF AMERICAN IDEAS, PROGRESS, AND RIGHTS.

$1 PER YER (post paid). 3 CENTS A COPY.
Specimens Free.

1—Boldly upholding the Rights of Man in the American way.
2—Battling against the Accumulated wrongs of Society and Industry.
3—Striving for the Organization and Interests of Workingmen, and giving the news of the trades and the unions.
4—Uniting the New Political Forces; searching for a common platform, and giving the news of all the young bodies in the field.
5—Warning the American people against the treasonable and crushing schemes of millionaires, monopolists, and plutocrats, and against the coming billionaires whose shadow is now looming up.
6—Looking toward better times of fair play and public welfare.
7—Living views of public questions and social topics.
8—Literary sketches and stories.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 10. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, March 7, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A TEMPERANCE lecturer in Michigan recently assured his audience that eight out of every ten clergymen in the state regularly drank whisky or brandy before going into the pulpit.

A SOCIETY has quite recently been organized in Paris for the purpose of obliterating the word "God" from all the languages of the world. The word may as well go, since no two persons agree as to what it means.

PROFESSOR SWING declared, in a recent sermon, that Chicago is "a religious city, containing a breadth and sweetness of the Christian faith not common upon earth." Swing low, sweet chariot, and let the Chicago dynamiters get aboard.

JOSEPH COOK says that a "preacher standing with a cigar in one hand and the Word in the other," is a spectacle which arouses attention. Another clergyman suggests that a flapjack substituted for either the Bible or the cigar would enhance the interest.

THE Chicago Herald says that a clergyman presented himself to Jay Gould the other day, and was promptly admitted. When he had seated himself he took out $2,000 in currency and asked that it be invested along with Gould's money in his next "whirl" in Wall street, and that the speculator keep it until it had amounted to $20,000. The proposition was refused, and the preacher withdrew in disgust.

THE minister had been invited to dinner. While grace was being said, Tommy eyed the unwonted good things spread before him with pleasurable anticipation. "Ma," he said, when the minister had concluded, "do you know why pa doesn't giv thanks every day at the table?" His mother shot a warning glance at him. "'Cause it's only when the minister's here that we hav anythin' worth givin' thanks for."

THE Rev. Father Lonergan, a Montreal priest, has denounced tobogganing from his pulpit. Speaking from personal knowledge, he said that the temptation young men and women were exposed to on the toboganning hills at night was nothing less than moral ruin. In view of the exhibit in our "Theological Department," it would be proper to admonish Father Lonergan that priests might do much good by letting other people's morals alone and attending to their own with greater assiduity.

Two Chicago young men were out in a boat. A storm came up. Death seemed certain. "Tom," said one, "if we ever get out of this I shall never utter another oath so long as I liv. Do you know any prayers, Tom?" Tom knew one and they prayed. They reached shore in safety, and then they hugged each other and danced with joy. After they had quieted down a little, "Tom," said the one who had resolved to be good, looking very thoughtful, "it was a damn narrow escape, wasn't it?"

THE Rev. Dr. Samuel H. Gridley is preaching a sort of crusade against moustaches on clergymen's faces, and he argues that to giv potency to the voice of the pulpit, the lips should be uncovered, claiming that if the ox that treadeth out the corn should not be muzzled, the mouth should enjoy equal freedom in the preacher. While we agree that the ox should not be muzzled while at labor, we submit to the reverend gentleman whether it would not be advisable for the ass to be at times.—Religious Paper.

VICTORIEN SARDOU, the French playwright, is a firm believer in Spiritualism, and declares that he is often under supernatural guidance. He shows a plate of copper on which is engraved with minute exactness and marvelous skill a picture of Moliere's house. "Seated one day at my table," he says, "I fell into a reverie. Unconsciously I took up the graver, and, impelled by secret influence, let my hand follow its own direction over that plate. The engraving you see is the result of several hours' pure mechanical toil. I could not of my own will make such a picture to save my life."

THE driveling idiot of the Binghamton Republican opens his mouth to stammer thus: "Ingersoll lectures for money. The apostles of the church and the founders of Christian civilization and liberty did not. There are as able men as Ingersoll in the pulpit to-day, but they do not make as much money by preaching light as he does by preaching darkness. He has a monopoly and they hav not. The gospel has become universal and cheap; Infidelity, in enlightened communities, is scarce and expensiv. Ingersoll drives his brain to the expensiv market, and the seekers after relics of the dark ages buy it." A good many asses hav brayed at the colonel, but none with longer ears than this fellow.

TALMAGE opened his rather extensiv mouth and howled against Ingersoll a few Sundays since. Mr. Talmage thought that the eloquent disbeliever should be punished under the law against blasphemy. The reverend gentleman had better learn now, if he has heretofore failed to get it through his head, that the American people believe in freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and, above all things, freedom of thought. Ingersoll thinks one way, Talmage another. They both declaim their beliefs to large audiences which are in sympathy with them. Ingersoll makes the most money at it. That is all the difference between them, and each has a right to his opinion under the ægis of the American eagle's wings.—San Francisco Post.

THE Rev. Dwight Moody, while in Texas, visited a Sunday-school at Fort Worth. Being anxious to discover how much the children knew, he asked a girl of about fifteen: "What is requisit in order that you can obtain remission of sins?" "I must first of all commit sin," was the reply. Mr. Moody was satisfied, and did not question the girls any more. He, however, tackled the boy's class. He asked Tommy Dexter, a son of Judge Dexter: "Why did God create Eve?" Tommy hesitated. "Why did God giv your father a wife?" "To sew on buttons," was the prompt reply. "What! How!" "All I know is that when pa puts on a clean shirt, and there is a button gone, he says: 'What the devil hav I got a wife for, if she don't sew buttons on my shirt?'"—Texas Siftings.

THE Rev. Mr. Swipes was one of the most bashful men in the profession, and was constantly getting into scrapes through his nervous mistakes. At one time he rose in his pulpit to giv out the hymn, "This world is all a fleeting show," and after clearing he struck a high pitch of voice and began solemnly: "This world is all a fleeting shoe." Everybody smiled except the deacons, and the minister was covered with confusion as he began again: "This world is all a shouting flow." This only made matters worse, and the unhappy man cleared his throat with tremendous force and began once again: "This world is all a floating she." Then he slammed the hymn-book down, and wiping his clammy brow, said, "Brethren, for some reason I cannot read that hymn as it should be read. We will omit it, and the choir will please sing the grand old lines beginning, 'Just as I am, without one flea.'"

A GENTLEMAN in the country, who had just buried a rich relation (who was a lawyer), complained to Foote, the dramatist, of the expenses attending a country funeral—in carriages, hat-bands, scarfs, etc. Foote very gravely asked him whether they were at any expense to bury lawyers. "Yes, to be sure we are," replies the gentleman. "Oh," says Foote, "we never do this in London." "How then," says the other, "do you manage with your lawyers?" "Why," says Foote, "when a lawyer dies, we lay him out in an upper chamber over-night by himself, lock the doors, throw open the windows, and in the morning he is entirely off, and cannot be found by his nearest relations, even if they were disposed to bury him." "Indeed," says the gentleman, in amazement, "what becomes of him?" "Why," says Foote, "we cannot tell, not being acquainted with supernatural causes. All we know of the matter is that there is a strong smell of brimstone in the chamber the next morning—and the lawyer is gone."—From an Almanac of 1807.

ALTHOUGH Mr. Butler is not much heard from since the election, his four propositions are being industriously circulated. They read: 1. Hostility to all monopolies in commerce, industries, and land. 2. The preservation of the national legal-tender currency of the people, constitutionally issued by Congress. 3. The needs of all men and women who labor in the production of wealth, to be protected against the encroachments of those who absorb and consume without producing. 2. The necessity for reform and correction of abuses in government, so that its pressure on the people would be made as light as possible, its administration effectiv, to guard the rights of American citizens at home and abroad; to make public servants, individual or incorporate, subservient to the use and will of the people only, so as to restore the prosperity of the country, with equal rights, equal burdens, equal powers, and equal privileges of all people.

THE fanciful titles of some books of the present day may well excite astonishment; but they are as nothing to those adopted by religious writers of Cromwellian times, quoted in a recent history of that era. Try to imagin the literature prefaced by such title-pages as these: "A Most Delectable Sweet-perfumed Nosegay, for God's Saints to Smell at;" "A Pair of Bellows to Blow Off the Dust Cast upon John Fry;" "The Snuffers of Divine Love;" "High-heeled Shoes for Dwarfs in Holiness;" "A Shot Aimed at the Devil's Headquarters, through the Tube of the Canon of the Covenant;" "A Reaping-hook Well Tempered for the Stubborn Ear of the Coming Crop; or, Biscuits Baked in the Oven of Charity, Carefully Conserved for the Chickens of the Church, Sparrows of the Spirit, and the Sweet Swallows of Salvation;" "Seven Sobs of a Sorrowful Soul for Sin; or, Seven Penitential Psalms of the Princely Prophet David."—Sheltering Arms.

THERE is a chance for superstitious people to believe that the assassin Guiteau was more or less a prophet. Not long before his execution he held his Bible high in air, and, with his eyes rolling and teeth gnashing, said that the Republican party was doomed, and that its last president was serving. At the same time he pronounced some rambling maledictions against President Arthur, in which he asserted that his party would repudiate him and nominate Blaine, and then be swept out of existence. The list of fatalities to those who were associated with the prosecution is strikingly large. The district attorney has been grievously afflicted. The death of his wife and the loss of the office are the chief misfortunes, though by no means the only ones, that hav befallen him since the trial. Two of the officers who had Guiteau in charge hav died, one having been murdered. Of the jury that convicted him one has died, one has been in an insane asylum, two hav failed in business, and some of the rest hav seen nothing but trouble since the verdict was rendered. The judge who sentenced Guiteau was the owner of a hotel building that, without warning, collapsed one night last summer, killing several people and causing a heavy pecuniary loss. One of the physicians who testified that Guiteau was sane was afterward murderously attacked by an insane patient; another had serious legal trouble; while the noted alienist who insisted that Guiteau was not responsible for his act died suddenly in the prime of life, and with an enviable and increasing reputation as a specialist. The domestic troubles of Mr. Scoville, the brother-in-law who defended Guiteau, developed at last into a public scandal, followed by a divorce. Dr. Woodward's death was hastened by the nervous strain caused by his attendance on the dying president, while Dr. Bliss suffered very greatly in health by reason of his sleepless care of Garfield, found after the president's death that his practice was scattered, and had to meet other embarrassments. Marshall Henry, who had Guiteau in charge, was removed from office, not long after, in some disgrace; while Garfield's steward, Crump, laid the foundation for organic disease by his faithful nursing of the president, and other misfortunes were entailed, so that he had at last to eke out a living by keeping a cheap restaurant in a basement.

News of the Week.

INAUGURATION of President Cleveland on Wednesday, the 4th.

THE Fenians talk of setting out for Egypt to help the False Prophet fight England.

A SIX-DAYS' race on roller skates is in progress at the Madison Square Garden, this city.

A LARGE number of working-women met in a hall in this city last Sunday and organized themselvs into the "Workingmen's Protectiv Union."

THOMAS J. NEVIN, the mayor of Adrian, Mich., who absconded in 1882, leaving evidences of numerous forgeries, was captured at New Orleans, La., on the 1st.

A CATHOLIC missionary organ says that several hundred Catholics, resident in Yunnan, China, hav been massacred in obedience to secret orders from the Chinese viceroy.

THE Presbytery has ordered the Rev. Charles B. Smyth, of the United Presbyterian Church of Harlem, N. Y., to vacate the pulpit. The Rev. Mr. Smith writes back to the Presbytery that he won't go.

So far as anybody knows, the cabinet of the new president will be as follows: state, Bayard; treasury, Manning; interior, Lamar; justice, Garland; navy, Whitney; war, Endicott; post-office, Vilas.

MRS. FOX, of Williamsburg, L. I., was a painstaking, industrious, and long-suffering woman. Her husband came home drunk, and tried to choke her. She picked up an ax and crushed his skull. He will probably die.

A GREAT crowd, numbering six thousand persons, gathered around the residence of Victor Hugo in Paris on the 26th ult., it being the occasion of the great author's 83d birthday. He appeared at the window, and was lustily cheered.

THE death of Gen. U. S. Grant is said by his physicians to be likely to occur at any time. He has cancer upon the tongue. The most hopeful outlook givs him no more than six months of life. The general is now about 63 years of age.

JUDGE BARTLETT, of the Supreme Court, has granted a divorce to the Rev. Mr. Downs, of Northville, from his wife, Carrie Downs, who some time ago eloped with Deacon Michael Terry, but returned after making a short trip with the deacon.

DYNAMITER DICK SHORT, who stabbed Phelan; Lucille Yseult Dudley, who shot Rossa, and Justus Schwab, who is said to hav provoked a riot, were arraigned before Recorder Smyth, last Saturday, to plead to the the various indictments against them.

THE Rev. Mr. Dickinson, of Norwich, Conn., announced on Sunday, the 22d ult., that while praying in the church in the presence of his congregation he distinctly saw the ghost of a departed brother. The Spiritualists claim that he is a finely developed seeing medium.

CLEVELAND has written a letter to Congress in which he expresses the opinion that it is "most desirable at the present juncture to maintain and continue in use the mass of our gold coin as well as the silver already coined by a present suspension of the purchase and coinage of silver."

A CLERGYMAN took part in a Socialistic debate at Paterson, N. J., last Sunday. He opposed Socialism. He thought it would be rough on tramps if everyone had to earn his living. "And on the dominies," said a voice. Alexander Jonas replied to the clergyman and defended Socialism.

AMONG the ministers last Sunday, Beecher prayed for Grant and Cleveland; Newton argued that the heavens declare the glory of God; Talmage added 139 subjects for the fool-killer to the membership of his flock; and the Rev. James S. Chadwick (Methodist) dwelt upon the comforting assurance that "the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment." The day was rainy, and most of the churches found it rather hard sledding to get together a congregation worth praying for.

The Rostrum.

Blasphemy.

To an audience which was only limited by the size of the Brooklyn Theater, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll lectured Sunday evening, February 22d, on "Blasphemy." The following are a few of his points:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: There is an old story of a missionary trying to convert an Indian. The Indian made a little circle in the sand and said, "That is what the Indian knows." Then he made another circle a little larger and said, "That is what missionary knows, but outside there the Indian knows just as much as missionary." I am going to talk mostly outside that circle to-night.

First—what is the origin of the crime known as blasphemy? It is the belief in a God who is cruel, revengeful, quick-tempered, and capricious; a God who punishes the innocent for the guilty; a God who listens with delight to the shrieks of the tortured and gazes enraptured on their spurting blood. You must hold this belief before you can believe in the doctrin of blasphemy. You must believe that this God loves ceremonies; that this God knows certain men to whom he has told all his will. It then follows that, if this God loves ceremonies and has certain men to teach his will and perform these ceremonies, these men must hav a place to liv in. This place was called a temple, and it was sacred. And the pots and pans and kettles, and all in it, were sacred too. No one but the priests must touch them. Then the God wrote a book in which he told his covenants to men and gave this book to priests to interpret. While it was sacrilege to touch with the hands the pots and pans of the temple, it was blasphemy to doubt or question anything in the book. And then the right to think was gone, and the right to use the brain that God had given was taken away, and religion was intrenched behind that citadel called blasphemy. God was a kind of juggler. He did not wish man to be impudent or curious about how he did things. You must sit in audience and watch the tricks and ask no questions. In front of every fact he has hung the impenetrable curtain of blasphemy. Now, then, all the little reason that poor man had is useless. To say anything against the priests was blasphemy, and to say anything against God was blasphemy—to ask a question was blasphemy. Finally we sank to the level of fetichism. We began to worship inanimate things. If you will read your Bible you will find that the Jews had a sacred box. In it were the rod of Aaron and a piece of manna and the tables of stone. To touch this box was a crime. You remember that one time when a careless Jew thought the box was going to tip he held it. God killed him. What a warning to baggage-smashers of the present day! We find also that God concocted a hair oil and threatened death to anyone who imitated it. And we see that he also made a certain perfume, and it was death to make anything that smelt like it. It seems to me that is carrying protection too far.

It always has been blasphemy to say, "I do not know whether God exists or not." In all Catholic countries it is blasphemy to doubt the Bible, to doubt the sacredness of the relics. It always has been blasphemy to laugh at a priest, to ask questions, to investigate the trinity. In a world of superstition reason is blasphemy. In a world of ignorance facts are blasphemy. In a world of cruelty sympathy is a crime, and in a world of lies truth is blasphemy.

Who are the real blasphemers? Webster offers the definition, blasphemy is an insult offered to God by attributing to him a nature and qualities differing from his real nature and qualities, and dishonoring him. A very good definition, if you only know what his nature and qualities are. But that is not revealed; for, studying him through the medium of the Bible, we find him illimitably contradictory. He commands us not to work on the Sabbath day, because it is holy. Yet God works himself on the Sabbath day. The sun, moon, and stars swing round in their orbits, and all the creation attributed to this God goes on as on other days. He says, "Honor thy father and mother," and yet this God, in the person of Christ, offered honors, and glory, and happiness a hundred fold to any who would desert their father and mother for him. "Thou shalt not kill;" yet God killed the first-born of Egypt, and he commanded Joshua to kill all his enemies, not sparing old or young, man, woman, or child, even an unborn child. "Thou shalt not commit adultery," he says, and yet this God gave the wives of defeated enemies to his soldiers of Joshua's army. Then again he says, "Thou shall not steal." By this command he protected the inanimate property and the cattle of one man against the hand of another, and yet this God who said, "Thou shalt not steal," established human slavery. The products of industry were not to be interfered with, but the producer might be stolen as often as possible. "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." And yet the God who said this, said also, "I hav sent lying spirits unto Ahab." The only commandment he really kept was, "Thou shalt hav none other gods but me." Is it blasphemous to describe this God as malicious? You know that laughter is a good index of the character of a man. You like and rejoice with the man whose laugh is free and joyous, and full of good will. You fear and dislike him of the sneering laugh. How does God laugh? He says, "I will laugh at their calamity, and mock when their fear cometh," speaking of some who hav sinned. Think of the malice and malignity of that in an infinit God when speaking of the sufferings he is going to impose upon his children. You know that it is said of a Roman emperor that he wrote laws very finely, and posted them so high on the walls that no one could read them, and then he punished the people who disobeyed the laws. That is the acme of tyranny; to provide a punishment for breach of laws the existence of which was unknown. Now we all know that there is a sin against the Holy Ghost which will not be forgiven in this world nor in the world to come. Hundreds of thousands of people hav been driven to the lunatic asylum by the thought that they had committed this unpardonable sin. Every educated minister knows that that part of the Bible is an interpolation, but they all preach it. What that sin against the Holy Ghost is is not specified. I say, "Oh, but, my good God, tell me what this sin is." And he answers: "Maybe now asking is the crime. Keep quiet." So I keep quiet and go about tortured with the fear that I hav committed that sin. Is it blasphemy to describe God as needing assistance from the legislature—calling for the aid of a mob to enforce his will here? Compare that God with a man, even with Henry Bergh. See what Mr. Bergh has done to awaken pity in our people, and call sympathy to the rescue of suffering animals. And yet our God was a torturer of dumb brutes. Is it blasphemy to say that our God sent the famin and dried the mother's breast from her infant's withered lips? Is it blasphemy to say that he is author of the pestilence; that he ordered some of his children to consume others with fire and sword? Is it blasphemy to believe what we read in the 109th Psalm? If these things are not blasphemy, then there is no blasphemy. If there be a God I desire him to write in the book of judgment opposit my name that I denied these lies for him.

Let us take another step; let us examin the Presbyterian Confession of Faith. If it be possible to commit blasphemy, then I contend that the Presbyterian creed is most blasphemous, for according to that God is a cruel, unrelenting, revengeful, malignant, and utterly unreasonable tyrant. I propose now to pay a little attention to that creed. First, it confesses that there is such a thing as a light of nature. It is sufficient to make man inexcusable, but not sufficient for salvation; just light enough to lead man to hell. Now imagin a man who will put a false light on a hill-top to lure a ship to destruction. What would we say of that man? What can we say of a God who givs this false light of nature which, if its lessons are followed, results in hell? That is the Presbyterian God. I don't like him. Now it occurred to God that the light of nature was somewhat weak and he thought he'd like another burner. Therefore he made his book and gave it to his servants, the priests, that they might giv it to men. It was to be accepted, not on the authority of Moses, or any other writer, but because it was the word of God. How do you know it's the word of God? You're not to take the word of Moses, or David, or Jeremiah, or Isaiah, or any other man, because the authenticity of their work has nothing to do with the matter; this creed expressly lets them out. How are you to know that it is God's word? Because it is God's word. Why is it God's word? What proof hav we that it is God's word? Because it is God's word.

Now, then, I find the next thing in this wonderful Confession of Faith of the Presbyterians is the decree of predestination. [Reads the decree.] I am pleased to assure you that it is not necessary to understand this. You hav only to believe it. You see that by the decree of God some men and angels are predestinated to heaven and others to eternal hell, and you observe that their number is so certain and definit that it can neither be changed nor altered. You are asked to believe that billions of years ago this God knew the names of all the men and women whom he was going to save. Had 'em in his book—that being the only thing except himself that then existed. He had chosen the names by the aid of the secret council. The reason they called it secret was because they knew all about it. In making his choice God was not at all bigoted. He did not choose John Smith because he foresaw that Smith was to be a Presbyterian and was to possess a loving nature, was to be honest and true and noble in all his ways, doing good himself and encouraging others in the same. Oh, no; he was quite as likely to pick Brown in spite of the fact that he knew long before that Brown would be a wicked wretch. You see he was just as apt to send Smith to the devil and take Brown to heaven—and all for "his glory." This God also blinds and hardens—ah, he's a peculiar God! If sinners persevere he will blind and harden and giv them over at last to their own wickedness instead of trying to reclaim and save them.

Now we come to the comforting doctrin of the total depravity of man; and this leads us to consider how he came that way. Can any person read the first chapters of Genesis and believe them, unless his logic was assassinated in the cradle? We read that our first parents were placed in a pleasant garden; that they were given the full run of the place, and only forbidden to meddle with the orchard; that they were tempted as God knew they were to be tempted; that they fell as God knew they would fall; and that for this fall, which he knew would happen before he made them, he fixed the curse of original sin upon them, to be continued to all their children. Why didn't he stop right there? Why didn't he kill Adam and Eve, and make another pair who didn't like apples? Then, when he brought his flood, why did he rescue eight people if their descendants were to be so totally depraved and wicked? Why didn't he hav his flood first and drown the devil? That would hav solved the problem, and he could then hav tried experiments unmolested.

The Presbyterian Confession says this corruption was in all men. It was born with them, it lived through their life, and after death survived in the children. Well, can't man help himself? No. I'll show you. God's got him. Listen to this: [Reads extracts.] So that a natural man is not only dead in sin and unable to accomplish salvation, but he is also incapable of preparing himself therefor. Absolutely incapable of taking a trick. He is saved, if at all, completely by the mercy of God. If that's the case, then why doesn't he convert us all? Oh, he doesn't. He wishes to send the most of us to hell—to show his justice!

Elect infants dying in infancy are regenerate. So also are all persons incapable of unbelief. That includes insane persons and idiots, because an idiot is incapable of unbelief. Idiots are the only fellows that've got the deadwood on God. Then, according to this, the man who has lived according to the light of nature, doing the best he knew how to make this earth happy, will be damned by God because he never heard of his son. Whose fault is it that an infinit God does not advertise? Something wrong about that. I am inclined to think that the Presbetyrian church is wrong.

I find here how utterly unpardonable sin is. There is no sin so small but it is punished with hell; and away you go straight to the deepest burning pit, unless your heart has been purified by this Confession of Faith—unless this snake has crawled in there and made itself a nest.

Why should we help religion? I would like people to ask themselvs that question. An infinit God, by practicing a reasonable economy, can get along without our assistance. Loudly this confession proclaims that salvation comes from Christ alone. What then becomes of the savage, who, having never known the name of Christ, has lived according to the light of nature, kind and heroic and generous, and possessed of, and cultivating, all the natural virtues? He goes to hell. God, you see, loves us. If he had not loved us, what would he hav done? The light of nature then shows that God is good, and therefore to be feared, on account of his goodness; to be served and honored without ceasing. And yet this creed says that on the last day God will damn anyone who has walked according to this light. It's blasphemy to walk by the light of nature!

The next great doctrin is on the perseverance of the saints. Now there are peculiarities about the saints. They are saints without their own knowledge or free will; they may even be down on saints, but it's no good. God has got a rolling hitch on them, and they hav to come into the kingdom sooner or later. It all depends on whether they hav been elected or not. God could hav made me a saint just as easy as not, but he passed me by.

Now you know the Presbyterians say I trample on holy things. They believe in hell, and I come and say there is no hell. I hurt their hearts, they say, and they add that I am going to hell myself. I thank them for that, but now let's see what these tender Presbyterians say of other churches. Here it is. This Confession of Faith calls the pope of Rome antichrist, and a son of perdition. Now there are forty Roman Catholics to one Presbyterian on this earth. Do not the Presbyterians rather trample on the things that are holy to the Roman Catholics, and do they respect their feelings? But the Presbyterians hav a pope themselvs, composed of the presbyters and preachers. This confession attributes to them the keys of heaven and hell, and the power to forgiv sins. Therefore these men must be infallible, for God would never be so foolish as to intrust fallible men with the keys of heaven and hell. I care nothing for their keys nor for any world those keys would open or lock. I prefer the country.

We are told by this Faith that at the last day all the men, and women, and children who hav ever lived on the earth will appear in the self-same bodies they hav had when on earth. Everyone who knows anything knows the constant exchange which is going on between the vegetable and animal kingdom. The millions of atoms which compose one of our bodies hav all come from animals and vegetables, and they in their turn draw them from animals and vegetables which preceded them. The same atoms which are now in our bodies hav previously been in the bodies of our ancestors. The negro from central Africa has many times been mahogany, and the mahogany has many times been negro. A missionary goes to the cannibal islands, and a canibal eats him and dies. The atoms which composed the missionary's body now compose in great part the cannibal's body. To whom will those atoms belong on the morning of the resurrection?

How did the devil, who had always lived in heaven among the best society, ever happen to become bad? If a man surrounded by angels could become bad, why cannot a man surrounded by devils become good?

Here is the last Presbyterian joy. At the day of judgment the righteous shall be caught up to heaven and shall stand at the right hand of Christ and share with him in judging the wicked. Then the Presbyterian husband may hav the ineffable pleasure of judging his wife and condemning her to eternal hell, and the boy will say to his mother, echoing the command of God, "Depart, thou accursed, into everlasting torment!" Here will come a man who has not believed in God. He was a soldier who took up arms to free the slaves and who rotted to death in Andersonville prison rather than accept the offer of his captors to fight against freedom. He loved his wife, and his children, and his home, and his nativ country, and all mankind, and did all the good he knew. God will say to the Presbyterians, "What shall we do with this man?" And they will answer, "Throw him into hell." Last night there was a fire in Philadelphia, and at a window fifty feet above the ground Mr. King stood amid flame and smoke and pressed his children to his breast one after the other, kissed them, and threw them to the rescuers with a prayer. That was man. At the last day God takes his children with a curse and hurls them into eternal fire. That's your God as the Presbyterians describe him. Do you believe that God—if there is one—will ever damn me for thinking him better than he is? If this creed be true, God is the insane keeper of a madhouse.

We hav in this city a clergyman who contends that this creed givs a correct picture of God, and furthermore says that God has the right to do with us what he pleases—because he made us. If I could change this lamp into a human being, that would not giv me the right to torture him; and if I did torture him and he cried out, "Why torturest thou me?" and I replied, "Because I made you," he would be right in replying, "You made me, consequently you are responsible for my happiness." No God has a right to add to the sum of human misery. And yet this minister believes an honest thought blasphemy. No doubt he is perfectly honest. Otherwise he would hav too much intellectual pride to take the position he does.

He says that the Bible offers the only restraint to the savage passions of man. In lands where there has been no Bible there hav been mild and beneficent philosophers, like Buddha and Confucius. Is it possible that the Bible is the only restraint and yet the nations among whom these men lived hav been as moral as we? In Brooklyn and New York you hav the Bible, yet do you find that the restraint is a great success? Is there a city on the globe which lacks more in certain directions than some in Christendom, or even the United States?

What are the natural virtues of man? Honesty, hospitality, mercy in the hour of victory, generosity—do we not find these virtues among some savages? Do we find them among all Christians?

I am also told by these gentlemen that the time will come when the Infidel will be silenced by society. Why, that time came long ago. Society gave the hemlock to Socrates. Society in Jerusalem cried out for Barrabas and crucified Jesus. In every Christian country society has endeavored to crush the Infidel. Blasphemy is a padlock which hypocrisy tries to put on the lips of all honest men. At one time Christianity succeeded in silencing tne Infidel, and then came dark ages, when all rule was ecclesiastical, when the air was filled with devils and spooks, when birth was a misfortune, life a prolonged misery of fear and torment, and death a horrible nightmare. They crushed the Infidels, Galileo, Kepler, Copernicus, wherever a ray of light appeared in ecclesiastical darkness. But I want to tell this minister to-night, and all others like him, that this day is past. [Cheers and great applause.] All the churches in the United States cannot crush even me. The day for that has gone, never to return. If they think they can crush Freethought in this country, let them try it.

What must this minister think of you and the citizens of this republic when he says, "Take the fear of hell out of men's hearts and a majority of them will become ungovernably wicked." Oh, think of an angel in heaven having to allow that he was scared there! The minister calls for my arrest. He thinks his God needs help, and would like to see the police crush the Infidel. I would advise Mr. Talmage [hisses] to furnish his God with a rattle, so that when he is in danger again he can summon the police immediately. I'll tell you what is blasphemy. It is blasphemy to liv on the fruits of other men's labor, to prevent the growth of the human mind, to persecute for opinion's sake, to abuse your wife and children, to increase in any manner the sum of human misery. I'll tell you what is sacred. Our bodies are sacred, our rights are sacred, justice and liberty are sacred. I'll tell you what is the true Bible. It is the sum of all the actual knowledge of man, and every man who discovers a new fact adds a new verse to this Bible. It is different from the other Bible because that is the sum of all that its writers and readers do not know.

The National Liberal League.

SHALL WE MAKE IT "THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION?"

The months are rolling around so fast that it will be soon time to issue a call for the next meeting of the congress, when the question will be decided whether or not the Freethinkers who act with the National League will fall in with the recommendation of the last congress at Cassadaga, and adopt a name more significant and characteristic of our movement than the one it now bears.

The term Liberal, in the corporate name of the League, is objectionable on several accounts. It appeared in the ecclesiastical nomenclature of this country about the time when the Unitarians of Massachusetts captured Harvard University from the orthodox, and tried to make themselvs and others believe that they, too, were Christians, but that they were Liberal Christians. They denied the plenary inspiration of the Bible, the trinity of persons in the godhead, the divinity of Christ, and the atonement made by his blood, original sin, justification by faith, election, reprobation, eternal hell-fire for the non-elect, and every other doctrin cognate with these. Then, after thus tearing out and throwing away the lungs, liver, heart, and bowels of Christianity, they laid out the mutilated remains on a board, put cents on its eyes to hide their ghastly expression, and called it Liberal Christianity. Of course a sect with such an origin has no red blood in its veins, but began to die as soon as it was born. Compare its present moribund condition with the prosperity of the Methodist church, which began its career about the same time. Unitarianism has plenty of brains and money, but in its anatomy you can find no heart. In the present struggle with the usurpations of the popular superstition it takes no part. Like those angels, who, when the revolt in heaven took place, sided neither with the rebels nor with God, but were for themselvs, it is neither cold nor hot, but lukewarm. Infidel as it is to the core, it plays the rôle of Christian, and amidst the sneers of the orthodox, and all other intelligent people, calls the dead and disembodied Christ, Master. It is the ghost of old John Harvard, the Puritan, which still walks the halls of the university, pointing to the motto on the corporation seal, "For Christ and his church," that blanches the cheeks and hamstrings the legs of Boston Unitarianism. And it was this unconscious Unitarian taint in Mr. Abbot's ecclesiastical character, which, unfortunately, induced him to baptize the League when it was born, and giv it the apologetic and inapplicable name of Liberal, instead of Radical or Secular, either of which would be infinitly more appropriate to its character and mission.

I am very proud of Mr. Wakeman, but I don't like his partiality for the term Liberal, as shown in his Salamanca address, and on other occasions. Etymologically he is correct enough that it is equivalent to the word free—free thought, in contradistinction to enslaved thought. But in this country it is, as I hav said, the child of Unitarianism, and carries with it the hang-dog look of conscious wrong doing. Mr. Wakeman, if I understand his history, is a convert from the church. He is not a free man, but a freed man, which implies that he was once under the yoke, but was disenthralled by the genius of skepticism, and made the philosopher and the noble man that he is. There are, however, hundreds connected with the League, and doing valiant service in the cause, into whose heart and brain the iron of superstition never entered, and who can say, as the apostle Paul did to the chief captain at Jerusalem when they were going to scourge him, "But I was free born." This no convert from the church could say, for he, like the chief captain, was born under the yoke of superstition, received its brand upon his person when he was baptized, and took the vow of future submission at the "Lord's table." But, like the chief captain again, such a convert had to say, "With a great price purchased I this," even by being denounced as an apostate and a Godforsaken heretic by his former dear brethren of the church.

As the cause of Secularism, and its adjunct, secularization, knows no state limits, but applies to all countries and governments, and as Canada is geographically an American state, too, only separated from ours by an imaginary line, and a state in which Freethought is advancing with wonderful strides, it is appropriate and the right thing to be done to giv our great movement a name which will recognize the Canadian Freethinkers as our brethren.

And as the term League has rather a military or a political complexion, and the term Union is more expressiv of the real relations we now sustain to our Canadian brethren in this great struggle for the freedom of the human intellect and conscience, it is desirable that our name should be, "The American Secular Union." At least this is the deferential opinion of Enon Valley, Pa., Feb. 18, 1885. A. B. B.

A Few Hints for Comstock.

From the Hour.

The attention of the public is frequently attracted to legal proceedings in which Mr. Anthony Comstock, in behalf of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, is engaged in prosecuting some individual accused of encouraging vice. Mr. Comstock's society works vigilantly to exterminate all vicious things, but the trouble is that most of the evils which this organization was formed to correct were practically corrected long ago. Its "reason for being" still exists, of course, in the necessity of preventing certain kinds of wickedness from ever sticking up their heads again, but that does not satisfy Mr. Comstock. He wants more publicity, and his efforts are, therefore, directed toward cheap literature and pictures which, in his opinion, and generally in his opinion only, are indecent. He is continually getting into quarrels with street vendors who sell photographs of footlight celebrities, or cheap photographic reproductions of some standard work of art in the Paris Salon or elsewhere. Minor dealers, who are not as influential as the greater ones in the stores, generally get the benefit of Mr. Comstock's wrath, and are brought into a great deal of trouble. The suppressor's latest exploit was with a man who had set up his picture-stand on Broadway, the agent observing him negotiating for the purchase of a photograph of a certain actress in tights. When the vendor refused to sell it, Mr. Comstock threw some money on the sidewalk, took up the picture and walked off with it!

Some time ago, when "Sarah Barnum" appeared, Mr. Comstock took upon himself to prohibit its further publication. The book was by no means an immoral one—that is, the American version was not—and, as a local paper wittily observed at the time, Comstock was the only man that had been heard of who took interest enough in the volume to read it through. Thus the society's agent does no good, but causes a great deal of unnecessary annoyance to publishers and all concerned.

Do the operations of this society benefit the public now? Not so much as they should. Hav any complaints of late been made by our citizens concerning the sale of immoral prints? Not that we hav heard of. The modesty of no one is shocked at witnessing any of the spectacular ballets that hav been produced for years here; they are, on the contrary, admired from an artistic point of view, and receive the patronage of our best people. Should, then, a picture of one of the performers in costume draw forth any censure? It certainly should not. Why, then, should the society's agent busy himself in attending to affairs that concern nobody? There are certainly a number of other things that might profitably require his especial attention. New York is full of gambling dens and opium joints; the streets are overrun with men and women who ensnare the unwary. They do not perform their work with care and secrecy, but openly. Is not this a wide field for attack?

Mr. Comstock, no doubt, works hard. He seems to think that he is going about his business in the right way; but he is not. Let him commence the new year by turning his attention to affairs which really need attention. Let him devote more time to the real vices, and for a period giv the poor picture-sellers a rest.

William F. G. Shanks, in the Philadelphia Sunday Press, June 15, 1884, has the following:

"Anthony Comstock, the secretary—and about all there is besides—of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, combines in himself some of the best and nearly all the bad qualities of the reformer. He hates sinners for the love of virtue, and would like to burn them at the stake of righteousness solely for the sake of truth. He has all the energy of animosity, and all the zeal of the new convert. Alike fearless and reckless, he is at the same time ignorant and assuming (as ignorance always is), and can no more believe that one who differs with him in theory is honest, than that one who disagrees with him as to a fact is truthful. With him suspicion is proof and accusation is conviction. He would strive harder to see accused innocence sentenced than to hav the punishment of convicted guilt carried out. He is a bundle of prejudices and a whole mass of contradictions. He has labored for years to suppress a wrong, and turned up finally in indorsement of the wrongdoer. He has co-operated for years with other forces, and then gone on the witness-stand to denounce his associates. He is egotistical to the point of always being prominent in the public doings of his society, but yet shrewdly keeps himself from promotion in that society's offices. He is nobody in its ranks, and yet wields all the power of its organization. He gets raps every day in newspapers which chronicle his good work."

The Liberal Club.

[NOTE.—In last week's report of the Liberal Club there was a divergence from fact in two instances. The first consisted in speaking of W. G. as D. G. Mayo. This error had its rise with the doubtless well-meaning person who named Mr. Mayo William instead of David. The other prevarication was the fault of ex-Governor Hoyt, of Wyoming, who chose to speak upon "Civil Service Reform," instead of woman suffrage, as announced. It affords this writer great pleasure to be able to place the responsibility for inaccuracies where it belongs.—REP.]

The 367th meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club was held at the usual place and time. The audience fairly filled the hall without crowding it. Minutes of the previous meeting were read and accepted, and the following resolutions were presented by Mr. Searing:

The Committee appointed by the Manhattan Liberal Club to prepare suitable resolutions in memory of the late Porter C. Bliss, formerly a member of this club, present the following, and advise their adoption, and that the same be duly entered upon the minutes of the club:

Resolved, That the Manhattan Liberal Club of the City of New York has heard with deep regret of the decease of its fellow-member, Porter C. Bliss, who was separated from us by death, Feb. 2, 1885.

Resolved, That by this formal resolution the club desires to testify its sorrow for the loss of a person so highly gifted both with social qualities and profound learning, and a man so near to us and dear, because of his conscientious and unbiased devotion to accuracy, and adherence and defense everywhere of Freethought and the Liberal cause.

Resolved, That his career as a journalist, explorer, student, scholar, diplomat, and as a true man and Liberal, has not only endeared him to us his associates, but has rendered him worthy of the highest honor from all thinking men.

Resolved, That his life so nobly devoted to knowledge and freedom, both in North and South America, attaches him to the cause of progress everywhere, and that he will be lamented alike on the banks of the Hudson and Potomac, in Mexico, on the shores of the Amazon and the Rio de la Plata.

Resolved, That the Latin races of South America, in their efforts to secure self-government, hav lost in Porter C. Bliss a teacher and defender; that his country has lost a luminary which, if he had lived, promised increasing light to all seeking truth; and that his friends mourn in this particular as well as for the loss of a personal acquaintance and valued friend.

Resolved, That, although Mr. Bliss by his profession and life was a student, a journalist, a writer, a linguist, teacher, traveler, and philosopher, yet this club esteems his memory most highly because he was more than all else a grand and noble man, and because his personal individuality particularly endears him to us his friends.

EDWARD W. SEARING,
COURTLANDT PALMER,
T. B. WAKEMAN,
} Committee.

These resolutions were unanimously indorsed.

Governor Hoyt, the speaker of the evening, was introduced to the audience by the chairman with a neat and proper flourish. He is a man in the prime of life, built tall and spare, somewhat after the lines of Senator Evarts, and is an orator of the Washingtonian school. There is no pop or flash about him. His speech is simple, his periods clear and finished, and his sentiments are patriotic to a marked degree. He gave the club a revival of the old flag, our Revolutionary forefathers, and the Constitution of this great and glorious republic, such as it had not experienced for many a day. Governor Hoyt opened his lecture with the remark that he deemed it an honor to address the Liberal Club, because he was himself a Freethinker. The lecture was on "Civil Service Reform." The speaker dwelt first upon the greatness of this nation and its founders, and said that no people had a greater reason for the sentiment of patriotism. The chief obstacle to civil service reform was party spirit and the putting of party and men in the place of principle. From this arose the turbulence of our presidential elections. He would hav all offices of the government bestowed upon the men who showed the most fitness for them, and their fitness should be ascertained by competitiv examination. The notion that to the victor belonged the spoils would be done away with by taking patronage away from the chief executiv. As the administration is now conducted, the man who does the meanest work in the campaign is rewarded with the best office. The speaker trusted that he who had been chosen to preside over the destinies of the nation for the next four years would show by his wisdom and loyalty that there was no need of the madness and sacrifice employed to prevent him from reaching that high station.

Governor Hoyt's lecture was an hour and a quarter in length. Its chief argument was in favor of office depending upon fitness for its duties, and its continuance upon good behavior. The address was properly appreciated and appropriately punctuated with applause.

Dr. Eccles, taking the platform, held that it was his duty, of course, to criticise the lecture. He would say, therefore, that it was not logical. If competitiv examination was resorted to, it should be extended to the president as well as to the custom-house clerk. Eccles is an earnest speaker, and sometimes indulges in hyperbolical expressions. "I tell you, sir, Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen," said he, "there is no more responsible office in the gift of the people of this nation than the country post-office." At this declaration Governor Hoyt was observed to smile. The remedy for whatever evils exist under this government, the doctor held, would be found only in a revival of moral sentiment.

Dr. Graham succeeded Dr. Eccles. "I agree," he said in a quizzical way, "with the lecturer that we are the greatest people on the earth. We come from the finest stock in existence. Whatever there has been of greatness in the world has culminated right here. The question is, Do the spoils belong to the victors? And if they don't belong to the victors, to whom do they belong? The trouble with political reformers is that they reason in a circle. The more they know, the larger will be the circle, but in the end they come out of the same hole they go in at. If I was to suggest a civil service reform I would say abolish the offices, and pay men a good salary to transact the business of the government."

Mr. Justus O. Wood arose to briefly inquire if long tenure of office would not increase the evil of "bureaucracy" which was very bad even under short terms of office. "Bureaucracy" Mr. Wood defined as abuse of office which arose from the officer coming to believe that he owned the position and could use it to his own best advantage.

Mr. Blissert believed there should be a Liberal Club in every block to discuss these questions and scrutinize the conduct of public officials. There was, he said, more ability in Ben Butler than in both the other candidates for the presidency. Nevertheless, Mr. Butler was left. Workingmen were blind to their best interests. He knew a workingman born in this country six foot high, forty inches round the chest, and built in proportion, who carried a hod for less than half the pay public officials get for doing nothing scarcely. Men should be paid in proportion to their usefulness to mankind.

Mr. Langerfeld said there were so many people who were being fooled about these questions that he considered it to be his duty to put the business where it belonged. Civil service reform was a very insignificant affair compared with the industrial problem. There are 8,000,000 men in this country able to work. Only 6,000,000 earn anything; the rest "make" their living. It did not make the slightest difference who occupied office; it would be abused, any way. Abolish all offices; abolish private property. There will then be no incentiv to dishonesty. Mr. Langerfeld is a State Socialist.

Governor Hoyt, in closing, said he had enjoyed the criticisms very much, but did not feel that they lay with especial force against anything he had said. It was true that civil service reform was not the greatest of problems, yet it was his subject for the evening, and he had confined himself to it. The important questions mentioned by his critics were coming—they were already here. Among these was woman suffrage. The bureaucracy, which Mr. Wood feared, could not exist where office depended on good conduct, for that was bad conduct, the penalty for which was dismissal.

Madam Delescluze approached the reporter at the close of the lecture to inquire if some mistake was not made in saying that at the previous meeting Mr. Wakeman expressed himself as fearful that Dr. Mayo had fallen into the hands of an elocutionist. She judged that the chairman must hav intended to say that the speaker needed such instruction as an elocutionist alone could afford. The madam knows considerable about elocution, and believes a knowledge of it is necessary to every public speaker. Mr. Wakeman, possessing much nativ gracefulness of language and person, has less respect for the arts of oratory than he otherwise would entertain; but although his natural gifts make him oblivious of those which are acquired, he is, nevertheless, an elocutionist of no ordinary parts.

Next Friday Professor Rawson will speak on "The Soudan—Its Past, Present, and Future." The remainder of the program for the month of March possesses features of especial interest.

Canadian Notes.

Last Sunday C. B. Reynolds lectured on the fallacies of the Bible and Christianity as contrasted with the facts of nature and science, observation, experience, and reflection. His speech occupied over two hours to an attentiv and crowded audience. Any town that has not as yet been visited by Mr. Reynolds will do well to write to him and secure his services at once; they will find his lectures to be a great treat indeed. Barring Ingersoll, probably no speaker will please them much—if at all—more than he will. Some of his pathetic touches are very fine, and he has lots of fun of the most uproarious kind. His two hours' address appears to the audience but a few minutes only; their universal feeling is more, more, giv us more. In whatever place on the whole continent where there are a knot of Freethinkers, let them engage Reynolds instanter.

About 500 B.C. Empedocles, of Agrigentum, appeared upon the earth. He was one of the many Christs, saviors of men. He proclaimed himself a God, cured diseases, worked miracles, dispelled the plague, raised the dead to life, himself rose again from the dead the third day, ascended into heaven, where he sitteth at the right hand of God the father almighty, and whence he shall come again to judge the quick and the dead. Empedocles taught the Christian dogmas of the creation, the fall of man, the expulsion from the Garden of Eden, the degeneracy of the human race, and original sin. He taught the virtues of lofty thoughts, chastity, and temperance, and painted the beauties of a simple innocent life, as the beau ideal of happiness. All these dogmas and moral teachings the Christian church has borrowed from Empedocles.

Next Sunday ushers in the advent of Charles Watts, who some way or another holds a first place in the esteem of the citizens of Toronto, even the Christian part of the community respecting him. For some months past this city has enjoyed the privilege of regular lectures, every Sunday, from Charles Watts, C. B. Reynolds, J. E. Remsburg, and S. P. Putnam—generally twice on each Sunday. These addresses hav been productiv of a vast amount of good in enlightening the minds of the people, widening and elevating their thoughts, and emancipating rational and intelligent persons from the slavery and degrading superstitions of Christianity. A great work also is being accomplished in Toronto by the sale of Freethought literature; many dollars' worth are being sold every week. Freedom of thought is marching on.

Christians assume and assert that their religion is a revelation from God—that it had a supernatural origin apart from, and quite independent of, man. It would be impossible for them to believe this, if they read any impartial history of the church; but they will persist in remaining ignorant—they will not read any book that is opposed to, or that is not in accord with, their theories and superstitions. Christianity has borrowed its ideas from preceding theologies and philosophies. More especially what is called Christian morality is the outcome of the experiences of all mankind. They keep continually saying, What will you giv us in place of Christianity? We answer, All that is good in your religion is ours. It was our fathers', the ancient pagans', before it was yours. All that is good in your system was borrowed from our direct ancestors, the ancient pagans, who transmitted it to us, their direct descendants of the present day.

"Considering all the heresies, the enormous crimes, the wickedness, the astounding follies which the Bible has been made to justify, and which its indiscriminate reading has suggested; considering that it has been, indeed, the sword which our Lord said he was sending, and that not the devil himself could hav invented an implement more potent to fill the hated world with lies, and blood, and fury, I think, certainly, that to send hawkers over the world loaded with copies of this book, scattering it in all places, among all persons, is the most culpable folly of which it is possible for man to be guilty."—James Anthony Froude.

This is the weighty impeachment of the Bible by the great historian, whose authority is of the highest standing. The proof of these assertions is supplied in a work entitled "Bible Morals," by J. E. Remsburg. He shows from the text of the holy scriptures themselvs that they sanction more than twenty crimes and vices, and proves it by quoting innumerable passages from the holy word of God, giving chapter and verse for each citation. Twenty-five cents remitted to THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 33 Clinton Place, New York, will procure this invaluable work by return mail.

Passing over for the moment all the preceding philosophies of which Greek ideas were the outcome 600 years B.C., we find Xenophanes describes God very much in the same manner that St. Paul depicts the Christian God. About the same time Pythagoras lived, walked, and talked, taught mysterious doctrins, worked miracles, gathered his twelve chief apostles around him, together with seventy-two minor disciples, who went forth into all the world to preach the gospel of Pythagoras—"Whosoever believeth in Pythagoras shall be saved." Pythagoras is one among the vast number of Christs, saviors of men, who hav appeared upon the earth at various periods. Christians assume and assert that theirs is the only Christianity—theirs the only Christ—whereas there hav been a vast number of religions, many of them almost identical with Christianity. So also there hav been a vast number of Christs, many of them almost identically the same characters as the Christian Christ.

The Stoics, who preceded Christianity with their Pantheism full of absurd contradictions, suppression of the passions, nonconformity to society, and self-sacrifice, helped to prepare the way for Christian theology. Much of the sayings and teachings and personal life of Christ are copied from Thales, Zeno, and other philosophers of the Stoic school. The Stoics, by the teaching and the practice of virtue, and filling in patrician families the position of chaplains and directors of conscience, worked unconsciously for the priest, the Christian confessor—they prepared the way for him. But it is only fair to add that they played the part much better than he does—their precepts were more manly and pure, they fashioned men, not bigots or drones. But on the whole it must be allowed of Epicureanism and Stoicism that they both had a rottenness at the core, which insured their ultimate failure. Both had this feature in common, that they were addressed not to the masses, but to the aristocracy and privileged classes; hence they failed, and surrendered the world to the Christian system, which at least claimed to speak to all men, and taught that in the eye of their heavenly father the poorest were equal to the richest, and the lowliest were the peers of enthroned kings.

Toronto, Feb. 28, 1885. R. B. BUTLAND.

Tent Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$43.90
Ernest Heck,	1.00
W. Whittick,	2.00
John Nuessle,	.50
Jacob Tausig,	1.00
William Thorpe,	1.00

To the Liberals of Pennsylvania.

WHAT TO DO AND HOW TO DO IT.

Secularism teaches that the surest way to secure our own happiness is to promote the happiness of all around us; that we should learn what is right, what is duty—and do it; that self-sacrificing ministrations of love and mercy here and now will best prepare us for highest conditions of usefulness if we should attain any future existence.

Secularism is doing as well as doubting, repudiating errors of life as well as errors of faith. The duty of the Secularist is to seek for truth, to recognize and obey its claims, to struggle out of the ruts of error, and turning from the way of evil, patiently, perseveringly climb the steep hill of rectitude, and with love, tenderness, and a spirit of self-sacrifice, giv of time and means to assist others to ascend with us.

Nothing can be more unselfish than Secular morality, since the sole object it has in view is the best happiness of the entire community. Are we living up to our principles? We hav wished and waited for the needed work to do itself long enough. What is done we must do. We cannot recall lost opportunities, but we can in some degree make up for our neglect in the past by earnest, persistent effort now.

In accepting the responsibilities of the position of secretary and state lecturer of your state League, I do so with with full sense of my lack of ability, and realize the impossibility of discharging the arduous duties imposed on me, unless sustained by the activ hearty co-operation of every good and true Liberal in the state. Many honest hearts desire to respond, but ask—What shall we do?

First, send one dollar for your own membership to the state League, to S. F. De Jones, 99 Fifth ave., Pittsburgh, and receive new certificate of membership. Show your new certificate to all Liberals in your vicinity, and urge on them the duty to become members also. Send your own, and endeavor to obtain from others, contributions for the State Lecturer Fund. However small the amount, subscribe something, and thus show your good will, sympathy, and real interest in the work. Talk up the Tent scheme; if able to contribute, do so at once. But, anyway, get all interested in the project. If, in your neighborhood, there are any of musical ability, inspire them with ambition to go for at least a few days and help Tent choir. If any real workers of good address, intelligence, and tact, induce them to arrange to spend a week or more with the tent during the summer. Persuade them to write me at once, what time they can best join Tent, and for how long.

So much for general good. Now, in regard to your own neighborhood.

If you hav no local League, then you should at once use every means to organize one.

HOW TO SECURE LECTURES.

Write out a paper:

"We, the undersigned, agree and promis to pay the sum set opposit our names, to defray expense of lectures, to be delivered at by the state lecturer, Ex-Rev. C. B. Reynolds, on evenings, 1885."

Head the list with your own name and amount, and go to every Liberal, or those Liberally inclined, and talk the matter over and induce them to sign. A little tact and perseverance and you will obtain a much larger amount than you suppose possible; only persevere; let no rebuff discourage you. If one will not, another will. Even where you fail to get anything subscribed, your labor is not in vain. You awake thought and create interest in the lecture. Do not confine yourself to avowed Liberals; many who hav scarce cracked the shell of superstition would like to hear on the subject, and nearly every nothingarian would subscribe if only rightly approached.

Where a hall cannot be obtained, secure the schoolhouse; failing this, some vacant store, or, as last resort, large rooms in private house. If you hav no printing facilities, send me word and I will send on hand-bills. Never trust distribution of hand-bills to boys, or a man who has no real interest in the cause. Hire a woman to do it, even if you hav to pay a little more. It will be cheapest in the end, for it will be done faithfully, and the novelty will call special attention to the meeting.

Make all lectures free. When the subscription will not meet expenses, take up "silver collection at the door." This is in every way preferable to the religious fashion of "passing the hat." If all will earnestly and harmoniously do their best, we can, ere the year is over, hav such perfect and efficient organization that there will be no farther need of collections or begging appeals, unless, on some very rare occasion for some special charitable purpose.

My Canadian engagements terminate the first week in March. From that time till the tenth of May, when I propose to start the tent, I desire engagements to lecture every night, and twice on Sunday, and to spend the daytime visiting and encouraging the almost persuaded and the indifferent to become activ workers; in aiding to perfect organiztion of local Leagues, and advising as to best methods to insure success, and make them of greater interest, and how they may be made self-sustaining.

It is loss of time and money to go back and forth over the state. To avoid this, all who desire my services should write me at once, so that on my return to the United States I can arrange dates.

It is hard times, yet much, very much, can be accomplished if each and all will only do the little they can. We may be able to do but little; let us do that little, do our very best, all we can, all the time, and it will produce grand results.

With united effort wonderful success shall be attained. Let us then, one and all, up and to work, and inspire each other with spirit of emulation, and Pennsylvania shall become the banner state for Secularism.

C. B. REYNOLDS.
Sec. Pa. State Liberal League.
Address, Box 104, North Parma, Monroe Co., N. Y.

The National Liberal League.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

CHARLES WATTS, First Vice-President. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Secretary, 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$3,353.44
Hagerstown, Ind.,	35.00
Detroit (per Edward Chope),	20.00
Ernest Heck,	1.00
Wesley Miliken,	2.00
Martin Miller,	.25
Freeman Parker,	1.00
R. P. Barton,	1.00
Henry McElsander,	.75
H. Wickersham,	1.00
W. Whittick,	5.00
Total,	$3,420.44

News and Notes from the Field.

At Indianapolis, where we remained Sunday, Feb. 22d, we found the cause of Liberalism in a very unsatisfactory state. There are plenty of Liberals in this city, but as yet their organization is inadequate. There seems to be no common bond of union. It is this condition of affairs in Indianapolis, as well as in other places, which shows what hard work must be done, and that we must trust to time as well as to wise and vigorous measures for success. Our pathway is not one altogether of flowers. Though we meet with much enthusiasm and a noble spirit of brotherhood, yet in many places the elements are uncertain, and we know not what the fruit may be. These discouraging circumstances only demonstrate the necessity of a vast national organization. We must all work together, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific join hands. In this way we develop all our strength and make victory assured. There are cities like Indianapolis where at least a thousand Liberals could be brought together to listen to a lecture, yet from local influences and surroundings scarcely a corporal's guard can be summoned. Yet the possibilities are present—the materials for a fine society. Now, the power that will crystallize these materials, so that they will shine in progressiv order, must be something more than local—it must be universal. It must be the impulse, not of the few, but of the many. Simply as individuals, working on our own account, it would be impossible to succeed in this great undertaking. In and through a national association only can we carry forward this constructiv work. Then the weakness of one place is supplied by the strength of another, and a feeling of fellowship is created, which is the most powerful instrumentality in the accomplishment of great purposes. One can work with more courage and devotion when he realizes the world-wide sympathies that are enlisted in his cause; that the welfare not of one, but of all, is involved in the task that is undertaken. Weak and struggling Liberal societies will become strong when they are thus brought into a common work and feel the pulses of a million hearts combined in one endeavor. So we hope that Freethinkers in every place, who feel interested in the success of this national movement, will do all they can individually for its progress. Do not think that a little will amount to nothing—it will amount to much in and through this combination. One is laboring not simply for his own neighborhood, but for the whole land—for humanity itself.

We received the most cordial welcome from Dr. J. R. Monroe, editor of the Ironclad Age, who in this ultra-orthodox city is doing such valiant work for liberty. He keeps the flag a flying, no matter what happens. His ship goes on, though the storms may blow. For over a quarter of a century he has been in the midst of the battle. He has fought for independence both in politics and religion. He will not be the slave of a party any more than of a church. He is thoroughly individual, but generous in his sympathies and comprehensiv in his aims. He has been suffering much of late from physical weakness, but his courage is undiminished and his spirit still fresh. Long may he liv to help shatter the shams and tyrannies of the day. In spite of all disappointments, I believe the time will come when Indianapolis will be a grand rallying place for Liberals, and the fires of freedom will burn bright.

At Hagerstown, Ind., we had a delightful time. Philip Pipher, Henderson, Pittman, and half a dozen other live Liberals, were determined to make a success of our meetings, and did not fail. We had large audiences of ladies and gentlemen on both Monday and Tuesday evenings, and they listened attentivly to our most radical utterances, although this was the first time that the majority of them had ever heard discourses on Secularism. Such Freethought lectures of course aroused the fiercest opposition of orthodoxy, especially since they were so well received by the better part of the community. But the seed has been sown, and the fruit is coming. For years there has been a growing Liberal element in this place, and the foremost citizens hav been in sympathy with it. The churches are dying out. An auxiliary League will be formed, and the work go bravely on. Orthodoxy will growl and show its teeth, and try to bite, but the shafts of truth will usher in the golden day, and the darkness must vanish.

Though we traveled nearly all night and all day, yet on account of accidents, etc., we did not reach Detroit in time for our Wednesday evening lecture, but we met cordial friends who made it sure that on the following evening we should hav a good house, and we did.

Mr. Edward Chope, who came from England fifty years ago to win his own fortune, is an old and honored citizen of Detroit, and an enthusiastic Freethinker—fearless in the expression of his opinions, and ready to aid the cause with generous devotion. Dr. Merwin, Mr. Hance, Mr. Powers, Mr. Vanderburg, and others, are effectual advocates of our cause.

We had the pleasure of meeting our good friend Samuel D. Moore, of Adrian, who came down on purpose to see and hear us, and who is heartily interested in our movement, and is doing noble service for its advancement in Michigan. Certainly a good start has been made in Detroit. The material here is of the right sort. A good organization will be formed, and from this central point will go forth all over the state a constantly progressiv influence.

There was a fine audience present on Thursday evening, full of intelligence and electric sympathy; and our lectures were greeted with the heartiest applause. It was one of those kind of audiences that one likes to talk to. They bring forth what is best in a speaker, and I do not think that Watts ever made a more eloquent address. All were captivated by his brilliant eloquence, his wit, pathos, keen logic, and sustained thought. The one word was, "We must hear him again."

After the lecture, Mr. Watts was called upon at his hotel by a rector of one of the Episcopalian churches, who used to know him in Old England, and was as far as a Christian can be an admirer of the talented Secularist. The fact of it is, that Mr. Watts has many warm friends and admirers among those who still cling to the church, for they recognize the ardor and sincerity, and the humanitarian spirit that is in his work. This rector is a very liberal-minded man—reads both sides of the question—and has come to the wise conclusion to agree to disagree. This shows at least, that if truth does not prevail in the churches, charity is beginning to—which shows progress.

Quite favorable reports of the lectures were published in the Free Press and other daily papers, which is a proof of the increasing interest of the masses in Freethought.

Mr. Watts now leaves for Canada, where he will engage in a debate with Elder Walker, and push on the work at Toronto and other points. Mr. Ingersoll will lecture at Toronto in a few weeks, and thus a new impetus will be given to our forces in Canada.

I shall lecture in Saginaw next Sunday, March 1, and am delighted at the prospect of meeting our good and brave fellow-worker, J. H. Burnham, whose grand eloquence has been such a power for Freethought in this state and elsewhere. There is still a great work for such vigorous defenders of liberty and such clear-headed apostles of humanity.

On March 8th I shall be at Lexington, Ky., with that valiant co-worker, D. B. Cozine, and I guess that Freethought will not be backward in the "sunny South." On Sunday afternoon, March 15th, I lecture in Robinson's Opera House, Cincinnati. On March 22d there will be some war notes of liberty sounded at Nashville, Tenn.

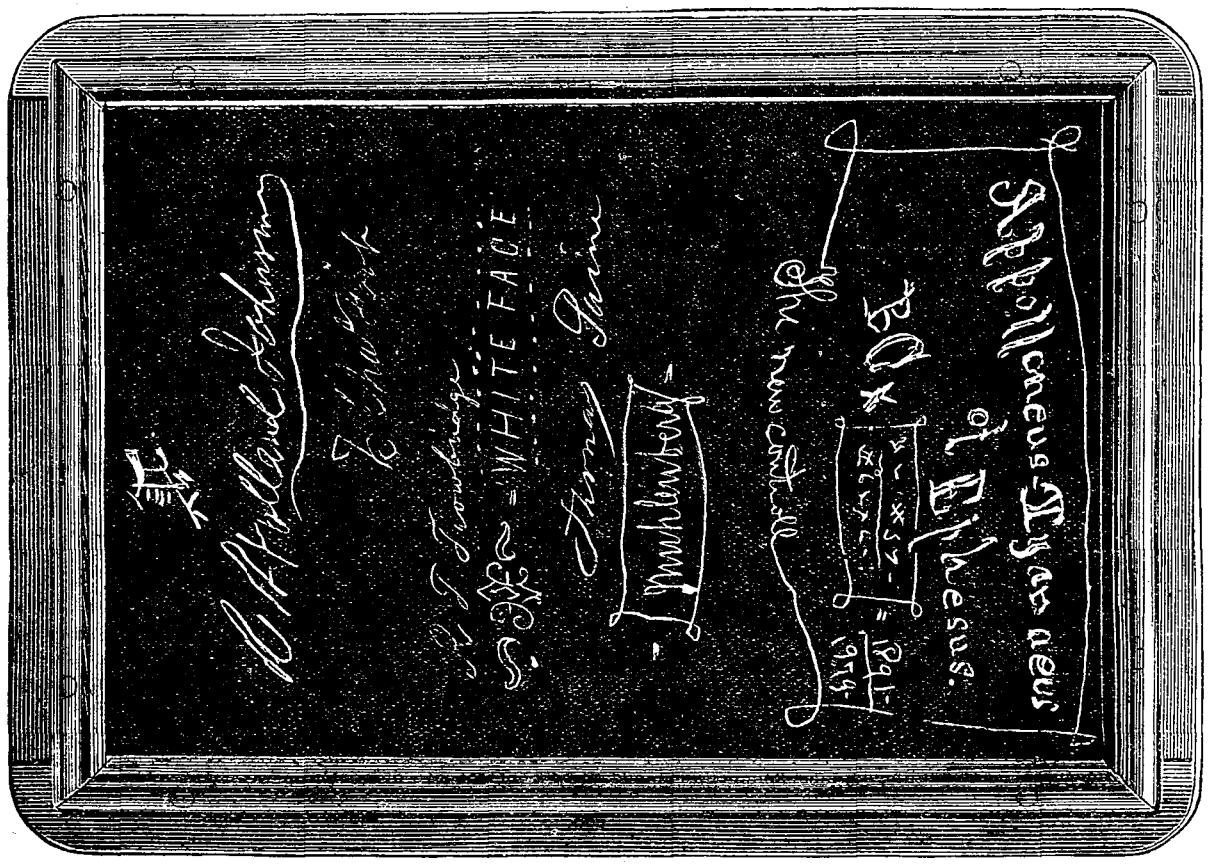
I am delighted with the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. It is a beautiful book, and there is a universal demand for it. It contains both inspiration and information. It has many things to delight the eye as well as to enchant the the understanding. In it we find a galaxy of Freethought—the bright stars of progress that make our way light and disperse the clouds. When I feel downhearted I can peruse this handsome ANNUAL and realize what a glorious company there is, and through these decorated pages I can wander with a spirit that can scorn misfortune. This is a book of noble fellowship, and illustrates the mighty hopes by which we struggle for a common glory.

I am a child, too, when I look at "The Story Hour," and revel in its delightful pictures. The children are eager for this splendid gift. Every family should hav a copy, for it teaches to the growing mind noblest things with the magic wand of joy. All our boys and girls will sing a song of gratitude to Miss Wixon for this masterpiece of beauty and entertainment.

What a splendid campaign document is Remsburg's "Bible Morals!" It cuts like the sword of Saladin. It is keen and bright, and penetrates superstition every time with a deadly thrust.

Thus our forces gather in beauty, in strength, in lofty thought, and in heroic purpose. Art, science, poetry, and music, touched by the genius of to-day, become our noblest allies. Well may we hav courage when the bright morning is bursting about us, and such glory is on our path! Onward and sunward!—that is our motto. Fraternally yours,

Detroit, Feb. 27, 1885. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.



Communications.

The Sacred Slate.

PREFACE.

DEAR FRIENDS: While I was at Syracuse I heard the whole history of one of the most important slates that has ever been gotten up through Spiritual mediumship. I saw the slate and was present at a seance where it figured largely (as I hav related in Boston Investigator of Dec. 5th). I send a picture of the slate and a description of it as related in Facts magazine for Dec. 1882, on page 362. This slate has gone into history as proof of spirit-power, and knowing the men who did the writing, and hearing all about it, I assure you it is a genuin humbug.

Here is the wonderful slate:

DR. SILAS J. CHESEBROUGH,
Syracuse, N. Y.

Copy of a slate containing the names of the spirit band of Dr. Silas J. Chesebrough, of Syracuse, N. Y., obtained through the mediumship of Mr. Joseph Caffray, then a resident at Dr. Chesebrough's. The circumstances under which the message on the slate was obtained were these:

In the spring of 1881, while the doctor was alone in his room one day, Confucius, the Chinese lawgiver (whose monogram stands at the head of the slate), came to him in the person of young Caffray, and told him if he would procure a slate, and hav a glass secured firmly over it, his spirit band would write their names on it for him, under the glass, so that he might know who they were. The doctor at once purchased a new slate, had a glass cut to fit it, and with some molding, screws, and putty, prepared the slate himself, as directed by Confucius. The molding is secured to the frame of the slate by ten screws countersunk into the wood, and covered with putty. The space between the molding and the glass is filled with putty, so that it would be impossible to disturb it without detection. No pencil was placed under the glass, neither was there any in the room at the time the message was written. He was then ordered to wrap the slate up in a black cloth and put it away in his seance room, taking care to lock the door and keep the key in his possession, and under no circumstances to enter the room himself, nor allow anyone else to do so, as it would disturb the conditions while they were magnetizing the slate. All this was complied with; and, after the lapse of one week, young Caffray was again controled by Confucius, who told the doctor they would be ready that evening to sign their names, and as they intended to draw largely upon his power they wished him to prepare himself in the following manner:

"Eat a light breakfast, and no dinner nor supper. Go into the dark room at 11 A.M., and remain there alone till notified that all things are ready. Take your seat at a specified place at the table. Keep as quiet as possible, and strictly abstain from speaking to anyone till the seance is over. And be sure and hav no one present whose word would be doubted when questioned in regard to the facts."

In the evening ten persons assembled, viz., Col. J. W. Yale, No. 62 So. Salina St.; E. B. Waldo, No. 24 Shonnard St.; Capt. S. H. Austen, of the Globe Hotel; Stephen Lewis, No. 124 Jackson St.; John W. Truesdell, of the firm of Blain and Truesdell, Note and Exchange Brokers; Joseph Caffray, and Mr. and Mrs. Chesebrough, all of Syracuse. In addition to these, there were two who were not residents of Syracuse, viz., Col. W. E. Degan, New York State Arsenal, corner 7th Ave. and 35th St., New York city, and a gentleman friend of Colonel Degan's from Brooklyn.

All were seated around an extension table, with a lamp burning full head placed in the center of the table. Dr. Chesebrough was on one side of the center, Mr. Truesdell at one end, Mr. Caffray at the other, and the rest filling up between. When all were seated, young Caffray, under the control of Confucius, arose from the table, went into the dark room adjoining, and brought out the slate, and asked all who desired to do so to examin it. After it had been examined, it was placed upon the center of the table, glass side down, and almost immediately the sound of writing was distinctly heard by all present. In two minutes (not exceeding that) three distinct raps were heard, indicating that they had finished. On taking up the slate it was in its present condition. No pencil was put under the slate, neither was there any in the room. [I presume this fact was clairvoyantly scertained.—ELMINA.]

[The following, supposed to be a translation of Dr. Chesebrough's slate, was given through the mediumship of Mrs. Sue B. Fales, at Lake Pleasant, Mass., Aug., 1882.]

"There comes one before us who is so far above the earth spheres that I stand silent and awed by the grace and dignity of his bearing. Even Antiorus of Ephesus, and his companion, Apollonius, veiled their eyes and stood with bowed heads before him. A Sun-God from the Temple of Light, kingly in grace and beauty, and attended by a band of majestic spirits, comes through the Gates of the morning, bearing uplifted banners, and vessels of silver and gold. They stood for a time at a point where Heaven and earth are blended—where divinity is incarnated. They stood upon that sublime eminence where man becomes the Sun of God, and a perfect union takes place between the Creator and the fallible creature called human. The same spirit which rested upon Jesus at his baptism spoke in a voice which sounded through space like the rhythm of a great anthem; and this prophecy was uttered in the sublime language of the Hebrew kings: 'Before Christ the souls of men were dark, and there was no medium between the human and divine. Another Christ is coming in 1891, whose face will illuminate the earth till 1979. He will be the glory and harmonizer of the new century.'

"APOLLONIUS TYANÆUS OF EPHESUS, Scribe."

"This testimony was given in the presence of six ancient spirits who acted as apostles to the Sun-God Polycletus. Philosophers of the ages, and the wonder-workers of by-gone worlds, were there. Archytas, a cotemporary of Plato, Cicero, Pliny, Elian, and Homer, Myrmecides (the Milesian), and Callicrates, of Lacedemonia, were among those who attended the High Priest from the Temple of the Sun, who will soon return to earth and become embodied in human form, and for a season become like a god for humanity to cherish and hold sacred.

"'White Face' is the Sun-spirit Polycletus, who will become a Christ to the Spiritualists in 1891. Other names may be given to him, but all who liv will know that these things are true. ALEXANDER THE GREAT."

With due respect to the spirit of Confucius, Alexander the Great, and also to Mrs. Sue B. Fales, the celebrated psychometric reader, I herewith append Mr. John W. Truesdell's version of the extraordinary occurrence, He says:

MR. J. W. TRUESDELL'S STATEMENT.

"A day or two preceding the event referred to, Joseph Caffray came to my house, bringing with him the slate (prepared by Dr. Chesebrough according to his direction, as related in the Facts article) which, for further identification, I will call No. 1. He also brought another slate, No. 2, the exact duplicate of No. 1, with loose glass, putty, screws, moldings, etc. At his request I wrote the names he furnished me upon slate No. 2, with the exception of the words and characters embraced in the figure 'New Control.'

"Joe then told me that he had promised to furnish a new name, an ancient character, who wouid be more powerful than all others except his own (Confucius), Mr. Chesebrough having already appropriated for his own use so many of the wise men 'of ye olden time,' including Plato, White Face, and Jesus Christ. I was temporarily at a loss to name a suitable character. In this emergency I referred to the first volume of the American Encyclopedia, when my eye fell upon the name of Apollonius Tyanæus, of Ephesus. Turning the slate upside down, so as not to mix the new spirits with the old, I wrote this name, together with all the letters, figures, and senseless characters which now appear upon this sacred slate (No. 2). I then fitted the glass over the same, screwed down the molding, and puttied up the nails. Thus the two slates appeared to be exactly alike, with the exception of the writing and other characters. Joe then took both slates to his seance room, to which he claimed to hav a duplicate key. On the evening of the circle he brought out both slates. No. 2 (containing the writing), he informed me, was concealed under his coat, while No. 1 he exhibited to the circle, convincing everyone present of the fact that it was perfectly clear. The moment the lights were out, he placed slate No. 2 upon the table, at the same time removing No. 1 and hiding it under his coat. At the conclusion of the circle, and while members of it were duly examining the spirit (?) writing, Joe slyly handed me the clean slate, fearing he might be suspected and searched. There was at least one person present, besides Joe and myself, who knew all the circumstances of this exchange at the time, and we hav many times since had a hearty laugh at the expense of those who could be so credulous as to accept as genuin disembodied spirit manifestations such tenuous feats of legerdemain! Slate No. 1 has peacefully reposed in my house for over two years past, and though I hav many times offered to exhibit it to Mr. Chesebrough, and hav as often explained to him the trick, yet he has invariably declared that all such explanations were the works of the diakka; that he knows that this sacred slate was written upon by spirits of the dead."

Now, friends, here it is. You hav the word of an honest banker, who is well known to almost every business man in Syracuse, and is universally respected by all his neighbors and acquaintances as a man of probity and honor, against that of well-known tricksters, cheats, and charlatans. Why, only yesterday I was talking to a lady and telling her of my seance with Joe Caffray in Boston. Her first exclamation was, "Oh, that dirty little Confucius!" True, it often happens that a prophet has no honor in his own house, but a good, true, honest man is best known and best appreciated at home; while right here in Syracuse Joe Caffray as a man is almost universally condemned as being a pretender, though many who thus speak of him believe his mediumship genuin. I hav yet to see one individual who fails to speak in the highest terms of Mr. Truesdell as a citizen, a husband, a father, and a true man in the highest sense of the word.

You must not think I am blinded or prejudiced simply because I am here in his home. I do not confine myself to going anywhere he suggests. I went to see a medium on Friday with Mr. Waldo, a strong, firm believer. I talk with everyone I meet, and hear all sides, and try to be impartial and unbiased. But one such a revelation as this slate business has unfolded is enough to open the eyes of the most credulous.

I hope you will study this slate, and the account thereof, well and thoroughly, for I assure you it is the key to at least nine-tenths of all the spirit slate-writing that has ever been produced. "There are none so blind as those that will not see." Thousands cling to this slender straw of spirit communication as the only real evidence that their beloved dead still liv. They value the new religion above all earthly good. It is built upon the traditions of the whole past, and around it is woven all the sweetness of the present. The bright halo of romance gilds it, and imagination runs riot through its delightful fields. But although > "Grottos and fountains and orange-trees grow,

> And all that enchantment has told"

may be reveled in in our visions; yet plain, practical common sense must govern all our real, actual, every day life. The same difference that is found between Sue Fales's divination of the "sacred" slate, and Mr. Truesdell's Materialistic account of the real getting up of it, is always found between romance and reality, and fiction and fact.

Yours, MRS. E. D. SLENKER.

Lambert Briefly Arraigned.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: From the importance which the editor of the Catholic Union and Times attaches to Father Lambert's "Notes on Ingersoll" a person might form the idea that the priest has really written an answer to the colonel's rejoinder to Judge Black. Such, however, is not the case. I hav had "Notes on Ingersoll" recommended to me to read, and I hav read them. I find that in matters of philosophy Lambert is usually found reasoning in a circle. In metaphysics, as he calls a portion of Colonel Ingersoll's argument, he misrepresents and deliberately misinterprets his opponent; and on questions of fact he is maliciously and, I think, knowingly dishonest. As to scriptural quotations, he forces into them meanings which the authors could not hav designed to convey, and denies to them the interpretations which anyone can see the writers intended should be made. Having by these methods formulated replies to Colonel Ingersoll's statements, he crowns mendacity with audacity, and challenges his opponent to answer him. In nearly every case where opportunity is afforded for a direct issue, Lambert has saved his cause only by direct or indirect falsification of the authorities which he quotes. I say nearly every case; I mean every case which access to the records has permitted me to examin. I believe that his statements are not to be relied upon in any instance. He who runs may read his arguments and note their fallacy without pausing to giv them a second reading. In proportion to its size, Lambert's "Notes on Ingersoll" probably contains more sophistry, more captious criticism, more misstatement of fact, and, in a word, more slush, than any other volume printed during the present century. It will no more bear replying to than a sieve will hold water. If the editor of the Union and Times, where "Notes on Ingersoll" originally appeared, will giv me a little space, I would not mind taking a rise out of this priest. GEORGE E. MACDONALD.

Liberal Mugwumps at Chicago.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: E. A. Stevens, under cover of the Paine celebration, has managed to put a number of the oldest members of the Chicago Liberal League in a very false light, thereby doing them a great injustice. Not content with getting himself interviewed twice, and himself writing an unfair report of one of our meetings for the Herald, and waiting on the Inter-Ocean office, until, to use the words of one of the reporters, "what with sending in reports, and wanting to be interviewed, and making statements, etc., they made themselvs [i. e., the mugwumps] a general nuisance," he must now rehash the whole business for the benefit of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Truth seekers will probably be willing to hear the other side of the story, so, without being "climacteric and cumulativ," I will state the real facts.

1. It was not a question of dynamite at all, and E. A. Stevens's endeavor to show that it was is characteristic of himself. It was a question of a free platform—although it is true that the issue arose over one of the dynamite school. The majority of the free platform party are anti-dynamiters. It came about this way. For some time past the League has not paid expenses, and the Paine celebration was likely to leave a deficit, so it was suggested by E. A. Stevens that we save the funds of the League by not having a meeting on the Sunday prior, unless we got a good lecturer who would pay expenses, and so a general hunt was made for a good lecturer. E. A. Stevens, not finding a suitable lecturer, sent a postal card to the secretary informing him that he had decided to hav no meeting. But the secretary had, in the meanwhile, found a prominent lecturer and waited for the business meeting on Friday to make known the fact. We met at the house of Mrs. Swank (late secretary), and E. A. Stevens deplored that he had been unable to find anyone to lecture, and suggested that we hav no meeting. The secretary informed the meeting that he had secured a very prominent man, August Spies. The president declared that he would hav none of him—that he was a labor agitator, and even a "dynamiter," and the League had had enough of the labor question, etc. It was remarked that, at any rate, he was a good lecturer and would fill the bill, and that even if the president had a personal feeling against him and other "labor agitators" who had stood by him (the president) at Milwaukee, it was no reason why the League should, on that account, shut up. But E. A. Stevens had become "climacteric and cumulativ." At last it was insisted that the president put the matter to the meeting to vote on. He did so, and it was carried that August Spies should lecture on the Sunday following. The meeting then adjourned, but the members remained at Mrs. Swank's for a little social party. The president, in the meanwhile, discovered that he "had a prerogativ, and would use it," and so he declared that the meeting he had just presided over was no meeting at all, as there wasn't a quorum (although there were just as many members as usually attended our business meetings); he also discovered that amongst the minority there was enough to form a quorum of the lecture committee, and so he called them together and they decided that no meeting should be held. But the meeting was held in spite of E. A. Stevens's efforts to prevent it by bulldozing the janitor and by waiting on the trustees of the hall, and raising the "dynamite scare" in order to prevent the meeting. At the meeting very positiv opinions were expressed by the members on the conduct of the president, and a vote of censure was moved, but in order to giv him a fair show the matter was adjourned until the following Sunday. Things looked rather black for the president, so he called a secret meeting of friends and the remnant of the lecture committee, and the latter body joined to themselvs an equal number of persons (none of whom had ever before attended a business meeting), and, by this "climacteric and cumulativ" action, they now appeared as a "board of directors," and as such they fully accorded with the action of the "lecture committee." They next appeared at the Paine celebration as "friends and members of the Liberal League," and they indorsed the action of the board of directors. Could John Kelly work a caucus finer than that? They next "cooked" the membership book and went around interviewing some of the "respectable" members, and on Sunday night they appeared prepared for the worst. The janitor, armed with a poker, a policeman, and the president stationed themselvs at the door, and after enough mugwumps had been "permitted to enter" to form a majority, the doors were closed and the circus commenced. An impeachment of the president, signed by ten of the members of the League, was handed to the secretary, and the president and his friends wasted more than an hour in preventing its being read, and, after it was read, another hour was wasted in preventing any speeches on it, and it was laid on the table. It was taken off again and, after another long discussion, it was carried that the secretary be allowed ten minutes to impeach the president—no one else (except the president, who was to hav ten minutes) to be allowed to speak, although there were five others who had specific charges to prefer against him.

It was indeed a sight to see a renegade Socialist, who had boasted of painting Rochester red with Socialism, who had boasted of how he had helped to expel what he called the Star Route Liberal from the League, who had also written to Lucifer a tirade against the "cowardly Watts, who retreated from the party in England when that party was in danger"—I say it was a sight to see him now, fighting, tooth and nail, the very man who had aided him to foist that miserable labor platform on the League at Milwaukee. This same E. A. Stevens, who came back from what he called his "victory at Milwaukee," and who stated at the Chicago League, when the present writer and others opposed his platform, that Liberals whose only object was to fight God had better leave the League and join the Underwood-Green-Ingersoll clique, and leave the League to more progressiv Radicals who had better work to do, was now cringing to the conservativ element of the League to aid him to suppress "the rabid labor agitators, who had turned liberty into license!" Verbum sapiendum!

Allow me to state that I am neither a Socialist nor a dynamiter, but am, as far as I understand the system, an Anarchist of the Tucker school; but I believe in a free platform. I also take this opportunity to thank the members who passed a vote of confidence on E. A. Stevens for the vote of censure they passed on myself as secretary of the League.

Yours truly, A. H. SIMPSON.

P. S.—"Is your program full?" said a young gentleman to Biddy McGrath while they were lunching at the ball the other night. The young lady declared she had never been so insulted before. "'Is my program full?' he asked me, and, by the powers, I ate nothing but a cracker and two clams." This can only be equaled by the president of a Liberal League complimenting an elderly lady on being "climacteric and cumulativ." A. H. S.

ANOTHER PROTEST.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav just read the letter from the Chicago Liberal League in the last TRUTH SEEKER, and cannot resist entering my protest against its misrepresentation. Mr. Stevens has seemed to make all fair by sending newspaper clippings, but he has only out cut those that suited his purpose, and they were all his own manufacture in the first place. There are two sides to the story; but one side has been so persistently kept out of sight, that the public and all the League friends are thoroughly prejudiced and mistaken.

Mr. Stevens as president has managed to shut down on all opposed to him, and they are now not allowed the floor, and hav no opportunity of expressing themselvs; if you also refuse to giv their side a chance to refute his misrepresentations, I shall no longer believe the principle of free speech exists in the League.

He claims that the question is one of dynamite. This is not true. The labor question came up quite frequently, it is true, and there was some dissatisfaction among a few moneyed members. But why did he not, if he wanted to be fair, call a meeting where all could express their opinions, and then put it to vote whether the discussions were to be restricted or not?

Instead, he takes it upon himself to shut up the hall, and say there should be no meeting. The meeting he mentions was held in my house, and the majority voted against having the hall closed. No member present can deny this.

The calling of a board of directors was an underhanded, illegal trick, unworthy the action of any Liberal League member. At the Paine anniversary, without a word of warning, the few officers present were called into an ante-room, the resolutions recited off by those instructed to do so, and passed. Two of the vice-presidents and the recording secretary were not notified, and no time and place for the meeting were appointed. A man was named chairman of a committee at a moment's notice because Stevens knew he could use him. His vote and those of Mr. and Mrs. Freeman carried the famous resolutions, even Fraenkel, the treasurer, being in the next room dancing. I will pass over the extremely thick taffy Mr. Stevens spreads for Mrs. Freeman. If she can be pleased with such extravagant ecstasies, she is not the sensible woman I take her for. I want only to add that our League is no longer a Liberal one. Our constitution contains a plank which says no subject of a political, scientific, or religious nature shall be denied a hearing on account of prejudice, but a constitution is a useless thing in Mr. Stevens's hands. He does not need one; he is a power unto himself. Only certain subjects can now be discussed. People must no longer utter their honest convictions, for if they step aside from a prescribed track they are called to order. A sort of inquisitorial committee now examins every applicant for membership, and if he does not know his catechism he cannot enter.

The recent trouble was not a question of dynamite but one of free speech and Liberal principles. There was but one member who could be accused of advocating dynamite; all the squelched minority were the most intelligent men and best speakers in the League, who now feel only sorrow in the downfall of the original high aims of our Chicago Liberal League.

While I dislike speaking of myself, it still seems I hav as good a right to be heard as Mr. Stevens himself. I hav been with the League as long and worked for it as faithfully. I am willing to be fairly beaten, but I want it to be done legally.

363 Austin ave., Chicago, Ill. LIZZIE M. SWANK.

PLAYING THE POPE!

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Who is that Stevens, president of the Liberal League of Chicago, that is assuming the authority of a would-be pope in trying to lord it over other people's consciences in a meeting for free discussion? It seems to me if the members of the League hav any true manliness left in them, they will giv that fellow a polite notice to resign, that his place may be filled by some one not a traitor to the cause of liberty.

I had hoped that Christians might be left to enjoy the monopoly of putting a gag on free speech, and that those who professed to be Liberals would prove themselvs to be free men. SEWARD MITCHELL.

Obituary.

DIED.—At Muskegon, Mich., February 14, 1885, Joshua Davies, while in company with his wife at a card party given by a neighboring friend. Being the first to arrive he sat down in a rocking-chair and began playing with the children, as was his habit. Shortly afterward he leaned back in the chair and closed his eyes as if going to sleep. A few moments later the hostess noticed him and remarked that he had gone to sleep. Mrs. Davies said, "He often drops off that way; he is tired and let him rest." A few moments more passed when the hostess, again looking at him, said, "How pale he is!" and all hurrying to him found that life had passed away. Yet so natural was his appearance that it required a medical examination to convince them that he was dead, and that his death was caused by heart disease, though he had never apparently been troubled with it and had always been an extraordinarily healthy and strong man.

At a meeting of the Muskegan branch of the National Liberal League, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, The law of nature absolutely decrees that life shall be swallowed up in death, and that in one unending course this law is in constant operation, death succeeding life continuously; and

WHEREAS, Sooner or later, to all the living, nature's law shall hav application; and

WHEREAS, Our friend and brother, Joshua Davies, has, without a fear, but, on the contrary, in the firm belief that what is natural is right, and in full confidence that no wrong, injustice, nor aught to make afraid, lies beyond us, and in the full tide of years, and in the vigor of manhood, gone forward into the vast realm of the unknown, and answered the summons of nature's law; therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of our friend and brother we are called upon to part with one ever ready to battle for liberty of opinion, whose mind was untrammeled by superstition, whose conscience was his guide, whose life was for the ever-living present, whose loyality to conviction was unbounded, whose reason was his master; one in whom love reigned supreme, and in whom practical but unostentatious charity, had a permanent abiding-place; whose faith was in right living rather than in the bare skeleton of creeds; one whose daily acts of thoughtful kindness hav endeared him to many, and one who will be sadly and constantly missed by those who were the recipients of his noble benevolence. Be it further

Resolved, That death has taken a good citizen, a tender husband, a kind father, a true friend, a good neighbor, and honest man. Be it further

Resolved. That we sympathize deeply with the family of the deceased in their sorrow, and commend to them the life, death, and belief, the courage and memory of our departed friend and brother as their consolation in their trying hour. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to THE TRUTH SEEKER for publication, also that a copy be sent to the family of the deceased, and, also, that they be placed on the records of the League.

IN the Rhode Island Pendulum "A Truth Seeker" asks of the Christians of Greenwich to answer the following questions: "If it is conduciv to virtue for religious teachers to tell men that a moral life will avail them nothing with Jehovah; that the greater sinners they are the better God loves them, and that he who goes to work at the eleventh hour will receive the same reward as he who bears the burden and heat of the whole day? Which exerts the better influence, morality without religion, or religion without morality? Is to 'praise and glorify' God the chief duty of man? Is a man justified in neglecting his duties in order to praise and glorify? Is that omnipotent power that created the universe and governs it by immutable power a petty tyyrant, to be pleased with fulsome praise and angry if it is withheld?" "A Truth Seeker" wants these answered in a brief and rational way that the average intellect can understand, and without a scriptural rhapsody. We very much fear "A Truth Seeker" will be disappointed,

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MARCH 7, 1885.

The Priest Turns the Other Cheek.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 3d we printed a letter to one of our subscribers from a Canadian Catholic priest, together with a reply thereto. The reply has drawn the following rejoinder from the priest. Among all the impudent hermeneutists we remember having read, he stands pre-eminent.

"MY DEAR MR. MARBEN: When you told me that you would send to THE TRUTH SEEKER my paper on the reconciliation of the genealogy of Christ, I expected that the journal in question would giv a much more plausible reply than it has done. In fact, the reply is exceedingly weak.

"It must be remembered that Colonel Ingersoll's objection is that the two genealogies are inconsistent with each other. If they are inconsistent, one must be wrong; but if it could happen in any way that both can be true, then they are not inconsistent with each other; then both may be true, and the whole Infidel objection falls to the ground. It is perfectly worthless.

"Now, I showed two ways in which it might happen that both genealogies may be true. It is no refutation of my mode of reconciliation to say I hav not proved either hypothesis. It is for those who pretend that there is an inconsistency to show that neither of my modes of reconciliation could occur. This THE TRUTH SEEKER has not attempted to do in regard to my second theory. He does bring one objection to the first, which I will answer below.

"1. The first hypothesis is that Mary and Joseph are first cousins, descended from the same grandfather, Mathan, named by St. Matthew, Mary being the daughter of Anna, who was the daughter of Mathan. The father of Mary was Heli, who was the son of Mathat, as stated by St. Luke. Thus the apparent discrepancy between the two evangelists at once disappears. According to this theory, Joseph would be the son-in-law of Heli.

"2. The second theory is that Heli was the brother of Jacob, and that Heli died childless. Then, according to the law (Deut. xxv, 5. 6), Heli's wife must hav married Jacob. By this marriage Joseph was born, and by the law Joseph would be the son of Heli, but by nature he was the son of Jacob. Thus St. Matthew and St. Luke respectivly giv the genealogies of Jacob and Heli. Jacob and Heli hav the same mother, but different fathers, Mathan and Mathat. Thus also the seeming discrepancy disappears.

"It is evident that these theories cannot be refuted by THE TRUTH SEEKER's call for proofs. Some adopt the first explanation, others adopt the second; and if either be possible, the evangelists are vindicated. THE TRUTH SEEKER has completely failed in his endeavor to weaken their force.

"It is not necessary then to answer the attacks of THE TRUTH SEEKER on those parts of my former note to you which do not affect my main argument. However, I will do so here. He says:

"'The books ascribed to Sts. Luke and Matthew are now known to be anonymous, but that of St. Luke is given the precedence.'

"A little above he states that the best authorities state that Luke wrote before Matthew.

"It does not affect my argument in the least, which of the evangelists wrote first. Nevertheless THE TRUTH SEEKER is astray in this matter.

"St. Augustine says: 'The first gospel is that of Matthew, then that of Mark, thirdly that of Luke, lastly that of John. Therefore, the order of their knowledge and preaching is different from their order of writing" (Agreement of Gospels, Book 1, chap. ii).

"St. Jerome, the translator of the Latin Vulgate, says: 'The first of all was the publican Matthew, who wrote his gospel in Judea in Hebrew. He was also called Levi. . . . The third was Luke, a physician, a nativ of Syria' (Introduction to St. Matthew's gospel).

"Origen says: 'The first (gospel) is written according to Matthew. . . . . The third gospel is according to Luke.' (See Eusebius, Ecc. Hist. vi. 25.)

"These witnesses are of more weight than THE TRUTH SEEKER writer, who states that neither 'St. Luke nor St Matthew wrote at all.'

"Papias says 'Matthew set forth his oracles in the Hebrew dialect.' Papias was a disciple of St. John, and knew what he wrote.

"Tatian wrote a commentary on the four gospels about the year 170.

"Justin Martyr quotes the four gospels frequently forty years after the last gospel was written by St. John.

"I might continue proofs of their authenticity, but it would extend my letter to too great length.

"The TRUTH SEEKER objects to my statement that Heli is elsewhere styled Joachim. This really is of no consequence to the main argument. It is sufficient that the genealogies of St. Matthew and Luke can be reconciled. However, while he denies that Heli and Joachim are identical, he quotes the Apocryphal Protevangelion and the Epistles of James as stating that 'Mary's father was Joachim.' Now, by the first hypothesis Heli is Mary's father. I was therefore fully justified in saying that 'he was elsewhere called Joachim.'

"I may add that Eli is a contraction for Eliachim. Joachim King of Judea is called Eliachim in 4 Kings xxiii, 34; 2 Paralipomenon, xxxvi, 4. (Protestant Bible, 2 Kings; 2 Chronicles.) Also the same high priest who is called Joachim in Judith xv., 9, is called Eliachim in iv., 5, 10. Eli is Hebrew for 'My God;' Jo is also a contraction for God—Jehovah.

"The inaccuracies of THE TRUTH SEEKER will be the more evident when I point out that he states that the two theories I hav proposed are by St. Augustine. This saint does propound the first theory, but not the second. St. Augustine originally propounded a theory differing from both of those which I hav proposed, but he afterwards abandoned it.

"THE TRUTH SEEKER maintains that the words 'Joseph who was of Heli' must mean that Joseph was the son of Heli, not the son-in-law. This is the only attempt to prove the first theory unsatisfactory. I answer that the words 'son of' are not in the original Greek. Undoubtedly the form of expression is usually employed to mean 'the son of,' but it is not necessarily so, and it may certainly be applied to one who, like Joseph, was adopted by marriage into the family of Heli.

"THE TRUTH SEEKER quotes Lord Amberley, an Infidel, and some supposed Christian writers, to prove that the discrepancy is real. All I hav to say to these authorities is that I hav shown that the discrepancy is but imaginary.

"THE TRUTH SEEKER quotes another difficulty from Lord Amberley: 'The enormous disproportion in the number of generations between David and Joseph. Matthew has twenty-five generations and Luke forty, excluding Joseph himself, ... a difference of 400 or 450 years.'

"Surely Lord Amberley and THE TRUTH SEEKER are badly off for a discrepancy when they make one out of the fact that different men are of different ages when sons are born to them. There are really 26 instead of 25 generations in St. Matthew, and 40 in St. Luke. This would giv the averag ages of the different lines of ancestry respectivly, 38 1-2 and 25 years. Where does the discrepancy of 400 or 450 years come in?

"The second method of reconciliation is such that THE TRUTH SEEKER does not even attempt to show that it could not occur."

If our priest knew anything of logic—or knowing, if he were honest—he would know that an hypothesis to be worthy consideration must hav some evidence behind it. In reply to his previous letter we called for the evidence on which he (or St. Augustine) based the first hypothesis. The points on which we denied this hypothesis were:

1. There is no scriptural authority for it.
2. Mary was not the daughter of Heli.
3. If "son of" meant "son-in-law," and Luke iii, 23 ought to read, "And Jesus himself, being as was supposed, the son of Joseph, which was the son in-law of Heli," then Heli would be "son-in-law of Matthat, which was the son-in-law of Levi," and so on to the end of the genealogy. Try to follow the pedigree back by this method and see where you would land.
4. Where the writer speaks of Elizabeth, he takes pains to say her husband was of the house of David; but nowhere says the same of her or of Mary.
5. There is no authority for saying Joachim and Heli were identical; and,
6. If they were it would make no difference, for, according to the Protevangelion, Joachim probably was the father of Mary in the same way that Joseph was the father of Jesus—by proxy of the angels. This is the substance of the story:

"Joachim, a rich man, brought offerings to the Lord. Rubim the priest told him he must do so no more, because he was childless. Joachim in great grief retired to the mountains, resolved to fast and pray until he could become a father. His wife Anna knowing not what had become of him, and supposing him dead, began to bewail her childless widowhood. But soon she put off her mourning garments, and, resuming her wedding dress, took a walk in the garden. Sitting under a laurel-tree she prayed, not for a husband but for a child. Looking up she saw a sparrow's nest. 'Alas! O Lord!' she said, 'why am I not like the birds or beasts which are productiv before thee? I hav become a reproach to the sons of Israel, and they hav driven me in derision out of the temple of the Lord.'

"Just then a good angel appeared and promised to answer Anna's prayer. Presently two more angels came and told her her husband was alive and coming home, for another angel had heard Joachim's prayer, and promised an answer.

"The reunion of husband and wife was joyful. Joachim made a grand offering of goats, lambs, and calves to the priests, and in due time, reckoning no doubt from the good angel's visit in the garden, a female child was born, and they called her Mary."

Yet, notwithstanding these objections, the priest now asserts in his hypothesis that Mary was the daughter of Heli. Luke says Jesus was supposed to be the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli. The words "the son" are not in the "original Greek." Yet the name Joseph is in the Greek (not the original, for there is no original), and St. Augustine's hypothesis that Luke was giving the genealogy of Mary is therefore impossible to maintain. "Mary, the daughter of," could never hav been meant by "Joseph, the son of." And Kitto's "Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature" says that the legends respecting Anna, who is said to hav been Mary's mother, "are pure fables, without the slightest evidence." This is rough on the priest's authority, but is undoubtedly true. The hypothesis, therefore, that Luke givs the genealogy of Mary is disproved by the gospel itself; and as the priest said in his former communication that there are no other witnesses (than the gospels) that "we can absolutely call upon," he must admit his mistakes. But that he may not think this is only the ipse dixit of an irreverent paper, we will quote for his benefit some opinions of some reverent men. Greg's "Creed of Christendom" says of the discrepant genealogies:

"One critic supposes that one evangelist givs the pedigree of the adoptiv, the other of the real father of Joseph. Another assumes that one is the genealogy of Joseph, and the other that of Mary—a most convenient idea, but entirely gratuitous, and positivly contradicted by the language of the text" (p. 172).

Another writer says:

"The genealogy of Jesus in the canonical gospels . . . is traced solely through Joseph, who alone is stated to be of the lineage of David. The genealogies of Matthew and Luke, though differing in several important points, at least agree in excluding Mary" (Supernatural Religion, p. 259).

Scott says:

"Both the evangelists profess to giv the genealogy of Joseph; while neither of them givs any support to the Davidic descent of Mary," and "the pointed expression that Joseph went with Mary to Bethlehem 'because he was [not, they were] of the house and lineage of David' (Luke ii, 4), seems to exclude the idea" (English Life of Jesus, p. 26).

Other similar opinions might be given of the meaning of the genealogy set forth in Luke. That he gave the pedigree of Joseph and not of Mary effectually disposes of the first hypothesis. For "the gospels are the only witnesses we can absolutely call upon" (Canadian priest, TRUTH SEEKER, Jan. 3, 1885, p. 8).

Of the second hypothesis: We asked the priest to prove his assertions, as follows:

1. How does he know that "Heli died and his wife married Jacob?" Grotius held that the Levirate law imposed no necessity on Jacob to marry the widow of Heli, supposing Heli had died without issue, of which there is no evidence. Hammond, Le Clerc, and Wetstein agree with Grotius (Kitto, Cyc. Bib. Lit., vol. i, p. 746).

2. This hypothesis alleges that "Joseph was born of this marriage." Of what use is Joseph's pedigree when, if the fundamental dogma of Catholicism be true, Joseph was not Christ's father?

3. "Jacob and Heli were brothers." It is not so set down in the gospels, which "are the only witnesses we can absolutely call upon."

4. "Mary's mother Anna was sister to Jacob." Anna is said to hav been Mary's mother. The allegation is, however, made only by interested and dishonest churchmen, who assume whatever pleases them, and what they regard as necessary to establish their theology. There is absolutely no proof of the statement whatever. The legends of the apocryphal gospels "are pure fables without the slightest evidence."

But there are other reasons for rejecting this hypothesis. If Jacob was the natural father of Joseph, why should Luke giv the genealogy of Heli? Joseph could not hav had two lines of paternal ancestors. It is also obvious that if the two fathers of Joseph were brothers, sons of the same father, they had one and the same lineage, and this would involve no difference of genealogy beyond Heli and Jacob. Had another Levirate marriage taken place? This would suppose an improbable mortality among Joseph's paternal ancestors, and would be well calculated to alarm the women marrying any of the royal line. The promptness with which they were widowed was only equaled by the promptness with which they sought consolation in another marriage. If, however, our priest alleges this second Levirate marriage (which Grotius and others say there was no necessity for), we hope he will be prepared with at least a trifle of evidence, and not base his allegation on the ipse dixit of some dead crank who believed that cancers were cured by miracle.

But, we again ask, what matter is it what Joseph's pedigree was, so long as he was not Jesus's father? The consideration of the subject is a waste of space, and we are tempted to drop it. We hav already given reasons enough why the second hypothesis has no legs to stand upon. It may not, however, be out of place to point out some of the inconsistencies which the priest says Ingersoll has wrongly charged upon Matthew and Luke.

Speaking of the genealogy as given by Matthew, Greg says: "In the first place, this genealogy is not correct. Secondly, if the remainder of the chapter is to be received as true, it is in no sense the genealogy of Jesus. Thirdly, it is wholly and irreconcilably at variance with that given by Luke."

Matthew asserts that the generations are forty-two—fourteen from Abraham to David; fourteen from David until the carrying away into Babylon; and fourteen from the latter period to Christ. A study of the genealogies themselvs develops the unreliability of Matthew (or whoever wrote the gospel bearing his name). The third set of generations are only thirteen.

To get over this, ecclesiastics stick another name into the second set. Jehoiakim is put in between Josias and Jechonias, making the latter the grandson of Josias. But this again convicts Matthew, for he says, "Josias begat Jechonias" (Matt. i, 11, King James's translation). However, the churchman and Matthew must settle this between themselvs. But the discrepancies are not ended with this. In Matthew i, 8, it is asserted that "Joram begat Ozias." In the Old Testament we learn that Joram was the father of Ahazia (2 Kings viii, 25; ix, 27), who in turn was the father of Jehoash (2 Kings xii, 1), whose son Amaziah was the father of Ozias (who was also known as Uzziah and Azariah). This leaving out of three generations spoils somewhat the symmetry of Matthew's genealogical tree. As Scott says, "Either Joram was the father of Uzziah (Ozias) or he was not. Either all the generations between David and Jechonias were fourteen or they were not." Augustine, quoted by our priest as a conclusiv authority, said that "Ochozias, Joash, and Amazias were excluded from the number because their wickedness was continuous and without interval." As if the goodness or badness of the persons forming the links in the chain could modify the facts! That Amaziah did that which was right in the sight of the Lord" (2 Kings xiv, 3), makes no difference to Augustine. His business was to construct an hypothesis, and not even the scriptures themselvs could be allowed to interfere. Therein our Canadian priest resembles Augustine, except that he is using the hypotheses of others, and not building new ones. Regarding this omission Jerome (also a favorit of our Catholic friend) said that, "according to historical truth there were three intervening kings who are omitted by the evangelist." Again we leave Matthew to fight it out with his opposers, the writer of 2 Kings, Augustine, and Jerome. A few of Matthew's further blunders are that he makes Zorobabel (v, 12) a son of Salathiel, while in 1 Chronicles, iii, 19, he is a nephew of Salathiel. He also givs Abiud (v, 13), as a son of Zorobabel, while the same passage of Chronicles is a dreary waste so far as Abiud is concerned. These are some of Matthew's inaccuracies.

The second proposition is that if the rest of the chapter (Matthew i) is true, the genealogies are not those of Jesus. Upon this we may with advantage use the words of W. Rathbone Greg (Creed of Christendom, p. 171):

> The genealogy here given, correct or incorrect, is the genealogy of Joseph, who is in no sense whatever the father (or any relation at all) of Jesus, since this last, we are assured (verses 18 and 25), was in his mother's womb before she and her husband came together. The story of the incarnation and the genealogy are obviously at variance; and no ingenuity, unscrupulously as it has been applied, can produce even the shadow of an agreement; and when the flat contradiction given to each other by the 1st* and the 18th† verses is considered, it is difficult for an unprejudiced mind not to feel convinced that the author of the genealogy (both in the first and third gospels) was ignorant of the story of the incarnation, though the carelessness and uncritical temper of the evangelist—a carelessness partially avoided in the case of Luke, by an interpolation‡—has united the two into one compilation.

The third assertion is that repeated by Colonel Ingersoll, that there are irreconcilable inconsistencies between the first and third gospel genealogies. Let us see. Leaving aside for a moment the considerable difference in the number of generations between David and Jesus, as given by the two evangelists, we will point out some of the grosser inconsistencies. Luke starts with God. Matthew with Abraham. They then go together up to David. After that the lists diverge. We hav printed these before, but for the satisfaction of this Canadian reverend it is inserted here:

MATTHEW.	LUKE.
1. Solomon.	1. Nathan.
2. Rehoboam.	2. Mattatha.
3. Abia.	3. Menan.
4. Asa.	4. Melea.
5. Jehosophat.	5. Eliakim.
6. Joram.	6. Jonan.
[Ahaziah. Joash. *Amaziah.]
7. Ozias (or Uzziah).	7. Joseph.
8. Jotham.	8. Juda.
9. Ahaz.	9. Simeon.
10. Hezekiah.	10. Levi.
11. Manasseh.	11. Matthat.
12. Amon.	12. Jorim.
13. Josiah.	12. Eliezer.
[Jehoiakim.]
14. Jeconiah (or Jehoiachim).	14. Jose.
Here the captivity closes the second period. After the captivity we hav—
1. Jeckoniah.	15. Er.
2. Salathiel (or Shealthiel).	16. Elmodam.
3. Zerubbabel.	17. Cosam.
4. Abiud.	18. Addi.
5. Eliakim.	19. Melchi.
6. Azor.	20. Neri.
7. Sadoc.	21. Salathiel.
8. Achim.	22. Zorababel.
9. Eliud.	23. Rhesa.
10. Eleazar.	24. Joanna.
11. Matthan.	25. Juda.
12. Jacob.	26. Joseph.
13. Joseph.	27. Semei.
14. JESUS.	28. Mattathias.
	29. Maath.
	30. Nagga.
	31. Esli.
	32. Naum.
	33. Amos.
	34. Mattathias.
	35. Joseph.
	36. Janna.
	37. Melchi.
	38. Levi.
	39. Matthat.
	40. Heli.
	41. Joseph.
	42. JESUS.†

It will be seen that the only persons upon whom Matthew and Luke agree are Salathiel and Zorobabel. The others are totally different. To a person not a theologian, nor a believer in the mythical and symbolical explanations of the early church fathers, this difference is sufficient to constitute an inconsistency. Strauss so held, for he says that "a consideration of the insurmountable difficulties which unavoidably embarrass every attempt to bring these two genealogies into harmony with one another will lead us to despair of reconciling them, and will incline us to acknowledge, with the more Freethinking class of critics, that they are mutually contradictory. Consequently, they cannot both be true."

A few words upon some other assertions of our opponent, and our space is exhausted. He asserts that if either of his explanations is possible, the evangelists are vindicated. Now, we say that neither of his explanations is possible without contradicting one or the other of the evangelists. Matthew asserts that all the generations were so many; yet Luke goes on and givs more. Either Matthew lied or Luke was mistaken. We do not think that Augustine's explanation is sufficient, that Matthew "does not sum them all up and say, The sum of the whole is forty-and two, because one of those fathers, i. e., Jechoniah, is reckoned twice. . . . Matthew, therefore, whose purpose was to draw out Christ's kingly character, counts forty successions in the genealogy exclusiv of Christ. This number denotes the time for which we must be governed by Christ in this world. . . . That this number should denote our temporal life, a reason offers at hand, in this, that the seasons of the year are four, and that the world itself is bounded by four sides. But forty contains ten four times; moreover, ten itself is made up by a number proceeding from one to four." We might as well say with Remigius that if we take the generations as forty-two, "we then shall say that the holy church is signified, for this number is the product of seven and six; the six denotes labor, and the seven rest." What a queer way of proving things Augustine and Remigius had! But to Eusebius must be awarded a crown for mendacity of equal value. As quoted in the "Catena Aurea" of "St." Thomas Aquinas, Eusebius explains the inconsistency by attributing to Luke a deliberate purpose to conceal the truth. If Luke, he says, had asserted that Joseph was the son of Heli, in like manner as Matthew affirmed him to be the son of Jacob, "there would be some dispute. But seeing the case is that Matthew givs his opinion, Luke repeats the common opinion of many, not his own, . . . for since there were among the Jews different opinions of the genealogy of Christ, and yet all traced him up to David, because to him were the promises made, while many affirmed that Christ would come through Solomon and the other kings; some shunned this opinion because of the many crimes recorded of their kings, and because Jeremiah said of Jechonias, that 'a man should not rise of his seed to sit on the throne of David.' This last view Luke takes, though conscious that Matthew givs the real truth of the genealogy. (See "English Life of Jesus," pp. 22, 26, 27.) It occurs to us that this is upholding Christism at the expense of morality.

The questions of the priority of Matthew or Luke and the anonymousness of the gospels are side issues which we hav not space to now discuss; if the priest wishes to take the matter up, however, we will follow him in subsequent papers. Another point made is that we attributed both of the herein considered theories to Augustine. It was a mere slip. The second hypothesis was common in early times. Probably Africanus can claim whatever honor there may be in having started the idea of reconciling the genealogies in that way. Almost nothing is absolutely certain about the early church fathers except that they were incompetent, dishonest, superstitious, and totally unfit to deal with the problems they so recklessly "solved."

The remaining point is a criticism of Amberley for showing that between the generations of Matthew and Luke there is a difference of some 400 or 450 years. Matthew omits fifteen generations. A generation is about 33 years. Fifteen times 33 is 495. In putting the disproportion at 400 or 450 years Amberley was quite a way inside the limit. A little reflection might hav saved our priestly adversary from the charge of captiousness.

If this reply does not please, the priest will confer a favor by pointing out wherein it fails.

The Chicago League.

Dynamite is a powerful explosiv, and it seems that the bare mention of it has sufficed to disrupt the League of Chicago. We hope, however, that the pieces can be gathered together and the League united. The Liberal force is by no means strong enough to stand internal quarreling.

If a suggestion from an outsider will not be offensiv, we would recommend not only the Chicago League, but all Leagues, to hav in League meetings discussions only upon subjects germane to the movement. If upon occasions the members desire an intellectual holiday to discuss foreign issues, let it be distinctly understood that the League is not responsible for the affair. The frequency of these relaxations must depend upon the temperament of the members, as must also the extent to which the diversion is carried.

Another way: let the League be so engrossed in propagandist work, or so absorbed in aggressiv Freethought action, that there will be no time for internal eruptions.

THERE is sometimes a complaint that crops are short. This never applies to the crop of clerical rascals, and reference to another page of this paper will show that the yield has been abundant. We are not of course able to publish complete returns, as many counties are yet to be heard from; but it is evident that the devil has been conducting an aggressiv campaign. The church papers, we expect, will continue to sound their warnings against the demoralizing influences of religious Infidelity, and the reason for this will doubtless be found in the fact that the immorality of Christians has attained that maturity of corruption where their example ceases to be contagious.

W. F. JAMIESON is engaged to deliver courses of Freethought lectures in Stanton and Creighton, Neb., from March 1st to the 10th. Will accept calls to lecture anywhere in Nebraska. Address him at Creighton, Neb.

COLONEL INGERSOLL will lecture in the Bijou Opera House, this city, next Sunday evening on "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child."

* The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.

† Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.

‡ Luke iii, 23 "Jesus . . . being, as was supposed, the son of Joseph," a parenthesis, which renders nugatory the whole of the following genealogy, and cannot hav originally formed a part of it. The 16th verse of Matthew also bears indications of a similar emendation.

* Kings omitted in the gospel are inserted in brackets and italicized.

† Matt. i. 1–17; Luke iii, 23–38.

Letters from Friends.

LEXINGTON, KY., Jan. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: While reading your excellent editorial on "Figures That Lie," in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 6th, a few thoughts suggested themselvs which are of great value, if not of vital interest, to state secularization and the taxation of ecclesiastical property in America. As the Plenary Council writer says, there are many difficulties to be encountered and overcome before we can arrive at even approximate results as to the comparativ strength of the various religious bodies. And as an improvement upon the general method of determining the exact number of church adherents, you suggest that the "right way would be to subtract from the seating capacity of the churches the difference between the number of seats and the average number of members who attend." But a better way, in my opinion, would be for the census-taker at the time of gathering the official figures to politely inquire of each and every individual his or her religious belief, and by this means, if rightly carried out, there could be no question as to the certainty of the alleged numerical strength of the denominations. If a man or woman is a believer in Christianity, let him write it opposit his or her name, in a place set apart for that purpose, and the church and denomination to which they belong; and with the Freethinker let the census-clerk do the same, only substituting "non-religious" for belief. Thus we would ascertain exactly the increase or decrease of religion, besides materially benefiting all concerned and interested in the great subject.

I move that the Liberals in all parts of the country get up a petition to this effect, sign, and judiciously circulate it among their friends for their signatures, then present it to Congress, requesting that honorable body to pass a law that will forever preclude the possibility of errors in church statistics. As matters now stand, however, ten chances to one we would be ignominiously defeated if we presented a petition for state secularization at the present time. For legislators, like other politicians, are peculiarly constituted, and liv in constant fear of losing political honors, hence are always ready to, as they invariably do, follow the dictation and lead of Christianity, and if the members of the great delusion (the right name for it, by the way) are exaggerated, and the pious frauds are apparently in the majority, we will inevitably meet defeat, and subsequently fail in the manner specified. But if the hypocritical law-makers clearly see, and are positivly aware, that the Freethinkers outrank the followers of the "dear crucified one," they will, with a little agitation on our part, readily grant our prayers, even if the great Jehovah doesn't.

With these stubborn facts before us, our future course is obvious, and in the language of modern slang, if we only "play it right," we will surely meet a glorious victory. But the first essential thing to be done is the consideration of the suggestions above set forth, and as another census-year will soon roll around, the quicker the work is commenced the better. After we hav ascertained and successfully established the true number of church adherents, then, and not till then, as it appears to my mind, can we consistently talk about state secularization. I hope these suggestions may meet the approbation and encouragement of Liberals, and that they will giv their views upon the subject.

Visiting an acquaintance recently, one who fears God and his rival in the soul business, Satan, both at the same time, I picked up a heavenly sheet dubbed the American Messenger. This angel of light is a whole "Bible, an activ church, a sanctified press," not to mention the "hope of the world," all in itself. It bears date of January, 1885, being a monthly, and it teaches "the word of God only, the grace of Christ only, and the work of the spirit only." The celestial recruit is published in the ungodly city of New York, and is an honor to J. E. Christ, the middle-man in the much-vaunted and adorable firm of "father and ghost." In this great omnipotent journal I find the following inspired lie: "Another colporteur writes from Michigan: 'I met a Bob Ingersoll man, an old Infidel, and at first he seemed inclined to abuse me. I told him that he had a right to his opinion, and I to mine; but the Lord says, "Come, let us reason together."' After conversing on the scriptures awhile, he looked up to me with tears in his eyes, and said, "Stranger, if you can do me any good, for God's sake do it, for I need it." I then pointed him to the lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, and departed.'" The old Infidel (?) must hav been a poor debater to allow himself to be vanquished by this pious hypocrit. And I wonder if the aforesaid "lamb" appeared in the clouds especially for his spiritual benefit? Else how could he point to him? Maybe the able editor of this cock-robin-run-me-through-with-gospel paper can solve the conundrum, for I confess my inability to do so. For such is the kingdom of heaven.

DAVID B. COZINE.

TRAMPS: HOW MADE.

CHAMPLIN, MINN., Feb. 23, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: It was here but a day ago that a stout man made his appearance as a "tramp" at the door of one of our well-to-do citizens and asked for something to eat, but as advice was cheaper to giv than bread he was refused, and ordered to go to work. Now, without making remarks on the inhumanity of this treatment, let us calmly look into the causes that make tramps. There is not a town or city in our country that has less than from ten to hundreds of young, stout men in each, and not lazy men, but good, honest workers, that are spending the long winter in doing nothing; yes, worse than doing nothing. Look at them. They hav, without exception, a liberal share of a free-school education, a sufficient foundation to build up a life-time reputation of manhood and intelligence. But follow them, and in place of finding them pursuing those fine advantages at their parents' home or boarding-house, you will find them at their place of rendezvous, engaged in conversation on the most trifling incidents of the day; on the good time they are going to hav at the dance to-morrow night; or, for a change, go to betting or pitching pennies for the cigars. Their principal reading, if anything, is in the cheapest novels and worthless story papers. Here we see a vast body of young men that are earning money that, with care and economy, will soon grow to a sum sufficient to procure them an independent foot-hold on this earth. But, unfortunately, their hard earnings are passing on till they reach the pockets of the calculating, avaricious rich. You workingmen that throw money away must be the class that produce the tramps.

We are now in the hands of a partisan government whose leaders are corrupt, and so thoroughly and firmly fixed in power by an illiterate constituency that it looks like an impossibility that this government can be brought back to what it was, or to what it was intended to be, a pure democracy, without a severe revolution.

J. KINSER.

DAVID CITY, NEB., Jan. 14, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 for subscription to the best of papers. Our Sunday-school superintendent went to Canada thirty or forty thousand dollars behind (or rather ahead) last fall. He was arrested in Woodstock awhile ago, and we expect to see him again. There are several ordinary Freethinkers here, but no organization. Some are Prohibitionists red hot; the editor of a holiness sheet here says that whisky is only a beginning; tobacco next, and, finally, all sin. So you see where Prohibition leads to.

What's the matter with "T. E. L?" His answer to W. S. Bell sounded quite bigoted. No calm reasoning like Bell. When a person mounts a prohibitory nag he mounts a hunter, and goes over fences, ditches and all; stops for nothing.

Does a belief in Spiritualism include a possibility or probability of the truth of ghost stories, haunted houses, and slate communications in presence of juries, in murder cases? It looks so to me if spirits can materialize at will. I should like to informed; am only a beginner.

SUBSCRIBER.

FRESNO, CAL., Jan. 15, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Herewith please find inclosure, for which amount credit me on THE TRUTH SEEKER, and continue to present address. Your honest and excellent journal is a new acquaintance, yet in a short time it has become my first and best companion. It was introduced by your venerable patron of this county, Robert Laramore. His honest countenance and kindly, generous heart impressed me with deciding at once "Which Way." The result is easily told. His well-thumbed books were the first of the truly Liberal and generous character that had greeted my attention. Had they been presented earlier the same result would hav followed, and to my lasting benefit. To Mr. John R. Kelso's "Analysis of the Bible," I am also largely indebted. None but a man of honest life and exhalted manhood could pen such a book. To my thinking it is especially acceptable to young people. The author impresses the subject of his book so fair and truthful, each succeeding chapter becoming more promising to any inquiring mind that hitherto has not investigated questions of this character. How singular, too, that so few of such valuable books and kindred literature are thrown in the way of young people. The future day must be very near, however, when the minds of men will be entirely free and unfettered, and all this will be changed. The cobwebs of theological tomfoolery cannot much longer enshroud the light of reason and intelligence. Your paper is chock-full of good things, and speed the day when every mourner's bench in the land will constantly hav a copy on file.

R. A. FITZGERALD.

POE, OHIO, Feb. 14, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Messrs. Putnam and Watts lectured in Phœnix Hall, Medina. The audience was a large one, and embraced the most prominent of our citizens, as well as the most prominent of our Liberal element. All denominations and beliefs were freely represented, notwithstanding the fact that nearly all the churches in the town called extra meetings upon that eve to keep all they could from going where they would hav their Bible, their Bible God, and their religions arranged before the altar of reason and humanity. They offered extra inducements in the shape of valentines, socials, etc., for the purpose of luring the younger of their dupes within the safe confinements of their chapel walls. Mr. Putnam spoke first upon the "Coming Religious Demands." The title denotes the character of the lecture. He is a very pleasant, earnest, and able speaker, and was listened to with the closest attention as he set forth the principles and aims of the League.

Mr. Watts took for his theme "Secularism and Christianity—Which is the Superior?" He defined what the spirit of Christianity is as set forth in the scriptures, and showed how opposit it is to the spirit of reason and humanity, which is so prevalent in this century, and has made it what we find it today.

Both gentlemen called forth the most general and hearty applause. At the close of his lecture Mr. Watts said he was prepared to defend in debate any and all assertions he had made. But none could be found who was willing to engage this modern Goliah in argumentativ controversy. Several were heard to hurl defiance at him the next day (when he was thirty miles away) by bravely saying, "They ought to hav been arrested and punished for blasphemy." But, thanks be to Liberal civilization, that day is past, and we liv to-day in a country of free speech and free press, and when, by the united efforts of the Liberals of this country, generaled by such men as Col. R. G. Ingersoll and Mr. Watts, the Nine Demands of Liberalism are secured, we will liv in a country of equal rights.

That Messrs. Putnam and Watts are laboring for the good of the cause is demonstrated by the fact that they come here without the promis or hope of ample reward; with the understanding that they would be obliged to travel eighteen miles by team after the lecture, to catch the 4 A.M. train on the C. C. C. & I. R.R. for Cleveland, where they were billed to lecture Sunday morning. That, with their zeal upon the platform, must impress all with their entire sincerity and earnestness in their work.

Mr. Putnam set a movement on foot to organize an auxiliary League at this place. There is abundant material, and the prospect for perfecting an organization at present is good.

W. L. FARNSWORTH.

LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS, Jan. 24, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER came to hand, on account of Man. Not until of late hav I had time to peruse them. As circumstances in this (earth) life vary consequent upon conditions, so mine, as a unit of millions, keep me employed to make a living and keep square with the world. Home papers hav to be read to keep posted. Hav numbers of the little Man paper on hand I hav not read, however anxious to hav done so. I am highly pleased with THE TRUTH SEEKER and the able contributors to its columns. The liberal spirit therein displayed is in consonance with my views. Being a Spiritualist, I am in accord with Mrs. C. S. Tremain, of your paper of Oct. 4, page 635. What has become of Brother J. M. Roberts, of Mind and Matter fame? I was truly sorry for him, and when his messages ceased to come to hand. Those messages from the ancients were truly interesting, through A. James as medium. For truth and right and against superstition, I remain, Yours truly, J. H. SEEVERS.

[Brother Roberts is now publishing Mind and Matter at Burlington, N. J., and has apparently begun about where he left off.—ED. T. S.].

BALSTON SPA, N. Y., Jan. 25, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Please find $2 for one copy of the "Story Hour" and a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. I want the one that contains the speech of Brother T. B. Wakeman. Can you send me H. L. Green's Directory and Magazine (Salamauca, N. Y.) that contains T. B. Wakeman's speech? I sent him $1 for the Bruno Statue, and in his note to me he requested me to read his speech in the Directory and Magazine in connection with the one in THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, and then write him again. If I hav not sent money enough, please send the order all the same, and the bill, and I will remit forthwith.

I think a great deal of my new faith of Liberty, Science, and Humanity, and all my family are eating the same food; and I hope we shall all grow in Liberal grace and be a light to those around us who are yet in darkness and superstition. I am doing what I can for the cause of liberty and truth.

I received "Paine's Complete Works," which you sent, in very good order; also "Bible Morals;" and let me say that Brother Remsburg is one of the big guns, and may he and Brother R. G. Ingersoll liv long and be strong in tearing down the stronghold of ignorance and superstition. I hav made more than one Bible saint blush since I received "Bible Morals."

I inclose a slip I hav just clipped from the Utica Sunday Globe, Jan 24, 1885. My wife was a subscriber, but she says it is the last copy she will allow in the house. And the editor of the Globe is not fit to blacken the boots of Colonel Ingersoll, let alone his character.

I wish long life and success to you and THE TRUTH SEEKER. I am, in all truth,

Yours very respectfully, WILLIAM THORPE.

PLEASANTON, KAN., Jan. 21, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find three dollars ($3), as due you for your valuable paper, which each week contains such an immense amount of valuable information—facts, which are made clear and not sugar-coated by any creed or dogma. Having read your paper since my fifteenth year, I attribute to it part of my present radical ideas. And I sincerely hope that THE TRUTH SEEKER will ever continue to unfold its pinions to the Liberal breeze, which is just now so fast penetrating and scattering the poisonous vapors of superstition and churchcraft. Long may it continue the work so nobly begun by D. M. Bennett.

An idea has long impressed itself on my mind in regard to the moneyless Freethinkers. Too many of our people are poor; too many giv much less thought to the acquirement of wealth than is practical, and the result is that the church, with its thousands, is enabled to repress Freethought expressions, and with the heel of despotism (as crushing as in days of old) either compel us to keep still or move elsewhere.

With more care for the possession of moneyed positions, we could extend our ideas, and more quickly spread Freethought and make the young, at least, see more clearly nature unfolded, thus getting ideas abroad that will in time develop many first-class thinkers. Yours for advancement and truth,

MISS ELLA MORROW.

MT. UNION, Jan. 19, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $11, to be used as ordered. Freethought is moving on rapidly here now, though we hav the Salvation Army and the Young Men's Christian Association to contend with; still, "hell is freezing over," and I think it will be our next skating-rink. We like THE TRUTH SEEKER, and think it the best paper now printed. We cannot do without it. I will send you more subscribers soon.

JOSEPH FITZPATRICK.

NANNAIMO, Feb. 9, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I send $3 in this letter. Please stop the paper after this runs out. Cause, the anti-temperance leaning of the paper; prohibition is my religion.

JAMES LEWIS.

CINCINNATI, O., Feb. 24, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: One of your subscribers, named Geo. Gage, of Osborne, Kan., suggests the propriety of giving much space to T. Winter—the Cincinnati Materialist—so that he might hav full play to cast flings at Spiritualism. Now, sir, it doth not require much space, study, or time, to refute and rebuke a self-evident superstition. Nature itself is all-sufficient to uproot the poisonous principle which hath so craftily palmed off its insidious virus on the credulous believers in the old book of blood and fables, called a Bible; for this dogma of a second state of existence is derived from that book, and not from nature. Other priestly books teach the same dogma, which clearly shows the whole thing to be a priestly device to rule and to rob mankind. No wonder men of sense are disgusted with the miserable crankism which is now promulgated and seeking law to compel all men to submit to the wild, tyrannical views and crack-brain nonsense. Old superstitions are bad enough and black enough, but if these modern despots could hav their way, life would be a living curse. I sincerely hope there ever will be sufficient sound sense to counteract and render nugatory the baneful effects growing out of excessiv fanaticism, and a miserable desire to compel mankind to conform to the vilest oppressions. Sir, for myself, I claim entire freedom without limit, and I concede the same right to my fellow-mortal. Yours, T. WINTER, Materialist.

P.S.—Sir, I will briefly state that a number of your readers are more than satisfied with the issues of my pen. Kind and friendly letters reach me by mail from distant points, all of which is favorable to my honest and truthful sentiments. I received a most pleasant visit recently from a lady who is a correspondent of THE TRUTH SEEKER. She leans a little to the side of Spiritualism, but I found it was a very thin faith.

As to Brother Geo. Gray, of Lowell, Mass., I hope he will reconsider and not withdraw his support. I agree with him that fanaticism is sickening, but I hope our Infidel papers will do their level best to stop the flow of ignorance, and the outburst of ruinous excitement, which is so identical with fanatical superstition. W.

PIKE, N. Y., Jan. 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find draft for four dollars—three of which is for the continuation of THE TRUTH SEEKER, which never fails to bring its weekly store of progressiv thought into my old age. I am nearly eighty-two years old, and must soon succumb to the unfailing law of nature. But while I stay, I intend to keep pace with the great reforms of the age. The other dollar is for the "Radical Pulpit."

Along with this, I ask to say a few words in regard to our backsliding Brother Chaney, of whom I hav been a great admirer, and from whose lectures I hav derived much pleasure.

I understand that he started in his religious career away down to Methodism, but being of a progressiv turn, he could not stop there, but went on through various stages until he reached Materialism. With this broad field open before him, he should hav been content, but he appears to be of an unsatisfied, restless disposition, and not exactly compos mentis, and so he has commenced retrograding by dropping off into Spiritualism. He also may hav had an eye on the main chance, and hoped for a thicker slice of bread and butter. I sincerely hope the spirits will feed him well while he remains with them; but he will eventually draw up at the starting-point, and at last skip into heaven on the wings of Methodism. I feel a profound pity for him as he retraces the road.

Yours for reform, R. SLUSSER.

BURTON, TEX., Jan. 26, 285.

MR. EDITOR: The Bible all through enslaves woman. She is made the pillar and pack-horse of the church. Withdraw her support to-day, and little would be left of this giant fraud. And why is this so? The answer is plainly seen. Her education and training are carefully guarded to allow her a chance to emerge from the shackles in which she has so long been bound. Whenever she has been allowed a showing, the proof is conclusiv that her intellect is fully equal to man's. But how rarely is this chance allowed!

At a recent Methodist meeting in this state, a very intelligent lady was denied the right to express herself on religion before the audience, because the Bible commands that she must keep silent. She is also commanded to obey man; and this old volume also teaches that she is accountable for all the sin and damnation the world was ever cursed with. But steadily and surely do we see her rising from this downtrodden position in which the church is laboring so hard to keep her; and it is to the advance of Freethought and science that she is indebted for the liberties now enjoyed. May their eyes quickly and speedily be opened to this great fact, and may they gain the forces that are battling for her rights and freedom, leaving the old myth, superstition, and its polluted officers to sink in the quagmire of filth and degradation from whence they sprang, is the earnest wish of, Yours fraternally, H. B. JONES.

WEST UNION, O., Jan. 26.

MR. EDITOR: I will do all I can to extend the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER, which seeks, finds, and givs truth to its intelligent readers, like bright, genuin coins, fresh from the mint. The worth of these gems of truth could hardly be estimated in money; for instance, the lecture "Which Way?" by the brilliant, inimitable, and noble R. G. Ingersoll, and also the practical and unsurpassable lecture in its line, "Bible Morals," by that splendid rising star of Liberal light, John E. Remsburg. I hav a few thoughts and suggestions on "Bible Morals" to submit for publication in THE TRUTH SEEKER at an early date, but cannot refrain from dropping a hint or two here and now. "Bible Morals" is a practical work, and if received and acted on in a practical manner by the Liberal world, it will make more actual inroad into the orthodox stronghold than almost any pamphlet of its size ever published. Let all warriors of Freethought make it a turn-table with which to reverse the locomotiv ram of orthodoxy, and run it straight back on their own old track, to a certain destructiv, annihilating collision with their creeds and dogmas, and especially would their false headlight of Bible morals be smashed into a million unrecognizable fragments. So mote it be.

J. F. BECK.

TRAPPE, Jan. 27, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Your letter to papa has been received, and the contents noted. I am sorry to tell you he is not home at present. He is attending to business matters in the West, but if all goes well will be home soon. I will write and tell him of your letter, and though the needful be scarce with him, I know he will manage to forward what is due, and more, if possible, for we could not be without the brave and fearless TRUTH SEEKER. It is the most eagerly looked for of all the papers that enter our house, and it is the one that has done the most good.

I feel, nay, I know, that it is doing a great and good work in the cause of humanity, and aid should be tendered by everyone who advocates Freethought and free speech. I know there are foes who clamor to pull down and destroy; who hurl epithets at us at every turn. But let us be brave, and go on in the right, and with reason as a guiding star our efforts cannot, will not be in vain.

Please do not think that in my enthusiasm I hav forgotten all about the practical side of the question. Far from it, I will see that it is attended too. I would like very much to purchase the "Story Hour," and some other Liberal books, but I will first hav to consult papa. CLARENE RHOADES.

ALTOONA, PA., Feb. 7, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I am in full sympathy with the tent business and sincerely hope it may prove a success. Yet at the outset I beg leave to state that, according to my opinion, there are very many difficulties in the way of our good Brother Reynolds. There is no doubt but what he would meet with some success in the Western states of Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska, where there are thousands of Liberals. But I am very much afraid that in Pennsylvania he would meet with reverses. The Christianity of this state is extremely bigoted and orthodox. This can be readily seen from their actions during the state convention recently held in Altoona. Should Brother Reynolds commence his revival in this state, he would be compelled to employ an armed watchman to protect his tent at night from the rough Christian element which infest many of our large towns and villages. There is a very good place right in the center of Altoona where Brother Reynolds could pitch his tent, unless the editor of the Daily Tribune sees fit to stop him. But despite all this, I hope our good brother may succeed in getting his tent, and that success may crown his efforts. WM. J. BURNS.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, Jan. 25, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read your splendid paper for six years I am very fond of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I think it and the Investigator two of the mightiest guns for battering down the strongholds of superstition. The churches must go. Humanity must be civilized out of attending churches and listening to priests and preachers, talking about lies and nonentities. If the world were civilized, enlightened by knowledge, you would see no priest, nor preacher, nor church, nor temple, where thousands of the credulous come to be robbed by impostors. You would nevermore see slaves down on their knees, praying to a nonentity. You would never again hear senseless supplications pleading after impossibilities. The world is not civilized. If it were there would be no great standing armies. Millions of able-bodied men are drilled for war and butchery and kept in idleness. They prey on industry and bankrupt governments. They do no good, but a great deal of harm. They make nothing, but consume much. Look at the czar of Russia. Look at the pope of Rome. See John Taylor here in Utah. Who are they? What are they? According to the evidence, I pronounce the first an impostor, the second a tyrant, the third a villain, and the three, veritable devils incarnate. They are robbers, plunderers, knaves! Humanity will gain much when such impostors cease to exist. It is very strange to me that people will tolerate their commands of imposition. It is strange that people who claim to be sensible will submit to pay homage to such devilish impostors. I do not believe they would were it not that they are such ignorant slaves. These impostors and priests of superstition feed on and devour the weak and helpless. The ignorant masses are weak and helpless because they are ignorant. And see how priests rejoice in keeping the people ignorant. These heartless fiends know that so long as they can poison credulous minds with superstition, just so long can they rob and ravish, rule and ruin, with impunity. The greatest curse or evil known to humanity is priestcraft, ignorance, and superstition. That trinity is the devil in hell. Say what you may, I know of nothing worse. We must hav truth; humanity will degenerate on lies. Superstition is mental poison. Christianity is false. Religion is a lie. God is a nonentity. Morality doesn't need a church. Happiness is the only good. We want more science and less Bible; more civilization, and less religion; more honesty and less fraud. We need something better than Christianity, for Christianity has demoralized the world. There are too many Christian criminals; penitentiaries are full of them; yet many—in fact, most—of these Christian criminals are on the outside of prisons. Religion does not govern its votaries, nor will it save them. The greater the saint the greater the sinner. But no wonder; read the Bible and learn of the Christian God—that God is opposed to knowledge and morality; that God taught ignorance and faith; that God opposed science and nature; that Christian God had honest men murdered and made dishonest ones kings. And subsequently some humble orthodox followers burnt Bruno to death for telling the truth, and kept Copernicus and Galileo in prison for teaching that this world is a globe.

What else did Christians do? They murdered all the honest and innocent ones that had manhood and womanhood enough to question imposition and revolt at supernaturalism and mental slavery. What else did Christians do? They burnt thousands of innocent men, women, and children for witchcraft—when there was no such thing as a witch ever known. How is the Christian God to-day? He is dead. How is Christianity to-day? It is dying. How are Christians to-day? They are sick, because Infidels and Atheists are calling attention to and pointing the finger of scorn at the holy, religious record of Christianity's holy, religious church. What is the matter with the records? They prove too much. What will become of the churches, and the records, and the Bibles? They will accomplish nothing and come to naught, because within them is the element of destruction—a lie cannot liv. Nature is proof against the production of a miracle. "Upon the ground o evolution, God is relieved of the labor of creation; in the name of immutable, natural law, he is discharged from governing the world." Geology is true; Genesis is a lie. We need more science, and less theology; more natural investigation, and less supernatural faith. The time will come when mankind will ignore God, the Bible, all religions, and all that is unreasonable and unnatural. When that time comes man will be civilized. He will hav a better time. He will know more, and impostors will cease to exist. There will be no czar, no pope, no tyrant. Mankind will be free; humanity will prevail; superstition will sink. The old ship of ignorance will go down, and every priest and preacher will be extinct. I hav faith in truth, confidence in science, and much love for all that is good, especially good men and women.

Now, Mr. Editor, and friends of universal mental liberty, from the Pacific Slope of this great continent I must say farewell. May success and happiness be yours.

CHAS. F. BLACKBURN, Atheist, Geologist, and Materialist.

EARLVILLE, ILL., Feb. 21, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just received the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL and must say it is a perfect gem and ought to lie on every Freethinker's table. I do think that E. M. Macdonald knows just where to place every trinity; and those old veteran faces that hav beat the storm for mental liberty are just what we are so glad to see; and the young soldiers that hav lately enlisted in the field of Freethought hav my best wishes, and I hope they will meet with abundant success in freeing humanity from priestcraft. SARAH C. HILTON.

BRADFORD, PA., Jan. 27, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find stamps for two copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 24th. We wish them especially for Miss Helen Gardener's "Reply to Mr. Putnam and Others," and wonder whether there remains a possible "he" who will care to ask further questions. If so, we trust that they will see to it that her finer wit and logic are properly remunerated in the process of their enlightenment. I would suggest that a public lecture by her upon "Man's Reasoning Powers and Woman's Emotional Nature" might be beneficial to the sex in general. Respectfully, LEWISE OLIVER.

P.S.—Colonel Ingersoll is to be here to-night, but we do not expect to hear anything better. L. O.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Jan. 30, 1885

MR. EDITOR: At the door of the hall, in this city, where Colonel Ingersoll lectured last Sunday evening, stood members of the Young Men's Christian Association, distributing orthodox tracts to each one who went in to listen to the "dangerous" logic, and taking down a list of all the members of churches who entered, to be given to the pastors of the several societies to which they belonged in order that they might persuade them back into the straight and (very) narrow path out of which the colonel would jostle them. An orthodox, speaking of these facts the following day to Mr. Dickenson, member of the North church (Presbyterian) of this city, asked him what reply he would make when his pastor came to talk with him for having attended the wrong meeting. Mr. Dickenson replied: "If my pastor says anything to me about it, I shall tell him that I got more food for thought in that one lecture than I did from his sermons during the whole seven years that I had been listening to them."

Truly, it seems to be "expiring with an expiring century," and the colonel, in this case at least, put a nail in its coffin.

ERASTUS S. DEANE.

BUCYRUS, O., Jan. 26, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The wife of Daniel Tuttle, D.D., died Jan. 24, 1885, aged 86 years, at her granddaughter's residence in Jerry City, Wood county, Ohio. She was respected by all who knew her. Yours truly, C. A. HERSCHE.

EUGENE CITY, OREGON, Jan. 24, 1885.

Mr. EDITOR: I hav been wanting to do something for the dear old TRUTH SEEKER for ever so long, yet, with my limited education, I scarcely know how to proceed. Remembering a faint heart never wins, here goes, trusting that your kindness will correct all mistakes. I have tried to get my neighbors to read my paper, but alas! they will not as much as look at it They may think themslves smart, but I think they are lacking in the upper story when they prefer losing so much good reading and information. THE TRUTH SEEKER is our Bible. A number of us are reading it, including my father and mother, and we all think that the Children's Corner is worthy of much praise. I sympathize with Elmina Slenker. She aims to do good and please all. Some people profess to see spirits. I hav heard them, but failed to see them. I hav seen persons that were alive a number of times in different places when they were not there at all, and a friend told me that he once saw the devil while he was in some lonely place herding sheep. There are mysteries which wiser people than I cannot explain. Will Elmina please giv attention, and explain, if possible, a few things that hav come under my observation? I hav heard when I hav been in trouble someone whisper in my ear to weep not, all would be right. Was it not angels? And I have distinctly heard, when with persons that were dying, music like drums and bells over my dying friend's head. This is not imagination. How is it that people see things at the last or closing scenes of life? Not long since, one of my neighbor's little girls was ill. We did not think her sickness serious, as she did not seem to be sick. One day she was sitting in her little chair, and her mother noticed her looking around and smiling. She asked her what she saw. She named several of her playmates that were dead, and wanted to know why her mother could not see them. Her mother asked her if she wanted anything. She said, "Wait till those folks go out." Her mother was alone at the time I hav mentioned. She did not know anything about spirits—that is, the little girl did not. I never saw a medium that I know of. Mediums say there is one in every family. S. A. SEAVEY.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That's known as the Children's Hour."

What She Lacked.

Miss Pussy sat on the lowest bough
Of a waving hickory tree,
Whispering softly, "I'll hav you now,
You gay little robin, you'll see!
The old hen watches her chicks thirteen,
And has such a fearful way
Of flying at one, that I havn't seen
A bit of fresh meat to-day."

But Master Robin twitters away,
As she stealthily creeps along,
Joining in as the thrush and jay
Chirrup a morning song.
Glancing sidewise once and again
Out of his saucy eye,
As if to say, "You will catch me, then?
Well, madam, suppose you try!"

"I hav four legs," said Pussy Cat,
"And you, sir, hav only two;
I hav sharp claws, depend on that,
And they'll get the better of you;
I'm stronger, too, than a dozen birds—
Look now!" and she quickly springs:
But the robin laughed as he soared away,
"Ha! ha! but you hav no wings."

—Youth's Companion.

Where Are Wicked Folks Buried?

"Tell me, gray-headed sexton, I said,
"Where in this field are the wicked folks laid?
I hav wandered the quiet old graveyard through,
And studied the epitaphs, old and new;
But on monument, obelisk, pillar, or stone
I read of no evil that men hav done."

The old sexton stood by a grave newly made,
With his chin on his hand, his hand on a spade.
I knew by the gleam of his eloquent eye
That his heart was instructing his lips to reply.

"Who is to judge when the soul takes its flight?
Who is to judge 'twixt the wrong and the right?
Which of us mortals shall dare to say
That our neighbor was wicked who died to-day?

"In our journey through life, the farther we speed,
The better we learn that humanity's need
Is charity's spirit, that prompts us to find
Rather virtue than vice in the lives of our kind.

"Therefore, good deeds we record on these stones,
The evil men do, let it die with their bones.
I hav labored as sexton this many a year,
But I never hav buried a bad man here."

The Stalk of Corn: A Fable.

A man was one day sowing some seeds in his garden, when he found among them a kernel of corn.

Said he to himself: "I will not throw this away, but will plant it, that it may grow and become of use as food for man or beast."

So saying, he suited the action to the word, and with his hoe deposited it in the earth in a corner of the garden.

But when the little kernel found itself shut up in such a dark, damp place, it began thus to complain:

"Why am I put here, where I can't see anything, and I feel my strength will soon be gone by reason of this offensiv earth that surrounds me? I cannot much longer endure it, for my heart is ready to burst with vexation, and I don't see why I must suffer thus."

Just then a light broke in upon it, and it raised its head above the ground, where the warm, bright sun shone upon it, while a thrill of delight ran through all its fibers; and, a few days after, as the pattering rain-drops fell upon and around it, it fairly danced with joy, and shook its tiny leaves as if in play with the liquid balls.

Soon, however, it began again to complain of its lot, and murmuring said: "Why was I placed away off here in this remote part of the garden, where no one comes to look after me, where not a single flower grows near to cheer me in this solitude?"

Just then a light breeze swept by, waving its long, pendant leaves that touched something growing by its side; and it rejoiced that it was no longer alone, and soon began to feel quite proud of its new company, but it failed to see that its own growth was checked thereby; but the gardener coming along one day with his hoe, cut down the "noxious weeds," as he called them, and then, applying the hoe vigorously about the roots of the stalk of corn, making every leaf upon it to tremble, and the dew drops to fall to the ground, he went singing on his way, giving no reason for his doing this, which he knew time would reveal, and justify his wisdom and goodness.

Alone, it grew so tall it could overlook the whole garden, and saw with feelings of anxiety the various plants and flowers die or removed from the garden, until at length the chilling frosts of autumn came, whitening its own leaves with all that was green around. The large, full ears, that had ripened upon its stalk, bowed themselvs toward the earth, and the gardener came and gathered them, and took them in and put them away for seed, to be planted in a larger field in the coming spring.

MORAL: Children should not murmur at the diciplin of parents or of teachers, since this is necessary to their good and future usefulness.

LUNA HUTCHINSON.

Why It Rains.

The preacher sometimes says God makes the rain. I do not wish our TRUTH SEEKER children to believe that such is the truth. Rain is natural, and all nature is governed by law. I will try to tell you the cause of rain.

Clothes are washed and hung out to dry; what becomes of the water as they dry? It evaporates, or, in other words, the heat in the air changes it to vapor, and it goes up among the clouds and helps to make more clouds. An engineer is almost always pumping water into his boiler, but takes none out; it is boiled away, or, in other words, the heat of the fire changes it to vapor and it goes to make clouds.

The above are visible means of evaporation, but very small in proportion to what is taken up out of the great oceans, lakes, rivers, and wet ground, and carried in clouds over the adjoining countries.

Heat changes water to vapor, and cold changes it back to water. Water is condensed vapor, or vapor packed together. Vapor, as it rises from the ocean, is not as heavy as the air, therefore it rises through the atmosphere till it gets where it is very cold; it is then seen as clouds. When a large mass of clouds get together, and a cold wind from the north blows in amongst them, it turns them to water and they drop on the ground, and we call it a shower, or a rain-storm. In winter the air is so cold up among the clouds that the vapor freezes before it gets to be water, and we then call it snow. At other times the air is cold between the clouds and the ground and freezes the drops of rain while they are falling; we then call it hail.

Yours in friendship, F. BURR.

Wheat by Evolution.

Grant, a noted botanist, says wheat ranks by origin as a degenerated and degraded lily. The primitiv ancestor of the lily was a very simple plant, with a triple set of pollen-bearing stamens, fertilized by insects. It thus acquired those bright colors and that beauty which rivaled "Solomon in all his glory." The development was through the alesina, and marsh arrowgrass, and innumerable forms, until it reached the perfect lily.

The first downward step seems to hav been self-fertilization taking the place of the insect aid. Afterward the winds brought the varied fertilizing pollen dust, and so came the rushes—plain little lilies with dry, brownish flowers; then the wood rushes, something between the true rush and the grasses. The Euscaulon a common American water plant, rushlike in character, bridged over the gap between the rushes and the grasses, and then step by step the changes in the part of the flower cultivated in our wheat plant. With the wood rush commenced the habit of storing gluten and starch along with the embryo, which has made the cereal so valuable for human food, and raised our wheat, the decendant of the lilly, the queen of the floral world, to the rank of the prince of grains, bearing its princely sway upon all the golden harvest-fields of every civilized race and nation of the globe.—Scientific Journal.

Superstitions About Children.

According to Irish and Scottish fairy superstitions, the elvs, though in the main harmless, hav the bad reputation of stealing children from the cradle, and substituting for them changelings, who bear resemblance to the stolen infants, but are ugly little creatures and never thrive. In some parts of Scotland it is a popular notion among the lower classes that when a child is for the first time taken into the open air, the bearer of it should giv something to eat to the first person met, otherwise the child will be unlucky. The gift is called the "bairn's piece." When a child was taken from its mother, and carried outside the bedroom for the first time after its birth, it was lucky to take it upstairs, and unlucky to take it downstairs. It was not considered lucky to carry a baby into a neighbor's house until the mother took it herself; and this it was unlucky for even her to do until she had been to church.

It was considered unlucky for children to walk backward while going on an eraand. It was deemed unlucky to measure a baby; and if its nails were cut before it was a year old, it would turn out a thief. It was unlucky for a boy to wear trousers made on a Friday, and to sweep dust over the feet of the girls would prevent them from getting husbands.

In Hindustan, when a baby sneezes, the mother snaps her thumb and finger, and repeats aloud the name of one of her gods. When a child casts a tooth, in south Sweden, the tooth is thrown into the fire. In Switzerland, it is carefully wrapped in paper, and salt inclosed with it, before it is thrown into the fire.

In Herrick's time it was regarded as a lucky omen to place a knife near a sleeping child. Good Friday and Easter Sunday were considered lucky days for changing the caps of children.

Among some of the tribes in Africa, if two babies come to a family at the same time, they think it a dreadful thing. Nobody except the family can go into the tent where they were born, nor use any of the things in it. The twins are not allowed to play with other children, and the mother cannot talk to any one outside of the family. This is kept up for six years. If the babies liv to be six years old, the restrictions are removed and they are treated like other children.—The Current.

Our Puzzle Box.

A PANTOGRAPH.

```
        (2)   (3)
         O
         O
         O     O
(1) O O O I N E Z
           N   E
           E   N
(4)      O Z E N I O O
                 O
                 O
```

Now posers, here is something new
To cause a man to laugh;
But to my inartistic view
It seems a pantograph.
And what's its frame, as well as name
And use to show, shall be my aim.

Four pieces, and the first's the chief;
The second is the whole in brief;
The third is Egypt's ruin vast;
A Babylonian lover, last.

And now, conjoined with flexile joints,
A portrait we may trace,
The while the other of its points
Mimics the lovely face.
Such is its use, to reproduce
A picture; or enlarge, reduce.

But she I love the most in life,
The idol of my heart, my wife—
Her name four-fold surrounds this square,
(As I hav marked it INEZ, there;)
But, deep encausted in my heart,
Her image is life's vital part.

Irwin, Iowa. J. K. P. BAKER.

ANSWER TO GRECIAN CROSS.

```
                KAVA
                ACER
                VEDA
            COCARABEND
            ODOROMEGER
            CORAMENEPE
            ARABENDREE
                ETUI
                NUDE
EDNA        DIET        CORD
DAUB        INTO        OMER
NUMB        ETYM        RENO
ADDABBAB ETHATO M B RETEN DR OPERT
DRUB LOB OTHERO D ER OBEVE ROSEWER
DUMBOHETTARUM E TE BENER O SA RENI
ABBABET HATOMB R ET ENDRO PE R TRI P
BARE        RILE        ESAU
EROS        ELKE        RAIN
TEST        TEEM        TUNK
                ELMY
                EMIR
            FROMYRARGO
            ROSYOUROOT
            OSARUNGOAT
            MYRARGOTTO
                ROOK
                GORE
                OKER
```

[Several solutions to the Grecian Cross hav been received. Only one, however, is correct—that of J. K. P. Baker, who writes also that the cross (Juergens's) is worthy of all praise—that it is the best Mr. Baker has seen.—ED. C. C.]

Correspondence.

CANTON, ILL.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My earnest wish is that your department in the dear old TRUTH SEEKER may continue in its successful way. I like the pure moral tone it givs to its young readers in so interesting a manner. It fills a long-felt vacancy in many a Liberal home.

Yours for truth and morality in teaching the young, MRS. ABBOTT.

CARROLLTON, ILL., Feb. 9, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav been reading for some time your lovely stories in the Children's Corner from THE TRUTH SEEKER loaned to me by Dr. Bennett; and when I saw the "Story Hour" advertised, I said to myself, "I must hav it." I went to work doing chores and running errands. I soon had the amount made up. I sent at once, and received it a week ago to-day. I hav got about half through reading it. I might hav been through reading it, but I want your stories to ever linger in my memory, and they are so good that I want to hav my schoolmates read them. I showed my book to my teacher at the public school, and she said she would like to read the story about "Meddlesome Molly." I am a poor little girl, just passed ten years. I weigh 76 lbs., which makes me quite a girl. Some say I am a big girl, and call me old. I had to laugh when about to come to the "hornet's nest." I hav to acknowledge that I find I am in some ways like Molly was, but I will try to do away with all such habits. But I hav seen other girls with more of it. I want to keep out of "hornets' nests" and all other trouble. When I read the story of your dear little niece "Susie" I had to cry. I wish that Susie could hav lived, that some day I could hav seen her. But now I want to see you, and as I may never hav the opportunity, I want the next thing to it, and that is your picture, if you will be so kind as to send it to me. I will get the cost of it, and send you the money at once. You do not know how I love you. Now, if a nice young man should say that you would please send him your picture you might do so. But a poor little girl says so, and she means just what she says, and there may be more of it in my case than in the other. Mamma would say so. I inclose you a two cent stamp, and if you can't send your likeness, nor hav any time to write, you can certainly write your name, as I would like to hav it in your own handwriting, that I can put it in my little autograph album.

From your Little Friend, FANNIE DAVIS.

BISHOP CREEK, CAL., Feb. 5, 1885.

DEAR LITTLE FRIENDS: Can some of you send me a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER containing my article, "My Cat Boundy?" I was away from home at the time it was published, sometime in July or August last.

Your Friend, LUNA HUTCHINSON.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb. 11, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I am at present in Philadelphia on a visit to my relativs. I liv in Boston. I hav read some of the "Children's Corner," and I think it is very nice. It can help the boys and girls to read good. I am nine years old, and I am going to school. I am a bad reader, but it will help me to read good. I would like to read the "Story Hour." I am going to save up money to buy it. I read every night a page of the "Children's Corner." When I came to Philadelphia I wanted something to read, and my uncle gave me THE TRUTH SEEKER. He found me the "Children's Corner," and I read to him. My sister is not old enough to read. When she grows older, then she will begin to read out of the "Children's Corner." There are beautiful poems in it, which I will learn by heart. When I read the letters that the boys and girls wrote to you I thought I would write too.

Yours truly, CHARLES ROLLINS.

[A bright boy to write so nice a letter.—ED. C. C.]

ALL in a LIFETIME.

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay.

" ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.

The Greatest of all Anti-theological Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY

A Collection of Passages

Illustrating the

Purity and Morality of The Bible.

Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

A BOOK FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

PRICE, $1.25; TWO COPIES, $2.00.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

FACTS.

A Magazine Devoted to the Statements of Mental and Spiritual Phenomena.

Single Copies 10 cents.

39tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THIRD EDITION.

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

The object of the work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.

"It has long been acknowledged by the most eminent biblical students that the Hebrew scripture contain a large mythical element; but, so far as we know, the present is the first complete and scholarly atttempt to trace these myths to their source, and ascertain their original signification."—Boston Courier.

"Never before has there been given a volume to the reading world that shows the research for the origin of these myths as does this one just published by J. W. Bouton, of New York."—Boston Times.

"It is unquestionably true that the results of a rationalistic study of the Christian scriptures are nowhere else so accessible as they are now made in the work before us.—N. Y. Sun.

1 Vol. Royal 8vo. Cloth. About 600 pages.

Price, - - - - - - $3.00

Sent postpaid, on receipt of price, Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.

Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place. New York

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY,

OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who have helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

PRICE, - - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIX. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles.

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ORTHODOXY.

A Lecture by

Col Robert G. Ingersoll.

"The clergy know that I know that they know that they do not know."

One of the best documents to circulate ever printed. Every man, woman, and child in the United States should read it. Every reader of the paper should send for a dozen.

Price, singly, 10 cents; twelve for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

INGERSOLL CATECHISED;

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Funciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies for a dollar. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Traditon to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.
46tf

GOLDEN THRONE.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

WAIFS AND WANDERINGS

A NEW AMERICAN STORY,

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

AUTHOR OF

"GOLDEN THRONE," "PROMETHEUS," "INGERSOLL AND JESUS," ETC.

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cts.

"A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day.—John Swinton's Paper.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK.

"ANTICHRIST."

Proving conclusivly that

THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST

His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth

TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Price $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,

AND

THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES. THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

Theological Department.

Religious Intelligence.

WHAT IS GOING ON IN THE CHURCHES—CHRISTIAN PROGRESS DURING THE PAST FEW MONTHS.

Ozro C. Barrows, of Bristol, R. I., confessed to a shortage of $5,000. He was a prominent member of the Baptist church, and an ex-president of the Young Men's Christian Association.

FEMALES THE CAUSE OF IT.

The Rev. G. Henry Vosseler retired from the pastorate of St. Matthew's Lutheran church on north Fifth street, New York. His name was mentioned in connection with female members of his flock.

AN IMPRESSIV SERMON.

The wife of the Rev. M. G. McCaslin, of Gustavus, Ohio, has gone back to her father's house in Erie, Pa. She exhibits a wound upon her scalp made by her husband striking her over the head with a book of sermons.

GONE BUT NOT FORGOTTEN.

The Rev. A. B. Franklin, of Louisville, Ky., has left the county. A church dissension divulged that he had been guilty of immoral conduct on sundry and several occasions. His church is disrupted by the momentous disclosures.

HITTING THE NAIL ON THE HEAD.

The Rev. Joseph Durrett, of Hartwell, Ga., struck the Rev. John Nail on the head with a rail and broke his skull. Brother Durrett was kind enough to offer prayer over the body of the man he had killed. There was a female involved.

"ONLY TO SEE HIS FACE."

William H. Allen was one of the head men in the South Fifth street Methodist church and Sunday-school in Brooklyn. He has left that city. The church would welcome his return with the some $500 in funds with which Mr. Allen has absconded.

A DIABOLICAL WRETCH.

The Rev. William T. Osman, of Stamford, Conn., who was bound over in the Superior Court in September last charged with criminally assaulting and severely injuring a six-year-old girl of that place, has been sentenced to one year in the Bridgeport jail.

THIS TIME IT IS A CATHOLIC.

Demaire Desormiers, a priest, got behind the bars at the city jail in Milwaukee, charged with assaulting a young girl named Mamie Kelly. Desormiers is a French Canadian, and a graduate of St. Francis of Sales college. Two other similar charges will be preferred against him.

CHARGED WITH A VERY SERIOUS CRIME.

Rev. Charles Hinckle, for several years rector of Grace church, Cleveland, was arrested on complaint of May Harmon, charged with aiding and abetting in malpractice. Mrs Harmon also brought a civil action for $10,000 damages for alleged breach of promise. Mr. Hinckle refused then to do more than generally deny the charges.

DEPLORABLE CONTENTION.

Rev. W. E. Tomkinson, a Methodist preacher in charge of a circuit was brought to trial at Princess Anne, Md. Preacher Tomkinson accused an elderly member of assaulting him in church during quarterly meeting. This was denied. Rev. Mr. Brewington, of the same circuit, claims that Mr. Tomkinson made damaging charges against him.

QUITE TOO "ACTIV."

Report says that Glenmore Todd, of Burlington, N. J., was committed to Moyamensing prison, at Philadelphia, on a charge of embezzlement of $150,000 from the Provident Life and Trust Company of Philadelphia. He belonged to the Presbyterian church, to which he was very liberal, and was an activ member of the Young Men's Christian Association.

THE OLD, OLD STORY.

The Rev. Frank B. Sleeper, pastor of the Baptist church in Gardner, Mass., was arraigned before Judge Field in that town on a charge of assault preferred by Mrs. Ellen S. Holt. The offense was alleged to hav been committed in June, 1882. Intense excitement arose in the town on account of the social standing of the parties. Mr. Sleeper is a married man.

AN OHIO PASTOR WHO PAYS HIMSELF OFF.

Charges of dishonesty, in appropriating church moneys to his own use, made by certain members of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal church of Bellaire, O., against their pastor, Mr. Guffin, created much excitement in that city. Anonymous letters were circulated for several days in which it was alleged that last year, and again later on, the reverend gentleman has replenished his house from the receipts of sundry camp-meetings, fairs, and festivals. One of these letters was shown the pastor, and he made a statement admitting that he had appropriated money at divers times to the amount of several hundred dollars. He claimed the money was necessary to pay his family expenses, as his salary was in arrears.

THE CHURCH AS A "FENCE."

Wilkesbarre, Pa., was startled by the fact that Samuel Roberts, paymaster of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company, and a man of prominence in social and religious circles, had confessed to being a defaulter in the sum of $125,000. Mr. Roberts had for many years been the chief supporter of the Memorial Presbyterian church in that city, one of the handsomest edifices in the state.

A "PAINFUL SENSATION."

The disclosure of the case of illicit love between Rev. A. B. Scoville, ex-pastor of our Free Methodist church, and a member of his congregation, Mary Dove, has created a painful sensation in church circles in this city. Mr. Scoville has an estimable wife and three fine children. He is passionately devoted to Miss Dove, and his love is reciprocated in its greatest intensity.—Elgin (Ill.) Daily News.

HE IS AN ENGLISHMAN.

The Rev. Peter C. Findlay, minister of the Established church at Carsphairn, in Kirkcudbrightshire, having seduced his servant, sent her away to Dublin to be confined, and on her return threatened to giv her in charge. The sheriff, after hearing the evidence against this specimen of clerical immorality, expressed his horror at such conduct, and ordered the pious scoundrel to pay £8 a year for the support of his child.

HANGED BY THE NECK.

Anthony Walker, a negro and a regularly ordained minister of the Christian church was hanged at Marshall, Harrison Co., Tex., for the murder of William Henry, a white man, in November, 1883. When sentenced to death, on the 19th of last month, he acknowled his guilt. On the 3d of August last, after he had been convicted of murder in the first degree, he had a religious service in the county jail and preached an excellent sermon.

A RASCAL WITH TWO HANDLES TO HIS NAME.

W. F. Morrison, of San Francisco, a minister of the gospel and a doctor of medicin, is another unfortunate whose name has been added to the swollen ranks of secretaries whose moral incertitude has led them to a confusing practice with other people's money. By falsifying deaths in a lodge of the "Chosen Friends," he obtained about $5,000 that did not belong to him. So says the Morning Call of San Francisco. His character as a Christian is not impeached.

LONG ON PIETY BUT SHORT IN HIS ACCOUNTS.

Ex-Judge Henry H. Voorhis, of Spring Valley, N. J., secretary of the Berger County Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company, died last month. Inquiry into his affairs shows he had been systematically misappropriating funds of the company and other trust funds in his possession. He was a prominent member of the church and an activ worker in prayer-meetings, gaining for himself the title of the "Godly man." His shortage amounts to some $40,000.

THE PHILISTINE WORSTED.

The Rev. J. W. Brockway, of the Ellery circuit, New York, was indicted in the Chautauqua county courts for assault and battery and resisting an officer. Cyrus Underwood, the town constable, went to collect taxes on the barn owned by the church and used by Brockway, and, failing to realize, seized the elder's saddle. Parson Brockway, who used to be a Democratic politician in Erie county prior to his conversion, wrestled with the minion of the law and prevailed. Hence the suit.

THE METHODIST AND THE QUAKERESS.

George Reagan was the superintendent of a Methodist Sunday-school at Bridgeport, Ind. Mrs. Margaret Wilson of the same town was a Quakeress, and very activ in church work. They went to Indianapolis, and when searched for by their friends were found in a hotel, in hoc signo vinces, so to speak, or in some other state which should be described in legal or theological terms. Both were married and left the partners of their previous joys at home. They were arrested, gave bail, and disappeared.

GONE OVER TO THE MAJORITY.

"How sharper than a serpent's tooth [so muses Peck's Sun] it is to hav a thankless [foster] child," or words to that effect. Rev. H. C. Moore, a Baptist minister of Madison Co., Tenn., stole $6,200 in gold from Mrs. Fuller, an aged widow who had raised him from infancy, and when arrested all the money but $100 was recovered. Mrs. Fuller gave him $200, and allowed him to escape, in consideration of his wife and family. He has probably received a "call" from Canada, to minister to the bank cashiers, et al.

FALKLER–YARBOROUGH.

Rev. J. W. P. Falkler ten years ago was the most noted Baptist revivalist in the South. It was developed at Lumpkin, Ga., that he had deserted his wife in Louisville. The church people, however, stood firmly by him, and he continued his labors without going through the formality of getting a divorce from his Louisville wife. He married Miss Jessie Yarborough, of Greensboro, N. C., a tender maiden of fifteen years. Other denominations were scandalized by the act, but the Baptists still held Falkler up. He was assigned to a pastorate at Lumpkin, and soon tales of intemperance and abuse of his wife began to be circulated. The sensation culminated in the filing of a suit by the child-wife, seeking a divorce on the grounds of drunkenness, etc. Falkler disappeared between two suns, and is now preaching in Texas under an assumed name.

A CLERGYMAN WHO SMUGGLED.

Rev. James A. Towle, one of the faculty of Ripon, Wis., college, was arrested for violating the customs laws. It was alleged that he systematically imported books from Germany and France, and by making affidavit that they were for use in the college and a part of the library belonging to that institution, avoided paying the duty upon them. The books were paid for with his own money, placed in the college library for a time to avoid suspicion, and at a later day, it was alleged, were transferred to his own library.

CHURCH MILITANT.

A genuin church quarrel occurred in St. John's German Lutheran church, in Lyons, N. Y. Faces were slapped, blows were exchanged, and in the fight a window was broken. A ballot was taken on the question whether the pastor should be forced from the pulpit, and it resulted in an affirmativ vote. He refused to leave, while the faction friendly to him marched in a body to the secretary's table, where they, with their own hands, scratched their names from the church books, and, with defiant looks, left the church to the rival faction.

HE WILL NEVER ACHIEVE SUCCESS IN THE PULPIT.

Arthur Williamson, a clerical-looking Englishman, told Justice Stilsing, in Jersey City, that he was an evangelist, and had recently arrived in this country from London. He was on his way to Chicago, he said, where he expected to join Mr. Moody. When he left home he had considerable money with him, but on the way over he played draw poker in the smoking room of the steamship, and lost it all. When he reached New York he had just twenty-five cents in his pocket. He notified his relativs of his condition, and received a remittance of $50.

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE WITH HIM?

A dispatch to the Kansas City Times from Lewisville, Kan., has this story of the brutality of a minister of that place: A German girl named Francis Miller swore out a warrant against Rev. Frederick Ashton, charging him with an attempt at rape and with threats to take her life. The girl says she came into Ashton's study to seek employment as a domestic in his household, when he made an attempt to violate her person. Ashton is a married man with twelve children, and a very able and eloquent preacher. The affair creates considerable excitement in religious circles of this part of the state.

COLORED SOCIETY AGITATED.

Great excitement was raised among the colored population of Lynchburg, Va., near the first of September, by the arrest of the Rev. Philip Cobbs, on the charge of criminal intimacy with one of his congregation. Thomas Neal suspected his wife and Cobbs of illicit association, and kept secret watch. He made a discovery that caused him to attempt Cobb's life with an ax, but the latter escaped his vengeance. Neal searched for him for hours with a shotgun, until persuaded by friends to apply to the law. Cobbs is pastor of a large Methodist church (colored), and stood high in the opinion of his congregation.

GRIEF RECOGNIZES NO COLOR.

Rev. Joshua J. Evans, the pastor of the Union street African Methodist Episcopal church at Elizabeth, N. J., got into serious domestic difficulty. Some months ago his young wife went home to her mother in Washington, and the preacher was notified a week afterwards that he was the father of a baby boy. He made inquiries, and found that his wife was married to another man. She went before the congregation and produced letters which Pastor Evans wrote to a colored servant-girl, in which he addressed her in tender terms. The bishop has interfered, and has ordered Evans to clear himself or resign.

THE HEAD OF THE GOSPEL ARMY.

Condensed from the Ayr (Ont.) Recorder.

We desire to put our villagers on their guard against Major Atherton, of the Gospel Army, as we hav good cause for believing that his religious pretensions are only skin deep. It is no secret to many of the Army that he is not a consistent Christian, but one who makes a huge burlesque of it. We had three hours' experience of him, and hav sized him up as a designing creature, with a predominating weakness for the fair sex, and a worshiper, not of God, but of Mammon. In substantiation of this, we may recall the fact that Miss Captain Wright prayed for the major after his departure from here, and called upon God to bless him, and if he was not what he should be, to make him after his own heart! As further corroboration of our caution to beware of the major, we would state that two visiting Parisians informed one of our leading residents that the major dare not show himself in Paris without being prepared to receive a volley, not of shot and shell, but of rotten eggs. The major has no honor in his own headquarters, Brantford. We hav other personal information of his exploits at Brantford and St. Thomas, but it is unnecessary to prolong this list of evidence.

A COLPORTEUR RIGHTEOUSLY CHASTISED.

The Montpelier, Vt., Argus says that an evil-looking, middle-aged man, who had been in town for several days selling Bibles, made an assault on a daughter of H. B. Hatch, one Saturday evening, who reported the same to her father. "Holden" interviewed the man in his room at the Wilson Hotel, calling him up after he had retired for the night, and chastised him with his fists and a cane, until he presented a bloody appearance. It is doubtful if he ever attempts any familiarity again with young girls in the vicinity. It is said that the fellow on the following Monday firmly believed that he had been "interviewed" by John L. Sullivan.

THE NIGGER WAS TOO RELIGIOUS.

A newspaper reports that the Rev. George H. Smith, colored, of Eatonville, N. C., who had his wife arrested in Astoria, L. I., for abandoning him at his home in the sunny South, and taking all his household furniture with her, appeared before Justice Kavanaugh in the Long Island City police court and withdrew the charge. He explained to the court that he had seen his wife and she refused to return to him. The runaway wife was seen by the reporter, to whom she said: "The only fault I hav to find with my husband is his religion. It was religion for breakfast, religion for dinner, and religion for supper. I believe that nigger is crazy on religion."

"THE LORD TEACHETH MY HANDS TO WAR."

A warrant was issued in Babylon, L. I., for the arrest of Father S. B. Blake, who is seventy years old and the pastor of St. Joseph's church. The complaint was made by Valentine Southard. Mrs. Southard is a member of the church. It is alleged that Father Blake prevailed upon her to deed her husband's property over to him for the benefit of the church. The priest made his appearance at Mr. Southard's place, demanded possession, and ordered everybody off the place. George Bruling, who works for Mr. Southard, protested against the conduct of the priest, and refused to leave or allow any member of the family to leave. This did not suit Father Blake, who knocked Bruling down.

SUFFER, LITTLE CHILDREN!

Henry Mahler, Oscar Radcliff, Mrs. Pease, Mrs. Slater, and Mrs. Parker, who were the ostensible managers of the Home for God's Orphans, in Chicago, were recently all bound over to the grand jury for ill treatment of young children left in their charge. The testimony of four young inmates of the Home tended to show that a large number of babies died in the asylum apparently through want of care, and, according to stories related by the young children in court, they were subjected at all times to rigorous treatment by being locked up in dark rooms and given very little food. The court looked upon the managers of the institution as belonging to a dangerous class of religions fanatics.

THE RETURNS NOT ALL IN.

The people of Danville, Ill., are well acquainted with Rev. G. W. Eichelberger, who established the Cumberland Presbyterian church of that city. He was a bright, polite young man, and a good pulpit speaker, but he is nevertheless a gay deceiver. Following are some of the facts of his giddy career, gathered from the Danville News:- On the night of Dec. 31st Rev. G. W. Eichelberger and Miss Anna Bowling, daughter of Judge Bowling, a prominent and wealthy citizen of Russellville, Ky., were united in marriage at the bride's home. From the most reliable information it appears that the reverend gentleman is very susceptible to the fair sex, and his relations to them. During the past year or so he has been engaged to quite a long list of ladies—one at Newburg, Indiana; one at Albion, Illinois; one at Georgetown, Illinois; one at Lincoln, Illinois; the one he married, and, it is said, two or three in Danville. There is considerable speculation as to the number of hearts he won in Danville. Probably a figure 3 would cover the number, yet there are "several counties yet to hear from."

HE IS ONLY A STUDENT—WHAT WILL HE DO WHEN HE IS ORDAINED?

The Rev. John E. Herman was conducting revival services at Syracuse, N. Y., with gratifying success, and many lost souls were on their way to the peace that passeth understanding. A short time ago he was comparatively unknown; now his name is on many tongues, as well as on the police record. It occurred that on a morning not long ago Miss Ella Yeakel gave birth to a child. It was not many hours before the neighborhood was stirred with indefinit rumors of the girl's condition. In the meantime the unsuspecting flock began to gather in the church as the hour for service approached. Their pastor came not, but they were not appraised of the cause of his absence, when one of the deacons went forward and announced that a service of prayer and song would take the place of the regular preaching. Some of them missed Miss Ella Yeakel from the pew where she was wont to participate in devotional services, but her absence was not connected with that of the pastor. The evening service was omitted, but by that time the rumors of their pastor's misdeed had spread among his parishioners. Little was known of the details of the occurrence. It had been announced from the pulpit that for unmentioned causes Rev. John E. Herman had been debarred from preaching for an indefinit period. Mr. Herman is a theological student, and although he does preaching, it is claimed that he is not ordained.

A MINISTER'S WIFE NEGLECTS HER DUTY AND GOES HOME.

Mrs. Jones, wife of the Rev. John Jones, pastor of the Primitiv Methodist church, at Pottsville, Pa., returns to her parents home at Pittston to escape her husband's persecutions. In December last she prosecuted him for assault and battery. The case was settled, however, and Mrs Jones went to visit her sick father. On the day before Christmas she says that by flourishing a revolver and making sundry threats he succeeded in extorting from her a promis to return. She went back to Pottsville. Since then, she says, he has struck her, has slept with a pistol under his pillow, and threatened her life. She now sues for divorce. Prominent members of his congregation allege that Mrs. Jones had no conception of the duties of a minister's wife.

DEACONS SHOULD BE WATCHED.

Deacon Hiram J. Chesher, one of Bloomington's (Ill.) prominent business men, was arrested at Chicago on a warrant brought by Albert H. Thompson charging Chesher with having committed adultery with Mrs. Fannie Sheldon, a French woman. The husband of the woman says he will press the criminal charge against Chesher. Mrs. Sheldon has a slender form, brilliant black eyes, dark hair, olive complexion, and the proverbial vivacious manners of her countrywomen. Her husband claims that Chesher—although the latter is a deacon in the Presbyterian church at Bloomington—laid siege to her heart, and finally estranged her affections. Sheldon found his wife and Chesher in a. room at a hotel. Mr. Sheldon states that Deacon Chesher finally offered him $5,000, payable in three years, as a compromise.

AN EXEMPLAR OF CHRISTIAN MORALITY.

The Rev. R. M. Smith, Sterling, Ill., is a married man of fifty. Nearly a year ago it was whispered about that he was intimate with some females of his congregation, and his reputed victims multiplied until they became jealous of one another. At last two or three sisters charged him with the crime of adultery, and demanded that he vacate the pulpit. Mrs. Vaughn, a comely widow, testified that the pastor had proposed to marry her as soon as his invalid wife should die. He had made indecent proposals to her, and fortified them by quotations from the Bible, and since 1883 they had been criminally intimate. Another widow, who has been preaching since her husband died, tells of the Rev. Mr. Smith's improper proposals, and says he attempted to assault her while both were praying at her husband's grave. Found guilty.

THE COLOR-LINE (OF BATTLE).

For weeks a bitter conflict raged in the colored Baptist church in Philadelphia, of which the Rev. Mr. Wallace was pastor. Until near the first of September the anti-pastoral party had the best of it. Then Pastor Wallace turned the tables on his foes by bringing suit against Deacon Howard for pocketing $1 which belonged to the church funds. The difference between these brethren is based on the count of a basket collection which Brother Howard reported as $1 less than Brother Wallace thought it ought to be. Wallace also charged Howard with the heinous offense of buying a pair of four-dollar trousers with church funds. Brother Howard is held in $600 bail, and the battle goes bravely on. This affair culminated at the next meeting by Brother Gardner hitting Brother Craig in the face. A general row ensued. The brothers pounded one another, and the sisters gathered wool wherever they could reach it. The police finally cleared the church.

BEWARE OF THE PIOUS MAN.

The Black Hills Times reports the downfall of a great religious light, the eminent Professor Taylor." It seems this gentleman was at the head of a bogus mining scheme. The Times describes him as follows: "Next to a mining expert, he passed and has become best known as an Evangelist, to whom Sabbath desecration and evil proceedings generally are utterly abhorrent. As vice-president and general manager of the Greenwood company, he blended spiritual and material matters regardless of precedent, the customs of the country, or the predilections of those with whom he came in contact. He espoused a religion of love, yet taught a religion of fear and coercion. He is a man of inconsistencies. He teaches temperance, and practices over indulgence; he seeks by precept to inculcate honest principles, yet his proceedings hav been such as to result in arrest for swindling." The swindling operations in which Mr. Taylor indulged involved many thousands of dollars.

DIVINE SERVICE UNAVOIDABLY INTERRUPTED.

The Rev. Timothy O'Connell, rector of the Chapter House, at London, Ont., opened service on a recent Sunday, when the senior church warden arose and forbade him to proceed, claiming that the bishop had inhibited him from conducting divine services. Mr. O'Connell, however, continued the service, whereupon Detectiv Phair, on the authority of Mayor Hyman, arrested him. Mr. O'Connell was taken to a station-house, where he was charged with disorderly conduct and with disturbing public worship, but he was subsequently released. He was re-arrested at the instance of Mr. Shoebottom, with whom he boards, on the charge of insanity. He was flourishing a revolver. Father O'Connell was found guilty by the board of triers of scandalous and disorderly conduct in frequently drinking to excess and becoming intoxicated. The bishop withdraws his license and removes him from the position of assistant minister of the Cathedral of the Holy Trinity.

MARKED INHARMONY IN A WESTERN CHURCH.

The church at Clements, Cal., had two preachers, but these were jealous of each other because both could not boss the Sunday-school, and both left the place. A reverend gentleman from a neighboring town was then secured to attend to the spiritual welfare of the flock. The first meeting was not distinguished for its harmony. The Mail correspondent reports as follows from the seat of war: "It appears that Lady Baker and Lady Segil hav not been on good terms, and as the latter was entering the place of worship the former jumped upon her and threw her down on the steps of the door. Lady Segil soon got her feet again and made for her man, and was received by Lady Baker with a very clever left-hander square in the face, which again sent her reeling. This roused the Celtic blood of Lady Segil, and she made a desperate lunge at her antagonist, and got her head in chancery with a fair prospect of successfully finishing up the job. But Lady Baker, through extraordinary effort and much squealing and squirming, managed to get free from her murderous grasp, leaving behind her nice, new $7.50 bonnet, which Lady Segil examined leisurely and then, with malice aforethought, deliberately tore the daisies and mull from the lovely thing, and threw them on the church floor. She tore the bonnet into shreds, and walked away with a fragment in her hand, which she poised on a pole in Lady Baker's front yard. The caravan was last seen ascending Anderson hill amid the jests and jeers of the sinful crowd who had gathered there to witness the fun."

"REPUBLIC."

[Published in the rapidly growing young city, on Longfellow's "mountain of the prairie," Pipestone, Minn.]

Eight pages, weekly, $1.50 a year. Contains the news of the day, short stories, scientific miscellany, literary selections—but best of all, the REPUBLIC is unqualifiedly, uncompromisingly opposed to the LIQUOR TRAFFIC! It puts LIBERTY AGAINST LIQUOR! It opens its columns to Free Discussion. It challenges all opponents to meet it on the burning question of our time, PROHIBITION! The plea, that legal Prohibition annihilates PERSONAL LIBERTY will be met and refuted. All opponents to Prohibition will be accorded the right to reply. This is the WORKINGMAN'S REPUBLIC. And an advocate of WOMAN SUFFRAGE. When the mothers, wives, and daughters vote there will be an end to the RUM CURSE! When women vote we will hav a true Republic, and never before. The REPUBLIC is published to disseminate these principles. Shall we receive your aid?

Send all remittances to

W. F. JAMIESON, Editor and Publisher,
PIPESTONE, MINN.

SEEDS.

CHEAPEST,
Pure & Best.
Gardeners trade a specialty. Packets only 3c. Cheap as dirt by oz. & lb. Postage or Exp. paid.
50000 Guides

FREE. Send your address for my most Beautiful Illustrated Garden-Guide ever printed. R. H. SHUMWAY, Rockford Ill.

STATUETTE OF THOMAS PAINE.

This Statuette of the author-hero is a fac simile of the model of Prof. Richards for the monument proposed to be erected in Lincoln Park. It is admitted to be a fine work of art, and is the only correct outline of Thomas Paine's head and face in existence being executed from a mask taken at the time of his death, and sent, with other effects, to a friend in France, from whence Prof. Richards procured it for his design.

Size 20x16 inches, weight 35 lbs.; finished in the same style as Rogers's groups.

Price reduced from $14 00 to $10.00. Sole agent, E. A. STEVENS, 480 W. Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S

Popular Jewelry Store

Rochelle, Ill.

A FEW OF MY PRICES;

Solid silver stem-winding American Watches, hunting or open case; 2 oz. 7 jeweled, $10; 3 oz., $11; 4 oz $12; 5 oz. $14. Same cases with 11 jeweled movements. $12 50, $13.50, $14.50, $16.50. Same case with full (15) jeweled movement, patent regulator, $17, $18, $19, $21. Same cases, with full jeweled adjusted patent regulator movements, $22, $23, $24, $26; key wind, $2 to $5 less; for best cases, silver caps and gold joints add $1.50, and for best filled gold cases (warranted for 20 years) add $10 to best silver cases, making a 11 jeweled hunting (filled case) stem-wind quick train watch only $28; same for ladies, $23. Ladies' solid gold stem-wind watches, latest styles, good American 11 jeweled movements, 10 kt, $24; 14 kt, $32; same full jeweled, $32 and $40—for fancy engraving add $3 to $5.

Prices and specifications for finer ladies' and gents' watches, including all the finest, richest, and most elaborately finished watches in the world, sent upon application.

Watches cleaned for $1; main springs, $1. Bank time-locks, chronographs, music boxes, etc., repaired at lowest rates, and all work warranted the best in the world or no pay.

Best steel spectacle made, $1; genuin pebbles, $2; good common, 25 cents. Best tripleplated teaspoons, $2; tablespoons, $4; knives, $1.75; forks, $1.75—all per set of six.

Parties desiring silverware, jewelry, diamonds, etc., for presents will do well to order sample package on selection and save money. Cash will be refunded on all goods not satisfactory.

Watches, etc., may be safely sent in unsealed packages per registered mail, and will be returned at my expense. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

P. S.—Stop over and see me when near Rochelle, Ill.

A NEW BOOK OF DIRECTIONS
FOR
CLEANSING THE BLOOD,
And Curing all forms of Disease that the Human Family is Subject to,
Without the Use of Any Medicine Whatever.
By Professor Nathaniel Pierce.
Price, 30 Cents.
6tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Four numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.
3tf

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y8

ONE MILLION COPIES will soon be sold TWENTY YEARS OF CONGRESS—By James G. Blaine. The only history of our Government from 1861 to 1881. Hon. John S. Wise, M. C. from Va., says: Whoever takes it up, no matter whether he be Mr. Blaine's friend or enemy, will never put it down until he has read the whole." $200 per month to good agents. Apply at once, The Henry Bill Pub. Co., Norwich, Ct.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

Will Cure all Forms of Disease Without Medicine.

CONSULTING ROOMS,

471 WEST MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Something for Invalids to read and study over.—Stop Drugging and try Nature's Remedy, MAGNETISM.

For years past it has been known to the profession that Magnetism and Electricity were powerful agents for imparting vital force and energy to the worn-out sufferer from disease. Many humanitarians in the profession, thinking more of the alleviation of suffering than they did of the code of ethics by which they were bound, have resorted to magnetic treatment as a last resort and found themselves astonished at the effect upon their patients. They had been taught that medicine was an absolute essential in all cases, and that that failing, the patient must die, as nothing more could be done. Here and there an advanced thinker has flung aside the tie which bound him to his dogmatic brethren and has resorted to other and more scientific methods of treatment. As a result many, having broken the bonds which bound them to a system as barbarous as it was unscientific, have used their best energies to devise means for the alleviation of human suffering. Here and there the wondrous power of MAGNETISM was established, and many diseases hitherto classed as incurable readily submitted to its mild but potent influence. This agent to the intelligent observer was found everywhere. Being, as it is, the very essential of all life, it was found that the human body when in a diseased condition was almost bereft of this vital principle. If we can supply this vital force to the worn-out body the patient will get well.

Ah! but how is it to be done, says the physician. Science, however, came to the rescue, and solved the problem. Here and there throughout the world are fields of what are known as magnetic ore. It was observed that the ore, when carried upon the person, was found to be a safeguard against disease, and to this circumstance we are largely indebted for magnetic wearing apparel, for it was an easy transition from carrying magnetic ore to covering the body with permanently charged magnets, placed in garments fitted to every part of the body. Since the first introduction of magnetic appliances as a curative, there has been a number of these so-called magnetic garments foisted upon the public by men whose sole object was gain. Unscientific in construction, and having little if any magnetism in them, their life was of short duration; it was long enough, however, to demonstrate that when constructed upon scientific principles there was scarcely an ailment that human flesh is heir to that would not submit to their healing influence.

THE EUREKA MAGNETIC APPLIANCES are superior to everything of a similar character heretofore offered to the public, being the only scientifically constructed appliance in the market; it is now two and a half years since they were first offered to the public, and during that time we hav treated thousands of patients, and not a single case of failure to receive benefit reported to us, while we are in daily receipt of testimonials of cures from all parts of the country. We know that disease cannot exist where these garments are worn in quantities as advised by us.

To all who may be afflicted with any of the following complaints, we say unhesitatingly, the Eureka Magnetic Garments will cure you:—Paralysis, Rheumatism, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Bleeding at the Lungs, Spinal Disease, Gout, Asthma, Bronchitis, Congestion of the Kidneys, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Loss of Energy, Heart Disease, Constipation, Consumption, Prolapsus Uteri, Chronic Peritonitis, Cancer, Ovarian Tumors Syphilis, Epilepsy, St. Vitus' Dance, and all form of chronic invalidism.

PRICE LIST.

Lung Invigorators,	$ 6 00
Gentlemen's Body Belts,	6 00
Sciatic Appliances,	5 00
Knee Caps,	3 00
Leg Belts,	4 00
Anklets,	4 00
Shoulder Appliances,	4 00
Wristlets, each,	1 50
Hat Bands,	1 00
Head Caps,	4 00
Sleeping Caps,	4 00
Abdominal Belts (ladies),	6 00
Gents' Vests,	15 00
Ladies' Jacket and Corset (combined),	18 00
Superfine Insoles (all leather),	1 00

While these garments can be procured at the above low prices no one can afford to be ill. Our ladies' supporters are just what every lady in the land needs, as it will be found a great assistance at certain periods; all these garments are made to measure, and a fit guaranteed. To ladies who are all dragged out a combination jacket and corset will restore you to new life and energy, and pay for itself an hundred fold in a few weeks' wear. This garment is only made from actual measure, and a perfect fit assured.

All communications answered free of charge. Address, DR. L. TENNEY, 471 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill. ☞ Agents wanted for Boston, New York Brooklyn, and Philadelphia.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Gems of Thought.

IN Palestine, for a time its god and religion flourished, and were thought to be destined to fill the earth, but now the country is desolate; no country is more utterly and helplessly in ruins. The gods and religions of no country promised more, no country was surfeited with more extravagant predictions, but none hav been more thoroughly falsified, and in no country has the fall of both the gods and of the people been more thorough and overwhelming.—D. M. Bennett.

AFTER giving a terrible description of the pagan world, Mr. Black says, "The church came, and her light penetrated the moral darkness like a new sun; she covered the globe with institutions of mercy." Is this true? Do we not know that when the Roman empire fell, darkness settled on the world? Do we not know that this darkness lasted for a thousand years, and that during all that time the church of Christ held, with bloody hands, the sword of power? These years were the starless midnight of our race. Art died, law was forgotten, toleration ceased to exist, charity fled from the human breast, and justice was unknown. Kings were tyrants, priests were pitiless, and the poor multitude were slaves. In the name of Christ, men made instruments of torture, and the auto-da-fe took the place of the gladiatorial show. Liberty was in chains, honesty in dungeons, while Christian superstition ruled mankind. Christianity compromised with paganism. The statues of Jupiter were used to represent Jehovah. Isis and her babe were changed to Mary and the infant Christ. The trinity of Egypt became the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. The simplicity of the early Christians was lost in heathen rites and pagan pomp. The believers in the blessedness of poverty became rich, avaricious, and grasping, and those who had said, "Sell all, and giv to the poor," became the ruthless gatherers of tithes and taxes. In a few years the teachings of Jesus were forgotten. The gospels were interpolated by the designing and ambitious. The church was infinitly corrupt. Crime was crowned, and virtue scourged. The minds of men were saturated with superstition. Miracles, apparitions, angels, and devils had possession of the world. "The nights were filled with incubi and succubi; devils, clad in wondrous forms, and imps in hideous shapes, sought to tempt or fright the soldiers of the cross. The maddened spirits of the air sent hail and storm. Sorcerers wrought sudden death, and witches worked with spell and charm against the common weal." In every town the stake arose. Faith carried fagots to the feet of philosophy. Priests—not "politicians"—fed and fanned the eager flames. The dungeon was the foundation of the cathedral. Priests sold charms and relics to their flocks to keep away the wolves of hell. Thousands of Christians, failing to find protection in the church, sold their poor souls to Satan for some magic wand. Suspicion sat in every house, families were divided, wives denounced husbands, husbands denounced wives, and children their parents. Every calamity then, as now, increased the power of the church. Pestilence supported the pulpit, and famin was the right hand of faith. Christendom was insane. Will Mr. Black be kind enough to state at what time "the church covered the globe with institutions of mercy?" In his reply, he conveys the impression that these institutions were organized in the first century, or at least in the morning of Christianity. How many hospitals for the sick were established by the church during a thousand years? Do we not know that for hundreds of years the Mohammedans erected more hospitals and asylums than the Christians? Christendom was filled with racks and thumb-screws, with stakes and fagots, with chains and dungeons, for centuries before a hospital was built. Priests despised doctors. Prayer was medicin. Physicians interfered with the sale of charms and relics. The church did not cure—it killed. It practiced surgery with the sword. The early Christians did not build asylums for the insane. They charged them with witchcraft, and burnt them. They built asylums, not for the mentally diseased, but for the mentally developed. These asylums were graves.—R. G. Ingersoll in the Christian Religion.

THERE'S always a river to cross.
Always an effort to make,
If there's anything good to win,
Any rich prize to take;
Yonder's the fruit we crave,
Yonder the charming scene;
But deep and wide, with a troubled tide,
Is the river that lies between.—Anon.

IF I think that the earth moves round the sun just precisely as it actually does, my thought is correct; if not, it is false. I may hold an opinion in regard to an open Polar sea. Nobody knows as yet, or can tell, whether the opinion is correct or not. My thought either answers to the fact, or it does not answer to it. So I may hold an opinion concerning God, or of man, or of courses of conduct I ought to follow under given circumstances, or as to the method of conducting my business, or concerning a mooted point in law, or a question of disease, sickness, or health—it makes no differsnce what it is. If my thought corresponds to the external reality of the world, then it is true and my opinion is correct; if it does not, my thought is false.—M. J. Savage.

THERE was once a chemist who found a rose,
Dewy and fresh in its fragrant bloom.
"I wonder," quoth he, "how this fair flower grows,
And form whence it gathers its sweet perfume."

So he plucked the rose in this belief:
"I will carry it home and search out where,
Deftly hidden in petal or leaf,
Is this fragrance sweet that scents the air."

Then over his fire, with alembic and still,
He burnt it up and he boiled it down
With acids and alkalies until
The rose and its sweet perfume were gone.

'Tis folly indeed that one should care
The sweets of life to analyze.
To drink one's fill of the perfumed air
Is the only way to be truly wise.
—Walter Learned.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardner,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P. Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,

John Swinton's Paper,

PLAIN, PRACTICAL, GENUIN, STRONG, AND FREE.

A WEEKLY PAPER OF AMERICAN IDEAS, PROGRESS, AND RIGHTS.

21 Park Row, New York.

$1 PER YER (post paid). 3 CENTS A COPY.
Specimens Free.

1—Boldly upholding the Rights of Man in the American way.
2—Battling against the Accumulated wrongs of Society and Industry.
3—Striving for the Organization and Interests of Workingmen, and giving the news of the trades and the unions.
4—Uniting the New Political Forces; searching for a common platform, and giving the news of all the young bodies in the field.
5—Warning the American people against the treasonable and crushing schemes of millionaires, monopolists, and plutocrats, and against the coming billionaires whose shadow is now looming up.
6—Looking toward better times of fair play and public welfare.
7—Living views of public questions and social topics.
8—Literary sketches and stories.

THE
PROBLEM OF THE UNIVERSE,
AND
Its Scientific Solution,
WITH SOME
CRITICISMS OF UNIVERSOLOGY
By SAM'L P. PUTNAM.
Price 20 cents. For sale at this office

The BIBLE—WHEN and WHAT?
BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B,
A Book of Hints and Suggestions Concerning the literature contained in the Old and New Testaments. 12mo. 232 pages. Price, $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, N Y

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. W. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline, history the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1833, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.
Price, Cloth, $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

Odds and Ends.

A LITTLE girl, on seeing a peacock for the first time, remarked what a beautiful bustle it had.

THE latest thing in floral pillows for the departed is not "Rest," but "W. S. Y. L."—"Will see you later."

A GOOD, economical woman in Brooklyn refused to patch her husband's trousers, on the ground that the hole would last so much longer than the patch.

AN exchange says that a single oyster will produce 123,000,000 young oysters in the course of a year. We suppose it has not been figured up what a married oyster will do.

CALLER: What a good little boy you are becoming, Little Dick: Yessum. Caller: You were not so good when I was here before, but you had not begun to go to Sunday-school then, I remember. Are you good all the time, now? Little Dick: Yessum; I has to be. Ma's corns hurt her, and she wears slippers now.

SHE smote him with the shingle
Till she made him thrill and tingle
Because he did not mind his baby brother,
Put he soon forgot his pain
And went singing down the lane
"A boy's best friend is his mother."

JUST as Juliet touched the last chords of whatever she was playing, Romeo stole gently to her side, and they both managed on one piano-stool no bigger than an opera-hat. "That's a sonata," she said, timidly, looking at her music. "Ah, yes," said Romeo, who isn't much of a musician, but who is going to play his father-in-law for all he is worth, "ah, yes; sonata, but so nice."

"THIS is a sad, sad world," murmured Deacon Goodman, as he mechanically unlocked the door of a corner cabinet. "Indeed it is, indeed it is," assented Deacon Betterman, sympathetically. "No joy is unalloyed." "True, very true," answered Deacon Goodman, as he put some sugar into two glasses and added some liquid from a black bottle. "You like yours this way, I suppose, brother?" "Yes, yes," was the sad reply. "We all hav to take the bitters with the sweet."

"THIS continuously cold weather," mournfully said a St. Louis man, "reminds me of a story I hav heard. A minister, whose last name began with the letter S—say it was Smith—had become the father of twelve children of various sexes, but had made a rule, and adhered to it, of so naming each child that its initials should be S. S. S. Finally, one bright morning, a little stranger appeared, making the thirteenth. 'Father,' said one of the older boys, 'stick to the old rule, and call this chap Satan Stop.'"

"HORATIUS," said the schoolmaster to a nine-year-old boy with two imposing freckles on his nose and two equally imposing freckles on the knees of his trousers, "Horatius, please form a sentence with the word toward in it, and write the sentence on the board." Horatius went to the blackboard, and after much scratching of head and friction of brain, printed with the crayon in letters that looked like a lot of half-feathered Shanghai chickens running after a piece of dough, the following sentence: "I toward my trousers."

EDITORS hav their peculiarities as well as other people. They practice and inculcate brevity, which is a virtue. They are absent-minded, which is a failing. It is not strange, then, that one should send a note to his lady-love like the following: "Dearest, I hav carefully analyzed the feeling I entertain for you, and the result is substantially as follows: I adore you! Will you be mine? Answer." Then, after a moment of thought, he added in a dreamy, absent way: "Write only on one side of the paper. Write plainly and giv real name, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith."

GIT, GET, GOT.

Said Gotfried, of Gettysburg, waking his wife
To get him his breakfast; for always she set it;
"Come, get up, for breakfast has got to be got,
And you've got to get up and git, and then get it."

"Mein Gott!" cried the woman, "I nearly forgot."
"Why, what are you for, if you are not forgetting?
You forgot you're not getting my grub and what not
So get up and get it; get done with your fretting."

So she got out of bed and got Gotfried his grub;
Got rashers of bacon and eggs to put pot in;
Then got ready for washing some things in a tub;
What she got for her getting I've really forgotten.

THE SPIDER AND THE FLY.

One day an Artificial Trout Fly was reposing on a sunny window-sill, when its attention was attracted by a Loud buzzing. On looking down, the Artificial Fly noticed a Natural Fly struggling to free Itself from a cobweb that stretched from the piazza to a Limb of the rose-bush.

Its struggles were in vain, and before it could get one foot free, the lazy old Spider had made a Meal if it.

In a few moments another Fly was caught, and disposed of in Short order. This aroused the Righteous Indignation of the Trout Fly.

"I shall go down and let the Spider eat me; I should be as Happy to be devoured by a Spider as a Trout." So the Artificial Fly managed to drop right into the Middle of the web, and couldn't help smiling when the Spider came ambling down as Gracefully as though performing on a tight-rope. But in a second more the Spider got the hook that was Concealed beneath the Fly right in the Stomach, and his wife was immediately a Widow.

The Moral of this little fable teaches us that, no matter how Strong we are, we should never undertake the destruction of a Small Victim, without first measuring him to ascertain if he may not be Larger than he looks.

EVOLUTION:
A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.
By Robert C. Adams.
Paper, 25 cents. For Sale at this Office.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 11. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, March 14, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A HARTFORD reporter, who managed to get into a secret Salvationist praise service, says the members acted like lunatics, and all the males kissed the females except a colored girl.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

A VIRGINIA religious paper tells the story of a minister who held a revival meeting in that state, and reported his work in these words: "Hav been holding a meeting here for two weeks; result so far, one man turned out of the church and the colt eat up my saddle."

A LETTER recently received by Liberty from John F. Kelly, of Hoboken, contains the following interesting bit of information: "One of my Irish correspondents, Hickey of Brosna, writes me that a marriage was celebrated recently in his parish without the presence of any official either of church or state. You can scarcely realize what an immense advance in opinion such an act indicates, taking place in a small Irish mountain village at a distance from any large town."

A GOOD story is told of three clergymen, two Congregationalist and one Universalist. Two of them were talking when the third joined them, and, putting a cigar in his mouth, said to his brother Congregationalist, "Mr. Tophet, giv me a match." There was some hesitation about granting the request, so number three turned to his Universalist friend with his request, which was granted. "Well, here is a Universalist with brimstone about him," said the smoker. "Yes, sir, we keep it for our friends," said the deliberate Universalist.

THE main walls of the crematory which the United States Crematory Company are building at Newton, L. I., were blown down by a storm in January, but the builders hav been hard at work since then repairing the damage, and it is expected that the furnaces will be ready for business about the beginning of May. John D. Beuglass, the president of the company, said that there are now thirty-five bodies in the various cemetery receiving vaults awaiting completion of the crematory. The company has lately brought some antique incinerary urns from Europe as models to set the style and develop the taste of the community in the revived fashion of disposing of the ashes of the dead.

SAYS Henry Ward Beecher: When I was quartered as pastor at Indianapolis, in my early days of the ministry, a celebrated preacher came there, a Geneva divine, who naturally spoke English with variations. It was in the winter of 1837, in which the country was covered with ruin, and the homes and property of half the citizens of Indianapolis were in the sheriff's hands. One Sunday he took my pulpit, and wound up a thrilling discourse with the tender peroration: "If you will bear with resignation and fortitude the misfortunes which hav befallen on you for a brief time here below, the time will come when you will be borne up aloft to a heavenly land by the cherubim and sheriffim." "Oh, hell!" groaned a voice; "are we to find them there, too?"

DR. MONROE reports that Mr. Moody's revival effort in Indiana was not a success. Mr. Moody "was boarded at the Bates House and paid $100 for three days' work. But the harvest was light. The ninety and nine made no demonstration. There was no wild rush for the one lost sheep, and he wasn't brought in. Evidently the emotional kicking, shouting, groaning, roaring, howling sort of religion is on the wane. Sensible, discreet church people are getting ashamed of it. The unreasoning crowd of ignorant emotional people sometime 'converted' by the boy preacher, it was believed, would by this time be on hand to be converted some more by Brother Moody, so that the reaping of another grand harvest might be proclaimed to the nations, to the confusion and dismay of unbelief. But they are back into the wicked world, where they seem inclined to stay. As intelligence is diffused the shouting Christian takes to the bush."

MISS MATILDA HUTCHINS testified in a Brooklyn prayer-meeting last Sunday that after suffering for thirteen long years bedridden with a crooked spine, she had faith and was healed immediately. We shall probably next hear of an amputated leg being prayed back onto the stump. Until such a case is heard of and well attested, these stories of faith cures may be tentativly regarded as lies.

THE Rev. Wilbur Crafts preached his sermon on charity last Sunday. When he delivered it the last time previous to this he denied that Freethinkers ever gave anything to the poor. He now admits that they do individually giv a great deal that way, but they hav no organized charities. Mr. Crafts evidently believes that a dollar is of little benefit to a poor man unless two dollars is spent getting it to him. He goes in for an institution and an appropriation from the state. But these institutions are generally more profitable to the managers than to those in whose interests they are ostensibly built. John Boyle O'Reilly has just happened along opportunely with this remark on red-tape charity:

"Organized charity, scrimped and iced,
In the name of a cautious, statistical Christ."

WALLINGFORD was excited last week by a case of cruelty to a child which would be hard to equal. Eleven years ago the father of Ida Terry, now thirteen, went West, leaving his daughter in the care of Joseph White and his wife, paying them $100 a year for their guardianship. Lately they hav violated their trust grossly. When the neighbors caused the arrest of the Whites the girl's feet were blistered from being compelled to stand on a hot stove, her ears bore the marks of pins, by which she had been fastened to the wall. Her guardians had at other times run needles through her tongue into the window casing, and pumped water upon her until she was exhausted. Her back was a mass of ridges raised by a whip. The justice let White off with a $5 fine and his wife with $10, but the next night three masked men caught the man in his barn, and after beating him drove the brutes from town. Both the Whites hav since been expelled from membership in a Wallingford church.—Springfield Republican.

IT is said that Mohammedanism is making rapid progress among African tribes, and binding in a great confederation scattered peoples who hav heretofore had no common sympathies. It is even declared that the operations of Europeans in the Congo region result in the spread of Islam by the employment of Houssas. These are among the most skilful of the Africans. Their cotton cloths and leather goods are widely sold, and it is said that the International Association is employing them largely to till the soil and show the natives how men of their own color can work and thrive; but as they are devoted Mohammedans they act as missionaries of their faith. Arab traders are influential in many regions in leading the tribes to espouse the religion of their Prophet. The powerful Mussulman society known as the Senousians has turned many tribes to Islam. This fraternity, the most successful of all the Mohammedan propagandists, has its monasteries, and wields a great power from Morocco to Mozambique.

THE Arkansas Traveler tells this good story: "Some time ago the editor of the Weekly Fire Fly and the preacher of Mt. Josiah church exchanged places, not only in a nominal way, but made an actual transfer of property. We take these extracts from the first number of the Fire Fly which appeared after the change had taken place: 'We hav shouldered the responsibility of running this paper, and we request our subscribers to pay up at once and pray at their earliest convenience. We understand that Anderson Gregg cut off one of his fingers the other day. We hope and pray that he may get along all right. A cow belonging to Jim Polk McLaughlin lost one of her horns last week. We pray that she may recover. A man, named Skaggs, was killed at Bailey's Ford last Monday. We are thankful that it is no worse. We pray that the legislature may not forget to adjourn. We trust that crops may be better next season. We hope that the severest part of the winter has passed. We hav faith in our ability to run this paper.' The editor, without embarrassment, took his place in the pulpit, but he soon became confused. Striking the book of books, he said: 'Hereafter we will not receive old rails in exchange for our gospel. Turnips will do very well, but we are not a cow. Never before was this pulpit in such a flourishing condition, and advertisers should make a note of this fact. Our mourner's bench goes to every post-office in the county. Now is the time to become a deacon of this church, two dollars per year, one dollar for six months, and sample copy sent free. The text says that trains going north arrive at two o'clock, P.M. This cannot be disputed, for it was spoken of by Jeremiah, saying: "Oh, ye generation of vipers, see advertisment in another column."'"

WHERE ARE THE GODS?

Where do the gods and goddesses dwell
Of which the learned speak?
Is Venus's home in a pink sea shell?
Is Neptune's throne on the ocean's swell?
And Jove's in the lightning streak?

Does Pluto reign in the world of Night?
Are all his subjects dark?
Are Luna's eyes those lamps of light
That, glimmering, hang in heaven's hight,
And quench when sings the lark?

Is Vulcan throned in Ætna's fire?
Does Zet his anvil ring?
Does Clio's hand still grasp the lyre?
Or Thalia mask each young desire,
And Polyhymnia sing?

Where does Pallas hold her court?
Are all her courtiers wise?
Does Mars command a British fort?
Or is he of Wolseley making sport
Beneath Soudanian skies?

And thousand other gods, whose names
Are known to learned men,
And nymphs divine whose rival claims
The Romans honored with festiv games
When Echo slighted Pan?

—J. T. Gallagher.

And where are the gods of a later day—
The Father, and Spirit, and Son?
Ashes to ashes, clay to clay,
They passed to dust in the regular way,
And died when their work was done.

IN Newfoundland there are about 100,000 Protestants and 65,000 Catholics. Till about a year ago, perfect harmony prevailed; but now there is a very bitter feeling between the two parties. Last year a porcession of Orangemen was attacked by a body of three hundred armed Catholics, and five Orangemen were killed and fifteen wounded. This created intense excitement all over the island. The Orange society quadrupled its membership. Social and commercial intercourse ceased between Catholics and Protestants, the bitterest feeling prevailed, and both sides armed themselvs. This refers especially to the Harbor Grace district. Nineteen Catholics were arrested and committed for the massacre on five separate indictments. They were brought to St. John's for trial. The jury was a purely Catholic one. The prisoners were acquitted on the first indictment. This intensified the bitter feeling existing among Protestants, and the Orangemen adopted the motto: "Justice if possible. Vengeance at any cost." Protestants demand that the murderers of the five men shall be punished. The better class of Catholics agree to the reasonableness of that demand. But the lower element regard the prisoners as heroes, and defenders of their church and faith. The Orangemen declare if the prisoners are finally acquitted, very little time will elapse before summary vengeance overtakes them. Of course, the Catholics threaten retaliation. Thus, while the people are practically in a state of civil war, and only prevented from open hostilities by the presence of a British gunboat, many Americans are seeking other fields for investment of their brains and their money, and Newfoundland is putting itself half a century in the rear. For some time to come political parties will be divided on the question of Orange and Green. Another collision between the two parties is only a question of time. In the words of a Catholic dignitary: "The present state of affairs cannot continue very long, and things will be a great deal worse before they are better."

News of the Week.

THERE is no improvement in the condition of General Grant.

It is said that President Arthur retires from the White House with only $75,000.

THE winner of the six days' skating match in this city last week made 1,090 miles.

ONE of the boycotted firms of hatters in South Norwalk, Conn., has failed for $30,000.

THERE is trouble between England and Russia, which may lead to war. The countries are in dispute about the possession of outposts in Afghanistan.

THE trial at Paris of the Trappist monk Gamahut for the murder of the mother of M. Ballerich began Monday. Gamahut has confessed his guilt.

THE False Prophet of the Soudan still holds his position against the British, who are undecided what to do. The troops are quartered at a safe distance from the Arabs.

THE first complete translation of the Babylonian Talmud into German (or any other language) is announced to appear shortly at Innsbruck, in about thirty-six parts, quarto.

O'DONOVAN ROSSA has entirely recovered from the assault of Mrs. Dudley. He wears the coat he had on when shot. It has not been repaired, and he is especially proud of the hole in the shoulder.

CLEVELAND went into the White House last week Wednesday with as much noise as if he had been shot into office from a cannon. There was a great ball in the evening. The new cabinet is made up as given in THE TRUTH SEEKER last week.

THE state of Arkansas derives $25,000 per annum from its penitentiary by leasing the labor of eighty convicts to cigar manufacturers and handing over two hundred and eighty others to farmers, the consideration being $3.75 per month, and all expenses.

THE legislature of this state has been memorialized to revoke the charter of Trinity church, that the heirs of Aneke Jans may divide its property among themselvs. The property is worth $15,000,000, and it is claimed that none of it legally belongs to the ecclesiastical corporation now controling it.

IN the case of a sixteen-year-old girl converted to Catholicism by a priest, against the wish of her parents, a London court has decided that the priest must keep away from the girl. If this decision does not benefit the young lady religiously, it should cause her parents to feel easier about the safety of her morals.

ADVENTISTS in Concord, N. H., who believe in the immediate second appearance of the Lord, hav begun to hold daily meetings and to prepare for it. Elder Levi Locke in an address said that "prophetic scripture, as well as temporal events, point with great certainty to the 19th of May next as the day of the Lord's coming."

THE repairs of the damages to the House of Commons and Westminster Hall, caused by the recent dynamite explosions, cost $43,000. The extra police detailed on special "dynamite" duty during the past year hav cost the sum of $190,000, which is $130,000 more than was paid on the same account during the preceding year.

TWENTY-FIVE brawny-looking young men and twenty-five red-cheeked young women, the latter wearing high-topped boots, passed through Philadelphia from New York for Mauch Chunk on the Reading road recently. The young men are miners in Carbon county. They originally came from Hungary; so did the young women. The young men, who wanted to get married, sent an agent to Hungary, three months ago, to get them wives. The fair-haired girls were all strangers to the young men until they met them on the arrival of the steamer Werra at Castle Garden a week ago. They were all married in New York before starting for the coal regions.

Communications.

A Historical Hunt after Morals.

How has the race reached its ideas of moral truth? By what process hav men been taught that theft and murder are wrong? What is the source of ethics?

There are two methods of investigating these inquiries. One is the theological, the other is the historical. The former has been almost universally followed. All other plans of dealing with moral problems, all appeals to tangible facts, hav been held to be impious, and been interdicted by screeches of terror. The matter of morals has been relegated to the sphere of religion. It has been generally believed that "thou shalt not steal" and "thou shalt not kill" were divine decrees thundered from Sinai and transcribed upon the human heart. In short, all ideas of duty are supposed to hav sprung from a supernatural source, and not to be accounted for outside of revelation.

Now, discarding all theological theories, shutting out all outside agencies, let us look into the constitution of human nature, and trace the progress of principles from which the proximate causes of action spring among men in the infancy of the race. We can correctly conjecture how moral opinions must hav originated in the earliest relations of human beings.

We know that nations were made up from amalgamated tribes, tribes from affiliated families. First in the order of time is the family. It is a sept of shepherds in an Eastern land long before the dawn of civilization. The country is vast and undivided by bounds. The families are few and widely separated. They are without those artificial wants that mix society from commercial motivs. Their only possessions are the flocks and herds, the pastures and wells. Private property is unknown.

The family is composed of the patriarch, or head, the sons and daughters, the wives, and slaves, or captiv foes. Living thus, in the simplest state of nature, and surrounded by sufficient means of subsistence, its reproduction is rapid and unrestricted. In a short time its numbers rise to scores and hundreds. This family is a government in itself. The patriarch is the ruler. His subjects are his sons and daughters, bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh. His right to rule is undisputed, and rests on the fact that there is then known no higher nor more despotic power.

The first natural law that comes into operation in this little community is that of self-preservation. The group has no need to go outside of itself for society or assistance. In fact, the family must be kept to itself at any cost. Strangers would despoil it of goods, of liberty and life. It thus keeps closely knit together from the most powerful motivs of mutual self-protection.

The personal safety of all depends upon preservation of internal peace and parental authority. A brawl between brothers would break up the family and invite the forays of more formidable foes. So the authority of the father must be absolute. His children are his subjects, and hav no rights save such as come from him. Their lives are at his disposal, for the very existence and security of the family depend upon the despotic exercise of parental power. He has the perfect right to sacrifice a son when demanded by the stern necessities of patriarchal duty. It was in accord with this plainest of primitiv principles, that, in an after age, Abraham set out to immolate Isaac and Jephthah doomed his daughter.

So that filial obedience, from the fundamental conditions of such a state of society, became the first of duties. The foundations of the family rested upon it. Rebellion was ruin. Disobedience was disruption and death. The simplest sense of self-preservation among gregarious savages thus gave rise to the command, "Children, obey your parents." Ages and ages ere the earliest scrap of scripture, before Menu or Moses, Confucius or Christ, the decree of filial duty was enforced, and the seal of the unpardonable sin set upon every act of dereliction. The conditions that called it into action were swept away long ago by the effacing changes of civilization; but the iron hand of primitiv authority stamped the injunction so indelibly upon the family system that it will remain fixed there forever.

The wealth of the patriarchy, consisting of the cattle, the wells, pasturage, and things that afforded the family a common living, had of course, to be held in common. No one could claim a certain portion for his personal use. Private possession would hav produced separate and conflicting interests, and resulted in secession, strife, and subversion of the sept. Had the community of goods been given up, the bonds of brotherhood and authority would hav been broken, members would hav met in mortal combat, the camp been at the mercy of prowling plunderers, and probably blotted out in bloodshed. Each needed the aid of all, and all of each, for the strength of unity needed for common security. Now, suppose one member set out to steal some of the communal goods. The act would hav at once aroused the instinct of self-preservation in all the others. They would see that if each followed the example the family would soon fall to pieces and all perish together. Therefore stealing received swift and savage punishment. The offender was stoned to death on the spot, or driven forth to be destroyed by hostil tribes.

Again, suppose two brothers had fallen to fighting about a piece of property, and one killed the other. This would hav been a great and irreparable wrong against the whole family, inasmuch as it would hav been deprived of one of its needed defenders. It would soon hav ceased to exist had theft and murder not been checked. Hence the commands, "Thou shalt not steal," and "Thou shalt not kill," resulted from the rudest relations of life in the earliest state of existence. They were the outcome of that instinct of self-preservation that actuates the animal to guard itself and young from peril.

In the patriarchal period there was no perception of moral duty connected with these commands. Theft and murder were not prohibited on any moral grounds. They were only wrong so far as they infringed the natural law of self-preservation, as they tended to physically injure the family. In fact, so far from being radically wrong, it was frequently right and a duty to steal and kill.

The same law of self-preservation, the same necessities of existence, often forced one family to make a foray upon another and to steal and slay all it could. Were it in want of a certain well or number of cattle for its own sustenance, then it became an imperativ duty to get them, even through the means of theft and murder. Or, one sept might be growing too strong for the safety of another. Then it became a duty to despoil it, strip it of its goods, kill its males, and capture its females. It was only wrong to steal and kill in one's own family.

In the course of time families swelled into tribes. The patriarch gave place to the chieftain. Tribes in time attained such a size that they could not travel about. So they became settled and looked out for other means of livelihood. With new necessities came inventors. Savage Arkwrights, Fultons, and Edisons appeared. One originated a tent, another a spear, another a canoe, etc. A new element was added to the state of society that materially changed the conditions of life. Men became craftsmen as well as cattle-breeders. This introduced the possession of things—private property. This brought barter and sale and the beginnings of commerce. A man who had cattle and wives he did not want would swap them for utensils he did want.

Soon as tribes began to minister to each other's wants they became knit together in a new unity. These dealings established bonds of interest as binding as those of blood. In time the tribes of a whole territory became thus tied together through traffic. These coalitions caused wars with unfriendly federations. Wars served to create still stronger alliances. As these unions were seen to be new sources of strength they grew in magnitude. In the course of centuries the once wandering families became welded together and hammered down by the hard hand of human destiny into a new nation. Once begun, the process of welding and hammering went on with ever-quickening speed until checked by barriers of climate, sea, language, or impassable mountains. Ere long progressiv man became competent to cope with these obstacles, and civilization was the consequence.

The boundary of human interests has ever been enlarging. A corresponding stretch has been given to moral systems. Families that once made forays against each other finally became companions in arms or customers in the market. And as tribes became merged by treaties, as communities concentrated into the city, as the city expanded into the kingdom, as kingdoms became knit together by common customs, laws, language, and religion, as civilization spread its genial influence over the globe, men acquired a wider and intenser interest in human welfare, and moral precepts a fuller force and freer range.

The command, "Thou shalt not kill," has always received a restrictiv application. It only applied to certain persons. It only kept the savage from killing his kin. As the savage sept swelled into the tribe it gained a larger latitude. It then read, Thou shalt kill no one in the tribal tents. Tribes grew into the nation, giving the command a greater range. It then read, Thou shalt kill no one who livs in the same land, under the same laws, and who speaks the same language. At last, through the lapse of ages, civilization gave it a grander sweep. Then it became, Thou shalt kill no one who has not forfeited his own life by capital crime, or taken up arms against your country. So that morality is much a matter of geography.

Modern civilization does not absolutely condemn killing. It only says it is a crime to kill certain persons. So said the savage. It declares it a duty to kill certain other persons. So declared the savage. The savage applied the precept for the preservation of his family and flocks. We apply it for the larger federal family with which we are affiliated, and for the preservation of our more precious possessions, personal, political, and religious. The savage always stood on guard ready to shed the blood of any skulking stranger, and to slay whenever it would serve the good of his sept. To-day Christendom has 6,000,000 men under arms ready to kill each other whenever deemed advisable for the public weal by the rulers of their respectiv powers.

A few years ago there was a falling-out among the members of our great federal family. Our country presented the most perfect picture of Christian civilization the world had yet beheld. Peace and good will, love of enemies and Christly forbearance, had been preached for generations, and from seventy thousand pulpits the people were weekly charged that to kill was the most awful act in the catalog of crime. Suddenly there was a wild rush for weapons of war, a tramping of bristling, bannered hosts, an abandonment of farms and factories, and every able-bodied man was made into a machine of military murder. The spirit of slaughter swept Christ from the souls of the people, and the continent quaked beneath the gory grapple of frenzied foemen. And then from a hundred thousand pulpits rang out the cry to kill. Then it was a patriotic duty to kill. It was a Christian duty to kill. It was cowardice and a crime against one's country not to kill. Civilized men went out to kill other civilized men. Citizens went out to kill citizens. Christians went out to kill Christians. Brethren went out to kill brethren. And for five years the command, "Thou shalt not kill," was suspended throughout the most civilized land of the world, and its graveyards were glutted with a million slain.

We must suppose that the savage family was seldom the scene of fratricidal strife. Its own security required the full strength of perfect unity. But had brothers become embroiled with each other, we must suppose it brought about by some infringement of family rights. Then they would hav fallen upon each other, brothers would become belligerents, and the command to kill no one of kin hav been suspended till the family feud was settled. Just so with modern civilization. It also reverses the rules of right and wrong when demanded by military necessity. It likewise believes in butchering belligerents, albeit they be brothers. So believes the most benighted barbarian.

So we see that the moral idea, in the savage and the Christian alike, springs from the impulse of self-protection, and is activ or abortiv according to outside conditions. The savage conscience is bounded by the sacred circle of family. To kill inside that circle is a crime; outside of it always lawful, and often an obligatory duty. In dealing with his own sept the savage is truthful, honest, kind, and sometimes self-sacrificing. In dealing with other septs he is tricky, thievish, cruel, and murderous. Inside his little circle his conduct is that of a Christian; outside, that of a savage. The Christian conscience has a bigger boundary. Inside of that, killing is murder; outside, lawful war. Deeds that are held in horror when committed within the circle are declared a valorous duty when done without. He is only a Christian within his circle. Outside of that he, too, is a savage. The simple difference between them is, respecting killing, the savage is at war with the whole world, save his kin, while the Christian is not.

To tell in detail how this command against killing has been the creature of the changing conditions and conflicting creeds of men in many countries, and at different times; how in England a few generations ago there were two hundred and twenty-three offenses punishable by death; how, during the night of the Middle Ages, after the lights of learning were nearly extinguished, men who could read were esteemed so valuable that they were exempt from execution, though guilty of capital crimes; how the command is even extended to cats and dogs in certain Eastern countries to-day; how it applied to apes, animals, or bulls in ancient Egypt, and to all kinds of beasts, and birds, and creeping things in India; and how, the wide world over, moral duties hav merely a sectional meaning, the virtues of one locality being the vices of another—all this would be the work of a great and instructiv history of itself.

It is commonly thought that we derive all our ideas of morals from the Decalog or Sermon on the Mount, from Moses, Jesus, or some inspired teacher, and that man has moral faculties which grow in strength as the world grows in years. So that the children born now in New York are better morally endowed than those born here generations ago. But it is not so. They are not a bit better endowed. The moral nature of the race remains the same for all time. Moral teaching makes no advance. Even the dogmas developed from moral ideas hav scarcely suffered change, and that but in style of statement. Obedience to parents, doing to others as we would be done by, forgivness of foes, and all the essentials of the Mosaic and Christian codes of morals hav been taught, and sermonized, and memorized for centuries without one jot or tittle being added to them.

And these moral maxims had been taught for thousands and thousands of years before they were quoted by Moses and Christ. They were as familar to ancient peoples as to Christendom to-day. Ages before Christ Confucius gave the golden rule to the Chinese, and he probably got it from a still earlier moralist.

All that Jesus said in his Sermon on the Mount had been written in other words in the proverbial poetry of the Arabs, Persians, and Hindoos, and had been meditated upon for unnumbered ages. The literature of the ancient East glows with gems of moral wisdom. The pagans of antiquity gave expression to precepts that breathe the very essence of Christian charity. The first Spanish missionaries to Mexico found the Aztecs possessed of an ethical code befitting a Christian church, though they had been cut off from all possible contact with European civilization and religion. And all the moral maxims of mankind to-day are merely quotations. Traced back from age to age, among many peoples and through languages almost obsolete, their origin is lost at last in the labyrinths of antiquity.

Practice precedes preaching. The doing of right goes before any definitions of right. Men must be good in their lives before they formulate ideas of goodness in their language. Men must hav been moral in their manners before there were moral maxims, and these are older than written history. The spirit of these maxims must hav breathed through human action for unknown ages ere it blossomed out in words.

Morality sprang spontaneous from the soil of savagery. Religion had its roots in human selfishness. Virtue was born in the breast of the barbarian. The safeguards of his own life lay in his respect for the lives of his allies. He did not refrain from killing from any sense of right, but to keep himself from being killed. He did not guard the interests of others from any moral motiv, but because his own fate was involved in theirs. He did not serve his sept from any spirit of self-sacrifice, but from a sense of selfish security.

And the holiest sentiments humanity holds dear to-day sprang from that same instinct of selfishness innate in the nature of man, alike in savage or civilized society. To illustrate. Surely there can be no grander display of moral duty and heroism than furnished by the martyr going to the stake in attestation of his faith. But analyze the act. Look at it in the light of loss and gain. What does he lose? A little lease of life in this troublous, worthless world. "What profiteth it a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" What does he gain? Life everlasting in a world eternal in the heavens. He lays aside the corruptible for the incorruptible, the mortal for the immortal. Should he shrink from the fiery ordeal of a few minutes to save his soul from flames that ascend forever? He but exchanges the earthly for the eternal. His loss is little, his gain is infinit. He saves all that is precious to him, weighed in the scale of spiritual worth. Could the most selfish savage do differently, controled by the same convictions, subjected to the same circumstances?

And every form of faith the world has ever known, whether Pagan, Jewish, Christian, or Mohammedan, has been founded upon that same common instinct of selfishness, and each has had its martyrs. All hav borne both a threat and a bribe, and all been but systems of insurance against eternal calamity. Before religious tenets were reduced to writing, pagan peoples appeased their angry gods by personal sacrifice. Religious rites hav been merely means of gaining a great reward for a small service.

To recapitulate. The essential character of morals never changes. It is only the written words which are variable. In giving the golden rule Christ and Confucius only disagree in grammatical expression. We hav seen that as the progressiv tendencies of time broke down the barriers between family and family, tribe and tribe, nation and nation, the moral maxims gained a greater geographical range, and a fitness for all periods and places. Though their nature was ever the same, the scope of their application was determined by the circumstances of each age. Their purely local features were effaced by the changing conditions of life, till finally, in the course of centuries, they acquired a sweep so vast, and a significance so sublime, that they were regarded as divine decrees thundered from a sacred mountain.

The history of morals is the history of the physical, political, and social conditions of the race. It can only be read aright after a critical analysis of the agencies that hav caused or controled those conditions. As the Mississippi is made from waters which, if obstructed, would soon stagnate in pools, and dry up in the sun, and whose force at first is fit only to turn the toy mill of a child, but which, flowing together in a common current and fed from a thousand tributaries, finally form the Father of Waters that rolls on in growing might and grandeur to its great gulf and outlet, so the tide of moral truth, first fed from the feeble fountain of family fealty, then from the larger tributaries of tribal loyalty, augmenting through the ages with the evolution of empires and the expansion of human interests, at last becomes a torrent that moves with mechanic power the wheels of modern progress.

From ten thousand rivulets of restless life that hav fed the feelings, affections, and faiths of the race; from all the paths of duty in the past—paths wet with tears and stained with blood, and strewn with the sins and sufferings, the strifes and skepticisms of sepulchred generations; from graveyards gray with the ashes of ruins, and buried beauty, and moldered magnificence—dead heroisms, dead nobilities, and the wrecks of many a realm and splendid dynasty; from the alembics of change and conflict and inviolate law, and all the agencies that hav acted as forerunners of that "far-off divine event to which the whole creation moves;" from these, and all that hav given to human life its myriad complexity, moral truth has gathered its vitality and volume and adaptation to this teeming, this scientific, this many-sounding age of ours. The Sodoms and the Spartas, the Babylons and Jerusalems, and the debris of all the abodes of ancient sin and splendor, hav fertilized the seed-fields from which our virtues and vices hav sprung, and from which the moral harvests of the world hav been reaped. And our Bostons and New Yorks, crumbling in the countless crucibles of change, will present to the unveiled eye of posterity some such view as do the Athenses and Romes of antiquity to us; and our virtues and vices, our victories and defeats, our achievements and creeds, shall become but as the ashes of formless fossils spread upon the endless strata of existence, to be, in their turn, floated on by the floods of time to fertilize the fruiting faiths of the future.

S. H. PRESTON.

New York.

The Truth Seeker Annual for 1885.

We really thought the ANNUAL of 1884 was the very best, cheapest, and most excellent work of the kind ever published, and it will ever prove a most valuable book of reference. But we are forced to admit the miracle has been wrought, the seeming impossible accomplished. And it is no less wonderful than true that THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL of 1885 exceeds in excellence that of 1884, and is so far superior to all others, American or European, that there is really no comparison.

Usually the references attached to dates in almanacs are dreary as useless. Those in the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL form a priceless encyclopedia of most important events, any one of which it would take hours to hunt up, even in the best indexed library.

The thirty-seven portraits of prominent Freethinkers are really magnificent. Any single one of the portrait plates is alone worth twice the price of the ANNUAL; while the articles from the pens of the most able workers for Secularism, are gems of thought on subjects in which all Liberals are most deeply interested.

Everywhere we find the ANNUAL in demand, and hear high encomiums on its many excellencies. Admiration for its perfections is only exceeded by wonder that it should be sold at so low a price as twenty-five cents. But this confers a boon on thousands of Liberals these hard time, for it would be a grievous deprivation if the price were even one quarter of its real value.

CHAS. B. REYNOLDS,
Chairman Ex. Com. National Liberal League.

Mr. Truesdell Vindicated.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Having waited nearly four weeks and seen nothing in disproof of the charges brought against Mr. Truesdell in THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 6th, I am prompted by inclination, as well as justice, to state my opinion, founded upon facts that by this time should be patent to the multitude.

It is not because I consider Mr. Truesdell incompetent to speak for himself, but because I wish to speak for myself, and leave the result with the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

First, Mr Truesdell is accused of being "a fraud." Will his accusers please tell wherein he is a fraud?

Second, He is called "a liar." Will his accusers prove that he is a liar?

Mr. Truesdell says that he does the writing on the slate himself, etc., etc. Does he? If he does, he does not lie, neither is he a fraud. If he does not, then he is a liar and a fraud. Will his accusers show that he does not do it, by proving who does do it? I know some of them assert that diakka do it; let them prove it or hold their peace Mr. Truesdell says that Joe Caffray brought "the great materialized stone" into the circle-room and dashed it on the table, not spirits. Now, if "Joe" did not bring it in, let him come forward and prove that he did not, and giv those who are indorsing "Joe" proofs that Mr. Truesdell is a fraud and liar, instead of their scandalously asserting it.

I might go on detailing thus every trick Mr. Truesdell performs, he not only declaring that he does perform them, but, in many instances, showing how, as in the case of the Rev. Mr. Savage, and others, including myself; while the Spiritualists vehemently assert that it is spirits, not Mr. Truesdell, and that diakka (evil spirits) compel him to say that he does it. I again repeat, if he does not do it, he is a fraud and liar, because he says he does do it. Now let his enemies come forward and prove who does do it, or withdraw their accusations.

Residing in Syracuse in 1878–79, a neighbor of Mr. Truesdell, when some of the most startling of these phenomena occurred (the "materialized stone," for instance), and being well acquainted with him, and his family, I feel authorized to speak on this subject for myself, without any recent information or consultation with Mr. Truesdell whatever.

I will only add that the twelve articles in the Boston Investigator on "Bottom Facts of Spiritualism," commencing Sept. 5, 1883, signed "Justice," were from the experience and pen of ELLA E. GIBSON.

Jan. 1, 285.

A Noted Cook on the Griddle.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: You are no doubt aware that a certain noted Jos. Cook, a reverend individual, made a theatrical tour of the United States last autumn. He was under a manager, I believe, and had his picture displayed in the windows and the usual newspapers puffs in advance. He was only to proceed as far as Puget Sound, but was persuaded to come to Victoria. The persuader was a guarantee of $500 by certain of our citizens. Mr. Cook, I need not say, is ostensibly a champion of Christianity, and of the lowly Nazarene who had not where to lay his head.

Mr. Cook, like most of our modern "followers of Christ," does not believe in this part of the performance, and by his practice condemns it and espouses purple and fine linen and plenty of money. But modern churchism clutches every straw, so the noted—I think I may say notorious—Cook appeared among us. He was taken to task in advance by the Spiritualist here in regard to his seance with the spirits at the house of Epes Sargent. After this seance, in his next Monday lecture, you may know that he told his audience of his experience, and said (see his own book, "Monday Lectures") that "Materialism had received its death-blow." In his lecture here, to a very slim audience, he admitted the reality of the phenomena, but said it was no more than the Bible taught and said about the evils of "familar spirits," etc., all of which I considered very fair, and worthy of being pondered by our modern Spiritualists.

But with a view to diagnose this great Cook a little better, the writer called upon him at the hotel. The local Methodist divine was present when I requested a private interview, but was refused. I turned to go away, when he explained why he did so, upon which I resolved to interrogate him. Knowing he had made a tour of the world, I asked him whether, on leaving Christian lands, he had not also left saloons and drunkenness. He did not answer me directly, but said that he "had received a letter from Canon Farrar, of London, calling his attention to the fact that wherever the Mohammedan religion was adopted sobriety prevailed." I asked him if he had not observed the same result under the influence of the Buddhic religion. He said "Yes," but seeing where I was about to place him, he charged me with bad motivs in coming to see him. I reminded him of his lack of charity. Seeing some defense was necessary, he said that Christianity, properly understood, would abolish intemperance. I said I hoped, then, that it would be understood in 2,000 years more. In desperation he resorted to the usual answer that these "heathen" religions hav bad, very bad, features also. I now asked him this: From an exclusivly temperance standpoint, what sort of a figure does Christianity cut, as compared with any other existing religion? This question placed the noted Cook fairly on the griddle, where I left him bowing me out in a very boorish manner.

E. STEVENSON, M.D.

Victoria, British Columbia, Feb. 1, 1885.

The Charity of a Christian Community.

"The suicide of a young lady schoolteacher at Emporia, Kansas, has brought to light a sad story. Miss Mary Larick, the teacher, was a stranger in the community. She was not very social, was morbidly sensitiv, and dressed shabbily. Her neighbors began to criticise and find fault. The complaints caused the superintendent of schools to notify the objectionable teacher that her resignation would be accepted. Miss Larick bowed to the inevitable, and kindly said in her letter of resignation that if she failed to giv satisfaction the fault was her own. The next day she took morphine and died, leaving a letter containing minute directions regarding the disposition of her effects. After her death it became known that she was not only supporting herself, but that she was the mainstay of an aged father, and was educating a young brother at an Eastern college. Little by little it came out that the poor woman had practiced the most heroic self-denial. During all the cold weather she had never had a fire in her room, and her bed was without blankets or sufficient covering. When the people of Emporia found out these facts they began to dimly understand why the discharged teacher broke down in the midst of her misfortunes, and put an end to her pain, anguish, and wretchedness. The dead woman's funeral was the occasion of considerable display, and the church was packed with people. But public sympathy came too late. After life's fitful fever the self-sacrificing daughter and sister sleeps well."

The above is clipped from a newspaper of the neighborhood. What a reflection on the cursed love of dress, vanity, and shallowness that prevail more and more in our money-seeking, sensual communities! In some Catholic schools the very sensible plan is adopted of compelling all who attend to dress in the very cheapest, but neat, comfortable, material, that is always within the means of the poorest. Thus vanity is checked, and the children of the poor are saved from being scorned by their little playmates. No doubt the worshipers of a shabbily dressed Jesus despised this shabbily dressed teacher, and taught their children to do the same.

Oregon, Mo. HOLT.

The Liberal Club.

The 368th regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club of the city of New York was illustrated by maps. When the chairman arose to giv out the notice of meetings, and to remark upon the superiority of the literature on the table, it was observed that he was bounded upon the north by Algeria, on the south by Cape Colony, on the east by Abyssinia, and on the west by Senegambia. The Soudan, in orange-color, lay in the wake of the chairman, or just back of the chair of Mr. Wakeman, which is the same thing. Professor Rawson, who made the maps, sat upon the platform and viewed those works of art with manifest satisfaction.

The hall had filled up until there was standing-room only when Mr. Wakeman introduced Professor Rawson as the Ulysses of the club, who had traveled most everywhere, and who would now deliver a lecture upon the Soudan. Professor Rawson was saluted with applause as he arose to explain the map. Soudan, as it appeared from the outline given, is a country of considerable superficial area. It extends from the Atlantic ocean on the west to the Red Sea on the east, occupying nearly as much of Africa as the United States does of North America. It is three thousand miles one way and some fifteen hundred the other. The Nile river percolates through the eastern part. Professor Rawson said that he had been in the edge of the Soudan. There the soil was sandy and rocky, and rain was infrequent. The inhabitants expected but one shower a year, but that shower lasted five months. The tops of the mountains were invariably composed of rocks. Mr. Rawson while in Africa mentioned the fact that in Vermont, where he was born, the trees grew clear to the tops of the mountains. The Africans did not believe him and put him down in their list of liars. The nativs of the Soudan are colored people. The Mahdi, or False Prophet, who is fighting the English, is an Arab. He is a person of considerable agility and will make it tropical for his enemies. In religion the Soudanese are Mohammedans; those who follow the Mahdi believe him to be a second edition of the Prophet. Politically, these people are under the rule of the sultan of Turkey. Professor Rawson believed there was a prospect that they would sometime overrun Europe, as the Turks did in a former century. If Charles Martel had not met the Turks and defeated them in France, and if Sobieski had not defeated them in Austria, the professor said, they would hav occupied all Europe; the continent would hav become Mohammedan, and we should today hav that religion here instead of Christianity. Slavery still prevailed in Africa. The English government pretented to hav stopped the sale of human beings, but the prohibition worked about like our Sunday liquor law in New York. The trade is not carried on openly, but boys and girls are to be had for money

The lecture was full of information about Africa, and everybody listened with apparent interest. Some of the professor's reminiscences of his journey through the dark continent evoked expressions of incredulity among such as had not met with or heard similar experiences. Those who were romancers themselvs evinced no surprise.

When the address was concluded the audience fell to asking the professor questions about Africa, and Mr. Rawson showed himself as familiar with it as if he had farmed it all. Mr. Searing accused him of inaccuracy, and said he must hav drawn on his memory for his wit, and his imagination for his facts; for while the one was old, the other were both new and startling. He thought it would hav been better for the professor to say something about the wells in Egypt or about the English in the Soudan.

Dr. Graham explained that the English were in Africa looking for a market for the goods which they manufactured in excess of their capacity of consumption. The doctor then related a story that lay over anything Professor Rawson had told. He said he was among the foot-hills of the Black Hills when a cloud-burst came along and produced a freshet. Wagons loaded with five tons each of iron were floated off and were seen no more.

Dr. Kinget discussed the relations of capital to the Egyptian question. The trouble arose from European capitalists investing their money in Egyptian property and trying to collect rents.

Robert Blissert rather fervidly remarked, "I wish to God the Mahdi had a thousand tons of dynamite to blow every Englishman to hell." He also wished to God there was a Mahdi in Ireland. Mr. Blissert went through Egypt on his way to Australia with the British army. He saw enough of the English method of civilizing heathen to make him say, "From such civilization, good Lord, deliver me."

Professor Rawson followed Mr. Searing's advice, and talked about the wells of Egypt. These were 20 or 30 feet in diameter, from 150 to 300 feet in depth, and were of unknown age when Adam was a youngster. The wells were five days' journey apart. Mr. Wakeman wanted to know if the Arabs would work. Mr. Rawson instanced the mosks and minarets, numbering a thousand, in Cairo; and also the works of art in Spain. Mr. J. O. Woods inquired what age the inhabitants of the Soudan belonged to. Mr. Rawson: "The savage." Dr. Lambert: "Is the Sahara occupied?" Mr. Rawson: "It swarms with Arabs." Mr. Ormsby: "Is there any rent to pay there?" Mr. Rawson: "The rocks are rent sometimes." Mr. Ormsby: "Wouldn't it be a good place for those fellows to go to who don't want to pay rent?" The professor went on to tell some yarns about Egypt that must hav made Dr. Graham wish he had loaded his wagons with ten tons of iron instead of five. In closing, the speaker said he hoped the English people would civilize and inhabit Egypt. It was better that they, rather than the Turks, should occupy the houses of the Pharaohs.

The Bruno Statue.

Previously acknowledged,	109.25
H. A. Beamer,	1.00
J. Francis Ruggles,	1.00
Almond Owen,	1.00
George T. Hogle,	1.00
J. F. Green,	1.00
M. Hinkel,	1.00
Thos. C. Galloway,	1.00
R. Wade,	1.00
Total,	$117.25

Send further subscriptions to T. B. Wakeman, 93 Nassau street, New York city.

Tent Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$48.50
J. Petty,	1.00
Nelse H. Wheeler,	1.00
Judd Griswold,	.50
O. Child,	14.50
G. H. Shiel,	1.00
M. Johnson,	5.00
E. Daheel,	1.00
Almond Owen,	10.00
Total,	$82.50

Certainly We Will Oblige.

From the Investigator.

A complaining person, who signs himself Fred Koezly, says in the last New York TRUTH SEEKER:

"I hav been a paying subscriber to the Investigator for twelve years, but as its editor refused articles in answer to Mr. Hill's, then I gave it up, as much as I liked it, for principle's sake."

Mr. Fred. Koezly forgets, owing probably to a short memory. He knows, as well as we can tell him, that we hav published many of his articles; and that in relation to his dispute with Mr. Hill, as we had given them both a hearing, we good-naturedly suggested that they had better continue their discussion privately, as we were much crowded. Mr. Hill, like a sensible young man that he is, took no offense; but Mr. Fred Koezly was very indignant, and stopped taking the Investigator, as he says, "for principle's sake"—a poor principle, we think, under the circumstances.

These are facts, and our friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER will oblige us by correcting Mr. Fred Koezly's misrepresentation, as possibly he may forget to do so.

Mr. Watts's Opinion of the Annual.

DEAR MR. MACDONALD: I hav just read, for the second time, the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885. It is truly a marvelous production, reflecting the highest credit upon its editor. The value of its contents can not be over-estimated, being instructiv, varied, and entertaining. Secularists will find it a library in itself, and a reliable standard for reference on all matters pertaining to the Liberal movement and its many phases of thought. I am glad to see the rapid demand its merits hav called forth. CHARLES WATTS.

A PORTION OF WHAT MISS WIXON THINKS.

Many thanks for the ANNUAL. In appearance and general make up it is an exceedingly bright and interesting volume, and from its pages one can obtain a clear and comprehensiv idea of the status of Freethought in America. In its picture gallery we meet many tried and true friends, and some new ones. I would like to make special mention of some of the articles, but as its low price must insure its entrance into millions of homes, all will be able to judge of their worth and beauty for themselvs.

SUSAN H. WIXON.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. S. BELL lectures at Bluffton, Ind., March 25th and 26th; at Sturgis, Mich., March 29th and 30th; at Burr Oak, Mich., March 31st, and April 1st; at Eaton Rapids, probably April 3d and 4th; and at Nashua, Iowa, April 12th, 13th, and 14th.

MR. WATTS writes to say that he was much pleased with the behavior of the audiences at the Welland debate. Throughout they were orderly, and indicated their desire to listen to both sides with the utmost impartiality. A pleasing feature of the gatherings was the number of ladies present, one-third being of the "gentler" sex. The last two Sunday evenings Mr. Watts has lectured to crowded audiences in Toronto, his subjects being, "Science and its Struggles," and "Evolution or Special Creation, Which?" Mr. Watts devotes the whole of March to Canada; he then lectures in Philadelphia, and goes to New York to see Mrs. Watts off to England. After this he joins Mr. Putnam for a Western tour. Our friends in the West will please note this.

The National Liberal League.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

CHARLES WATTS, First Vice-President. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Secretary, 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$3,420.44
Canada (per Charles Watts),	75.00
League, Saginaw, Mich.,	5.00
Collection, " "	8.52
A. D. Bechtel,	1.00
Charles C. Moore,	1.00
J. B. Tinklepaugh,	2.00
L. G. Moore,	5.00
Fred Wellington,	2.00
Charles Eaton,	1.00
C. P. Ludwig,	1.00
Nelse H. Wheeler,	1.00
W. D. Wadsworth,	1.00
George Collins,	2.50
A Friend,	2.00
Total,	$3,528.46

News and Notes from the Field.

I shall not soon forget my delightful visit at Saginaw, Mich. There is a good number of Liberals here who, in spite of the divisions of the past, are still interested in the work that is going on, and will in the future make an able auxiliary of the national movement. There is no state more full of advanced thought than Michigan. It is one of the most prosperous states in the union. Everybody seems to be well off. There are many sources of wealth—mines, farms, forests, etc. The environments are favorable for progress and Freethought. Hard times are conduciv to revivals; plenty of business makes civilization, and that, of course, makes for reason and liberty. The civilized man takes to science. It is the barbarian that hugs orthodoxy.

I lectured at Saginaw Sunday, March 1st, to a good audience. Mr. Burnham presided, and made the following introductory address:

"The church," he said, "endeavors to place the Freethinker in a false position. It claims all the fruits of his struggle. The pioneer goes forth in search of truth. He sacrifices position, he endures persecution, and attains the truth. But no sooner is that truth welcomed by the world, and made popular, than the church comes forward, and, with theological assumption, claims to hav discovered this truth, and to be the real benefactor of the race. It is our duty to protest against this insult and injustice, to refute these falsehoods of the church—to place it in its true position as the opponent of human progress. To allow the church to wear these laurels that it has never won is to help fasten its superstition and tyranny upon the world. We must make the issue plain. Freethought is not an evolution from the church. The church has opposed it, and there is a radical difference. We must make that difference understood. We must be distinct in our thought. We must avoid using even those words which are dear to the human heart if they make vague our meaning. We must be crystal clear in our expressions of truth. We must maintain our dignity and our rights in the domain of human achievements. What we accomplish should be recognized as our own, and not be wrenched from the brow of Freethought to decorate the dark pathway of the church, and make it appear a benefactor when it is a stumbling-block. We are the soldiers of nature. We fight for nature against the supernatural. The supernatural must go, and with it the churches and religions of the past based upon it, and which derive from it their authority, and so tyrannize over mankind, and are the enemy of reason."

I then gave my lecture on "The Coming Demands of Humanity," which was well received. The response also to the League work was generous. This place will furnish an efficient troop for the grand army of the union.

I am sorry to say that Mr. Burnham has been, for the last few weeks, upon a bed of sickness. He has not been able to leave the house. He is now, however, recovering, and will soon be ready for efficient field work. He is in hearty sympathy with our movement, and will do his best for the success of the American Secular Union. He is one of our representativ men. He clearly understands the issues. He is thoroughly scientific. Once a shining light in the Methodist church, he has left behind every particle of the priest. He is a profound student of history. He has mastered the theologies and metaphysics of the past with passionate admiration of them, only, however, in the progress of his mind to come to the conclusion that they must be rejected, and science accepted as containing the only knowledge of which we are capable. He has a wide acquaintance with the processes and results of science. He is not only a brilliant orator, but a well-equipped teacher. He has stores of information upon the live topics of the day. He will not only entertain but instruct. There should be plenty of work for men of this sort, who hav sacrificed so much for Freethought, not only for the sake of what it destroys, but of what it builds, the noble and beautiful order which must be, and to help attain which is the highest inspiration of one's being, the noblest joy of life.

I hav had a refreshment of spirit indeed in this happy home with Mr. Burnham and his gentle wife, who has been a faithful companion through years of struggle, and whose mental horizon has broadened and brightened with his own. I look forward with joy to years of congenial effort, and realize more than ever the greatness of our cause when so many sacrifices hav been made for it; so much agony been endured. The fruit must indeed be glorious, for the grandest achievements come from the deepest sufferings. It cannot be that these ineffable hopes will fail; that truth shall not triumph; that superstition shall not be destroyed; that science shall not make fair the advancing life of man. But even if these hopes do fail, better die with their ardor in our breast, and truth our only dower, than revel in the ill-gotten wealth of the dead past, and clutch with miserly fingers its false delights.

I am now in Cincinnati with Edgar C. Beall, author of that admirable work, "Brain and Bible." I find a good many Liberals in this city, and anticipate a successful meeting on March 15th at Robinson's Opera House, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. I hope that all our friends in Cincinnati will do their best to make this advance movement a bright promis of better things to come. All who desire to co-operate can communicate with Edgar C. Beall, 27 Arcade.

They say that Lexington, Ky., is a very orthodox city; but it will hav a chance to know something of Freethought on Sunday next at the Opera House. There are good Liberals in this place who hav no fear of the popular theology, and the gospel of universal mental emancipation will not trail its banners in the dust.

On Sunday, March 22d, I shall be at Nashville, Tenn.

A certain professor at Jackson, Mich., has challenged Ingersoll and his disciples to a debate. He will hav a chance to try his steel and meet Charles Watts, or else show the white feather, and like the Arab "fold his tent and silently steal away," which is the fashion now with Christian warriors when the Infidel appears in flesh and blood.

March 5, 1885. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Mr. Charles Watts in Debate.

Last week Mr. Charles Watts had a five nights' debate in Welland, Canada, with a reverend gentleman who is regarded by his own friends, at least, as the champion debater of the Dominion. Others will most probably entertain a different opinion. He is, however, a gentleman, judging from accounts to hand. One incident for which we can vouch is worthy of mention. Before the debate the reverend gentleman's friends announced their intention of challenging Mr. Watts wherever he lectured in America to meet their champion. After the debate they changed their minds and thought "sufficient for the day is the evil thereof." This fact tells its own tale. There is no doubt that the debate created great excitement in the district where it was held. We are pleased to learn that the reverend gentleman made an attack on the Nine Demands. This gave Mr. Watts an opportunity to show their nature and object, which by all accounts he availed himself of fully.

The following is the opinion of the local press upon the discussion. The Welland Tribune, dated March 6th, remarks:

The debate, between Elder Walker of Indiana and Chas. Watts, as champions respectivly of Christianity and Freethought, began in Orient Hall on Tuesday evening. Although the night was rainy, about 500 were present, including many from a distance. D. McConachie, Esq., was chosen chairman, and at the opening read the rules agreed upon. It was decided that the debate consist of five sessions of two and a half hours each, each speaker to hav two innings of one half hour each and a quarter hour each to close. J. Priestman, Jr., acted as moderator for Mr. Watts and occupied a seat on the platform. Among the Elder's friends on the platform were Rev. H. B. Sherman (moderator on his behalf). Rev. Chas. Martz, of Indianapolis; Elder White, of Cicero, Ind.; Rev. O. G. Hertzog, of Suspension Bridge; Rev. R. Stevenson, of St. Thomas, and Rev. Mr. Moote, of Rosedene.

The first three sessions were alloted to a debate upon the validity of Christianity, the proposition affirmed by Elder Walker being as follows: "That the Christian religion as set forth in the Old and New Testaments is worthy of acceptance on the part of all rational beings as true." The two last sessions were devoted to the discussion of Secularism, Mr. Watts affirming "That Secularism is sufficient to satisfy the needs of mankind without association with any form of theology."

The meetings throughout were crowded, the interest increasing in intensity to the close. The Elder is a shrewd debater, perfectly at home on the platform and possessing a keen sense of humor. Mr. Watts has made theological controversy and history life studies, and evidently had his case best in hand. Opinion among those who heard the speakers quite naturally differed as to their merits, according to bias and mental constitution, but the friends of the Elder can take this credit for him, that his opponent is probably the ablest living controversialist on his side in the world to-day. Having ruled religious controversy out of our paper, we shall not comment on the issues. To publish a full report of the debate in our paper is impracticable. It would probably occupy ten full issues of the paper. To publish a synopsis would not hav been satisfactory. The field gone over was so extended that all arguments and issues could not hav been touched upon, which would hav been objectionable to some of the interested parties. We thought at one time of publishing a report of the debate in pamphlet form, but were unable to obtain sufficiently definit particulars as to its extent and to learn whether either party to the debate intended publishing a report, in time to make arrangements for having a verbatim report taken, which alone (exclusiv of publishing) would hav cost from $75 to $100.

The audience seemed about equally divided in their support, judging from the applause.

"Elder Watts," his opponent called him, by a slip of the tongue. The F. T. champion grimly shook his head.

The champions deal each other hard knocks and plenty of them, but as a rule, like lawyers and editors, wind up by shaking hands over the "bloody chasm."

The Welland Telegraph of March 6th says: "The debate was attended by a very large audience, who patiently listened to both gentlemen. The Rev. Mr. Walker is a good debater, and logically places the Bible proofs and scriptural teachings, while we are bound to say that Mr. Charles Watts with great cleverness and force of oratory advances the theory of Freethought and science as opposed to gospel truths."

These notices appear to be very fair when we remember they come from the Christian side.

Arrangements are being made for another debate, this time in Montreal, between the Rev. Dr. Sexton and Charles Watts, to take place the first week in April.

THE WATTS–WALKER DEBATE.

MR. EDITOR: The long-talked-of discussion between Mr. Charles Watts, and Elder Aaron Walker, of Indiana, which has been casually mentioned in late numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, has just been concluded in this town. Public opinion is somewhat divided on the result, as it always is in such cases, but the masses are clearly unanimous that Elder Walker was greatly over-matched as a public debater, to say the least of it. His presence and manner were very ancient, his delivery not good, and his matter, for the most part, neither original nor relevant. Indeed, his best speeches were more properly readings from Voltaire, Paine, and others of their class; and this want of originality and tact had much to do with the general disfavor with which he was received. Mr. Watts, on the contrary, always appeared in good form, expressed himself with easy fluency, and was never out of time, or wanting in appropriateness of rejoinder. There were times when, perchance, his handling of the elder was just a little too vigorous, and yet it was, usually, granted as in order, unjust charges having been persistently urged by his opponent. The challenge, as your readers may already know, issued from Elder Walker's party, and his friends were upon the stage in full force and full of confidence. So confident, in fact, were they of their champion's superior ability, it was openly stated before the debate commenced that Mr. Watts would be again challenged, and still again, and again, to the end of the chapter, or so long as a Secular society could be found in the country. The result in this first instance, however, has, no doubt, corrected that mistake, and will save the elder and his friends from further humiliation by keeping them safely within the danger-limit. Orient Hall was snugly filled by the intelligence of the town and surrounding country during each session of the debate, and at each succeeding session a greater intensity of interest was evinced. And when it is remembered that these sessions were five in number, each two and one-half hours long, and that the people paid supreme attention throughout, the gratifying conclusion must be arrived at that Secularism is commanding that confidence and respect in Welland which its merits deserve. I may say, in closing, the most popular feature in Secularism appears to be the non-denial of God and heaven, although no assurance is given that either exists in fact. The admission of the bare possibility of such realities will win favor in any religious community, when pronounced Atheism would create a chasm so wide that the two systems might never grasp hands across it, or acknowledge anything whatever in common. Faithfully yours, Welland, Canada, March 6, 1885. J. PRIESTMAN, JR.

The Cause in Canada.

The nearest approach to our ideal of a Secular society we found in Toronto. They hav neatly furnished rooms in the Opera House building—library and reading room, and small hall adjoining, seating about 150. The entrance is objectionable. The society need, and are now negotiating for, new, better, and more commodious quarters. They hav a small but excellent library, which is well patronized. All the Liberal papers are taken, THE TRUTH SEEKER being in greatest demand.

At all hours of the day members may be found at the society rooms, reading or studying. Every evening there is a goodly gathering. Classes are held in the hall, while the reading room is devoted to reading, sociability, interchange of views, and meetings of committees. They hav regular weekly classes —science, elocution, debating, extempore speaking, music, singing and dancing. Each quarter, a society social, comprising music, singing, recitations, and ball; public lecture every Sunday evening at Albert hall (which the society has hired for the year), the seating capacity of which is 700. Every week they gain additional members. All pay regular monthly contributions. On signing application for membership the amount to be contributed is written on the application card. No maximum is fixed, the minimum is 25 cents per month.

This society is a power for good. Its most earnest, self-sacrificing, and devoted member is the secretary, Mr. J. A. Risser, a gentleman of culture, zeal, and discretion. The cause throught the dominion is deeply indebted to his untiring, able, and judicious efforts. He is ably sustained by the genial, jovial President Evans, whose deserved popularity in business circles, despite his avowal and defense of Secularism, givs him great influence, even those who deplore his lack of piety conceding his worth, integrity, and public spirit.

The committee are aided by the wise counsel of those tried veteran and true Secularists, Piddington, Butland, Cook, McNamara, and the society is kept in advance of the times by the influence of young, energetic business men, the king of good fellows, Harrison, prince of conviviality and melody, Strange (the great Canadian music printer and publisher); Hicks, Gibbs, Allen, Edwards, and their colleagues forming a host of jolly good fellows. They hav intelligent, accomplished, earnest, zealous women, who prove able, reliable co-workers. When the new quarters are secured we look for large additions of the fair sex, without whom a permanent success is an impossibility.

OSHAWA—CEDAR DALE.

Mr. M. Brooks, a tried and trusty veteran in the cause of reason, right and truth, is the leading spirit in this section. There is a very large number of Liberals in this vicinity—a sprinkling of mollusks, but the greater number with well-developed vertebræ, who dare maintain their right and think for themselves.

We had a very interesting meeting at Oshawa Opera House, Monday, Feb. 23d. The lecture commenced at 8 P.M. From its close at 9 until 11:30 we were kept answering questions. All seemed to consider it a very profitable meeting. We remained over Tuesday the 24th, visiting among the friends, urging united, energetic action, and in the evening held a meeting at the hospitable mansion of Brother Samuel Brown, for the purpose of effecting organization. Seventeen were present. After much deliberation and discussion, all fully realizing the importance and grave responsibilities organization involved, a society was organized. Officers and also vigilance, educational, and social committees were elected, and it was arranged to inaugurate a regular science school on Sundays, with especial view to attracting and benefiting the women and children.

There is splendid material in Oshawa, and vicinity for a powerful society. They hav young men of culture and high reputation, and the greater desideratum, intelligent, energetic, fearless, noble women to aid in carrying on the work. We predict for them a glorious future.

HAMILTON.

This is the city of mollusks. Merchants, lawyers, doctors, business men generally are fully convinced, but lack backbone to stand erect. They cringe and fawn at the feet of bigots they despise. The church accepts their homage and their money. Strange that men should be so blindly foolish as to sustain churches, paying and aiding the forging of chains that hold them in bondage. How grand and noble the lives of such men as Littlehales, Maddocks, and others, who gain the respect of all classes by their frank, consistent course. The skilled laborers in Hamilton are the most independent, and take the lead in all that pertains to either civil or religious liberty.

We delivered two lectures here, Sunday, March 1st, in the afternoon on "Facts and Fallacies;" evening, "Why I Left the Pulpit." We were much pleased and surprised at the large attendance and liberal collection. As a sample of the interest evinced by the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, it might be mentioned that Mr. John Young and son came fourteen miles to the lectures; Mr. McClement and wife, nine miles.

After the lecture in the evening we held a meeting with friends and urged practical organization. They had a nominal organization; some time since had elected officers; and there an end was reached. We succeeded in arousing quite a degree of enthusiasm, which was manifested by pledges from all to meet every Sunday. A suitable hall in Larkin Block was engaged. With an able leader like Mr. Littlehales, and energetic workers like George Maddocks, vertebræ must rapidly develop, and a spirit of emulation must be evoked, so that the Hamilton Society will force Toronto to look to her laurels.

THOROLD.

We had glorious success at Thorold, under the auspices of those most devoted and energetic young champions of Secularism, Andrew Hansel and Harry N. Higgins. On Monday, Mar. 2d, Odd Fellows' Hall was crowded by an intelligent and very attentiv audience. We spoke on "Salvation," and are fully convinced it resulted in saving some from the curse of bigotry and the terrors of superstition.

After the lecture we repaired to the parlors of the Mansion House, where, despite the late hour, a very large number of Liberals assembled for the purpose of discussing the best methods to advance the cause of Secularism. It was decided to organize. Able and efficient officers—also vigilant educational and social committees—were unanimously elected. All were deeply interested in, and decided to secure, a Secular library. The matter was referred to the educational committee. Donations of books, addressed to J. Cleveland, secretary, Thorold Secular Society, will be appreciated.

We received from all the friends in Canada the kindest welcome, and the most generous hospitality; and long for the time when it may be our happy lot to again visit those we met as strangers and left as friends. CHAS. B. REYNOLDS,

Chairman of Ex. Com. National Liberal League.

REYNOLDS AT HAMILTON.

MR. EDITOR: It is with unfeigned pleasure I inclose $3, for a year's subscription for the gentleman whose name I inclose. I hav also to tell you of the success of your enthusiastic coworker, ex-Rev. Reynolds, who lectured here yesterday twice to large and appreciativ audiences, who manifested their delight by hearty applause and at the finish of each discourse bought up all his books, or nearly so. The seed sown here by Messrs. Watts and Putnam is beginning to bear fruit, as you will find from Mr. Reynold's report of his visit amongst us, by the number of trial subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Whilst we hav such men at the head of the movement as Ingersoll, Watts, Putnam, Reynolds, and Remsburg, and not forgetting yourself, we can afford to laugh at the puny efforts of those champion blatherskites, Talmage and Father Lambert, to arrest or stop the march of the stalwarts who are in the van with the car of progress, determined to push it ahead, notwithstanding the hooting of the owls who rave and declaim at our champions from their "cowards' castles," but who dare not come down from their perch and defend their mythical superstitions before audiences even of their own sects on a public platform if they know they are likely to be questioned as to the verity of their own belief. A few years ago literal fire and brimstone sermons only were preached. They hav almost discarded that kind of preaching, and their only theme now appears to be about those know-nothing Agnostics. Yet they continue to pound and rave as of yore, and it is still fire and brimstone in the Sunday-school, but not in the church to the elder children. Yet a few years, when the church will become what H. W. Beecher said in his lecture on Evolution—"schools of morals." All hail that day.

Yours for the whole truth, GEO. MADDOCKS.

Hamilton, Ont., Feb. 3, 1885.

"UNDER the head of 'New Books,' THE TRUTH SEEKER says, 'E. C. Walker has collected from that paper a number of articles, and published them in pamphlet form under the title of "Practical Co-operation." The articles were written by Mr. Walker, but if the editor will notice the pamphlet more closely he will see that it was published in the Liberal as suggestions to the people of Liberal in their proposed co-operativ movement.—Missouri Liberal.

We are pleased to make the correction.

WE are under obligations to B. F. Gove, De Witt, Iowa, for a report of the religious condition of his county jail; to John A. Geeting, Washington, Ind., for the directors' and officers report of the Indiana State Prison, South; to E. A. Vidal, Sarnia, for the report of the inspector of prisons for Ontario; to F. W. Beardsley, of Birmingham, Conn., for the report of tho Meriden, Conn., Reform Schools; to J. B. Curtis, Joliet, Ill., for the report of the Illinois State Penitentiary. We would like to be under the same obligation to every Liberal who can do us a similar favor.

Communications.

The Chicago League Still Living.

It was my intention last year to send my congratulations to THE TRUTH SEEKER for its very handsome ANNUAL of 1884, feeling that every Freethinker was under additional personal obligations to your company for the labor and expense involved in the publication of so useful, creditable, and commendable a work. Whatever I might hav felt then is now increased in proportion to the surpassing excellence of the elaborately illustrated ANNUAL for 1885, it being to me a matter of astonishment that it can be published for the money. If it is properly appreciated even as a literary work, aside from its intrinsic value to Freethinkers, your orders will reach the tens of thousands, and it is my earnest desire that they may.

While most Liberal papers hav some special excellence not presented in others, and while I hav not always been in sympathy with your views regarding the policy of the National League, I must say that for a long time I hav felt THE TRUTH SEEKER absolutely indispensable.

After nearly ten years of activ but almost fruitless endeavor, so far as lay in my power, to educate and elevate organized workingmen to higher conceptions of their political rights and privileges—a consciousness of their own powers—I came to the conclusion that intellectual emancipation must precede industrial and political emancipation; that intelligence can not be held in slavery, and that men who will not reason will be ruled. Since coming to that conclusion I left the various labor organizations and devoted myself to the League and the work of mental liberty. In the League it has been my chief aim in the past to urge Freethinkers, as such, to declare for such principles as would inspire the working classes with the knowledge that for their political and industrial salvation they must look to the defenders of justice on earth—the Freethought host.

But experience is the best schoolmaster, and it is regretfully that I admit that the many divergences of opinion as to what will bring about desired reforms (and, in fact, what is reform?) preclude all possibility of our uniting on any rational basis. As Freethinkers we must be evolutionists; as evolutionists we must accept the law of growth or development; that development is the result of intelligence, and anything that does not work through that means does not recognize the aphorism that "thoughts rule the world;" and that in this country it is our political privilege to modify or change any thought that is injurious or outgrown. In contradistinction to this view is that of the Anarchists, who would annihilate all opposition, not by reason, argument, or education, but by dynamite; who go back to "brutal, barbaric force," who howl for "the abolition of all government," not its purification; who find it pays them better and is much easier to excite the passions and prejudice of the masses than to arouse them to a sense of reason and a recognition of their own responsibility as citizens in continuing the inequalities of which they complain. The only danger is that the poor, unbalanced idiots who listen to these harangs may do some damage; the professional agitators will do no worse than talk. There is nothing more detestable, in my imagination, than these fellows who will by their talk constantly urge upon others what they dare not attempt themselvs. Taking all these things into consideration, I hav to acknowledge the wisdom of the National League in confining itself to its first principles, and leaving its membership to interest themselvs as they choose.

While I am and hav been greatly interested in the discussion of all social problems, it strikes me that these ignorant harangs are far worse than no discussion at all, and that is the view the Chicago League has lately taken of this question.

On Feb. 8th Col. A. J. Grover gave us an able lecture on "Rum and Theology," which was given a column report in the Times. Mrs. D. F. Harrison propounded the conundrum the following Sunday, "Can we Reasonably Hope for Immortality through Christ?" and answered it herself emphatically in the negativ. Last Sunday Mr. L. H. Sawyer lectured on, "Is Religion an Inherent Principle in Mankind?" Mr. Sawyer is one of the most philosophical thinkers in our League, and his lecture contained a great deal more than it was possible to digest. This evening Dr. J. H. Randall, formerly of New York, will recount "The Myths and Superstitions We Hav Left Behind." The doctor has devoted some years to the rostrum, and is an able and accomplished speaker.

One of our legislativ members is about to present a bill for the taxation of church property, and we are having the bill framed. Judge Henry Booth, dean of the Law School, has promised the writer to attend to that matter.

We hav appointed a committee to look up whatever statistics can be obtained bearing upon the amount of ecclesiastical property untaxed in the state of Illinois. Let me here state that any readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, especially those in this state, are invited to forward me any information they may hav on this point. Wednesday evening next we hold another social, literary, and musical entertainment and dance. I will giv you from time to time items of interest relativ to our League.

Chicago, March 1, 1885. E. A. STEVENS, Pres.

The Church of the Future.

The following paragraph was contained in a reliable daily newspaper of this city of the 18th inst.:

ASH WEDNESDAY.—To-day is Ash Wednesday, the beginning of Lent, the season of abstinence, penitence, and devotion, which continues for forty days. In the Catholic churches to-day the officiating priest signed the foreheads of the faithful with a cross made by his finger, dipped in the ashes of last year's palm, burnt for that purpose. The services in the Catholic and Protestant Episcopal churches were well attended.

Is it not to be wondered at that in our age persons claiming to be civilizsd submit to and commit such humbug? How long will it take yet until the Church of the Future will be established in this free country? By the Church of the Future a church is meant in which all preaching or teaching is strictly based upon truth and honesty. In the Church of the Future the resources of the preachers or teachers will exclusivly be reason, common sense, and morality. In the Church of the Future the preachers or teachers will find these resources only in their own heads and hearts. The Church of the Future will disregard the Bible, which is not an American book, but a product of foreign lands. The Church of the Future will reject the compulsory celibacy of the priesthood, because, according to the American principle of equal rights to all in all matters of public concern, of which matrimony is one—being recognized and protected by law—every man in this country is entitled to found a home and family. The Church of the Future will oppose the claim of power in this country of a (foreign) spiritual potentate, because it violates the American Constitution, which ordains a republican form of government for every state of the Union. The Constitution of the United States grants full and absolute religious liberty and liberty of conscience to the American people. The Church of the Future will liv up to this freedom in this country, recognizing no other authority for true religion than the eternal laws of the human mind and of the human heart. The Constitution of the United States, the supreme law of the land, grants full and absolute religious liberty and liberty of conscience to the American people, and renders religion and its exercise a strictly private affair.

Washington, D. C. JOHN GEO. HERTWIG.

The Catholics and the Schools.

"The Judges of Faith and Godless Schools. A compilation of Evidence against Secular Schools the world over, especially against common state schools in the United States of America, wherever entirely withdrawn from the influence of the Authority of the Catholic Church. Addressed to Catholic Parents by Rev. Thomas J. Jenkins, of the Diocese of Louisville, Ky., 1882; published by Thomas D. Egan, New York Catholic Agency, 33 Barclay street, New York city."

Such is the title page of a book your correspondent purchased of the publisher at his place, 33 Barclay street, New York city.

This little book of 106 pages proves beyond all doubt that the Catholics of the world hav entered into a conspiracy to destroy the free educational institutions of the world, if they cannot subvert them to their own use.

As Liberals we hav the most to fear from any interference with the public schools. It necessarily follows that these schools, founded and sustained for the benefit of all, will be kept freer of all that is decidedly objectionable, because sectarian in its nature, than any schools except those especially supported by Liberals. In the first paragraph the author complains that the old world is disturbed by the cry that:

"The people are educated up to their power and demand a voice in their own government."

The third chapter of the book opens with these words:

"Another supreme evil following from the attendance of Catholic children on schools of public instruction, in the United States, the consideration of which alone would, or should, be enough so deter Catholics from sending their children there, is the constant association with ill-bred, unbelieving, and immoral companions."

Chapter six is entitled:

"Secular, or state schools condemned by the Bishops of Christendom."

In chapter seven we find this very interesting matter:

"In the Pastoral Letter of the Third Council, Cincinnati (1861), the fathers explain what the (perverting) influences are, and what the character of their results: Under the influence of this plausible but most unwise system (of common-school education), the rising generation has been educated either without any definit principles at all, or with false, at least more or less exaggerated and fanatical, principles. The system itself, if carried out, is well calculated to bring up a generation of religious indifferentists, if not of practical Infidels; and if not carried out, its tendency is to develop false or very defectiv, if not dangerous, religious principles. The facts, we believe, sufficiently prove that the influence of any common school has been developed either in one or both of these directions. Listen, then, Catholic parents, to what has been solemnly announced in the Plenary Council of Baltimore, held in 1866, at which were present seven archbishops, thirty-seven bishops, two procurators of bishops, and two mitered abbots—the largest conciliar assembly, we are told, from Trent to the Vatican Council."

Thus speak the forty-four august fathers and the four representativs of bishops:

"Such is the nature of the system of teaching therein employed" (referring to the public schools of this country), "that it is not possible to prevent young Catholics from incurring through its influence danger to their faith and morals, nor can we ascribe to any other cause that destructiv spirit of indifferentism which has made, and is now making, such rapid strides in this country, and that corruption of morals which we hav to deplore in those of tender years," etc., page after page.

"We will introduce first the oldest archbishop of the church in the United States, therefore the patriarch by age of our hierarchy, the Most Rev. John Baptist Purcell, archbishop of Cincinnati, who in his Lenten Pastoral of 1872, after speaking of other matters, thus pronounces in decided favor of our thesis, and in almost the self-same words we hav used:

"'The Catholic school is the nursery of the Catholic congregation. The one should stand under the protecting shadow of the other. This duty they do not discharge who send not the children under their care to a Catholic school when in their power. We see not how they, who wilfully and deliberately neglect this duty, can worthily approach, or be conscientiously admitted to, the sacraments,'" etc. (p. 60).

It is apparent what the zealous old archbishop wanted the millions of money which he misappropriated to accomplish. When the Catholics of America had so far advanced under the influence of the common schools that they objected to giving their hard-earned money in a golden stream of millions to found and sustain schools in which nothing was to be taught save the alphabet, the Catholic catechism, the titles of their lazy priests, and mathematics sufficient to count the beads on their rosaries, then the "venerable Most Rev. John Baptist Purcell, archbishop," thought it was about time to help himself. How like slaves the Catholics of America hav allowed themselvs to be plundered, without rebellion, is to every independent man a picture of depravity.

What hav the lords of England done to Catholics that can for a moment be compared to the monstrous treatment their own church has bestowed upon them? When robbed, they resist not. Now they are commanded to send their children to the schools they hav been robbed to build and support, under pain of exclusion from the sacraments, and they will go down on their knees and obey. There is not one word in all this book in praise of the thorough instruction of the common schools of our land—no appreciation of the fact that many a Catholic young man who is now a competent business or professional gentleman would be a shoveler in some railroad construction gang but for what the common schools hav done for him in spite of the protests of his spiritual advisers.

I trust you will procure for your readers copies of this "Godless Schools" as they may order them. It is full of instruction and encouragement for all Liberals.

LIBERTA.

HOW TO INSURE GOOD EDUCATION.

The education of the general body of the people in every state and territory throughout our nation ought to be made the paramount aim of every citizen in our land. Now, whatever conduces to the great end and object ought to be taken into consideration. Let anyone acquainted with the statistics of 1880 see and note the fact that there are six millions of illiterate people in our midst who wield the power of the ballot-box. And then see what a power for evil there is in the hands of designing politicians. Now, to arrest this evil, I would propose a plan as follows: That the general government appropriate a fund for school purposes, similar in principle to our national banking law. Let the several states draw from the general government enough funds to carry out their several educational facilities, so that every child in our country shall receive a fair and liberal education, sufficient to meet the requirements of an enlightened community. Now, to meet this demand, how, and where, is the great thing needful, called money, to come from? My answer is as follows:

Let the general government print and stamp notes, similar in form and capacity to our national bank notes, with this difference: instead of calling them national bank currency, let them be called national school currency, each state giving their several bonds for their redemption. Let each county in each state again divide up their several counties into school districts, and supply these several school districts with funds to build, equip, and carry on their several schools. Then let each school district tax its inhabitants for the repayment of these monies borrowed, say at the ratio of ten annual instalments. Now, one of the most important items of this system would militate against the monied interests of our bankers, for the school monies would bear but a very small per centage, say two per cent, which would reduce the bulk of our borrowed monies, in as much as it would place on the monied market a greater volume of specie.

There are two items that ought to be added to this principle of supplying the educational facilities of our country, and they are: 1. The general government ought to receive these notes for all dues against her. 2. They ought to be made legal tenders only in the several states—as, for illustration, if Nebraska borrowed ten million and gave her bonds, let the notes be printed especially for her own state, just like any individual bank, and let these notes be legal tender only in Nebraska.

This subject could be expanded, but sufficient is given for your general readers to see its main drift.

Palmyra, Neb., Feb. 20, 1885. JOHN S. MAIBEN.

EDUCATION MUST BE LIBERAL.

Nearly all civilized people, especially nativ Americans, admit the importance of education. They all realize that every child should hav at least a fair common school education. But it is nevertheless a fact that far too many intelligent people hav fallen into a habit of speaking of this matter in a sort of stereotyped way, "Oh, yes, of course education is a good thing," and straightway the subject is dismissed and temporarily forgotten. I want Freethinkers all over this broad land to wake up to the fact that we are more directly concerned in this matter than any other class, although the Protestants will work substantially with us, so far as the maintenance of common free schools is concerned. Education is the mighty instrument by which the mists of superstition must be dispersed and mankind elevated. All generous persons of ordinary intelligence and education are amazed when they see statistics of illiteracy in this boasted land of enlightenment, but I now appeal to every Freethinker to impress on his memory the fact that this illiteracy is increasing. This is ominous of danger to us. Liberalism cannot flourish on the soil of ignorance. Our plain duty, then, is to make still greater efforts and sacrifices for the cause of education. As Mr. Green has already intimated, the time has arrived for the erection of a Freethought college. Whether Mr. Green's offer is accepted or not, the subject should not be allowed to drop. Possibly Salamanca would be as good a place as any for the college. And good care should be taken that the Girard College experience is not repeated. No person should be employed in or about the institution who is not known to be an outspoken Freethinker. A simple promis not to read the Bible or pray in the building, and not to teach any sectarian doctrin, will not do. No possible chance should be left for the entrance of wolves. We are justly and properly demanding the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools, and it seems as if we ought to be satisfied if that demand should be conceded, together with the exclusion of every sort of religious ceremony, but there is still another "long-felt want." The Liberal teacher is forced to teach Christianity, though the school contains no Bible, and no religious exercises are even hinted at. But how? Because it is in the school-books. I hav never seen a set of school-books that did not contain more or less Christian teaching, some of them having a large number of Bible stories and quotations from that dear old book. Where the school-book says that God or David or Moses did so and so, or Christ is represented as the savior of all mankind, the teacher must allow these statements to pass unchallenged during the whole term or else declare them erroneous. If he does the former he indirectly teaches Christianity; if he does the latter he weakens the pupil's confidence either in himself or in the books, and this, as everybody knows, is extremely detrimental to the pupil's advancement. Besides, a storm is quickly raised among the patrons of the school. I speak what I know, for I hav spent some years in the schoolroom, teaching the "young idea," and I hav enconntered these embarrassments a considerable number of times. We want a new set of books, prepared by Liberals, and a new college. I trust that every friend to our cause who can aid even a trifle in the work of education will consider it a solemn duty to do so. This is not a secondary but a vital question. Success is ours if we can rouse the indifferent ones.

N. G. W.

Dr. Watts Not a Plagiarist.

If Dr. Isaac Watts were living, he would be amused to learn that he has been accused of plagiarizing from the pagan poets. In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Feb. 14th Mr. Butland parallels two of Dr. Watts's hymns with what he alleges to be two pagan ones written 2,000 years ago, and says they are exact copies. The exactitude fails to appear in both cases. But if Mr. Butland had been familiar with Watts's hymns, he might hav found an exact copy of the hymn which is erroneously alleged to be plagiarized from Æschylus. The hymn, which I quote from memory, runs thus:

"Lo, streaming from the fatal tree,
His all-atoning blood;
Is this the Infinit?—'Tis He!—
My Savior and my God.

"Well might the sun in darkness hide,
And veil his glories in,
When God, the mighty Maker, died
For man the creature's sin."

On page 194 of Taylor's "Diegesis" this hymn is paraphrased by changing, in the fourth line, "my Savior" to "Prometheus," and, in the seventh line, "mighty Maker" to "great Prometheus." And Taylor's prefatory remark has misled many readers to infer that the paraphrase is a translation of a poem by Æschylus. Taylor does not say so—only that "a worshiper of Prometheus would look in vain through all our collections of sacred poetry for a single idea which his own forms of piety had not suggested, or a single phrase whose reference would not seem to hav as direct an application to the god-man of Æschylus as to the Jesus of the evangelists."

ANTICHRIST, A.M.

P.S.—Monsignor Capel's first name, I believe, is not George. He, therefore, was not the intimate clerical friend of Buckle; but he is, nevertheless, one of the clergy whose evil influence, in Buckle's opinion, has far outweighed the good they hav done.

ANT.

Man's Inseparable Relation to the Land;

AND HIS NATURAL, INALIENABLE RIGHT TO ITS USE.

The relation of each person born into this world to the land is that of a helpless, new-born child to its mother. Man is the natural and highest developed product of the land, and can no more exist without its use than can the new-born babe exist without the use of its mother's breast. And how it is that mankind hav lost sight of this all-important truth, or rather up to this time hav failed to discover it, is a problem not very encouraging to thinkers. And yet, in my opinion, it is the basic and all-important problem that must be rightly solved, fully understood, and correctly reduced to practice, before any considerable improvement of the condition of suffering humanity can be accomplished. Why is it that this overshadowing problem has received so little attention in the past? And why do not the workers and thinkers of to-day giv it the attention it demands of them? Is it not largely chargeable to our educational institutions, or methods, that are handed down to us from generation to generation, both political and religious, that constitute church and state, cramp, mystify, and circumscribe our minds in a very limited circle by working on our fears, and holding up to us the terrible tortures that will be meted out to us by their imaginary vengeful God, if we dare think and speak beyond the beaten track and well-fixed boundaries of old conservatism, and its unscientific, uneconomic, unendurable, demoralizing, oppressiv institutions?

What hav these twin sisters of oppression done for humanity during the 10,000 or more years of paganism, and Jewish predominance, or the nearly 2,000 years of Christian existence? Hav they not fought science all along the line from its earliest introduction to the present time, and placed obstacles in the way of obtaining reliable, useful knowledge—the very means that nature has ordained to banish superstition, ignorance, poverty, violence, bloodshed, vice, and crime of every description from the face of the earth? These brazen-faced, self-constituted leaders, and teachers of old conservatism hav continuously and persistently taught the useful masses of mankind that their imaginary vengeful God has created this earth, and appointed them his special agents to teach mankind the will of God, and the way to heaven, and they took particular care that the lands were parceled out to the kings, priests, and their favorits, while they taught the people that it was sinful for them to think how they could make themselvs comfortable or happy here, but it was their highest duty, and very pleasing to God, to think how they could make themselvs very comfortable and happy after they were dead, and in that way they hav succeeded too well in keeping the useful classes from considering and understanding their rights and duties, and, thereby, throw off the cruel oppression that has so long been put upon them by said heartless leaders and teachers.

As the land is the only source from which men can draw their means of subsistence and supply their wants, and as the land is the product of nature, and a free gift to the race, what right or guarantee has any person to liv at all if they hav not the natural right to the use of as much land as is necessary to supply their wants?

Much could be said in support of the above axiomatic statement, but if there are any truths that are self-evident, the above, we think, belong to that category. And we are satisfied to submit them to the earnest consideration of all fair-minded persons.

WM. ROWE.

The Mormon Question.

In the "good old days of Adam and Eve," days when David ruled, and Solomon, and the historic kings of Persia and other oriental countries, polygamy was not only in the ascendant, but honor and glory and power here centered. The potentate who could own and support the most wives in royal magnificence was reverenced as master. The Old Testament of the Jews, that forms the substratum of Christian faith, nowhere condemns or punishes polygamy. Nor does the New emphasize an antagonism here. As to scriptural authority, the Mormons hav the vantage-ground.

It is right and just to antagonize every law and institution, whether biblical or not, which fetters our humanity. There can be no division of sentiment as to the moral status of Mormonism. It is an animalized religion, debasing especially to woman, in that she virtually becomes a slave in a harem. The question for solution is, how shall we meet it without doing violence to constitutional and inherent rights? The facts of history ought to make us considerate as to a policy here, for, among all nations and in all periods of civilized time, persecuting a sect has been the feeder of its growth.

What, then, can be done to uproot this oriental custom and practice? Bring to bear the evolutional force of a better education. Let the government step in and regulate the school system of Utah, interdicting polygamous instruction, and instilling into the affections of youth correct ideas of personal sovereignty till they can appreciate and apply the principle of sex equality under the law. Let the government also interdict the emigration thither of swarms of European proselytes, classes who are incapable of making any other shift for themselvs than to become Mormons in the "promised land of saints." Let the New England policy, just developing, be encouraged to settle and occupy Utah with men and women from the states who can plant there free and better institutions. These instrumentalities, operated by corresponding laws and judicial renderings, will, with patient endeavor, without the bloody hand of persecution, evolve into that individual freedom and republican fealty which constitute the nobility of American citizenship, and leave not a vestige of Mormonism behind.

J. O. BARRETT.

"Catholicism Ruined Ireland."

To Patrick Ford, Editor of The Irish World: I find the above quotation in a book notice in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Feb. 7th. For many years I hav cursed England as the sole cause of Ireland's calamities. If Catholicism, instead of England, has "ruined Ireland," I honestly wish to know it. And I honestly and earnestly wish a reply by your pen through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Your friend, Newport, Me., Feb. 10, 285. SEWARD MITCHELL.

The True Inwardness of It.

From Puck.

On the face of it this "Freedom of Worship" bill is an innocent affair. It simply provides for the representation of the various religious organizations among the spiritual instructors in a public institution of charity. It is really a specious scheme to enable the Roman Catholics to capture proselytes in the House of Refuge. This is a bold statement of the case; but it is accurate in spirit. If the bill becomes a law, every Catholic child living at the public charge may be put under priestly care, instead of taking his chances of morality, as at present, under the guardianship of the regularly appointed chaplain of the institution.

A Catholic certainly has the right to be as much of a Catholic as he sees fit. But the trouble with the Catholic is that he has an unholy desire to make other people Catholic. The House of Refuge is filled with children of various sects and races. The public's charity makes no distinction between these children. The object is to bring them up to be good and decent citizens. It has nothing to do with making them Catholics, or Methodists, or Episcopalians, or Jews. If they are sick, they may hav the religious ministry of their own or their parent's choice. But a public institution, supported by the taxpayers at large, is no place for the inculcation of sectarian doctrins. If the Catholics wish that their pauper children shall be brought up in the Catholic faith; if the Presbyterians wish that their pauper children shall be educated as Presbyterians, it is the business of the Catholics and Presbyterians to provide their own schools and houses of refuge.

This is a lesson which the heads of the Catholic church in America are very slow to learn. They cannot understand that their propaganda is an impossibility in this country; that it is absolutely opposed to the spirit of our people. Such attempts as the present they hav made over and over again. And such attempts are as unwise as they are cunning. Our newspapers hav, over and over again, told the public what this "Freedom of Worship" bill means. It ought to be called "A Bill to Afford Opportunities for Catholic Proselytizing in the New York House of Refuge." It is designed to giv the priests a chance to make Catholics of any children whom they may see fit to claim as their own—any children whose shiftless or ignorant parents may be bribed or bullied into declaring themselvs Catholics. And it is no part of the business of our state government to giv that chance to the ministers of the Catholic or of any other denomination.

Between Two Thieves.

A skeptic in the city of W———n, being nigh unto deatb, was persuaded to allow a clergyman to visit him. Either by mistake or otherwise, two men of God came, Dr. S——d, a Presbyterian, and Dr. N——n, a Methodist. They met in the parlor, and finding that each came on the same errand, it was agreed to let the sick man choose which he would hav. He sent down word that he wished to see them both. They entered his chamber, and at his request took seats one on each side of the bed. Then the sick man said, "This is the way I want to die—just as Jesus did, between two thieves."

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MARCH 14, 1885.

The "Freedom of Worship" Bill.

The efforts of the Catholics to induce the legislature of this state to license the Romish church to set up altars and confession boxes in our state reform institutions are more strenuous this year than ever before, and bid fair to be attended with success. The institution particularly aimed at is the House of Refuge on Randall's Island, to which are annually committed several hundred children of Catholic parents. The Elmira Reformatory and other state institutions already hav Catholic as well as Protestant chaplains. The existing state of affairs regarding religion in the House of Refuge is that ministers are invited to speak to the inmates on moral topics, and the board of trustees allow the "glittering generalities" of Christianity to be included among the teaching of ethics. The board claim that no sectarian dogmas are taught, but this claim is not in accordance with fact. The "Manual of Devotion," used in the services of the House of Refuge, recognizes Christ as the son of God, and refers to him as the "Comforter." This is orthodox Protestant dogma, and is opposed to the belief of the Jews, some of whose children are in the House. The Catholics, while allowing, that this, as far as it goes, is all right, contend that a great many points essential to true Christianity are omitted. The services are, therefore, sectarian. In addition, a Protestant clergyman resides on the grounds, has a salary and house rent free, besides being supplied with coal, gas, etc., at the expense of the state.

Three bills relating to this subject hav been introduced at Albany. The main difference between them is that one, in addition to compelling the managers of such institutions to provide suitable accessories for the performance of religion, also provides for the payment of priests. This bill has the support of Bishop McQuaid, of Rochester, who is one of the most impudently intolerant officers of the Romish church. It is not likely, however, to pass; the more moderate, or rather the more sly, of the supporters of the "freedom of worship" bill being content at this stage of the game to simply get a foothold in the House of Refuge. They will bleed the treasury afterward. All they ask is that the boards of managers be compelled by law to make provision for the different sects according to their needs. On the part of the Catholic church this means a permanent altar at which to celebrate mass, and a box with a little window in it for the priest to sit in when he hears confessions. More paraphernalia would be introduced on special occasions, but the altar and the confessional are indispensable for every-day use. These pieces of furniture must hav a room in which to stand, and the imagination need travel but a little way to see a full-grown Catholic church in every punitiv and eleemosynary institution in the state.

All these bills hav met with a determined opposition from the Protestants, who naturally are unwilling to share with the parent church their present monopoly of proselyting. But the Catholics hav shown themselvs very strong, and what they hav vainly attempted almost every year since 1872 seems likely to be accomplished in 1885.

There are several points of view from which Liberals may look on at this church squabble. From one point we may sympathize with the Protestants on the ground of a choice of evils; from another, we may condole with the Catholics, as they undoubtedly hav as good a right to preach to the criminal youngsters as the Methodists or Presbyterians; from a third elevation, a Liberal may really trust the Catholics will win; for in such event it may be hoped the discussion will be so extended as to reach every person in the state, and educate them up to take the broader view of Liberalism, that no religion whatever has any right or business in a state institution. It is to sectarian jealousy that we owe a great many of our constitutional inhibitions of a state religion; it may be through religious hatred that our institutions will be secularized. Rather than admit Catholics, the Protestants may possibly throw religion out altogether.

The position of Liberalism in regard to the conduct of these reformatories (made necessary largely through the criminality of the Catholic population) is the secular one taken by Girard in bequeathing his immense estate to the use of poor orphans, viz.: 1. A sound education as a preparation for some useful business in life; 2. A sound morality to be inculcated without admixture of superstition; and 3. To allow no professed minister of any gospel to be admitted for the purpose of plying his trade. The object of reformatories is reform. The persons committed to them all hav religion of one kind or another, and if religion does not keep its possessor from committing a crime while out of jail, it will not be apt to hav much influence on him in jail. And if the Christianity of the parents will not prevent their children from becoming residents at the House of Refuge, the chances are very slim that the Christianizing of the little paupers will in any way improve their condition or lighten the burdens of society.

The secularization of our governmental institutions and our laws is the object of the National Liberal League. The present discussion of these questions givs an opportunity for the officers of the League to present to the legislature of this state the secular and true view of the matter, and to ask that instead of opening the doors of the fold for more wolves to enter, those that are in may, with an admonitory kick, be turned out into the cold. For it is only by adopting the secular principles of Freethought that the state will ever dispose of the rival claimants to that saintship which entitles them to the earth, and which claim each is determined to enforce at the expense of honor, morality, and the perpetuity of our institutions.

Do They Want a Free Paper?

This is a queer old earth, and its inhabitants are queer people. If a "God" had made the world and the folks; had made the one good, and had endowed the other with free will and intelligence, the contradictions met with in life would be unexplainable. But as God has done neither; as the earth is the product of forces and laws no person can control; and as man is the creature of circumstances and environments—an evoluted animal, with a seemingly ineradicable tendency to atavism; with tens of thousands of false teachers pouring into his aquæductus vestibuli the melted lead of superstitious hate; and sometimes possessing self-conceit in inverse proportion to his knowledge, the explanation is given us by the philosophy of evolution, mental and physical. Still, philosophize as he or it may, the reformer or journal running counter to inherited notions must needs possess the wisdom of a philosopher, the patience of a Job, and the impervious covering of the pachyderm. But even then the arrows of dictatorial intolerance will sometimes irritate.

There seems to be just now an epidemic of ill-nature among the doctrinaires of Freethought. We can account for it in no other way than that it is the result of hard times. It is, however, rather cruel that THE TRUTH SEEKER should suffer by that for which it is in no way responsible. The eastern gentleman's declination to longer receive THE TRUTH SEEKER because we admit prohibition sentiments, has been followed by an order from a western gentleman to discontinue because "prohibition is my [his] religion," and he sees in our broad columns an "anti-temperance leaning." About six months ago a friend criticised us to the extent of withdrawing from the list for the reason that we "opposed Socialism." Another friend now comes to the front with the same criticism because "I [he] don't like its Communistic tendencies." Long ago a dynamiter dropped us because we opposed his methods, and awhile back an Englishman threatened to withdraw his support if he saw in our columns any further disrespectful allusions to the queen of England. We hav lost dozens of subscribers because we print Spiritualistic articles, and about the same number because the Materialistic philosophy finds expression from time to time. In the political campaign a Republican found fault with the bare statement in the "News of the Week" that a Democratic demonstration was larger than a preceding Republican parade; Butler men liked it, not that we refused to fling the banner of the People's Party to the breeze; a Democratic friend remonstrates with us for not going in for "Cleveland and reform." "Hard money" and Greenback friends both hav thought we were doing wrong in printing articles whose tendencies were toward irresponsible issue of money, or toward a financial slavery which was ruining the country. When the paper has been sent as a silent missionary to Christians they hav indignantly flung it back as being altogether too Liberal in thought. Yet an old-time friend "speaks not as we pass by," attributing to us illiberality in a criticism of phallism. The Children's Corner has been a feature—acceptable, as we had supposed—of the paper for many months. Only last week, however, a valued friend called upon us to giv his opinion that it was a waste of space. About a year ago, we remember a California gentleman stopped his paper, assigning as the motiv our reformed spelling. Another (whom we hav since helped to the extent of our power) was quite provoked that we could not see the way clear to go further. In short, every peg in in the language of fault-finding has had a threat or a withdrawal of subscription hung upon it. When Solomon alleged that there was nothing new under the sun, he hadn't read some of our correspondence. If the mercy of the Lord could hav spared him for the few centuries intervening between his time and the present, we feel sure he never would hav been betrayed into making that remark.

Most of these criticisms hav been printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and will no doubt be readily recognized. The per contra side has also been published—letters of cheer, commendation, and appreciation. Were it not for these last we should by this time be an irreclaimable pessimist, believing in our own total depravity, and entertaining the settled conviction that if there really were no hades, there ought to be one where Freethought editors might find congenial company; for dogmatic doctrinaires, we are convinced, would all go to join John Calvin in his precise right-angled abode of bliss, where everyone is of exactly the same mind, and differing sentiments are not entertained.

The evident thought of some of the individuals whose criticisms we hav given is that Liberalism is a sectarianism, not perhaps so narrow as Presbyterianism, but certainly a shade of thought with metes and bounds. That, however, is not our view; neither is it the opinion of a great majority of Liberals. If Liberalism is high enough to sweep the throned tyrant from the skies, should it also not be broad enough to protect everyone of his liberated children in the use of their recovered reason? Is Freethought merely a figure of speech, applicable to but one thing—religious heresy? We never hav thought so, and do not believe we ever shall. In the past we hav acted on the principle that everyone had the same right to differ from us and our correspondents that we and they had to differ from the church. As we hav done in the past, so shall we do in the future, and opinions of all kinds will continue to receive from THE TRUTH SEEKER a hospitality bounded only by the size of the paper, the compressibility of type, and the exigencies of the week. As it was in the beginning, so shall it ever be, truth-seeking without end.

Dr. Louis Elsberg.

In the recent death of Dr. Louis Elsberg, of this city, Freethought, as well as science, has lost an able advocate. Dr. Elsberg early left the church, rejecting all superstitions; and his scientific attainments enabled him to greatly aid in explaining the details of Evolution. His theory of plastidules has been adopted by eminent German evolutionists, and his microscopical researches were also relied on by biologists.

As a specialist in the treatment of the throat and larynx, and an author of books on those subjects, Dr. Elsberg stood foremost in the country. He was the first physician to introduce the laryngoscope into general practice in this country. Many appliances now employed in the treatment of throat diseases were invented by Dr. Elsberg. For several years he was professor of diseases of the throat and nose in the New York University Medical College. At the time of his death he was professor of laryngology and rhinology in the New York Polytechnic School of Clinical Medicin and Surgery for Practitioners, professor of laryngology at Dartmouth College, and physician to the Blackwell's Island Charity Hospital throat wards.

Dr. Elsberg was a friend of THE TRUTH SEEKER, a student and defender of Mr. Andrews's new science, a quiet yet determined opponent of theology in all its ramifications, and a progressiv man generally. Very rarely is it said of a man that the world is better for his having lived in it with more truth than it may be said of Dr. Elsberg.

Methodist Holiness.

The Pacific Herald of Holiness is published at San Francisco by the "Pacific Coast Holiness Association for the spread of Bible Holiness." Of course, the paper is holy. It is edited by one holy man assisted by three more holy men. It sells books and tracts on holiness, and also note-paper with holiness mottoes printed thereon. It publishes letters from little children who hav been sanctified by holiness, and from whom the "blood of Jesus has washed their sins away." It also prints "helps to holiness," the sixth of which is, "Don't debate, or you will be beaten." The power of holiness bands is described at length, and a sinful world is informed that the flesh and the devil hate holiness.

In all this we note that the Biblical methods are strictly followed, as per the following story:

"COLONEL INGERSOLL.—During his recent visit to Sacramento, Mr. Ingersoll was in a store talking with an Eastern acquaintance in business there. Two ladies entered and were introduced to Mr. Ingersoll by his friend. One of them remarked, 'I hav been very much interested in reading your lectures, Mr. Ingersoll, and I shall certainly hear you when you speak here.' The lecturer replied, 'Don't put too much dependence on what I say. I am paid for this.'

"Would that all who listen to him knew the advice which he givs to those in whom he feels an interest.—Ex."

The italic Ex. with which this is signed means "exchange." This credit is usually used by talented newspaper knaves who write something too mean for themselvs to own. When a lie is not unusually black they print it without compunction or credit. The chances are, therefore, very much in favor of that story having originated among some of the holy men who edit the Herald of Holiness.

Was it a prophetic insight which enabled the evangelist to so accurately picture them in John viii, 44?

The Perennial Struggle.

A short time ago an injunction was sought to restrain Philip Recher, the principal of the common school at Rogers Park, Ill., from preventing Stephen F. Ennis, a Roman Catholic, from attending school without participating in religious worship.

Judge Tully, of the Supreme Court of that state, held that under the laws of Illinois no form of religious worship can be compelled in the public schools, and ordered that the complainant call upon the directors, and if they refused to take him back, or if, after permitting him to return, they compelled him to participate in the worship, he would then consider the advisability of issuing an injunction.

This decision, it seems to us, is very inadequate to the necessities of such cases, falling far short of justice, and not in accordance with the spirit, if with the letter, of the educational laws of Illinois. The question should not be, Can forms of religious worship be compelled in the public schools? but, Can they be permitted?

We hav not before us the laws upon which Judge Tully based his decision, but the Illinois Constitution of 1870 is explicit in its refusal of state aid to church or sectarian institutions, and it would seem plain that the intent of the framers of that instrument was to totally separate religion and the state, which would necessarily prohibit not only all forms of religious worship, but Bible-reading as well. Section three of the Constitution relating to education declares that:

"Neither the general assembly, nor any county, city, town, township, school district, or other public corporation, shall ever make any appropriation or pay from any public fund whatever, anything in aid of any church or sectarian purpose, or to help support or sustain any school, academy, seminary, college, university, or other literary or scientific institution, controled by any church or sectarian denomination whatever, nor shall any grant or donation of any land, money, or other personal property ever be made by the state or any such public corporation to any church or for any sectarian purpose."

This is a definit restriction of the state from in any way supporting religious societies. It does not in so many words forbid the intrusion of religion into educational institutions controled by the state, and it may be that the framers intended to leave this loophole, but we think the design was to neither allow the state to aid religion, nor permit religion to fasten on the public schools and colleges.

It is contended, of course, by Christians that teaching the supernatural theories common to all Christians is not sectarianism. The legal validity of this point must be settled by the decision whether Christianity is a part of the common law of the land. In the face of the first article of the amendments to the United States Constitution, that "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion," this can never be admitted. The state judges who hav otherwise decided can only speak for their own states and by authority of their own state constitutions.

It is, then, a question of whether the states hav a right to adopt constitutions at variance with the national charter. The Supreme Court has not usually so held.

The Man with a Mission.

Mr. Robert R. Doherty is assistant editor of Dr. Buckley's Christian Advocate. Notwithstanding his Latin name, Mr. Doherty is undoubtedly of Greek descent. Last week on the day when nearly everybody was at Washington contributing to the Jeffersonian simplicity of President Cleveland's inauguration, Mr. Doherty was in his office gathering up great thoughts for an editorial on "The Alarming Prevalence of Organized Infidelity." Dr. Buckley sat in an adjoining room, with Cook's "Tourist's Guide" before him, dictating to his blond stenographer a letter from abroad. Mr. Doherty had just written, "As far back into the history of the past as we hav been able to penetrate," when his flow of ideas was broken in upon by the entrance of a short, stout, round-faced man, who wore clothes of clerical cut, and carried in his hand a high hat whose lease of style expired in a remote age. He introduced himself as the Rev. Mr. Bray, and struck an attitude while awaiting recognition. "Shall I Bray for you?" inquired the assistant editor. At this the plaster bust of John Wesley hopped off the mantel and fled out into the cold world, and a picture of the Last Supper turned its face to the wall to conceal the smiles on the faces of the apostles. Without noticing this succession of phenomena, Mr. Bray said gravely: "The Almighty has commissioned me to use moral suasion to remove President Cleveland. I am going to do it." Mr. Doherty was duly surprised and alarmed, but retained sufficient presence of mind to make a note of the fact that Infidelity, by reason of a neurosis, sometimes took the form of religious dementia accompanied by predisposition to the homicidal mania.

Holding his hands over the head of the assistant editor, the loon continued: "I do here and now solemly appoint you my lieutenant to aid and assist me in my divine mission." The assistant editor slid under the desk, and drew his chair after him.

Mr. Bray continued his exploration of the room. He soon struck a volume of Dr. Buckley's "Letters to Young Men," and then strolled into the adjoining office to inquire where the doctor's letters to young women could be obtained. Here he ran up against Mr. Phillips, publisher of the paper, and at once impressivly appointed him his second lieutenant. He then stalked majestically into the street.

Mr. Doherty thereupon emerged from his temporary retirement and, accompanied by Second Lieutenant Phillips, went in search of a policeman, who collared the inspired Mr. Bray and took him to Jefferson Market court. The prophet here explained the method by which he proposed to eliminate Mr. Cleveland from the presidential chair. "I did not intend," he said to Justice Welde, "to injure Mr. Cleveland. I would use no force. I would wave my hand and say, 'Stand aside,' and announce:

> 'The year of jubilee has come,
> Return, ye ransomed sinners, home.'"

The following lucid dialog occurred between the Judge and Mr. Bray:

Judge: "What is your name?"
Bray: "No name."
J.: "Where do you liv?"
B.: "No where."
J.: "What are you here for?"
B.: "Ask the policeman; he brought me here."
J.: "How do you liv?"
B.: "By eating and drinking."

The satisfactory and comprehensiv character of these replies convinced Justice Welde that this was a genuin case of inspiration, unequaled since the days of John the Revelator, and the inspired gentleman was therefore shut up in the lunatic asylum. While in the dungeon cell he further divulged his plans as follows: "Cleveland," he said, "may be good enough, but it is my duty to remove him by spiritual manifestations, and not by force. I am the herald of a new era. I will clean and straighten the crooked paths of the world. I'm a member of no political organization, but am working under divine authority." It has been ascertained that the Rev. Mr. Bray is a licensed preacher of the Methodist church, and belongs in Wilkes Barre, Pa., to which place word has been dispatched for his friends to come and get him.

When Mr. Doherty had seen the Rev. Mr. Bray safely suppressed, he returned to the office, fired his great article on "The Alarming Prevalence of Organized Infidelity" into the waste-basket, and at the suggestion of Dr. Buckley sent out a general alarm for John Wesley on a bust. He then turned the picture of the Last Supper into place, and sat down to pen an able demonstration of 'The Tendency of Freethought to Produce Insanity. At this the disciples in the picture grinned so broadly that the canvas was rent in twelve places.

Useless Additions.

The presidential oath is provided by the Constitution. The incoming president must say:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

There is nothing said about "s'helpmegod," nor any injunction to "kissderbook." Mr. Cleveland, however, ostentatiously saluted "a small morocco-covered volume, pretty well worn," which Bible "his mother gave him when he left home as a young man." It is said by a Baltimore paper that his lips covered Psalms cxii, 5th to 10th verses, inclusiv. It was a useless and silly addition to the legitimate form.

At the conclusion of his inaugural address our new president also felt called upon to add some useless words. "And let us not," he said, "trust to human effort alone; but humbly acknowledging the power and goodness of Almighty God, who presides over the destiny of nations, and who has at all times been revealed in our country's history, let us invoke his aid and his blessing upon our labors."

If he keeps this thing up, the people will think they hav got Lucy Hayes back again.

Not Atheists.

There was a meeting of dynamiters in Paris the other day called the Council of Eleven. Three American delegates were present. During the deliberations one of the American delegates wanted to "embrace the occasion" to say that they (the dynamiters) were not Atheists.

Is it possible that W. J. Gorsuch could be mistaken?

THE London Secular Review has just completed a reprint of Remsburg's Bible Morals," which has been running in that paper since last November.

THE announcement is made in a morning paper that a minister of this city is delivering a course of sermons on Christianity. Has preaching Christianity, then, in the pulpits supposed to be devoted to it, become such a novelty that its return needs to be heralded?

IN his sermon last Sunday Mr. Heber Newton said:

"Nature is busied with pushing on an organic ascent of life. This involves the displacement of the lower forms to make room for higher forms of life The successiv sets are told to clear their own places at the earth's table. It seems a rough, hard system, but what vastly greater hardships would be involved in any other system."

This is not Christian but evolution philosophy. Mr. Newton has evidently read Herbert Spencer's latest essays with attention.

COLONEL INGERSOLL lectured in this city last Sunday night on "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child." Among other things he said:

"The rich men will find that the time is coming when they will be judged solely by the use they make of their wealth. They will find that they must not go on piling up wealth until the tigers of hunger crouch ready to spring at the throat of capital."

Comte called this the "moralization of wealth." Mr. Ingersoll may now expect to receive a note from some one declining to attend his lectures on the ground of his "Communistic tendencies."

Letters from Friends.

SPRINGVILLE, UTAH, Jan. 24, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I would like to see you one and all in your establishment in New York, but this may never be. Still I am not debarred the privilege of writing occasionally. I feel interested in the success of the cause in which we are engaged, and shall do all I can to extend the truths of it according to my circumstances.

I desire to let you know that I am one of the laboring class of people, and fully half of my time is given in the fruit and garden business; my other work is in molding unburnt brick, or adobies, or whatever work comes along to do. Last year my peach and plum crops were a failure; my small fruits, good. This year I hope Mother Nature will soften the rigors of winter and frost, so as to do better by us. As it now is, I hav about all I can do to support my family and furnish them with the common necessaries of life. So we hav to do without many things that would make life agreeable, and content ourselvs with what comes along.

I hav not time or means at my command to do as I would like, yet I can do some little from time to time to extend the truth, and it givs me satisfaction to do so.

I borrowed and read lately a book by Thomas Paine, and, like him, I don't like the mystery, miracle, and prophecy business. Before long I expect to send for this book.

I want some of your missionary tracts to set people thinking and do them good; though most of them are afraid to read them, for fear of getting weakened in their superstitious notions, which they had rather hold on to, ignorantly thinking their salvation and best good depends on this course. Some others hav different motivs in view, and most likely some would lose money by it—their bread and butter would be cut short, as some one expresses it. They don't, in some cases, like to hear such reading as I do, and prefer to talk about something else, or argue against the truth. They hav their own notions and views which they hav been taught, and prefer to stick to them; but the young people are more free, thoug even some of them are warned to look out for Infidel writings. Yours with respect, LUKE WM. GALLUP.

DES MOINES, IOWA, Jan. 26, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year from Jan. 16, 1885. Times are hard, but can't spare THE TRUTH SEEKER; need it all the more as a counselor, which it truly is. Respectfully, D. H. CROP.

SALEM, OHIO, Jan. 31, 285

MR. EDITOR: Please find $5 for subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. I am delighted with the paper, and think it just all that can be desired—even altogether lovely. The discussions on Spiritualism are quite interesting. Yet I think the spiritual theory entirely invulnerable to all I hav seen, or expect to see, on the subject. Still I think I am eager for all I can find out against it. My strong hold in its favor would be the testimony of clairvoyants. Demonstrate possession of this gift and, to me, the witness is a competent one, subject, of course, to all possible criticism; in this view Andrew Jackson Davis is a strong witness. He blunders in his deductions often, no doubt, but his testimony to facts witnessed is, I think, quite reliable generally. And Spiritualism partakes so of the emotional that I am certainly quite in love with it, for what were life without emotion? Thine ever, JOHN MCDONALD.

MR. MACOLM APPRECIATED.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Jan. 22, 1885.

J. G. MALCOLM, Dear Sir: I hav just read your article "Money.—No. II," in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and feel like writing you to let you know that I appreciate it. I wish every man and woman in America could read and understand it. Believing you to be a sound reasoner, I wish you would write on the tariff question. I think that needs more attention than it is getting. Wishing you a long and happy life, I am

Fraternally yours, H. H. HUTCHESON.

MURRAY, O., Feb. 2, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Please accept my sincere thanks for a continuance of THE TRUTH SEEKER on trust. The condition of affairs in the valley has not changed, with regard to a settlement, since my last writing. The syndicate, like Pharaoh of old, is still unrelenting. And the miners, with a determination worthy of the cause, are still resolute.

How the present trouble will eventually terminate, time alone will develop. But it is to be hoped the time is not far distant when the means shall be discovered, and effectually administered, so as to adjust the present trouble in a satisfactory manner to all concerned; and, also, that a reign of peace shall follow with all its attending bliss.

I will state that the friends of the cause of labor throughout the country, who hav contributed toward the support of the Hocking Valley miners, hav their heartfelt thanks. Being a miner myself, I know whereof I write.

With your permission I will say that I am the recipient of a present from Mr. John R. Kelso of two books, "The Deity Analyzed and the Devil's Defense," and "The Real Blasphemers." I can positivly say the first is the finest book of the kind I ever read. It is both philosophical and theological. The philosophical portion of the work is gotten up in such a manner as to, in my estimation, convince the most prejudiced that the idea of an anthropomorphic or personal God is absurd. The author shows that were "God" a finite being, and since space is universally conceded to be infinit, it would be utterly impossible for him ever "in all the ages of eternity, to pass, even in one single direction." Having conclusivly shown that a finite being is totally incapable of "creating and sustaining the absolutely boundless universe," he then calls the reader's attention to the nature of an infinit being; and points to the fact that, if an infinit being exists, he must of necessity hav existed some time prior to the creation; if for a short or limited time it makes him a finite being; it must, therefore, hav been an infinit or eternal period, and since duration is universally admitted to be infinit, it renders it utterly impossible for God to ever arrive at the creativ point. For, as the author says, "It is just as utterly impossible for anything to come in from the bounds of space or duration to a point within it, as it is for it to go out from such a point to such bounds."

It will thus be seen that the author givs his opponents two chances, finite or infint, and, in my estimation, whichever horn of the dilemma they take they will be completely annihilated, for no one can stand against his logical reasoning, as he depends entirely upon "science, reason, and common sense."

The theological part of the work shows the reader that the author is well read in "holy writ." I will just say it is Paine's "Age of Reason" improved. In this part of the work he leaves his theological opponents no ground to stand upon.

Of the "Devil's Defense" I will say it is composed of 196 pages of poetry. It represents the devil pleading his own case before the court, and he does it in such a manner that, were the jury not all "bought," they would be compelled to bring in a verdict of "not guilty."

The "Devil's Defense" is well worth the price of the book itself. I would advise all those who hav not read the above work to procure it at once, if able. It will be sent, postpaid, from THE TRUTH SEEKER office on receipt of price, $1.50.

In regard to the "Real Blasphemers" I hav not finished reading yet, but judging from what I hav read of it, and the author's other works, I know it cannot be anything but good.

I will take the present opportunity to second Mr. Seward Mitchell's motion published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 24th. With well wishes to you and all friends, I am

Respectfully, D. E. LEWIS.

[Since the date of our correspondent's letter, we hear that the strike in the Hocking Valley has failed, the men going back to work.—ED. T. S.]

PEOA, UTAH, Feb. 4, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Picking up a United States coin this morning, I was struck with the absurdity of the "legend" in the eagle's beak: "In God we trust." Wouldn't it be a good thing to call the attention of the proper authorities to it, and hav them either drop the first letter of the word trust, or, if it won't do to change the motto, hav them substitute a goose for the eagle? It is too bad to hav such a free and independent bird putting its trust in anything so fabulous as the Christian God. It is just such legends as the above, supported by the clergy, and sanctioned by law, that are causing hundreds of poor people all over the country to drop their hard earned "in-God-we-trust" coin into the coffers of the priesthood.

C. P. ROBBINS.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Feb. 12, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Our benighted city was not favored with a visit by Colonel Ingersoll this trip. Perhaps the colonel thinks "they are joined to their idols; let them alone."

This may be about the condition here at present, but let us hope to redeem Providence yet.

The idea of a summer Tent strikes me as just the thing.

Thos. M. Doutney, a "reformed drunkard," held forth here for several seasons on "Gospel Temperance," occupying a tent in summer and a Music Hall in winter. With the aid of variety and musical entertainments, sandwiched in with recitations, prayers, exhortations, gyrations, and various other refreshments, he made quite a financial success; but by misrepresenting his financial progress, he lost the confidence of the people and had to emigrate.

He drew large audiences and temporarily reformed several "terrible examples," who, by the way, are in a sadder condition than ever. One of them (a fine organist) has, since Doutney's departure, written some doggerel rhymes under the title of "Slippery Doutney," in which he shows forth in glowing colors the reformer's propensity for breaking promises, cheating musicians, etc.

Confident that an Infidel Tent, being novel in itself, would draw even larger audiences than Doutney's scheme, I hope we can hav one here for a while next summer.

Having read Brother Reynolds's invitation to musicians in THE TRUTH SEEKER, I was inspired with a strong desire to participate in the good work, and should there be a call for an orchestra which would include a slide trombone, I would be pleased to receive a call to compete with the enemy's notorious "Gabriel."

I also know of several other professional musicians who would be pleased to help to giv Freethought a start. If references are required, I can giv the best. Would like to spend the summer in such work, even at a sacrifice of more lucrativ employment.

Will herein subscribe my mite, fifty cents, to the Tent Fund, and twenty-five cents for THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. The portraits, each, singly, will be worth the price of the work to me. Yours sincerely, W. P. BLYTHE.

STANTON, NEB., Feb. 4, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I am the only one that takes THE TRUTH SEEKER at this place, and I like it very much; would not do without it for all the papers that I hav ever taken. I am doing all that I can to spread the light, but find it very hard. This is a very strong orthodox community. The village has about 800 inhabitants and only four god-houses, with the fifth one coming. It is a luxury that I think the town will hav all it can do to afford. The churches hav been keeping revival meetings all winter, so as to giv the people here a place to spend the long evenings. I went one night, and a D.D.'s son delivered up a prayer (as they term it), and here is what he said: "O Lord, enable Brother Fox to make this congregation understand that the moon is not made of green cheese. Amen." The church-members said that the poor young man was a little deluded, but I said not much more deluded than they were. Well, that dose of prayer was too much for me, and I will not go again until I recover, and that will not be very soon. There are a few outspoken Liberals here, and I hav been trying to hav them subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER, but they complain of hard times. My paper goes from one to the other until it is almost worn out. In my next letter I will inclose a few names of parties which I think may subscribe.

Wishing your paper the success which it deserves, I am, for truth and humanity, PHILIP HELMSRICK.

QUITE A PLEASANT EXPERIENCE.

CINCINNATI, O.

MR. EDITOR: A lady of the Spiritualistic faith paid me a visit quite recently. Her name is C. F. Allyn, and a most pleasant and intelligent person she is. Her remarks are sensible, and although we differ as to the final destiny of man, yet a most friendly feeling existed between us. Although T. Winter is a firm and unflinching Materialist, yet he is no bigot, and knows well how to treat and respect others' opinions. The lady's visit will not soon be forgotten. Such visits are bright little spots to charm the path of life and smooth the rough edges of social rust. The latchstring of this Infidel home is on the outside, and the genuin lover for Freethought finds the hand of friendship extended in the most cordial manner.

I think my faith is not very weak if I say that this lady is not far distant from the solid philosophy of Materialism; and oh! that she and millions more of her sex would embrace this grand and scientific truth! Then would they no longer be hoodwinked, either by priests or mediums. Yours, for the spread of eternal truth, T. WINTER, Materialist.

BOULDER CREEK, COL., Jan. 18, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $5 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER. The truth is necessity. If I was only in easy circumstances I would pay promptly and gladly the highest price for THE TRUTH SEEKER and send you a check for several hundred dollars' worth of Freethought books, but alas! I am powerless to do so.

Still, as long as I can raise the means to get the goed angel of Freethought and universal liberty (THE TRUTH SEEKER) I must hav it. It is not the heralder of a sword, as was Jesus Christ, if we take his own imputed words for it, but of the purest, the brightest flag of liberty ever waved over the human race, each Demand of Liberalism being a star the brightest that at present illumines the social heavens, leaving science, the great sun, in the center, whose powerful rays are fast dispelling the clouds from our religious and political sky, especially those black, bloody, barbarous, churchly ones of superstition. No, not of a sword is it heralder, but of peace, happiness, and good will to all men who are so disposed, but with grit enough of the right kind to stand square up and face the music in self-defense, undaunted by the angry orthodox legions. I am a man of sixty years, and will hav to walk ten miles to-morrow or when I go to mail this letter, and there is no cause for which I would perform the feat more cheerfully.

WM. L. WORLEY.

EUREKA, CAL., Jan. 24, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Your regrets in regard to the probable downfall of John Swinton's Paper are misplaced. The paper is a curse to the laboring classes, although John Swinton is a friend to labor. But he is a crank, and has no experience in the line in which his paper is running. There is no sense in running down capitalists. A man who would better the condition of the laborer must induce the laborer to help himself, not with dynamite, as E. C. Walker proposes; the laborer must become more honest, more educated, more economical, and must form co-operativ societies, by which means he can share in the profits which otherwise go into the pockets of capitalists. All strikes must end finally in a reduction of wages, and papers who support strikes ought to end with the strike. I hav been a wage-worker for more than twenty years, and know whereof I speak. Liberal papers spring up like mushrooms and die about as soon. This is not from any want of appreciation on the part of the Liberal public; it is from want of judgment on the part of the editors. Most Liberals hav minds of their own, and do not need the brains of outsiders to furnish them with ideas. Like myself, so long as a Liberal paper is not dogmatic they will sustain it; but when an editor assumes the dictatorship his paper will go down. Of all the Liberal papers I hav read, THE TRUTH SEEKER comes the nearest to being a truly Liberal paper.

ROBERT GUNTHER.

BLOOMINGTON, WIS., Jan. 12, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose herewith $3, in payment for my paper for the year 1885.

Allow me to congratulate you on the able and efficient manner in which you hav conducted one of the best Freethought journals in America during the time it has been under your direction. I want to see THE TRUTH SEEKER liv and grow in strength. You are battling for a grand cause—the cause of truth; fighting down creeds for the advancement of deeds. Continue to deal hard blows against church dogmas, church bigotry, and superstition. Point out to them the rotten foundation on which they stand; and may the present year be one of progress unprecedented in the history of Freethought.

This place is not a stronghold of Christianity. We hav three churches, but one could very easily do all the business. Their main strength is their female membership. Take them out, and there wouldn't be a corporal's guard left. But they cling like a hungry dog to a bone. I suppose they fully believe they are responsible for the sin of the human family and want to make amends for it in some way.

They believe fully in the teachings of the Bible. They believe all contained therein was placed there at the dictation of a being who dwells somewhere in the clouds and who holds the destiny of the human race in his hands.

They believe that in the beginning he made the world in six days out of nothing, and he lived where there was nothing before the world was created. They believe in a being unchangeable, seeing the end from the beginning.

He created a man and a woman, and pronounced it a first-class job. He knew all about the fall, and the misery that was entailed on the human race in consequence. But he said he was sorry for what he had done; and what is the next act in the drama? He picked out six or seven of the best he could find from the lot, and he drowned all the race like a lot of rats—beings he pronounced perfect and of his own creation! Oh, what a far-seeing and humane God! Ye God-worshipers, put on your sackcloth, sprinkle ashes over your heads, and bow in humble submission to a being who does all things well and who never made a mistake!

They believe it was an act of justice and mercy when God commanded Joshua to slay the Midianites, sparing none, old or young, male or female. They believe he suspended the action of nature, so that the red-handed murderer could complete his work of slaughter.

They believe he covered the whole world with water at the time Noah and his family took shelter in the Ark, and took good care of the snakes, lizards, toads, and scorpions, and a thousand other worthless creatures; and only man is vile.

They believe in the big fish story, where Jonah lay for three days snugly housed in a whale's belly, when the whale was taken sick at his stomach and got onto land somehow to throw him up in order to save him the inconvenience of swimming to shore.

God commanded Jonah to warn the Ninevites that their city should be destroyed in forty days—no postponement on account of weather, and no conditions attached. Did he destroy it? Oh, no, he never changes his mind! I think he served Jonah a shabby trick, and if I had been he I would hav resigned then and there.

They believe in the fox story, that three hundred foxes backed up to Samson to hav a firebrand applied to their caudal appendages.

They believe that forty or fifty children stood around while two she-bears were eating them up. Is so severe a punishment were inflicted in this age of the world for so slight an offense, I fear that there would be few children left in the land.

"God is no respecter of persons," says holy writ. But we read that he took a couple of fellows directly to heaven; they did not hav to pass through the dreadful ordeal of death.

Elijah is represented to hav been taken up by a team of horses. Just imagin the old tramp whisked into space by two fast horses dispatched from heaven's livery stable to convey him to his home in heaven. This shows a little of favoritism.

But the most wonderful scheme of all for the redemption of the human race was the miraculous conception. That was wonderful indeed. Just think of a child being born who had no father! Mary was a smart girl, undoubtedly, but suppose Joe had never divulged his dream. In that case the whole thing would hav been a failure and Mary's character ruined. So that dream served a double purpose.

Much of the Bible is absurd, ridiculous, and positivly bad, but you are commanded to believe it all or be damned. My Christian friends, can you believe it all? Can you hug it to your bosoms and roll it under your tongues as a sweet morsel?

I would advise you to renounce such foolish trash, giv way to your reason, and mount to a higher sphere.

I hav no doubt if you liv a good moral life here you will not be impelled to take a back seat in the next world (if there is such a thing) because you did not contribute a part of your hard-earned salary for the support of priests and ministers who never rendered an equivalent for the amount of bread they hav taken from starving people's mouths.

P. WOODHOUSE.

FOREST GROVE, OR., Jan. 22, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: In your letter you state that if I send you five dollars now it will entitle me to THE TRUTH SEEKER for two years. But I cannot afford to do it. I honestly owe you three dollars for last year, and I want to send you $2.50 in advance for this year, which will make $5.50, for which you will find inclosed post-office order. I may get behind occasionally, but my intentions are all right. I don't mean to bum any of my Liberal reading matter. I hav just finished reading the last letter that D. M. Bennett wrote from Ludlow Street Jail, before going to the Penitentiary in Albany, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Aug. 2, 1879. I think it would be well for every Liberal to read it occasionally, as a gentle reminder of what will be in store for them if the God-in-the-Constitution party gets into power.

I see that Brother Leiser feels highly gratified over the result of the vote in Washington Territory, taxing church property, etc. I also say amen. Also I see quite a goodly number of the Liberal element think this settles the question of female suffrage. I wonder if they stop to think that people on this Pacific slope are more liberal than the people of Puritanical New England, remembering that we are only as a drop in the bucket. I wish the time was at hand; but is it best to be in a hurry? I think this a good time to make haste slowly. A few more lectures by Colonel Ingersoll, a few more returns of the jolly, good-natured, logical Dr. J. L. York, a few more years' publication of THE TRUTH SEEKER and good old Boston Investigator, then the millennium is at hand. If you can only get the people to read and to think, the jig is up—the game is won.

But let us keep a stiff upper lip; we are getting more respectable. When I came here, sixteen years ago, there were but two Liberals beside myself. Of course, they were considered awful men, hell-bound, you know. Now you can count them by scores. But a great many of the Liberals' wives (not all) belong to the church, roped in and saved, you understand. It must be rather consoling, as Colonel Ingersoll told us, when here, that they could look down from heaven and see husbands and wives, sisters and brothers and friends, all gone—all down there, all down there. How refreshing!

Again, the first Liberal lecturer that put in an appearance here was B. F. Underwood. He could scarcely get a place to lecture in; finally did squeeze into the school-house. But how changed! Time brings us many strange bedfellows. We now hav the finest Liberal hall in the state, with lots of stanch Liberals that can't be bulldozed, and hav been honored with the greatest living orator of this or any other age, Col. R. G. Ingersoll. I intended to say something about the land reformers back here, but time and space won't admit. Some claim to hav spent forty or fifty years in the struggle; that men hav no more title in land than they hav in atmosphere. What nonsense! "Land cranks" is applicable. But we hav the same element here, with thousands of acres of government lands attainable. Why don't they go and possess it? They don't want the virgin soil, they want to wait until some hard-working land-grabber fells the forest, makes fences, builds houses and barns, plants orchards, and, in short, gets ready to liv. Then come along some of these lazy land cranks, and swear by the eternal you must divide. Too much like the young man that we read about in the big book—"sell all you hav and giv to the poor." This doctrin is suicidal; it offers a premium on laziness. The idea that this world owes us a living has beggared thousands, and the sooner they learn the contrary the better. It acts as a mill-stone about the neck, still dragging them down. When will the people learn that industry, economy, and common sense are supreme? I hope that THE TRUTH SEEKER will be continued at least a thousand years. Of course, I don't expect to be a subscriber that long, but you can count on me, without any tomfoolery, until Gabe toots his horn.

Yours for Unity, Peace, and Plenty, J. G. TODD.

POMONA, CAL., Feb. 6, 285.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 31st is an article over the signature of S. R. Day, of Oto, Iowa, that should meet with the approval of every Freethinker. The article in question is on the subject of donating for the building of churches by outsiders. It has been my practice for thirty years to refuse to giv anything for the building or the support of churches, although in the town of Pomona there has been erected, in the past year, five of these useless and costly "spook houses," and three more are contemplated. No one outside of them can consistently giv money, or in any way assist in building up institutions wherein nothing of a practical nature in this world is taught; where all teaching is about the unknowable; where superstition supersedes facts; where common sense has no weight as against the parson's authority; where all of our manhood is lost because of the supposed presence of a God; where all love for the natural givs place to the fear of the supernatural; where no correct or methodical principles are taught or practiced; where faith destroys reason; where morality does not count as against dogma; where the past and the present life is ignored for the future; where it is taught that a thief or a murderer may be saved while the Infidel will be damned, no matter what his moral character may be; that to murder for Christ's sake insures a crown on high—a residence in the New Jerusalem; where none but cranks will congregate to destroy what little of nature there is left in them; where but one idea will prevail—only enjoyed by lunatics. Brilliant idea, this future state of the Christians—this heaven; still more brilliant is their hell. I am at a loss to know which affords him the greatest pleasure, the saved or the damned. Viewing this monstrosity in this light, we would be placing ourselvs in a false position if we giv money or aid in the support of the churches.

H. L. SHAUG.

ALTOONA, PA., Feb. 8, 285.

MR. EDITOR: We see men who hav the courage to shake off the shackles of superstition and come forth from the church and plant themselvs squarely and firmly upon the principles of Freethought. But there is another thing that they do not do, and that is to shake off the follies and inconsistencies of party politics. We hav two great political parties in this country, viz., the Democratic and Republican. The Democratic party had an infamous record previous to the war, by upholding slavery, which regarded the negro as a "chattel," and labor as a curse. The Democratic party in Congress voted against the "God-in-the-Constitution" amendment, not because its members were any less bigoted than the Republican party, but on account of its state rights doctrin. But it cannot be denied that the Republican party is the church party. Nearly every preacher in the North is a Republican. In our recent "hot" campaign there was entirely too much church. Every influence was brought to bear to hav Blaine obtain the Irish Catholic vote, and it partially succeeded, and would hav fully succeeded had it not been for "Rum, Romanism, and Rebellion." The paper which was written and signed by a number of Buffalo preachers in regard to Cleveland's morality did not hav much weight, but had it been written and signed by common, ordinary citizens, the result might hav been otherwise. It should hav been the last thing of its kind to come from preachers. In the first place, it is impossible to elevate labor unless we get rid of priestcraft. In the second place, we must take a higher ground politically. However much we hav clung to either the Democratic or Republican parties, we must shake off our allegiance thereto, and be no longer misguided, but take part in the great political reconstruction for human rights which is fast drawing nigh. WM. J. BURNS.

EAST RODMAN, N. Y., Jan. 25, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed three dollars to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER for 285. I did intend to send for some books, but, having my crop on hand yet, and prices being so low, I shall hav to defer it until better times. Being anti-protectionist, I do not look for any material change very soon.

I am glad to see that the Liberal League has got under way, it seems to me, with a good foundation, and every subscriber to the Campaign Fund should consider his or her gift as an annual donation. I shall my mite, which I will send before long.

As the objects of the League are secular, I think that the name should correspond more fully with them. It looks now as if Canada, though starting later in the race, may distance us in the accomplishment of Secular objects. Here party prejudices exist to such an extent as to neutralize all efforts toward accomplishing anything of moment to the cause. There is probably a steady growth of healthy skepticism that in time may liberate us from the thralldom of the designing priesthood. Its progress will be slow unless precipitated by the church, which seems more and more probable.

There is no doubt that the Catholic and Protestant churches are preparing to shake hands over the "bloody chasm," and as fast as they do you will find them Republicans.

A good many shook last fall, and no doubt many more will four years from now. But as the "sheep" gather on one side, no doubt the "goats" will assemble on the other, so we shall be none the worse off.

I think the next administration will be a constitutional one, i.e., the Constitution will be again in force as against the will of a party.

Well, let us hope that times may become better; that is something that affects us all.

THE TRUTH SEEKER still remains as good as ever, filled with the choicest reading and information, and I wish I were able to send a good many trial subscribers, but I am not, and will hav to content myself with being able to raise enough cash to pay my own subscription, though a little late.

Yours truly, M. E. ROSE.

STELLA, WASH. TERR., Jan. 23, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: As Brother Winter has made the inquiry whether his communications are distasteful to your readers, I, for one, reply, No. I hav read Mr. Winter's letters with great interest. I am greatly in favor of harmony and organization, and I fear both will be endangered if free discussion is not tolerated in THE TRUTH SEEKER. No Spiritualist who truly believes will fear Brother Winter's darts, and no true Liberal, whether Spiritualist or not, will oppose open and free discussion. Judging from my standpoint, Mr. Winter has had quite as many paper wads thrown at him as he has thrown at the Spiritualists, but other people hav a right to their opinions as well as I, and this is the principle that should actuate all Liberals. I heartily indorse every word of Mr. Mitchell's letter to Mr. Hill in your issue of Jan. 10th; I will never join the hosts of superstition to assist in depriving ourselvs of the few liberties we hav. If anything is accomplished in the temperance cause, it must be by education and Liberal laws. The world is already governed entirely too much. D. F. HOWARD.

WANSHIP, UTAH, Feb. 22, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I want to say a good word for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885, just received. It contains nice pictures of thirty or forty of our prominent lecturers, writers, and officers of the National Liberal League, which is almost like an introduction to them, and will giv their writings a new interest. Also abounds with matter invaluable to every Freethinker. I would not take five dollars for mine, if I could not get another for only twenty-five cents. Yours truly, WM. REYNOLDS.

BISHOP CREEK, COL., Jan. 15, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just received the beautiful lithograph of the Bennett monument, which was far superior to what I had expected. I supposed it to be the same as the one printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER some time ago. I should like one of the smaller wood-cuts, if you hav them, to put in my scrap-book.

I will remit payment soon, when I send for Miss Wixon's new book.

She is a woman I admire for her fine intellect and generous nature, as shown to me in her writings, especially in her private letters to me. It is a pleasure to be appreciated by such great and loving souls.

It is not those who see us most that know us best. Great minds, like lofty mountains, are best seen and contemplated from a distance; since, like mountains, they are mostly cold and angular on near approach, while sources of streams of living truths that refresh the world. L. HUTCHINSON.

WILLIAMSBURGH, COL., Feb. 2, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Through the work of our friend, Alexander Macdonald, we secured O. A. Phelps to giv us three lectures in the Odd Fellows' Hall at Coal Creek, on January the 26th, 27th, and 28th. The subject for the first evening was, "What is Infidelity? or, the Crimes of the Church." As all sensible persons know that this subject cannot be hammered out in one evening, it was given in a broad way. Second and third evenings, "The Fall of Man; or, Could the Infinit God make a Mistake?" Mr. Phelps handled this subject well, and received much applause. We had good attendance and good order. It was a change of diet for some of the orthodox Christians.

Mr. Editor, I would suggest that a portion of THE TRUTH SEEKER be devoted to giving a short biography of persons and and sketches of events, as in THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, to be given in THE TRUTH SEEKER in the corresponding week

Respectfully yours, HENRY BEICHLING.

HELMVILLE, MONT., Feb. 14, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2, which I think will about pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER up to date. Please discontinue to send it to my address. I don't like its Communistic tendencies. J. W. BLAIR.

WARRENSBURGH, N. Y., Jan. 25, 282.

MR. EDITOR: I send for Mr. Remsburg's "Bible Morals," Paine's "Age of Reason," and "Ingersoll Catechised."

I am the only outspoken Infidel in this place. There are some ten or twelve Freethinkers in town, but from regard to family and other relations they keep silence. I lend them my papers, and try to persuade them to send for THE TRUTH SEEKER, but they think that their companions are church-going people, and that it will not do. I hav made two conversions in the town adjoining this—a young man and his wife. Both are bold and enthusiastic.

Oh, that I could wake up these here that pretend not to believe in the fallacies and dogmas of the orthodox, to procure a place and, by the help of the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, or some of the League officials, to get a good speaker here.

WILLIAM WILCOX.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Three Little Boys.

Three little boys all in a row,
George, and Robbie, and Jim;
Two are round and fat like dough,
And one is tall and slim.

What are they good for, these three boys,
In pinafore and jacket,
Littering up the room with toys,
And making such a racket?

'Tis "mamma" here, and "mamma" there,
And, "Mamma, where's my whip?"
And, "Pa, you know you promised fair
That you'd buy me a ship."
All day long, 'tis "rattle ker jing,"
Sliding the banisters down;
Hiding balls, and marbles, and string
In folds of mamma's gown.

'Twould do you good to see them eat—
Twelve times a day, I guess—
Bread and molasses, eggs and meat,
Enough to make a mess
For twenty sailors right from sea,
Or a band of gipsies bold;
But little they care, these boys three,
When full as they can hold.

And how they wear out shoes! Dear me!
Kicking at stone and sod;
It costs a pile, as you can see,
To keep these boys well shod.
Always in motion, never still,
Oh, how they try one's nerves!
Especially when they slyly fill
Themselvs with the best preserves,
And cry all night with stomach ache,
Restless on little pallet;
While doctor's bills for their sweet sake
Drain cash from papa's wallet.

But, by and by, these boys will be
Three brave and stalwart men;
And all their roguish pranks we see,
We'll not remember then.
Their brawny arms and hands so strong
Our trembling steps will stay;
With tender care, with mirth and song,
They'll gently cheer our way.

And calmly as the flowers at night,
Kissed by the breezes free,
We'll sweetly pass from mortal sight,
Blest by these brave boys three. S. H. W.

Peppercorn Stories.

ALL ABOUT A SKELETON.

Polly Peppercorn was an odd little girl—odd in her appearance, odd in her dress, odd in her speeches, and, in fact, odd in all her ways. By the word "odd" I mean that she was different from other little girls of her age. She was very short of stature, and was somewhat deformed with a hump on her back and a large wart on one eye-lid. She had bright brown eyes, and an abundance of soft, silky hair, that was never confined by comb or ribbon. She wore the brightest of pink dresses all the year round, and was herself just like a bit of rosy light.

Everybody liked Polly Peppercorn—which was a name she had given herself one day when she was particularly peppery in her remarks. She also applied different names to her playmates and acquaintances as her fancy dictated.

She was never sent to school, on account of her delicate health, but she studied and read a great deal at home.

Children were very fond of Polly Peppercorn, and one day when several little ones were playing about her, she said all at once:

"Harry Coalskuttle, why did you not hav four eyes instead of two?"

Harry rubbed one eye with his chubby fist, and answered, "I don't know; s'pose I'd see too far."

"Why didn't you hav two mouths instead of one, Molly Mulleinleaf?"

"I guess I'd eat too much," answered that little lady. "I eat a lot, I do."

"What are your ears made for, Sammy Stripedgrass?" she asked of that little boy. "And what makes your hair so red, Tommy Clovertop?"

They laughed, and did not answer.

"Peggy Primrose, do you know what you're made of?"

"Thugar and latheth, I geth—they thay I'm thweet ath thugar and latheth. I'm too thweet for anyfing."

"I perceive you are very ignorant," said Polly Peppercorn. "I shall proceed to enlighten your little minds. Will you pay attention?"

"I will," they all exclaimed, joined by Daisy Dewdrop and Johnny Gotobed.

"In the first place, to begin at once, you hav each one a skeleton."

"Oh!" exclaimed Molly Mulleinleaf, "hav I such a thing as that—a horrid skeleton?"

"Yes, and a physiology, too. But I am going to tell you all about yourselvs, because I think it is time you should know, and we'll begin on the skeleton. How many bones do you think are in your skeleton? You do not know, of course, so I'll tell you—there are more than two hundred. Now, what is your head, you little chickweed?" and she tapped Johnny Gotobed on his forehead.

"Please don't stare me out of countenance, Miss Molly Mulleinleaf," she then continued. "Your heads, my dears, are bone boxes."

"Then they're not block heads," said Daisy Dewdrop.

"By no means. The bone box on top of your shoulder is a jewel case, and it holds a very beautiful jewel, of greater value than diamonds. It is called the brain. It also contains four other jewels—the organs of the senses—seeing, hearing, smelling, and tasting. This beautiful jewel box contains, also, twenty lovely pearls. By and by, as you grow older, there will be twelve more pearls, making thirty-two in all. What do you think of that, Tommy Cloverleaf?"

"I hope he will not destroy his pearls by chewing tobacco," said Sammy Stripedgrass. "I don't mean to, for one."

"Pearls are teeth, then, in the bony jewel case," said Frankie Muttonchops. "Oh, I see—I see, as the blind man said."

"Well, now, I shall not talk any more, but some other time I'll tell you more about the skeleton. Don't you like it, you little pink ears?" and Polly Peppercorn roguishly pulled the delicate little ears of Peggy Primrose.

"I think it ith b'u'ful," said the little girl, but Johnny Gotobed, had slid from his chair and caught the cat, while Harry Coalskuttle was trying to see her pearls by stretching open her mouth. Miss Pussy Whitefoot wouldn't stand that, and she just lifted her paw and struck Johnny Gotobed on his lip and made the blood come.

Polly Peppercorn laughed and said he must not take such liberties with Pussy Whitefoot, or he would find that her pearls were sharp as well as white.

"Me-ow? Me-ow," said the cat, as she went scampering into the woodhouse.

[NOTE.—The Peppercorn stories will be continued from time to time, as space will permit. —ED. C. C.]

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—AN EX-CENTRIC CHARADE.

"That which issues, flows, proceeds,"
My whole in definition reads;
But from the center outward going,
As from one spring two streamlets flowing.
To left behold an appellation;
To right, a government or nation.

REKAB SEMAJ.

2.—A CONCENTRIC CHARADE.—STICKS, SNAKES, SUGAR.—MOSES'S MAGIC OUTDONE.

Not alone from the maple, the beet, or the cane,
Their saccharine sweets must our posers obtain,
But an early spring plant in the garden oft grown,
From of old on the epicure's table well-known,
Must yield, when our art to obtain it is bent,
Of sugar five-eighth's of one hundred per cent.
As prepared for the market in white tender sticks.
You can out-magic Moses' old snaky tricks.
With your right hand and left take a stick by each end,
Then straight to the center your magic must tend,
When the right turns to sugar as if in a dream;
While the left part appears to the eye as a beam,
A beam that would answer for the mast of a ship—
From a shoot of this plant, from a mere garden slip.
Now two-fifths from the last of this beam if you break,
Like Moses's wand what remains is a snake.

Irwin, Ia. J. K. P. BAKER.

3.—NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

The whole, composed of ten letters, is "a squint."

The 1, 2, 3 is a fish.
The 6, 7, 5, 8, 9 is a vessel.
The 9, 4, 10 is a bird.

Pittsburgh, Pa. H. E. JUERGENS.

4.—PRIZE PUZZLE.

By an iceberg, a mother worth having, I sit,
On the ice blocks so still in giant-like splendor,
These strong arms I can, I see very plain,
At a flash hav them locked round my child to defend her,
No hats or caps I cumbrously wear,
I never got me even a cap to embroider.
Calls I make on the seals, bringing ermine to brown,
And to discard a "Monarch" they try to avoid her.
Let me cold water drink, and never at rum
Or whisky indulge, with my cub, ebriety.
I've no stockings to darn, I can barefooted go,
Can you dig up thirteen with propriety?

For best solution sent by mail to "Chemist," Boyland Block, S. Div. Grand Rapids, Mich., a neat pocket perfume case will be sent. Poetical solution, suitable for publication in THE TRUTH SEEKER, preferred. Open two weeks.

5.—ENIGMA.

I am composed of eleven letters.
My 1, 10, 7, 8, 10 is to vex.
My 2, 1, 4, 2, 9 is a collection of maps.
My 3, 5, 8, 6 is a part of a whip.
My 4, 11, 8, 8 is not more.
My 5, 3, 1, 2 is the name of a girl.
My 6, 7, 3, 3 is the name of a boy.
My 7, 8, 6, 11, 9 is not fuel.
My 8, 5, 9, 6 is a part of a house.
My 9, 7, 3, 1 is a mineral product.
My 10, 4, 3, 5 is the name of a girl.
My 11, 7, 1 is a motion of the mouth.
My whole is a large city in one of the Gulf states. SAM B. REED.

Aliceville, Kan.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, FEB. 28, 1885.

1. SWORD
WIVER
OVULA
RELIC
DRACO

2. Ovid. 3. 45 acres and 50 square rods.

4.

There is a reaper whose name is death,
And with his sickle keen
He reaps the bearded grain at a breath,
And the flowers that grow between.

Our lives are rivers gliding free
To that unfathomed, boundless sea,
The silent grave;
Whither all earthly pomp and boast
Roll to be swallowed up and lost
In one dark wave.

[A. LAURIE SAILOR.—Yours received. Many thanks for your kindness. Puzzles will appear in their order.—ED.]

FULL SOLUTION TO "A HARD NUT TO CRACK," MARCH 2D.

Let the farm "Semaj" had, before his kind act,
Be simply x square, a very plain fact;
Now, the land he had left, I freely declare,
You can easy imagin to equal y square.
Let a square now stand for the ten-acre lot,
And you're ready to figure the size of the plot.
The fence of the first, now, 4 x would be,
The fence of y square just 4 y you see.
The difference in length of 4 x and 4 y
Can be only a, it is plain to the eye.
And therefore, one-fourth of the character a
Equals x minus y as plain as the day.
X square, minus y square, too, you hav got;
It equals a square, the ten-acre lot.
Now, the difference of squares of any two numbers,
And it's one of the strange mathematical wonders,
When divided by difference of numbers one uses,
The quotient the sum of those numbers produces.
You now hav the sum, which equals 4 a;
To eliminate y is simple child's-play,
And the value of x in a's you hav got,
When squared givs the size of original plot.
The a is now squared, coefficient also,
Restore him his value, ten acres, you know.
When the work is completed, "Esprit Fort" reckons,
Forty-five acres and five thirty-seconds.

Grand Rapids, Mich. ESPRIT FORT.

Correspondence.

SOUTH BOSQUE, TEX., Feb. 8, 285.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and he thinks it is the best paper published. I love to read the "Children's Corner;" it has such good stories and letters in it. My father bought "Apples of Gold," which I like to read, published by the editor of the "Children's Corner." He will also buy the "Story Hour" for us children. I am fifteen years old. I would like to correspond with some of the girls that write for the "Corner." I hav never been to school much. We liv in a new country, where schools are scarce. My father has a large farm, but he keeps bees. We hav 120 stands of bees. Bees do well here in Texas. I go to hear Mr. J. D. Shaw, of Waco, lecture some times. I went to a big meeting last summer. I saw the people eat the "Lord's Supper." They called the bread the savior's flesh, and the wine they called his blood! It is horrible to hear sensible people talk so. If it was his flesh and blood, I would not eat and drink it; it would be so much like some kinds of animals. Your friend, ELLEANOR J. MARRS.

[Elleanor is quite right in her estimate of the "Lord's Supper." A piece of her mother's good bread and butter is much better.—ED. C. C.]

KALAMAZOO, MICH., Feb. 11, 285.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Seeing so many other little boys and girls writing in the "Children's Corner," I thought I would write one. I am living with my grandparents now. I came from Minnesota last fall, where I was living with my father and mother; but out there they did not hav the advantages necessary to get an education, so I came to this place; and we hav splendid schools here. Colonel Ingersoll was to lecture at the Academy of Music, but we had a fearful snowstorm that blocked up the railroad, so he could not get here; and he is engaged to be at another place this evening, so we cannot see him at all; and I suppose the Christians will call it "special providence" that he will not be here. We are all Spiritualists. We hav sent for the THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, and I am so eager to get it I can hardly wait. I want to see the faces so bad. But of the 37 portraits grandpa and grandma hav seen 29, including you. Grandpa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Liberal, so I hav plenty of chance to read the Freethought news. I hav five brothers and one sister at home, and the youngest is named Willie Bennett after that great man, D. M. Bennett.

But I guess I will stop now, for I am afraid my letter is getting too long. Yours, for liberty, E. D. TUCKER.

[We are glad to know we hav such brave little thinkers among our children. There is no need to fear for the future, since such bright minds are to be actors in it.—ED. C. C.]

MCLOUTH, KAN., Feb. 21, 1885.

MY DEAR MISS WIXON: My mamma bought your book, "The Story Hour," and I like it very much indeed. I did laugh when I read "A Bumble-Bee's Thanksgiving," and should like to hav seen Widow Magee's children eat. I go to school, learn geography, am in the Fourth Reader, and in fractions. It has been a very cold winter in this state—much colder than winter is in England, where we used to liv. The houses here are all made of wood. In England they are built of stone or bricks. We lived on the east of Cornwall, and often sat on the rocks and watched the Atlantic waves come rolling into the bays. I liked the sea—it was so pleasant to run about on the beach and dig sand. I am sorry to be so far away from the water now.

I am ten years old, and the youngest of a family of ten children, all living. We came to America in the fall of 1882. I ride my papa's pony now, but hav a colt of my own to break next May. Mamma takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I like to read the Children's Corner, but the puzzles are too hard for me to guess.

From your little friend,
G. H. T. STEEPER.

[Thanks, dear, for your nice letter. Write again sometime.—ED. C. C.]

PRINCETON, IOWA, Feb. 14, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I notice some pictures of "The Story Hour" in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I read the Children's Corner, and I like it, and saved that much money ($1.25) to buy your book, "The Story Hour." I am ten years old. Next time I will write a better letter.

Very respectfully, ROBERT LAMBACH.

[The boy or girl who saves money to buy good books will grow up to be useful and honorable members of society. We hope to hear from Robert again.—ED. C. C.]

CYNTHIANA, KY., Feb. 22, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I read the Children's Corner sometimes. I am taking the Youth's Companion now, and it keeps me busy to read it, although I like the Corner in THE TRUTH SEEKER very much. I go to school in the country, and my teacher's name is Miss Sue Talbott. I like her very much. School will be out 22d of May. There are only 100 days of school, and I am going to try to go every day without missing, I liv a mile from school and walk every morning. Hoping this will find you well, I will close.

Yours faithfully, ALLIE B. BEAMER.

GREENVILLE, OR., Feb. 15, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I am not a very good hand to write pieces for papers, you must excuse this. I think THE TRUTH SEEKER is a very nice paper. My youngest brother is ten years old, and I am the youngest girl My father is about fifty-six years of age. He has blue eyes and light curly hair, and he is kind to us all. My father and mother are both Infidels. We had a concert the other week, and I sang a song by myself. They all said it was nice. Yours sincerely, JEMIMA BENNETT.

PALATKA, FLA., March 1, 1885.

Answer to puzzle No. 3, "A Hard Nut to Crack," in Children's Corner of THE TRUTH SEEKER, Feb. 28, 1885: 45 5-32 acres.

General rule for all similar questions: Whatever quantity may be cut out, under the conditions and requirements given, the original piece must always be just 4 33-64 times that quantity.

Demonstration will be given if desired.

EQUATION, Solver.

Care Box 201.

The Nutmeg-Tree.

If there are any attempts to cultivate nutmeg-trees in hot houses, they are not frequently made. Perhaps it would be worth trying.

The nutmeg-tree flourishes near the equator. It is raised from the nut in nurseries, where it remains till the fifth year, when it puts forth its first blossoms. It is then set out permanently.

The trees are planted thirty feet apart in diamond order. They begin to bear in the eighth year, increasing for many years, and they pay a large profit. There is no nutmeg season, Every day of the year shows buds, blossom, and fruit, in every stage of growth to maturity.

The nutmeg is a large and beautiful tree with thick foliage and of a rich green color. The ripe fruit is singularly brilliant. The shell is glossy black, and the mace it exposes when it bursts is bright scarlet, making it one of the most beautiful of the vegetable kingdom.—Youth's Companion.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE EIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXO . Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellen work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles.

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ORTHODOXY.

A Lecture by

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

"The clergy know that I know that they know that they do not know."

One of the best documents to circulate ever printed. Every man, woman, and child in the United States should read it. Every reader of the paper should send for a dozen.

Price, singly, 10 cents; twelve for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

INGERSOLL CATECHISED;

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Fanciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies for a dollar. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Traditon to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.
46tf

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersol and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00 ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

WAIFS AND WANDERINGS

A NEW AMERICAN STORY,

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

AUTHOR OF

"GOLDEN THRONE," "PROMETHEUS," "INGERSOLL AND JESUS," ETC.

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cts.

"A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day.—John Swinton's Paper.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK.

"ANTICHRIST."

Proving conclusivly that

THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST

His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth

TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,

AND

THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A BOOK FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

PRICE, $1.25; TWO COPIES, $2.00.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

FACTS.

A Magazine Devoted to the Statements of Mental and Spiritual Phenomena.

Single Copies 10 cents.

39tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THIRD EDITION.

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

1 Vol. Royal 8vo. Cloth. About 600 pages.

Price, - - - - - - $3.00

Sent postpaid, on receipt of price, Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE

HISTORY OF FREEPHOUGHT,

Its Rise, Progress, and Triumph.

BY CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS—Sec. I.: Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II.: What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III.: Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV.: Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V.: Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

Price, $1 25

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.

Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY.

OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who have helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

PRICE, - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York,

Poetry.

Giordano Bruno.

CHAMP DE FLORE, FEBRUARY 17, 1600.

No crown of sweet celestial glory thine;
Thou didst but toil to win the nobler one;
Thy martyr's crown of truth is not divine—
One brighter yet immortal thou hast won!
They brand'd thee, those howling curs of hate:
They hoo'ed, hissed thee, brutal, thoughtless crowd;
They hounded thee to meet thy martyr's fate—
Yet thou didst walk to death serenely proud.

Aye, e'en from those whom thou hadst to lead,
While daring persecution's bloody fang,
Alas, from those—or was it Christ's foul creed?—
Those maddened bigots' hissing curses rang.
Yet didst thou turn with scornful, proud disdain
From that dark, blood-polluted thing,
The cross, which could hav offered life again;
But death and hell for thee had lost their sting.

And so they bound thee to the awful stake,
And there the coward priest's of brutal creed
Stood by, with mocking prayer for Jesu's sake
To witness this their own infernal deed.
Yet from thy lips there came no craven cry;
But, breathing words of scorn with dying breath,
Thou might'st hav taught their Jesus how to die,
So brave, so fearless, didst thou meet thy death!

Then rose the crackling fagots' lurid blaze,
And fire-tongues leaped like blood-red fiends of hell
To quench thy noble life; then smoke and haze
Hung o'er the spot where noble Bruno fell.
Then, as that awful smoke of death rolled by,
There gleamed amid the smoldering embers red
A few bleached crumbling bones: then rose the cry,
"The cursed heretic to hell hath sped!"

A few white ghastly bones, a moldering skull,
Which redly gleamed with ev'ry stirring wind—
All that was left, now burning grim and dull,
Of Bruno's fearless heart, his noble mind.
Their hellish work was done; the fire-tongue's thrust
Had pierced thy brain in crimson scorching glare;
Then brutish hands seized on thy sacred dust,
And scattered it, 'midst solemn curse and prayer.

Thy ringing voice was hushed; the funeral pyre
Burnt out thy silver tongue of magic sway;
But, Bruno, yet thy martyr's crown of fire
Givs thee dominion o'er our hearts to-day.
And from thy scattered dust sweet flowers hav sprung
Which breathe a pure, sweet fragrance round thy name;
And to thy martyred memory shall be sung
Songs of high praise and never-dying fame!

—H. Gordon Swift in the Secular Review.

Books.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC for 1885 is worth twice over the 25 cents asked for it.—Winsted (Conn.) Press.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC, for 1885, is not only a gem of the printer's art, but a useful addition to our Liberal literature. The enterprise of our TRUTH SEEKER friends is commendable.—Light for Thinkers.

This is the second year of this publication, and a better one than its predecessor. It contains, besides the records of births and deaths, and of notable events, filling twelve pages of the book, twenty-one subjects treated of. Also portraits of thirty-seven prominent Liberals, and a cut of the splendid monument erected to the memory of D. M. Bennett.—Kansas Blade.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885 is a work which, if Liberals could see it, few of them would be without. Its calendar makes notes of those very things Liberals so often wish to refer to, and is a vast fund of valuable information. It has the benevolent face of Thomas Paine as its frontispiece, and, besides, has the lifelike portraits of thirty-six leading Liberals. If Liberals could but once see this ANNUAL, the demand for it would not cease till every Liberal (and lots of Christians, too) had been furnished with a copy—Nonconformist.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885 is now ready to be mailed for twenty-five cents. It contains articles written by leading Freethinkers, and is illustrated with portraits of prominent living Liberals, to which are added three illustrious dead—Thomas Paine, D. M. Bennett, and Wm. Denton. Besides these the list contains: Colonel Ingersoll, T. C. Leland, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, James Parton, Parker Pillsbury, S. P. Andrews, W. F. Jamieson, G. H. Walser, John Peck, J. H. Burnham, J. R. Munroe, H. L. Green, Chas B. Reynolds, Chas. Watts, W. S. Bell, S. P. Putnam, J. E. Remsburg, Courtlandt Palmer, Lucy Colman, John R. Kelso, Elmina D. Slenker, Amy Post, Helen H. Gardener, Mattie Krekel, Horace Seaver, Luther Colby, J. P. Mendum, J. L. York, Chas. P. Somerby, E. M. Macdonald, Juliet H. Severance, Susan H. Wixon, Mrs. H. S. Lake. No Liberal should fail to get a copy of this valuable ANNUAL. Address TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York, N. Y.—Missouri Liberal.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC for 1885 is an excellent publication, and every Freethinker should hav a copy. It is very neatly printed, and, besides containing the usual calendar of an almanac, it givs names and dates of the birth and death of celebrated Liberals or Freethinkers, making it useful for reference. Another interesting feature of this ANNUAL is a number of articles by well-known Liberals of the present time, together with their portraits; so if some of them should never be seen personally by our readers, their pictures may here be found and preserved; and, generally speaking, they are quite a good-looking class of lecturers, authors, and editors. —Boston Investigator.

THE STORY HOUR, a profusely illustrated and entertaining story book for children and youth, by Susan H. Wixon. Published by The Truth Seeker Company, 23 Clinton Place, N. Y. While highly entertaining, these stories are well calculated to assist in building up a useful character.—Nonconformist.

THE STORY HOUR, for Children and Youth. By Susan H. Wixon, author of "Apples of Gold," "All in a Lifetime," etc. New York: Truth Seeker Company. Price $1 25.

This is the best collection for children we hav yet found—a book that should be in every family. There are between thirty and forty stories of child-life. These stories are well written, and are adapted to the comprehension of children. They are pleasant and interesting, entirely free from every form of dogmatism and superstition. In addition to the stories, which are of themselvs worth the price of the book, there are near a hundred beautiful illustrations, many of them full-page pictures. The book is neatly printed, in large, plain type, and handsomely bound. We would recommend it above any book of the kind now known to us. Independent Pulpit.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE WINSTED PRESS: Will you allow space in your columns for a few words of commendation of Miss Wixon's book entitled "Story Hour," for children? I hav been favored with the perusal of this book, and wish to giv it my unqualified approval. It contains something over two hundred pages, clear type, splendid paper, and numerous pretty illustrations. The stories are not fables or fairy tales, but are drawn from life and real character, and are made up of just such incidents as are daily occurring in families and among children, showing a moral that cannot fail to impress a child's mind for good.

Among the best stories the book contains are "Cressbrook Cottage," showing how by industry, sobriety, and economy a pleasant home from small beginnings as well as a competence for old age may be gained; and "Meddlesome Molly," showing the trouble which children bring, not only upon themselvs, but upon the entire household, by meddling with what they should not touch.

"Alone in an Unfurnished House" is the title of a little story used to illustrate what it is to liv in a body with an uncultivated mind, and that without study and application the mind may be as blank and cheerless as the walls of an unfurnished house.

The book from its opening to its closing is full of beautiful and useful lessons for the young, and too much cannot be said in its praise. It is published at the office of THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York city. I hav one for a gift for a little girl in whom I am interested, and whoever invests money in like manner will not throw it away. —E. Anne Hinman in Winsted (Conn.) Press.

BIBLE MORALS.—We hav received from THE TRUTH SEEKER office the above work, John E. Remsburg, author. The book is a masterly and convincing array of facts, with copious quotations from the Bible, proving that book to be a very poor moral instructor. "Twenty crimes and vices," says the title-page, are sanctioned by scripture. In his indictment he charges it with falsehood and deception, cheating, theft, and robbery, adultery, and prostitution, murder, wars of conquest and extermination, despotisms, intolerance, and persecution, injustice to women, unkindness to children, cruelty to animals, human sacrifice, cannibalism, witchcraft, slavery, polygamy, intemperance, poverty, and vagrancy, ignorance, idiocy, and obscenity. Mr. Remsburg, in our opinion, very much more than makes hi case, and we vote to convict the old harlot and libertin of all the charges. Liberals should hav ready answers to all questions touching Bible Morals, as they are the most potent weapons against bigotry and superstition; and they can find a flood of them in this book. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER office, New York.—Kansas Blade.

CHRISTIANITY A REWARD FOR CRIME.—This is a pamphlet of 29 pages published by THE TRUTH SEEKER Publishing Company and by O. B. Whitford, M. D.—a gentleman we never heard of before; but he writes well and makes a strong case against the "great moral instructor." Price 10 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.—Ibid.

Obituary.

At this place, on Feb. 28th, Fannie Edith Enderton died of scarlet fever at the age of two years, ten months and twenty-five days. She was the pride of her parents, and was known only to be loved.

Her parents are both of Liberal views, but not being able to get a Liberal speaker at the funeral, they tried to induce a minister of the gospel to officiate. The Rev. Mr. Miller declined on account of the disease. Everything the child had worn during her illness was removed, and she was lying in her little coffin, and that [the priest should refuse on such grounds was more than was looked for, even in a preacher. Those present sang—"Rock of Ages cleft for me," then carried her to her final resting-place, and no useless prayers to an unknown god were offered up. C. E.

New Windsor, Ill.

THE

AGNOSTIC ANNUAL FOR 1885.

Agnosticism and Atheism, Charles A. Watts.—Pessimism and Physiology, C. N.—The Rationale of Agnosticism, G. M. McC.—Islam; or, The Universal Hymn, Albert J. Edmunds.—Agnosticism and Theology, Charles Watts.—Bruno of Nola: A poem, Lara.—Mars Hill in London, Moncure D. Conway (Review of Harrison-Spencer Controversy).—The Philosophy of Agnosticism, Ignotus.—Agnosticism and Theism, W. B. Carpenter, M.D.—Reply to Dr Carpenter, W. B. McTaggart.—The Council of Ten, Thomas Mead.—The Messrs. Facing-Both-Ways of Science, Edward Aveling.—Agnosticism and Christianity, F. Sydney Morris.—Darwin and Theology, Charles C. Cattell.—The Antiquity of Man, W. W. Collins.—Scraps, A. M. D., etc Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen. $1 00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By WILLIAM MCDONNELL, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.

The Darwins. A Domestic Radical story. By Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God By Mrs. J. E. BALL. 25 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office,

NOW READY!

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED

LITHOGRAPH

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, 22½ x 28½.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

MIND AND MATTER.
AN Independent Eight-page Weekly Spiritual Journal.

J. M. ROBERTS, - Editor and Publisher.
BURLINGTON, N. J.

Devoted to the Advocacy and Elucidation of Modern Spiritualism; and to the Promotion of Reforms in Religion, Politics, Ethics, Social Customs, Industrial Methods, and Educational Tendencies.

Terms, Invariably in Advance:

One year, $2 00; six months, $1 00; three months, 50 cents; single copies, 5 cents.

Sample Copies Free.

ORTHODOX HASH
WITH A CHANGE OF DIET.
REVISED AND ENLARGED BY THE AUTHOR.

IN NINE PARTS AND COURSES.

1 A Word from the Cook.—2 Choice Bits for the Hash.—3 Seasoned with Satan to the taste,—4 The Chopping-Knife.—5 Hash, First Course.—6 Hash, Second Course,—7 Hash. Third Course.—8 Change of Diet, First Course.—9 Change of Diet, Second Course.

WARREN SUMNER BARLOW,
Author of
THE VOICES AND OTHER POEMS,
Price, 10 Cents. The Truth Seeker

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

COMEPLET WORKS, in One Volum 5.00.

D. M. BENNETT'S WORKS.

ADDRESS THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

A Truth Seeker Around the World. Four large volumes. With a steel-plate engraving of the author in Vol. I., and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price $1.50.

A Truth Seeker in Europe. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. Giving some account of the International Freethinkers' Congress held at Brussels, to which Mr. Bennett was a delegate, followed by a description of what he saw in England, France, Holland, and Italy. The letters from Rome alone are worth the price of the book. With a steel-plate portrait of the author. 850 pages. $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity, between D. M. BENNETT and Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY. This book has had a very large sale, and is a splendid work for Freethinkers to loan to Christian neighbors. 550 pages. Price, $1.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED. Jesus the Lord God Creator of Heaven and Earth. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

What Objections to Christianity? A discussion between D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR, divided into the following theses: 1. Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.

2. Miracles and supernatural achievements hav been as fully and truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

3. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

BENNETT affirms; MAIR denies. This is an exhaustiv discussion. Price, $1.50.

Trial of D. M. Bennett in the United States Circuit Court upon the charge of depositing prohibited matter in the mail. This givs a full history of this celebrated case, and shows what monstrous injustice was perpetrated upon MR. BENNETT. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. 5 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Deacon Skidmore's Letters. First Deacon of Zion Hill Baptist Church, giving many church incidents and his evolution from Christianity to Liberalism. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Book of Chronicles of the Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh: also the Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. Cloth, $1.00

The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. 10 cents.

The Great Religions of the World. 10 cents.

Open Letter to Samuel Colgate. 10 cents.

Jesus Christ. Considered as an Infidel. 10 cents.

An Hour with the Devil. 10 cents.

Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds. 10 cents.

"REPUBLIC."

[Published in the rapidly growing young city, on Longfellow's "mountain or the prairie," Pipestone, Minn.]

Eight pages, weekly, $1.50 a year. Contains the news of the day, short stories, scientific miscellany, literary selections—but best of all, the REPUBLIC is unqualifiedly, uncompromisingly opposed to the LIQUOR TRAFFIC! It puts LIBERTY AGAINST LIQUOR! It opens its columns to Free Discussion. It challenges all opponents to meet it on the burning question of our time, PROHIBITION! The plea, that legal Prohibition annihilates PERSONAL LIBERTY will be met and refuted. All opponents to Prohibition will be accorded the right to reply. This is the WORKINGMAN'S REPUBLIC. And an advocate of WOMAN SUFFRAGE. When the mothers, wives, and daughters vote there will be an end to the RUM CURSE! When women vote we will hav a true Republic, and never before. The REPUBLIC is published to disseminate these principles. Shall we receive your aid?

Send all remittances to

W. F. JAMIESON, Editor and Publisher,
PIPESTONE, MINN.

SEEDS.

CHEAPEST, Pure & Best.

Gardeners trade a specialty. Packets only 3c. Cheap as dirt by oz. & lb. Postage or Exp. paid.

50000 Guides

FREE. Send your address for my most Beautiful Illustrated Garden-Guide ever printed. R. H. SHUMWAY, Rockford Ill.

WRITTEN CARDS.—For 25 cents I will send one dozen elegantly written plain white cards; gilt edges, 30 cents; one dozen different styles of cards, 35 cents. Send stamps or postal note. Do not send coin.

Address

1t9 Station "D" New York city.

PROSE POEMS

And Selections,

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued.

It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author.

The work is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it.

In the more elegant styles of binding, this volume is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.

In workmanship the volume is a masterpiece. The type is large and beautiful; the paper heavy and richly tinted; the presswork faultless; and the binding, as perfect as the best materials and skill can produce. The book is quarto in size, and contains 248 pages. No item of expense has been spared to make the work worthy of author and public.

PRICES:

Silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side,	$2 50
Half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style,	4 50
Full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine,	7 50
Full tree calf, highest possible style and finish,	9 00

Sent to any address, postpaid, on receipt of price. THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

Man, Whence and Whither.

By R. B. Westbrook, D D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.

1 vol, cloth. Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S

Popular Jewelry Store

Rochelle, Ill.

A FEW OF MY PRICES;

Solid silver stem-winding American Watches, hunting or open case; 2 oz. 7 jeweled, $10; 3 oz., $11; 4 oz $12; 5 oz. $14. Same cases with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13.50, $14.50, $16.50. Same case with full (15) jeweled movement, patent regulator, $17, $18, $19, $21. Same cases, with full jeweled adjusted patent regulator movements, $22, $23, $24, $26; key wind, $2 to $5 less; for best cases, silver caps and gold joints add $1.50, and for best filled gold cases (warranted for 20 years) add $10 to best silver cases, making a 11 jeweled hunting (filled case) stem-wind quick train watch only $28; same for ladies, $23. Ladies' solid gold stem-wind watches, latest styles, good American 11 jeweled movements, 10 kt, $24; 14 kt, $32; same full jeweled, $32 and $40—for fancy engraving add $3 to $5.

Prices and specifications for finer ladies' and gents' watches, including all the finest, richest, and most elaborately finished watches in the world, sent upon application.

Watches cleaned for $1; main springs, $1. Bank time-locks, chronographs, music boxes, etc., repaired at lowest rates, and all work warranted the best in the world or no pay.

Best steel spectacle made, $1; genuin pebbles, $2; good common, 25 cents. Best tripleplated teaspoons, $2; tablespoons, $4; knives, $1.75; forks, $1.75—all per set of six.

Parties desiring silverware, jewelry, diamonds, etc., for presents will do well to order sample package on selection and save money. Cash will be refunded on all goods not satisfactory.

Watches, etc., may be safely sent in unsealed packages per registered mail, and will be returned at my expense. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

P. S.—Stop over and see me when near Rochelle, Ill.

A NEW BOOK OF DIRECTIONS
FOR
CLEANSING THE BLOOD,
And Curing all forms of Disease that the Human Family is Subject to,
Without the Use of Any Medicine Whatever.
By Professor Nathaniel Pierce.
Price, 30 Cents.
6tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Five numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humoug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y8

ONE MILLION COPIES will soon be sold TWENTY YEARS OF CONGRESS—By James G. Blaine. The only history of our Government from 1861 to 1881. Hon. John S. Wise, M. C. from Va., says: Whoever takes it up, no matter whether he be Mr. Blaine's friend or enemy, will never put it down until he has read the whole." $200 per month to good agents. Apply at once, The Henry Bill Pub. Co., Norwich, Ct.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

Will Cure all Forms of Disease Without Medicine.

CONSULTING ROOMS,

471 WEST MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Something for Invalids to read and study over—Stop Drugging and try Nature's Remedy, MAGNETISM.

For years past it has been known to the profession that Magnetism and Electricity were powerful agents for imparting vital force and energy to the worn-out sufferer from disease. Many humanitarians in the profession, thinking more of the alleviation of suffering than they did of the code of ethics by which they were bound, have resorted to magnetic treatment as a last resort and found themselves astonished at the effect upon their patients. They had been taught that medicine was an absolute essential in all cases, and that that failing, the patient must die, as nothing more could be done. Here and there an advanced thinker has flung aside the tie which bound him to his dogmatic brethren and has resorted to other and more scientific methods of treatment. As a result many, having broken the bonds which bound them to a system as barbarous as it was unscientific, have used their best energies to devise means for the alleviation of human suffering. Here and there the wondrous power of MAGNETISM was established, and many diseases hitherto classed as incurable readily submitted to its mild but potent influence. This agent to the intelligent observer was found everywhere. Being, as it is, the very essential of all life, it was found that the human body when in a diseased condition was almost bereft of this vital principle. If we can supply this vital force to the worn-out body the patient will get well.

Ah! but how is it to be done, says the physician. Science, however, came to the rescue, and solved the problem. Here and there throughout the world are fields of what are known as magnetic ore. It was observed that the ore, when carried upon the person, was found to be a safeguard against disease, and to this circumstance we are largely indebted for magnetic wearing apparel, for it was an easy transition from carrying magnetic ore to covering the body with permanently charged magnets, placed in garments fitted to every part of the body. Since the first introduction of magnetic appliances as a curative, there has been a number of these so-called magnetic garments foisted upon the public by men whose sole object was gain. Unscientific in construction, and having little if any magnetism in them, their life was of short duration; it was long enough, however, to demonstrate that when constructed upon scientific principles there was scarcely an ailment that human flesh is heir to that would submit to their healing influence.

THE EUREKA MAGNETIC APPLIANCES are superior to everything of a similar character heretofore offered to the public, being the only scientifically constructed appliance in the market; it is now two and a half years since they were first offered to the public, and during that time we hav treated thousands of patients, and not a single case of failure to receive benefit reported to us, while we are in daily receipt of testimonials of cures from all parts of the country. We know that disease cannot exist where these garments are worn in quantities as advised by us.

To all who may be afflicted with any of the following complaints, we say unhesitatingly, the Eureka Magnetic Garments will cure you:—Paralysis, Rheumatism, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Bleeding at the Lungs, Spinal Disease, Gout, Asthma, Bronchitis, Congestion of the Kidneys, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Loss of Energy, Heart Disease, Constipation, Consumption, Prolapsus Uteri, Chronic Peritonitis, Cancer, Ovarian Tumors Syphilis, Epilepsy, St. Vitus' Dance, and all form of chronic invalidism.

PRICE LIST.

Lung Invigorators,	$ 6 00
Gentlemen's Body Belts,	6 00
Sciatic Appliances,	5 00
Knee Caps,	3 00
Leg Belts,	4 00
Anklets,	4 00
Shoulder Appliances,	4 00
Wristlets, each,	1 50
Hat Bands,	1 00
Head Caps,	4 00
Sleeping Caps,	4 00
Abdominal Belts (ladies),	6 00
Gents' Vests,	15 00
Ladies' Jacket and Corset (combined),	18 00
Superfine Insoles (all leather),	1 00

While these garments can be procured at the above low prices no one can afford to be ill. Our ladies' supporters are just what every lady in the land needs, as it will be found a great assistance at certain periods; all these garments are made to measure, and a fit guaranteed. To ladies who are all dragged out a combination jacket and corset will restore you to new life and energy, and pay for itself an hundred fold in a few weeks' wear. This garment is only made from actual measure, and a perfect fit assured.

All communications answered free of charge. Address, DR. L. TENNEY, 471 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill. Agents wanted for Boston, New York Brooklyn, and Philadelphia.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Gems of Thought.

EVERY facility which is afforded to aid in the acquirement of a knowledge of nature, of the laws of the universe, is a blessing to the world and a great promoter of human good. Science is the handmaid to knowledge; science has done more to impart true knowledge to mankind than all other agencies combined. Demonstrated science may be regarded as the only true source of knowledge—it is knowledge. —D. M. Bennett.

THE idea that a certain belief is necessary to salvation unsheathed the swords and lighted the fagots of persecution. As long as heaven is the reward of creed instead of deed, just so long will every orthodox church be a bastil, every member a prisoner, and every priest a turnkey.—R. G. Ingersoll in the Christian Religion.

WE may open the door to our neighbors,
And open the door to our friends;
We may entertain guests at our table,
While friendship with courtesy blends;
We may gather our dear ones about us—
Our helpmeet and children so fair—
But let us forget not to banish
From these tender meetings, dull care.
It watches at doors and at windows;
It whistles through crannies and cracks;
It giveth the good man the headache;
It pinches and tortures and racks.
It sits down unasked at the table;
It crouches beside the down bed;
It takes all the brightness from slumber;
It takes all the sweetness from bread.
Of all things to make our lives happy,
Of all things to make our paths fair,
There is nothing from Home's cheerful fireside
So sacred as shutting out care.
—Mrs. M. A. Kidder.

THESE symptoms of a rising reputation gave me encouragement, as I was ever more disposed to see the favorable than the unfavorable side of things—a turn of mind which it is more happy to possess than to be born to an estate of ten thousand a year. —Hume's My Own Life.

HOPE.—Companion gay that ever leads
Through verdure and through flowers,
And talks, whene'er the tempest breeds
Of sunshine after showers.
—Sharp's Letters and Essays.

THERE was a time when that degraded man was as guiltless as a girl; he began by learning vice from the example of his companions, just as he learned to smoke. Had his education been more severe, had the earliest inclinations been checked by the fear of ruin and disgrace, he would not hav acquired the most dangerous of all habits. That man should be subjected to the same discipline as woman is, therefore, to be wished for; and although the day is far distant, there can be no doubt that it will come; and the future historian of morals will record with surprise that, in the nineteenth century, society countenanced views in man which it punished in woman with banishment for life.—Reade's Martyrdom of Man.

AS it is a sin to betray one's country, to injure one's parents, to plunder temples; so it is likewise a sin to be afraid, to grieve, to be under the dominion of lust, even if no act follow these feelings. But as these are sins, not in their consequences only, but at once and from the first moment; so those actions which proceed from virtue are to be considered right at the first moment that they are undertaken and not only when they are accomplished.—Cicero.

TO be still searching what we know not, by what we know, still closing up truth to truth as we find it (for all her body is homogeneal and proportional)—this is the golden rule in theology, as well as in arithmetic; and makes up the best harmony in a church; not the forced and outward union of cold, neutral, and inwardly divided minds. —Milton's Areopagitica.

ONE thing is most admirable, which is, that the communicating of a man's self to his friend works two contrary effects; for it redoubleth joys, and cutteth griefs in halves; for there is no man that imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joyeth the more; and no man that imparteth his griefs to his friend, but he grieveth the less. So that it is, in truth, of operation upon a man's mind of like virtue as the alchemists used to attribute to their stone for man's body, that it worketh all contrary effects, but still to the good and benefit of nature.—Bacon's Essays.

CAN any wise or good man be angry if I say, I choose this man to be my friend, because he is able to giv me counsel, to restrain my wanderings, to comfort me in my sorrow; he is pleasant to me in private and useful in public; he will make my joys double and divide my grief between himself and me? For what else should I choose? For being a fool—useless? for a pretty face and a smooth chin? I confess it is possible to be a friend to one that is ignorant and pitiable, handsome and good for nothing, that eats well and drinks deep, but he cannot be a friend to me; and I love him with a fondness or a pity, but it cannot be a noble friendship.—Jeremy Taylor.

IT is clear that those vices which destroy domestic happiness ought to be, as much as possible, repressed. It is equally clear that they cannot be repressed by penal legislature. It is, therefore, right and desirable that public opinion should be directed against them. But it should directed against them uniformly, steadily, and temperately, not by sudden fits and starts. There should be one weight and one measure. Decimation is always an objectionable mode of punishment. It is the resource of judges too indolent or too hasty to investigate facts and to discriminate nicely between shades of guilt. It is an irrational practice, even when adopted by military tribunals. When adopted by the tribunal of public opinion, it is infinitly more irrational. It is good that a certain portion of disgrace should constantly attend on certain bad actions. But it is not good that the offenders should merely hav to stand convicted of a lottery of infamy, that ninety-nine out of every hundred should escape and that the hundredth should pay for all.—Macaulay's Lord Byron.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine, R. G. Ingersoll, D. M. Bennett, T. C. Leland, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, James Parton, Parker Pillsbury, S. P Andrews, W. F. Jamieson, G. H. Walser, John Peck, J. H. Burnham, J. R. Monroe, H. L. Green, Chas. B. Reynolds, Chas. Watts, W. S. Bell, S. P. Putnam, J. E. Remsburg, Courtlandt Palmer, Lucy Colman, John R. Kelso, Elmina D. Slenker, Amy Post, Helen H. Gardner, Mattie Krekel, Horace Seaver, Luther Colby, J. P. Mendum, J. L. York, Chas. P. Somerby, E. M. Macdonald, Juliet H. Severance, Susan H. Wixon, Wm. Denton, Mrs. H. S. Lake.

John Swinton's Paper,

PLAIN, PRACTICAL, GENUIN, STRONG, AND FREE.

A WEEKLY PAPER OF AMERICAN IDEAS, PROGRESS, AND RIGHTS.

21 Park Row, New York.

$1 PER YER (post paid). 3 CENTS A COPY.
Specimens Free.

1—Boldly upholding the Rights of Man in the American way.
2—Battling against the Accumulated wrongs of Society and Industry.
3—Striving for the Organization and Interests of Workingmen, and giving the news of the trades and the unions.
4—Uniting the New Political Forces; searching for a common platform, and giving the news of all the young bodies in the field.
5—Warning the American people against the treasonable and crushing schemes of millionaires, monopolists, and plutocrats, and against the coming billionaires whose shadow is now looming up.
6—Looking toward better times of fair play and public welfare.
7—Living views of public questions and social topics.
8—Literary sketches and stories.

SPECIAL TRIAL OFFERS!
For sixteen 2c. U.S. postage stamps I will send 13 papers Choicest Seeds, growth of '84, 75 to 500 seeds and mixed colors in each paper: New Diamond Pansies, of largest size, over 400 superb variegated sorts, all mixed; Large Double Rose Asters, 14 cols; Double Everlastings, 12 cols; New Scarlet Poppys, spotted black; Alyssum: Large ft. Phlox, 16 cols; Japan Pinks, 35 double and single vars. mixed; Asperula: New Double Gaillardia, the best annual introduced in 10 yrs; Calliopsis; Double Portulaca, double as roses; Candytuft; Old Clove-scented Pink. For only 52c. I will send 23 papers (worth $1.95 at regular rates), all the above & Verbena, 100 sorts mixed; New Emperor Petunia, 20 blotched, striped & beautifully fringed sorts mixed, best strain ever offered; Ice Plant, Velvet Flower; Chrysanthemum, 8 c; Blue Daisy; New Cockscomb; C Bells; Clarkia; Double Dwarf Aster. 10 c. Buy from grower and get live seeds sure to grow. Catalog with elegant plate of pinks, in 8 c. 5c, or with seeds, 25c. GOODELL, the Seed Grower, Amherst, Mass.

THE RIDDLE
OF THE
AMERICAN SPIRITUAL SPHINX
OR,
THE "LOST KEY" FOUND.

Sent to any address upon receipt of stamps to pay postage. Address
JAMES A. BLISS,
Developing Medium National Developing Circle,
121 W. Concord St., Boston, Mass.
4t11

WYANDOTTES!
Seguan Poultry Yards, Lowell, Mich.

I hav one pen headed by my splendid two-year-old crower mated to five of my handsomest females. Eggs for setting, $3; also beautiful W. C. B. Polish and Brown Leghorns, $1.50 for setting; no fowls to sell. MRS. S. A. FOX,
3t11 Lowell, Mich.

A SMALL FARM WANTED.
An Appeal to the Philanthropists.

I am 71 years old, hav been a producer for at least 65 years. I wish to find some philanthropic person who has a small farm to rent—I am unable to buy—for a term of years, for a small sum. Any person who has such a place, and will communicate with me, giving full particulars, I should be happy to hear from.
SEWARD MITCHELL,
4t11 Newport, Me.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Odds and Ends.

"PAH," asked young Johnnie Jarphley, "what is a defaulter?" "He is a man who loses money that does not belong to him, my son." "And what is a financier?" "One who hangs on to it."

REVIVALIST (to young man loitering near the door): Are you seeking the Lord, young man? Young man (nervously): No—no. I am seeking Miss Polly Smith, but I can wait until the meeting is over.

"No, papa, I do not wish to marry yet. What I want is a man who does not drink, smoke, go out at night, gamble, bet, over-eat, etc.—in short, a man who has no vices and is always good." "My daughter," said Mr. Dusenberry, "you are but a stranger here; heaven is your home."

AN Illinois wedding party felt the floor giv way beneath them just as the minister had asked the woman: "Do you take this man——" And as they went toward the cellar, the bride, with a rare and wonderful presence of mind, yelled, "I will." She afterwards confessed that the groom was a wealthy man and that if he was killed it was her purpose that he should leave a widow.

A DEVOUT and worthy gentleman is the clergyman of a parish not twenty miles south of Chicago. His congregation was somewhat amused at the singularity of one of his announcements on the evening of December 5 h, which was as follows: "Remember our communion service next Sunday forenoon. The Lord will be with us during the morning service, and the bishop in the evening."

THE name of a man in England in the days of the Roundheads was If-Christ-had-not-died-for-thee-thou-hadst-been damned Dobbins, but Dorchester county, Maryland, possesses two names almost as odd. The owners of the names still liv near Cambridge, on the Choptank. They are Julia Jane Augusta Dominica Rustis Ro Bo Bustis Jack and John Henry Land Runner-Run-Out and Surveyor Bandana Beaver Dam Rendezvous God Bless Busticue.

YE MISTAKE OF SIR BEVYS.

[A castle yard—1585. Enter Sir Bevys, mounted. There comes to meet him, bearing a cup of wine, Maid Margery.]

What, Madge—nay, Madge! Why, sweetheart, is it thou?
Faith, but I knew thee not—nor know thee yet!
Madge—Margery—child—coz, thou'st grown apace.
Why, what a merry coming home is this!
To hav my cousin meet me in the court,
My half-grown cousin, grown an angel half,
Lifting a cup to make the wanderer welcome,
With such an arm—why, Margery, 'twas a reed—
A meager, sun-specked reed—when last I saw it,
Three years ago. Coz, these were busy years
That dealt so kindly with thee. I set forth
Three years agone—last Michaelmas—and thou—
Why, thou and Rupert were an elfish pair
Of freckled striplings—yea, thy elbows, Madge,
My cousin Margery, were as rasping sharp
As old Dame Ursula her tongue—ay, cousin,
I'll drink again, so thou wilt lift the cup
And show that milky round again. And Rupert,
My brother Rupert, how fares he? Nay! nay!
First in the tourney? Sturdiest knight of all?
Gad's grace, the world has wagged while I hav wandered.
I'll tell you this, thou Hebe hazel-eyed,
Had I seen further I had wandered less.
But who'd hav thought the slender girl I left,
The straggling weed—thy present grace may pardon
My memory rude—had grown to this fair flower,
To this bright comeliness, this young perfection,
This—this—
Maid Margery let her lashes down,
And bent her head—perhaps the sunset fell
A trifle 'thwart her face—perhaps she blushed,
As, looking down into the empty cup,
She answered very softly,
"Rupert did." —Bunner.

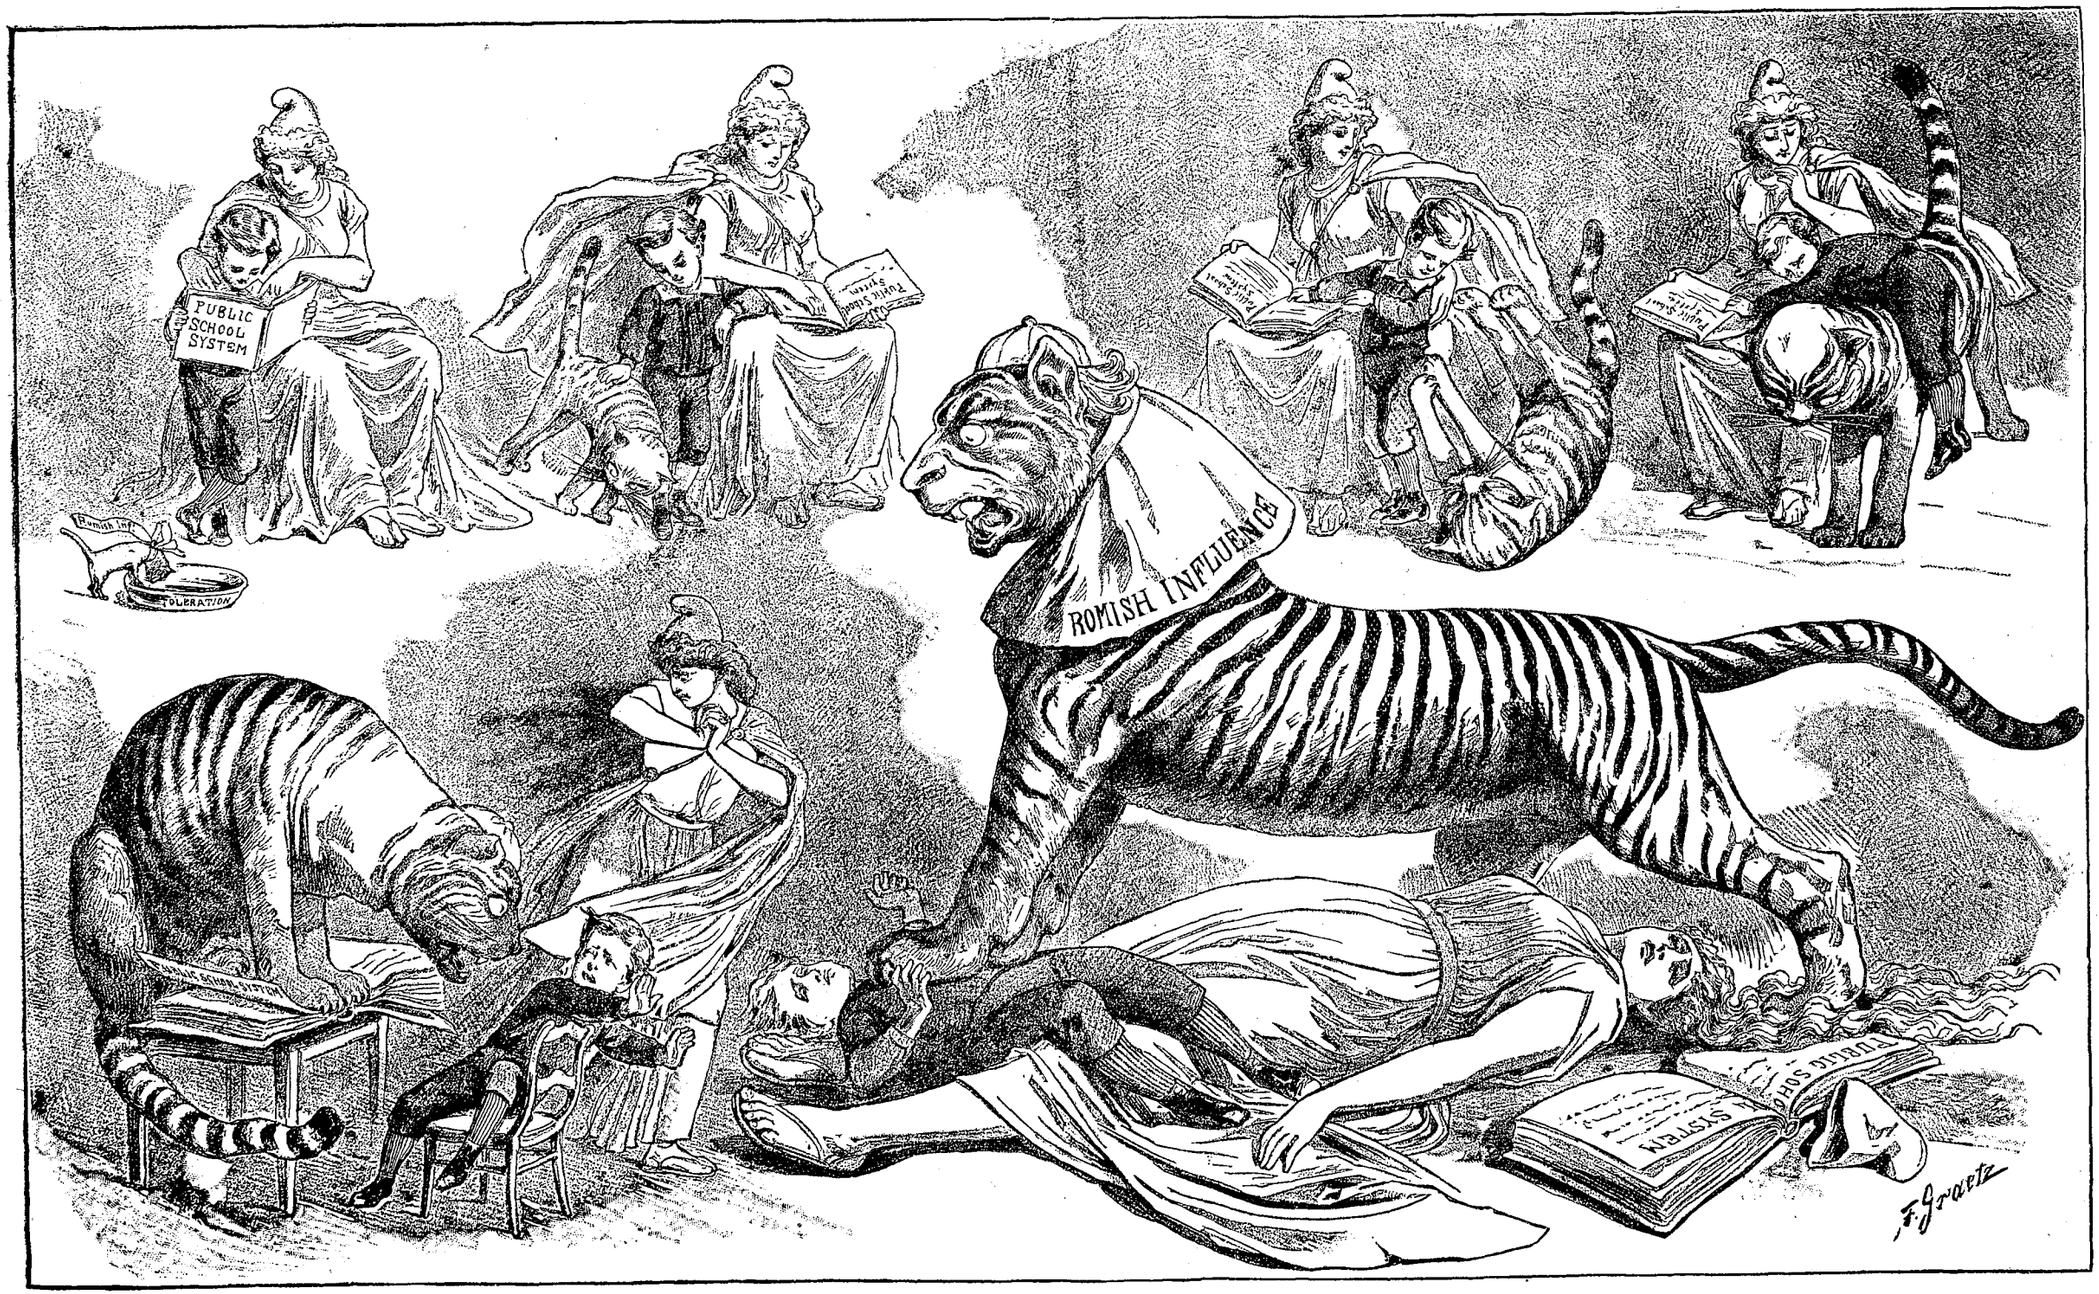
"ABOUT mermaids," said the captain as he stood upon the unfinished end of the seawall and surveyed the landlubber with an expression of pitiful condescension, "why, I've seed the most wonderful things in that line. Well, we were well over in the China Sea. One night just after we'd passed the Formosa group, I was roused out of my bunk by the mate, who sings out, 'Mermaids aboard!' Out I jumps and gets on deck in the turn of a helm. You can splice my mains'l if there wasn't 'bout twenty of the biggest mermaids a-floppin' around the deck I ever seed. Two of 'em hed got the fellows on watch cornered and was a-kissin' 'em. The mate had took to the riggin' after hailin' me. I was a leetle s'prised, though I had seen mermaids afore, but never more'n one at a time. 'Ladies,' says I, 'make yourselvs at home,' says I, and you net your hawsers they did. They quit floppin' and all got on the rail, side by side, a holdin' their tails in their han's, and commenced to sing, and I jest tell you they whooped things up. They skipped through the 'Sweet By and By,' and took several reefs in the 'Red, White, and Blue,' and slewed to port on a 'Life on the Ocean Wave' in beautiful style." "Didn't see them again, did you?" asked a land lubber. "Wall, yes. The next day we was becalmed. There wasn't the smell of a breeze, and whistlin' for it didn't do any good. I was madder'n a stuck whale, for I wanted to make a quick passage. Suddenly I sees a commotion in the water, and shiver my binnacle lights if them mermaids warn't swimmin' around us One of 'em boarded us as slick as could be, and says, 'Giv us a rope.' Well, I throwed 'em one, and I'll lay to on a lee shore if they didn't tow us till we struck a breeze. Got the rope right in their mouths—about fifty of 'em—and pulled us along. I was so 'bleeged to 'em that I throwed 'em a mess o' lookin'-glasses, clocks, and shoe blackin' out of the cargo. Next day we struck another calm and I 'spected the mermaids would pull us out again. They were all around a-donnin' their mornin' uniform in the glasses. 'Hey!' says I, 'tow us along, will you?' Well, no sooner had I hailed them than everyone of 'em looked at the clocks which they had slung around their necks. 'Scuse us, cap,' they sed, 'we see it's just time to keep our appointment at the bottom,' and cuss me if they didn't all disappear."

THE TRUTH SEEKER



A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 12. PUBLISHED WEEKLY. New York, Saturday, March 21, 1885. 33 CLINTON PLACE. $3.00 per year.

CATHOLICISM IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

From Puck.

AN OBJECT-LESSON FOR THOSE WHO FAVOR THE "FREEDOM OF WORSHIP" BILL.

"Let the church and state be kept forever separate."—U. S. GRANT.

"One hundred years ago our fathers retired the ghosts from politics."—R. G. INGERSOLL.

"The government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion. . . . The United States is not a Christian nation any more than it is a Jewish or Mohammedan nation."—GEORGE WASHINGTON.

"The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this state to all mankind."—CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

"We demand that the employment of chaplains in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued, and that all religious services shall be abolished." NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

"I consider the government of the United States as interdicted by the Constitution from meddling with religious institutions, their doctrins, disciplins, or exercises."—THOMAS JEFFERSON.

"I protest against the passage of the Freedom of Worship bill, and also against the present services, which are crimson and scarlet with the sectarian spirit. I ask that a new bill be introduced into our legislature prohibiting in state institutions all religious teachings except moral principles upon which all men agree."—FELIX ADLER.

Communications.

The Church and the Republic,

AS DEFINED IN THE PASTORAL LETTER OF THE LATE BALTIMORE PLENARY COUNCIL.

"Words," it is said, "were invented to hide meaning;" and none can scrutinize the pastoral letter of the bishops of the Plenary Council, dated Dec. 7, 1884, without conviction that words are susceptible of such a perversion. "We think," says the pastoral, "we can claim to be acquainted with the laws, institutions, and spirit of the Catholic church, and the laws, institutions, and spirit of our country, and we emphatically declare there is no antagonism between them." No doubt the bishops are well read on these subjects, and, therefore, must hav known that their emphatic declaration is absolutely gratuitous. In fact, it admits of no explanation except on the Catholic ground that it is right to falsify in the interest of the church. Without pausing to demonstrate from the nature and organization of the papal church that it it inherently hostil to the laws, institutions, and spirit of our republic, we will adopt the shorter method of substantiating the same fact by the assertions of her infallible popes and councils, and her other acknowledged authorities.

First: "The Catholics believe that the pope's authority is not only ministerial but supreme, so that he has the right to direct and compel, with the power of life and death" (Ecc. Jacob. Mag. Reg. Oppos, c. 138). "Pius V., our reigning pope, is prince over all nations and kingdoms, and he has power to pluck up, ruin, scatter, and build" (a canon of the Council of Trent).

Are these authoritativ declarations in harmony with the laws, institutions, and spirit of the republic? Does our government accord the pope of Rome ministerial and supreme authority, so that he may direct and compel, with power of life and death; arbitrarily, at his caprice, option, or command, imprison, torture, or burn alive any citizen, guilty or not? Or does it allow any of its public or private citizens to exercise such an atrocious authority; or does it accord the pope any power in the discharge of its political functions? Not at all. But these claims are the infallible laws of the church, and, therefore, the church is directly antagonistic to the Constitution, laws, and spirit of the republic, which were framed to prevent the usurpation or exercise of such a power.

But, further, is the pope prince over our republic? Has he the power to pluck up our government, ruin our Constitution, scatter its laws, and build up a Catholic despotism in its place? Is this Anarchist, who imagins that he consolidates in his authority universal legislativ, executiv, and judicial power, in harmony with our republic, that invests in a Congress the legislativ power, in a president the executiv power, in courts of law the judicial power, and acknowledges no sovereignty but that of the people? Who can believe it? Who dare assert it? And who can admit that a church which holds the assertions of its pontiffs and councils infallible is not antagonistic to the laws, institutions, and spirit of our republic?

Again: "A priest cannot be forced to giv testimony before a temporal judge" (Tabuno, vol. ii, 228). "The rebellion of a priest is not treason, for they are not subject to government" (Emanuel Sa). "No one can be deemed a murderer who, burning for the interests of the holy Catholic church, shall kill an excommunicated person" (Pope Urban II.). "Heresy and unbelief are crimes, and in Christian countries, as in Italy and Spain, for instance, where the Catholic religion is the essential law of the land, they are punished as other crimes" (Bishop Kendrick). Engagements made with heretics and schismatics of this kind, after such hav been excommunicated, are inconsiderate and illegal (although perchance by the lapse of those persons into schism, or before the beginning of their heresy) if even confirmed by an oath, or one's honor being plighted" (Pope Urban IV., Rymer 7, 352). "Though sworn to pay, he [the good Catholic] may refuse the claim of a debtor who falls into heresy or under excommunication. The debtor's oath implied the tacit condition that the debtor, to be entitled to pay, should remain in a state in which communication with him would be lawful" (St. Bernard, Maynooth Report, 260). The papal institution of indulgences grants permission to murder with impunity one's father, mother, brother, sister, wife, or other relation for $1.75; to commit theft, rapine, sacrilege, or perjury for $2.00; and to commit incest with one's sister, mother, or near relation for $2.25 (The Pope's Chancery Book). For further authorities, see "Monks, Popes, and Their Intrigues," pp. 153–155, 351, 352.

Are not these laws, proclaimed by infallible popes and councils, emphatically in direct antagonism to the laws, institutions, and spirit of our republic? Where do our laws except priests from the obligation to testify in courts of justice? Does not the Constitution require them to testify in criminal cases? Where do they regard a priest's rebellion as not treason? Where do they admit that he is not a subject of government? If he is not a subject of government, why do any of them naturalize and swear allegiance to the government? Where do our laws concede that no one is a murderer who from zeal for the Catholic church murders an excommunicated person? Where do they allow that contracts and obligations of debt with excommunicated heretics and schismatics are inconsiderate and illegal? Where do they punish heresy and unbelief as crime? Where do they authorize the violation of its own enactments against murder, theft, incest, and perjury, for a money consideration? Nowhere. Yet, while these papal declarations are embodied in the Catholic code, declared by popes and councils to be infallible, govern the Catholic church, always hav been enforced, and always will be, wherever she has had, or shall gain, "the power of carrying them into effect without prejudice to the Catholic world," they are declared by the late Plenary Council, as emphatically not antagonistical to the laws, institutions, and spirit of our republic. What effrontery!

Catholic institutions? What are they? Ecclesiastical code, the pope, with his machinery of priests, monks, nuns, and brotherhoods. Is the Catholic ecclesiastical code, in spirit and provisions, concordant with the Constitution and laws of the republic? Or is it not self-evident that they are so antagonistical to them that the establishment of the one would be the subversion of the other? Are the monasteries, with their vows of celibacy, poverty, and implicit obedience to domestic and foreign superiors, consistent with the republic, whose enactments encourage marriage, prohibit professional beggary and vagrancy, and claim the exclusiv allegiance and loyalty of its citizens? Are nunneries, which imprison females in perpetual seclusion, dissolve their filial ties and obligations, subject them to the control of despotic superiors and a brutal priesthood, where, according to the testimony of governmental investigations, the most barbarous punishments hav been inflicted, and seduction, rape, murder, and infanticide perpetrated; whose portals are barred against the entrance of grand jurors and coroners; consistent with the spirit and letter of the law of our republic—that declares that life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are the inalienable rights of all persons, enacts that no one shall be deprived of life, liberty, and property without due process of law, nor denied the equal protection of the laws, nor be abridged in the privileges and immunities of citizens; that protects and enforces filial and parental rights and obligations; that prohibits and punishes maltreatment, profligacy, seduction, rape, bastardy, infanticide, and murder; that establishes grand juries before which all hav the right to prefer complaints; courts to ascertain and redress grievances, a coroner to investigate the facts and causes of sudden and violent death? By no means. They are as antagonistic to our laws as despotism is to liberty. In fact, the papal church, with its laws and institutions, is a solecism in our republic, an antagonistic government within our government, a depotism in the heart of freedom, an anarchy in its core, a treason in its midst, arrogating immunities and privileges unknown to our statutes; where the rights of reason, liberty, and conscience are unknown, and where equal laws, equal rights, and equal privileges are annulled.

The pastoral proceeds thus:

> "To argue that the Catholic church is hostil to our great Republic, because she teaches there is no power but from God, because back of the events that led to the formation of the Republic she sees the providence of God leading to that issue, and back of our country's laws the authority of God as their sanction—this is so illogical and contradictory that we are astonished to hear it advanced by persons of ordinary intelligence."

What subterfuge! how contradictory to the papal dogmas? Who ever charged the church with being hostil to the Republic on that ground? Protestants assert the same doctrin. Indeed, it is immaterial what may theoretically be imagined to be back of the Republic, so that they do not compromise the sovereignty of the people, nor their possession of equal rights and laws. The main charge alleged against the Catholic church is that she is a despotic organization, inimical to civil and religious liberty. That this allegation is incontestably true we shall prove by the authority of her popes, councils, and acknowledged exponents.

The very titles ascribed to the pope assert a claim to absolute power and dominion. The following are a few of his official titles: "Our Lord God, the Pope;" "Our Most Holy Lord God;" "The Most High and Mighty God on Earth;" "More than God." The pope's more than godship seems to hav been proved to the devout by his ability to create the creator of all things out of a pinch of flour. Hear it from the lips of Pope Urban: "The hands of the pontiff are raised to an eminence granted to none of the angels—of creating the Creator of all things and offering him up for the salvation of the world." Hear it again from the "Living Eucharist, Manifested by Miracles:" "Bishops, popes, and nuns saw the wafer, after the benediction of the priest, change into an infant. The bread became real flesh and blood, a perfect infant Jesus. On one instance a priest was seen laying a little baby Jesus on the tongue of each communicant. A wafer carried several days in a bishop's pocket, after blessing, became an infant Jesus."

"Pope" and "God" in Catholic phraseology are convertible terms; and, therefore, when the priests use the term "God," without ascriptions of infinity, it is doubtful whether they mean the Christian God or the Catholic pope. Sometimes, when speaking of God, providence, etc., they secretly mean the pope, disguising their real purpose under the ostensible garb of a popular and unoffending phraseology. In the section of the pastoral letter under consideration if we substitute for "God" the word "pope," we will perceive that it perfectly agrees with the papal claims.

In further proof of our charge alleged against the church we submit the following authorities: "He (the pope) alone has the right to assume empire. All nations must kiss his feet. He has the right to depose emperors" (Bull of Pope Gregory VII.). "The pope is Lord of the whole world. The pope has temporal power. His temporal power is most eminent. All other powers depend on the pope" (Jur. Princep. Rom., lib. ii, cap. 1, 2). "The pope can do all things he wishes to do, and is empowered by God to do all things that he himself can do" (Tebo). "The pope is crowned with a triple crown, and is constituted over his (God's) hand to regulate concerning all inferiors. He opens heaven, sends the guilty to hell, confirms emperors, and ordains the clerical orders" (Antonius of Florence, Dissert. 40: Le Popa). "He (the pope) may make laws and institutions for all the world. . . . The pope is not subject to his predecessors, even to that of the apostles, for there is no power that can limit the keys. He may dispense with the divine law and gospel precepts. The pope may grant every species of indulgences except one, to marry one's own father or mother. He may depose magistrates and princes, and free their subjects from obligations of loyalty. He is king of kings and ruler of rulers. He is the prince of bishops and the ruler of all men. He can create law where before there was no law" (Canonist Prospero Fagnana). "If the papacy be founded on divine right, it is superior to whatever is founded on human right. . . . Liberty of conscience is unknown among Catholics. The word should be banished from the domains of religion" (Catholic Quarterly). "If any think Jesus Christ, our Lord and King, has only given to the church a power to guide by advice and permission, but not ordained by law to compel and force by anterior judgment and salutary affliction—those who thus separate themselvs, let them be anathema" (Canon xii of the last General Council). "The pope found it necessary in the conversions of the gentiles to dissemble and wink at many things, and yield to the times, and not to use force against customs the people are obstinately fond of, nor think of extirpating at once everything that had the appearance of profane" (Arenghus). "Religious liberty is merely endured until the opposit can be carried into effect without peril to the Catholic world" (Bishop O'Connor of Pittsburgh). "If the Catholics ever gain, which they surely will, a numerical majority, religious freedom in this country will be at an end" (Archbishop of St. Louis). "The Catholic church numbers one-third of the American population, and if its membership increase for the next thirty years as it has for the thirty years past, in 1900 Rome will hav a majority, and will be bound to take the country and keep it" (Hecker). For more authorities see "Monks, Popes, and Their Intrigues," pp. 362, 363.

If a human being, with the natural imperfections of human nature, with passions that need restraint, with liabilities to the seductions of power, dominion, avarice, pride, usurpation, rapin, and revenge, when elected to the papal chair, becomes a most holy Lord God, the most high and mighty God on earth, the more than the Christian's omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent God; above him above reason, intellect, and conscience; above right, liberty, and humanity; above constitutions, treaties, law, and all governments and rulers; and if by virtue of his election he alone has the right to assume empire, if he is thereby the lord of the whole world, is the source of all power, can do all things that God himself can do, is constituted under God's hands to regulate concerning all inferiors; may make laws and institutions for the whole world; may dispense with the divine law of gospel precepts; may depose magistrates and princes, and free their subjects from obligations of loyalty; can create law where before there was no law; has the power to compel and force by anterior judgment and salutary affliction; is privileged to dissemble and wink at what he is intent on destroying, and to yield to the times—good heavens! what a reasonless conscienceless, unscrupulous, monstrous, terrific despot the pope must be! What an antagonism to international law, which concedes that all nations are bound to the observance of the great principles of justice in their conduct with one another, and are equal sovereigns! What a traitor and anarchist to the world! And what an implacable foe to equal laws, equal rights; to liberty, good order, and the rights of men and nations! All the despotisms that tyranny has concocted from the birthday of man, and all the schemes it has projected for the extirpation of liberty and the enslavement of the human race, sink into insignificance before the frightful magnitude of the papal despotism. Who can doubt? Reason asserts it. History proves it. The church concedes it. Humanity deplores it. And can any hav the hardihood to deny it, except dissemblers to the ears of credulity?

No wonder liberty of conscience is unknown among Catholics; no wonder papal priests declare that religious liberty is merely endured until the opposit can be carried into effect without peril to the Catholic world. No wonder that, emboldened by the increase of its membership, they proclaim that if in 1900 Rome shall hav a majority, they will be bound to take the country and keep it.

When that period arrives—if the indifference of the people shall permit its arrival—the pope will assume his arrogated right of government, arbitrarily, at the instigation of caprice or whim, depose the rulers of the republic, absolve citizens from their obligations of loyalty, annul laws, convert cardinals into princes, bishops into lords, priests into officials, the people into slaves, and consign Infidels, Protestants, heretics, and schismatics to dungeons, torture, and flame.

The pastoral further says: "We believe that our country's heroes were instruments in the hands of the God of nations in establishing the home of freedom; to both the Almighty and his instruments in the work we look with great reverence, and to maintain the inheritance which they hav left us, should it ever—God forbid—be imperiled, our Catholic citizens will be bound to stand as one man, ready to pledge anew their lives,their fortune,and their sacred honor." Very fine! Would it were true, the heart of liberty might then cease to ache; but alas! how false, how deceitful! "God forbid." What? That which the papists are laboring to accomplish? Amen. If, should the republic be imperiled, the Catholics will be bound to stand as one man, ready to pledge anew their lives, their fortune, and their sacred honor, why did the Catholic bishops of the Cincinnati council as one man, in its pastoral letter, declare that the doctrin that all men are created free and equal is pernicious, that those who are appointed to rule hav rights which subjects hav not, and that bishops and priests are appointed to rule, and that the cry of equality is the cry of the idle and weak? Why did they assert that the doctrin that all power is derived from the people is not the doctrin of the Catholic church, nor the doctrin which the bishops preach, and also that they do not teach that those who exercise power in the state do not exercise it as their own, but as entrusted to them by the people on condition that it may be recalled by the will of the people by whom it was confided in them? And why do they declare belief in these doctrins (doctrins of the Declaration of Independence) to be growing evils among Catholics, and subject to severe animadversion?

If the Catholics are bound to stand as one man and pledge anew their lives, their fortune, and their sacred honor in the defense of the republic, whenever it is imperiled, why did a single Catholic abet the treason of the Southern Rebellion? Why did they swarm from every state, even from Europe, to rally round the Confederate flag? Why did the pope of Rome acknowledge the independence of the Southern Confederacy? Why did he address a letter to Jeff Davis, styling him the illustrious president? Why, at the same time, did voluntary enlistments of the Irish in the Federal army cease, desertions of them become frequent, and why did they band together to resist the draft? Why has Cardinal McCloskey organized a Catholic league, with military associations, disguised as temperance societies, benevolent societies, etc., which ramify every part of the country with the declared purpose of restoring the pope to the throne of Italy, and of exterminating Materialism? What! compel citizens by force of arms to accept charity and become temperate? Too absurd to be true. What! restore the pope to the throne of Italy? Attack a foreign power without a navy! Preposterous. To exterminate Materialism! Who are Materialists? According to the historical definition of Catholicism, written in blood, they are Protestants, heretics, schismatics, Infidels, Atheists, and all non-Catholics. No. The cardinal's evident design is to establish the papal despotism in the American republic, and, as on Batholomew's eve, to attempt to exterminate as Atheists all who do not acknowledge the pope. Now we can understand the significance of the pontifical jubilee held in Baltimore 1871, when twenty thousand Catholics upon receiving the communion promised to do all in their power for the restoration of the pope to temporal power, and when sixty papal zouaves knelt before the communion rails of St. James's church to proclaim what they and all Catholics would do when the time comes. A correspondent in Freeman's Journal, July 3, 1871, speaking of these occurrences, says:

"This is not an act of transitory fervor, or the enthusiasm of an hour. By this act the Catholics of the United States hav taken their stand with those of Europe and Canada. The enthusiasm of the hour will settle down into permanent determined resolve, and by the union of all parts of Christendom take a tangible and defined purpose. It is what the pope predicted in saying that if union of action, resulting from identity of thought and feeling, be amongst Catholics, the gates of hell shall not prevail."

If in the course of events the time should ever come when our glorious republic, founded on the sovereignty of the people and the principle of equal rights and laws, will be imperiled, will the Catholic League, imbued with the spirit of the pope, acting as his instruments and under his direction, stand to a man and pledge themselvs, fortunes, and sacred honor in defense of the principle of our country's declaration, free constitution, and equal laws? Will the bishops of the Cincinnati Council, who condemn the doctrins of the Declaration of Independence; or the bishops of the Baltimore plenary council, who significantly ignore them; or the Catholics under their dictation, enlist in the defense of liberty and reason, of equal political and religious rights? Will the Jesuitical bishops who at their consecration oath swear to defend the doctrins of the church, the rights and customs of his holiness, and to do all they can to extirpate Protestantism, and destroy all their powers, regal or otherwise; or will the other Catholic bishops, who at their consecration swear to preserve, augment and extend the rights, privileges and honors of the lord pope and his successors, to enforce with all their might his decrees, and to persecute schismatics and all who will not pay the sovereign pope all the obedience which he shall require (see "Monks, Popes, and Their Intrigues"), pledge their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor in the defense of a republic that tolerates all creeds and protects alike the religious liberty of all? By no means. A few bishops and priests and a larger number of the laity may, as has frequently happened in the past struggles of liberty, and, indeed, they all may when equally menaced with other citizens, by foreign invasion or domestic insurrection, but otherwise they will stand more as one man ready to pledge their lives, fortunes, and sacred honor in the defense of papal despotism. No, bishops of the plenary council, had you repudiated your allegiance to the papal despot and reconstructed your church in conformity with the principles of civil and religious liberty, your pledges to the republic would hav been gratefully and universally received as sincere and sacred; but with the reaffirmation of the infallibility of your pope, councils, and canons, your profession of patriotism and loyalty is too thin a veil to hide the insincerity and treason that lurk beneath its elaborate texture. As well might the homicide, with bloody hands and garments dripping with human gore, declare himself the protector of life!

Baltimore, Md. JOHN ALBERGER.

Canadian Notes.

A debate has just come off between Charles Watts and Elder Walker, at Thorold, which lasted for several nights. The interest excited in the surrounding country was most intense, numbers coming from a distance of many miles to be present on this interesting occasion, and staying over at the hotels during the week. Elder Walker has been engaged in numerous debates previously, but only with theological opponents, who viewed Christianity from a different standpoint to himself. He seemed unacquainted with Freethought literature and Freethought philosophy and ideas, but it is impossible for any one to avoid defeat from Charles Watts. Charles Watts showed himself to be far more thoroughly versed in every minute detail of the Bible than the Christian champion himself. When Mr. Watts quoted various passages from the Bible, Elder Walker denied that any such words were in the Bible at all. Charles Watts instantly named chapter and verse and turned to the passages and read them out for the edification of the Christian advocate, amid the plaudits and deafening cheers of the crowded audience, scoring another victory for the invincible champion, the ever victorious Charles Watts.

Taylor says, at the period of the advent of Christ the Roman empire presented the spectacle of denationalized populations possessing a premature cosmopolitan spirit. Left to their local customs and routine lives, while the vanquished were amusing themselvs with their petty magistracies and their narrow superstitions, the Cæsars, their obsequious senates, unscrupulous prefects and swinish populace, had leisure enough to feast and riot on the wealth of the nations and gloat over the blood of beasts and of men. It has lately become fashionable to rehabilitate the Roman empire, to vaunt the administration and the peace of the Romans; but nothing is more decidedly opposed to this theory of peace and happiness under the Roman dominion than the success of the Alexandrian mysticism and the triumph of Christianity. To what an abyss of hopeless misery the subjects of the empire must hav fallen to hav taken refuge in the chimeras of hallucination and the dreams of a life beyond the grave! What a degree of weariness and exhaustion and intellectual decay is implied by the acceptance of ridiculous or childish mysteries—of ideas vague as the ravings of fever! Degrading and lamentable spectacle!

Evolution was the subject of a lecture last evening in Albert Hall by Mr. Watts, who announced it as the introductory one to a course of six lectures on the same theme, which will succeed the one delivered yesterday. The hall was crowded and the applause frequent and hearty. Among the many points alluded to as being component parts of the evolution philosophy he enumerated: 1. The indestructibility of matter. 2. The continuity of motion. 3. The persistence of force. 4. The absurdity of attributing anything to a supernatural cause when we hav not the slightest knowledge of any such cause. 5. This last becomes doubly absurd when science givs a perfectly simple and natural account of the phenomena in question. In all the operations of nature throughout the universe, as far as known to man in any manner how remote soever, evolution is seen to be her method—her mode of activity. Alike in the birth, life, and death of worlds, in the immensity of space as in the inception, growth, maturity and decay of all the multitudinous forms of vegetable and animal life, culminating in man.

During the decay of civilization and intelligence in the Roman empire—when the masses had sunk low enough in ignorance and degradation of every kind to be capable of receiving Christianity—gradually the intelligent classes caught the infection from the ignorant masses, one by one cultured intellects began entering into the "kingdom of the poor in spirit," placing all that survived of their reasoning faculties at the service of a faith whose pedestal and capital are the impossible and absurd. The vicissitudes of this long mental malady render the study of ecclesiastical history intensely interesting, but it has deposited in the human mind germs which modern science has not yet destroyed; the consequences it has left behind are deplorable in the extreme. The evil assumed two distinct phases, at first successiv, then parallel, and lastly blending together. The first begins in the first century with Apollonius and Philo, closing in the sixth century. The second begins some twenty years later on with Jesus of Nazareth and Paul, triumphing in the fourth century, ruling without a rival until the twelfth century, losing some of its vigor in the sixteenth century, and entering on its last struggles for existence in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

A debate will be held a few weeks hence between Charles Watts and a reverend gentleman. As reverend debaters usually talk of anything but the subject of discussion, and are totally unable to reason out a subject logically, should the reverend gentleman, on this occasion, prove to be one of his brethren's usual kind, in that case Charles Watts will supply his opponent with arguments, and debate both sides of the subject himself.

On Sunday last Charles Watts lectured in Albert Hall on the subject, "Science; its Struggles, Difficulties, and Triumphs." He gave an historical view of the theme from 300 years B.C., down to A.D. 1885, and showed that pre-Christian enlightenment and knowledge were extinguished by the ignorance and barbarous superstitions of the Bible and Christianity. And during nearly 2,000 years every scientific discovery, and every effort at improvement, whether physical or mental, has been met on the part of the church by the thumb-screw, the rack, and the fagot — enthroned theology sat like a black and hideous nightmare brooding over and stifling the dawning gleams of hope of the human race. But now, happily, the sun of science has arisen in its splendor, bursting through the clouds of clericalism and priestcraft; its glorious light has set a limit to the blackness, brutalities, and ignorance of Christianity.

Then shine the vales,
The hills in prospect rise,
A flood of glory
Bursts from all the skies.
The conscious swains
Rejoicing in the sight,
Eye the blue vault
And bless the useful light.

Toronto, Feb. 28, 1885. R. B. BUTLAND.

It Is Always So!

The readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER who hav been interested in the disasters of Mr. Edward Ross, of Montezuma, N. Y., following the Liberal lectures he caused to be delivered there, will be pleased to learn that when, at recent town election, it became necessary to secure a man of broad views, undaunted courage, and tried integrity for supervisor, the nomination—entirely unsolicited on his part—was tendered Mr. Ross, and, despite his avowed Infidelity, he was triumphantly elected; thus proving that the open avowal of honest convictions will insure the esteem and hearty approval of all honest people, while mollusks, by their weak, timorous, and vacillating course, gain only the contempt and pity of all classes. C. B. REYNOLDS.

CATALOG of the Truth Seeker Company's publications sent free upon application.

A Secular Opinion.

Professor Felix Adler made an eloquent speech against the Freedom of Worship bill in Chickering Hall Sunday, March 8th, before one of the largest audiences that ever sat in that building. Every seat was occupied, and scores of well-known merchants and bankers could be seen on all sides. The orator's desk was garnished with blooming flowers.

In beginning his address the professor declared that the truth or falsity of any religion was not at issue in the controversy. The people of the state were profoundly excited, and a deep though suppressed agitation was going on in the community as to whether the Roman Catholic mass should be publicly celebrated in the House of Refuge on Randall's Island. In matters of religion the majority had no right to dictate to the minority. There was a sphere in human life which the law could not reach and over which it had no authority. To that inward sacrosanct individuality religion belonged. It was possible for one man to be right and all the rest wrong. Jesus and his small band of followers claimed that they were right and that their millions of contemporaries were in error.

"It is claimed," said the speaker, "that it does no harm for children to merely listen to prayers and teachings of which their natural guardians do not approve. In this I cannot concur. Young minds retain the impressions made upon them, and every parent has the right to say what kind of impressions his or her child shall hav. No Protestant would want his child to habitually attend the Roman Catholic mass, and so no Catholic, or Jew, or Freethinker would want his children to hear Protestant teachings, such as they are obliged to listen to, in the public schools, for instance."

Professor Adler told the story of the efforts of the Catholic Union to hav mass celebrated in the House of Refuge, and how the board of managers repeatedly resisted the demand on the ground that the institution was unsectarian. Nothing was taught in its services but general moral principles which were accepted by all sects and all creeds. The speaker charged that these statements were false and misleading. He produced a copy of the manual of religious exercises practiced in the institution, and read prayers in which the divinity of Christ, the power of the Holy Ghost, the immaculate conception, the fatherhood of God, and the necessity for atonement were declared.

"Are these dogmas, or are they not?" cried the speaker. "Are they truths which the board of managers know are admitted by all sects and creeds, or are they truths which they know are not admitted by all sects and creeds? The managers may plead that they sent forth that misleading statement because they were ignorant; but in one direction that excuse will not apply. There are twenty or thirty Jewish children who are compelled to listen to these services, and the managers, if they are the intelligent men I believe them to be, must know that these children do not accept these doctrins, and that their parents would protest with might and main against such teachings if they thought their protest would be met with anything but bitter scorn. The Unitarians do not accept these doctrins, and yet they are a large part of the community. The Freethinkers do not accept them, although they are taxed to support the House of Refuge. Catholics accept these doctrins, but they also believe that other things are essential—a belief in the infallibility of papacy and the necessity of confession. No Protestant has the right to say to a Catholic what is essential in religion.

"I do not wish to charge the managers of the House of Refuge with wilful prevarication, but I beg of them to explain what they mean when they publish it broadcast that their institution is unsectarian. Christianity is sectarian as against Mohammedanism or Judaism. Protestantism is sectarian as against Roman Catholicism. Then again the Baptist is sectarian as against the Episcopalian. The trouble is that these managers hav their eyes fixed upon the Protestant camp as if no other camp existed or had the right to exist. All orthodox Pretestantism accepts the doctrins taught in the House of Refuge. The managers hav got a sort of elixir or quintessence of orthodox Protestantism.

"Now, if there is to be sect teaching of one kind our Catholic citizens are right in insisting that their faith also shall be taught. Let us hav a Protestant chapel and minister in one part of the building and a Catholic altar and priest in another part. As there are Jewish children there, let us hav a little synagog, with a rabbi and scrolls of the law, and, to accommodate our growing Chinese population, why not hav a Joss house? But the managers ask now many pools and baptismal fonts and altars will this require, and where they shall get accommodations for all these gods. Well, the only answer is, 'Giv it up, gentlemen.' There are two alternativs. You must find a common basis upon which all sects—Jew, Catholic, Protestant, and Turk—shall agree, and that I hold to be impossible, or you must exclude all religious teachings from state institutions, and thus carry out the spirit and letter of our constitution."

The speaker went on to argue that this was not a Christian nation as a nation, and that its great founders were, many of them, Infidels. To-day, he said, the leaders of thought in science, politics, business, and literature did not believe in orthodox Christianity.

As to the practical view of the controversy it was a fact that the children in the House of Refuge were waifs, many of them burglars, thieves, forgers. They bore the sins of society or of their own depraved ancestry more than they did any sins of their own.

"What shall we teach these young criminals during the years which they spend in this refuge?" asked the professor. "Shall we teach them the niceties of theological distinctions? No; but we should teach them the A B C of morality, 'Thou shalt not murder,' 'Thou shalt not steal,' 'Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.' These are the real unsectarian moral principles upon which all creeds unite. The parent who lets his child stray until it is sent to the House of Refuge has no right to ask that it shall be taught some particular creed. Hands off, all religions and all sects! The state must now step in and do its duty to the young criminal. The state has only to do with outward actions, and not with the reclamation of inward character. It must make its citizens obey the law and then its work is ended.

"If the sects want to help these young unfortunates, there is a common ground on which they can meet. The little criminals must be taught noble ambitions by reading good biographies. They need a good reading-room, a well drained playground, a sunny playroom, and a useful trade. Let Protestant, and Catholic, and Jew, unite in raising funds to supply all these things.

"That is my position, and I protest against the passage of the Freedom of Worship bill, and also against the present services, which are crimson and scarlet with the sectarian spirit. I ask that a new bill be introduced into our legislature—our helpless legislature, which dares not to face the issue—prohibiting in state institutions all religious teachings except moral principles upon whicn all good men agree."

In conclusion Professor Adler said that the Roman Catholic hierarchy would never be satisfied with such a condition of things, but would fight it bitterly. Pope Pius had condemned all friends of liberty, and had thrown down the gauntlet to civilization. "It is evident," he added, "that a conflict must soon come between the power of the pope and the modern state. Very well, let it come. Let us make it a grand final struggle, with our decks clear for action, instead of a miserable squabble. Let not the Protestant church cut off her natural allies by insisting that the state shall teach her doctrins. There are countless Catholics who will fight with us, taking their spiritual instruction from the Roman church, but standing up against all enemies for the sacred rights of American citizenship."

Freedom of Worship.

From the New York Times of March 12th.

The subject has been under discussion outside of the legislature for a number of weeks, with the result of indicating pretty clearly that the Roman Catholics are alone in demanding the proposed legislation and that the rest of mankind, who are entitled to the same rights, are opposed to it. The advocates of the bills hav appealed to the guarantee of the state constitution, which is in these words: "The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this state to all mankind." Like texts of scripture, this is subject to a variety of interpretations, and the mistake has been made of subjecting it to the rules of theological rather than of legal construction. It undoubtedly means that the state shall not by its laws or through its constituted authorities interfere with the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession or worship, or make any discrimination, or giv any preference in regard to it. It does not mean that the state shall provide for all mankind in public institutions or out of them the means of exercising and enjoying religious worship. A fairer inference is that it was intended that in making laws and administering public interests no cognizance whatever shall be taken of differences in religious profession and worship.

The construction which Bishop McQuaid and others put upon the constitutional guarantee is one which it is utterly impracticable to carry out in public institutions. If facilities are to be afforded for every form of religious profession and worship in those institutions, without discrimination or preference, there must be opportunities furnished for every mode of worship and of religious teaching represented by the faith, real or assumed, of the inmates. A variety of religious teachers and preachers would hav to be admitted and allowed to set up and conduct their various forms of worship according to their own notions of their requirements. Unless this were permitted there would be discrimination and preference. Such a system would be subversiv of all disciplin and all proper control of the inmates of the institutions by those in charge. There could be no lines or limitations drawn except such as the ministers of the different sects were willing to consent to. The difficulty would be increased by the agitation which has been excited on the subject, and there could no longer be, as there has heretofore been in some of the institutions of the state, a quiet relaxing of the principle that the public authorities hav nothing to do with the recognition or the allowance of different modes of religious teaching and worship.

The concession of the Roman Catholic claim would inevitably lead to contention and confusion and a serious interference with the quiet and salutary disciplin of public institutions. It would in effect be an interference with religious freedom and lead to discriminations and preferences. There is no safety except in treating all denominations and forms alike, and giving no recognition to any of them. Every individual should be left to the free exercise and enjoyment of his religious profession and worship, such as it may be, as an individual matter; but that does not imply that if his conduct has taken him into a penal institution, he may there set up a church or a chapel for formal celebrations of worship, or hav it done for him. The only logical alternativ to the inadmissible Catholic claim is the complete exclusion of all sectarian teaching and of all forms of worship that represent differences of profession. That alternativ ought to be adopted, not only in the House of Refuge, but in all penal and charitable institutions supported at the expense of the people.

Regarding sound moral teaching there ought to be no difference of opinion. If it were possible to hav any manner of worship reduced to such simple elements that nobody could object to it, it would be well to adopt it, though it would hav to be in a sense a state religion. But it is not possible. The Catholics admit nothing to be religious worship, or fit to take the place of it, which is not prescribed by their church. While complaining of intolerance because they are not permitted to carry their teachings and their forms of worship into schools and public institutions for the behoof of such as may be reckoned of their faith, intolerance of everything not prescribed and sanctioned by the church is an essential principle of their policy. Let them hav it within the proper field of their activity, in their private belief, in their churches, and in all schools and institutions sustained by their own efforts and their own means, but keep it out of public schools and public institutions, out of legislation and administration, and keep the claims of all other sects and denominations out with it. That is the only safe course and the only real method of conforming to the constitutional guarantee of freedom and equality in religious matters.

"Clover."

Declining an invitation to a social dinner once, Colonel Ingersoll painted this beautiful picture with no brush but a clover-head: "I regret that it is impossible for me to be in 'clover' with you to-morrow. A wonderful thing is clover. It means honey and cream—that is to say, industry and contentment—that is to say, the happy bees in perfumed fields, and at the cottage gate old 'Bos' the bountiful, serenely chewing satisfaction's cud, in that blessed twilight pause that like a benediction falls between all toil and sleep. This 'clover' makes me dream of happy hours—of childhood's rosy cheeks—of dimpled babes, of wholesome, loving wives—of honest men, of springs, and brooks, and violets, and all there is of stainless joy in peaceful human life. A wonderful word is clover! Drop the c and you hav the happiest of mankind. Take away the c and r and you hav left the only thing that makes a heaven of this dull and barren earth. Cut off the r alone and there remains a warm, deceitful bud that sweetens breath and keeps the peace in countless homes whose masters frequent clubs. After all, Bottom was right: 'Good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow.'"

The Rights of Debtors.

In its issue of March 7th, the Boston Herald reports Mrs. Livermore as saying, in her lecture on Wendell Phillips:

"Of all his once large fortune Mr. Phillips left but $25,000. The day before he died he burnt all the notes he held against others, a small fortune in itself, remarking, 'My executors might make trouble for these people. I will make it sure that they shall not do so.'"

It is a settled principle of labor reform widely accepted by growing numbers of intelligently conscientious people, that a so-called debt, paid once in the form of interest, is thereby justly canceled, and that there is no "equity," no property claim defensible in law or morals afterward. From 1865, when chattel slavery ended with the war, Mr. Phillips was an earnest student of the labor question. I infer that the startlingly significant and logically prophetic act which the Herald reports was a deliberate recognition of one of the fundamental equities of industrial progress. If Mr. Phillips burnt those notes in order to emancipate debtors from unjust claims upon them, the act will be a star in the crown of his glory, which will outshine many other luminous events in his wonderful career as an oratorical reformer. Its royal integrity and beneficent service to human kind cannot be overestimated.

E. H. Heywood.

The National Liberal League.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

CHARLES WATTS, First Vice-President. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Secretary, 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$3,525.46
Toronto,	30.00
Bradford,	10.00
J. D. Kruschke,	1.75
W. A. Hathaway,	.75
Dennis Morris,	.25
Total,	$3,568.21

Annual and Life Memberships.

Every Freethinker should become an Annual or Life Member of the National Liberal League. Life-membership certificates are issued at $25 each; annual membership, $1. These certificates are adapted to framing, and bear the signatures of the secretary of the League, Samuel P. Putnam, and of its president, Robert G. Ingersoll; they are therefore an ornament to any place and a memorial of great value. They should adorn the walls of ten thousand homes before the close of the year. The support thus given to the League would make its success certain. A. C. MACDONALD,

Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Address applications for membership to S. P. Putnam, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

News and Notes from the Field.

In spite of the old-fashioned orthodoxy of Lexington, Ky., there was quite a good audience in the Opera House on Sunday afternoon to listen to my lecture on "Universal Mental Emancipation." The attention and favor with which its Radical utterances were received show that the Liberals of this place are up with the times. There is no doubt that throughout the South there is a vast number of Freethinkers; but they are as yet unorganized, and their force is but little felt. The churches are dying out, but their power to persecute still remains, and they exercise it to the utmost of their ability. The press is muzzled to a very large extent, and whatever is in favor of mental progress is carefully excluded. But this subserviency to the superstitions of the past cannot long endure. This beautiful country, where the hand of nature is so lavish in the very power of its material prosperity, must express the advancement of human thought.

I had a most agreeable visit with Dr. Hallowell, one of the best of our pioneer workers. He was formerly a member of the Campbellite church, and was a most activ Christian. The same earnestness of spirit is in his Liberal work. He sees the necessity of putting something better in the place of Christianity—that we are to build up as well as tear down. He believes in a thorough organization of our forces. He is well acquainted with the Liberal element of the South, and has abundant faith in its practical development. D. B. Cozine and others are cordial coadjutors with him; and, without doubt, a flourishing auxiliary League will be established in Lexington, and the banners of our cause will be flung to the breeze and wave in victory.

The outlook is much better than I expected. The most influential citizens are Freethinkers. This progress has been going on for years, until thousands are outside of the old dogmatic lines. It needs co-operativ effort to make the startling result appear, and the doom of ecclesiasticism be sealed. We shall be astonished at the mighty revolution which, in a few years, is sure to be accomplished.

This is a glorious place, indeed, for a regenerated humanity. It is the famous "blue grass" region—the most splendid country in the world. It is here that we see the "perfect horse," that wonderful and delightful animal whose motion is like poetry. I had the pleasure of looking upon these glorious steeds that rival the wind in swiftness, as they leaped and pranced along the floor of their palatial stables. The force of horse-flesh can no farther go. The horse is, indeed, civilized He has reached the highest form of secular development. He has graduated from the theological era. He is now the beloved child of science. He has all the benefits of artistic culture. The laws of his being are fulfilled. Attention is paid to his paternity. Blood will tell, and therefore blood is attended to. The thoroughbred is anything but the result of Christian training. He has all the advantages of a rational education.

The horse, so swift and bright, so intelligent and so graceful, fills me with hope. If we can hav the perfect horse, we certainly can hav the perfect man. Why not? At least let us try the same method with humanity that we do with the horse—look to pedigree, to a good start in life, to healthful food, to happy surroundings, to scientific training, and I believe we shall hav a humanity as beautiful in its way as the finest racer that ever pranced over the green sod of Kentucky. If we do not, I am afraid the horse will get so far ahead of us that, from the hights of his brilliant energy, he will look in scorn upon our "ways that are dark," and refuse even to bear upon his secular back such miserable specimens of orthodox depravity. Let us hope for the best, and make an effort to be as thoroughly developed as the Kentucky thoroughbred; and then we may be sure that but very little crime will be committed; and our morals will be of the highest order. The science of heredity, which has been so well applied to the horse, must find a still greater triumph in man, for man is an animal first of all, and, unless he is a good animal, he is not apt to be a good man, except in a very half-way sort of manner.

These Kentucky horses are sold all over the world, even to deserts of Africa, and thus compete with the Arab steed upon his nativ wilds. If America can thus produce the best horses and the best cattle, it certainly ought, with the same advantages, to produce the best men.

I find a very large Liberal element here in Cincinnati. I lecture on Sunday next, and hope to be able to giv a good report of what can be done in this busy metropolis. No doubt there could be a large organization here on the basis of the Nine Demands, the moment our work is understood and the necessity of its success perceived. The trouble is that many Liberals hav spent no thought upon the matter, and do not realize that they must meet the issue sooner or later, and make a stand for liberty or submit to the tyranny of the churches.

On Sunday, March 22d, I expect to be at Nashville, Tenn., and do some work side by side with that veteran of our cause, W. S. Bailey, of the Liberal. Fraternally yours, Cincinnati, Mar. 12, 1885. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

NOTES FROM CANADA.

Last Sunday Mr. Charles Watts lectured in Toronto on "Buddha and Christ." These lectures all through hav been well attended, every Sunday night the hall being crowded with most enthusiastic audiences. In fact, never in the history of Freethought hav our principles been so successfully presented to the public of Canada as during Mr. Watts's stay amongst us. He has been ably supported by Mr. Putnam and Mr. Reynolds, and now arrangements are being made for a course of lectures by Mr. Burnham, who is expected to be in Toronto during April.

On Monday, March 9th, Mr. Watts broke new ground in Bradford, Ontario. The night was rough in the extreme, but this did not prevent a good audience assembling, even in this orthodox town, and this, too, in spite of the entreaties of the ministers of the district advising their congregations on the previous Sunday not to listen to Mr. Watts, "whose object it was to unsettle their faith in the religion of Christ." So extensiv is the bigotry and persecuting spirit in Bradford that Mr. Risser had to go from Toronto to conduct the business of the meetings, the local friends thinking they were not in a pecuniary position at present to brave the theological predjudices of the pious inhabitants. The meeting was in every way a success, and the two hundred persons who attentivly listened to Mr. Watts's exposition of Secularism had a very different idea of Secular principles after the lecture from what they entertained before. The sale of literature was good, and the expressions of approval at the close of the meetings were both numerous and encouraging. The editor of the local paper, the Witness, referring to the lecture, says:

"Our conscience would not permit us to be present, and we know of many others that were similarly affected. Nevertheless the lecturer had an audience, and he discoursed for over an hour on the subject in hand. We understand no one was present to discuss the question, hence the invitation extended passed by unheeded. Mr. Watts, therefore, could present his case as he liked without fear of contradiction, and this he did to the best advantage possible, we are told. Public sentiment is against such doctrins being expounded in our midst, and it is likely such another opportunity will not be given to any one holding such peculiar views."

The same journal states:

"Reference was made in the Presbyterian and Methodist pulpits last Sabbath to the intended visit of Mr. Chas. Watts, of Infidel proclivities. To attend his lecture it was held would hav a bad effect upon the churches, and possibly help to increase the skeptical belief in our midst. The most good to Christianity would be accomplished by giving a wide berth to such men."

While such attempts as these on the part of Christians to intimidate others and prevent them from hearing both sides is highly reprehensible, our Secular friends should, whenever possible, show the courage of their opinions and resist such an insult to intellectual inquiry. The object of the National Liberal League is to break down this theological barrier to mental freedom, and much practical work has already been done in this direction by its officers. But to carry it on thoroughly it is desirable that local members should unite, for with a good organization the enemy will hav less opportunity than ever of being successful in their efforts to obstruct Freethought. What mockery it is for Christian ministers to boast of the intrinsic value of their religion and its powerful influence on the human mind, when they tremble at the very thought of their flocks hearing the other side of the question. Secularists never attempt to limit the right of Christian advocacy; on the contrary, they as far as possible encourage it by inviting that it be conducted even in Secular halls.

The evil of endeavoring to stifle free inquiry is not so great in our large cities as in the smaller towns, and it is just here where the officers of the League desire to carry on the propaganda during week evenings. To do this effectivly is of course expensiv, and taxes very severely the Campaign Fund, but we are happy to be able to say, from personal knowledge, that the results hitherto fully justify such expenditure. We hav now two official representativs of the League kept constantly in the field, and the record of their labors, which appears each week in this journal, speaks for itself. It is to be hoped that the Campaign Fund will be fully sustained in order that during the next few months the same useful and extensiv propagandism may be carried on through the Western states that has recently been conducted in Canada.

It is stated that a section of the Christian party in Welland is not at all satisfied with the result of the recent debate held in that town between the Rev. Walker and Charles Watts. They are therefore, it is said, looking about for another champion to try his skill against our first vice-president. Well, the more the merrier, for, from what the present writer knows of Mr. Watts in debate, he will never say die. Mr. W. Tum in writing as to the local feeling about the debate, says: "Since the discussion there hav been quite a few inquiries if the principles of Secularism could be got in consecutiv form. The orthodox part of the community say nothing about the debate. The heterodox are jubilant. We all feel that a great advance has been made in Secularism." During the past week various comments hav appeared in the local press. It appears that a Rev. Mr. Wilkinson is said to hav challenged Mr. Watts in debate, but that gentleman did not hear the said challenge. The friends of the Rev. Mr. Walker hav published this fact, which called forth the following in the Welland Telegraph of last Saturday from a Christian supporter of the Rev. Mr. Wilkenson:

"If Mr. Watts did not hear of it [the challenge], it saved him a harder task than he has had with Elder Walker."

It is only fair, however, to state that the very pious editor of the paper just referred to givs the crown of victory in the debate to Mr. Walker in the following words:

"In discussing the relativ merits of the two men we incline to the popular views so frequently expressed by those who regularly attended the debate, viz., that Mr. Watts is an orator of no mean order, but his opponent is conceded by nearly all the parties concerned to be by far the better in argument. While he did not possess the rapid delivery and flowing eloquence of Mr. Watts, he convinced his auditors by powerful arguments and intense earnestness that Christianity is worthy the acceptance of all rational human beings, and that the absorbing and prevailing desire of his heart was to elevate the morals of the human race."

This should console Elder Walker, whose "powerful arguments" were almost exclusivly borrowed from Volney, Voltaire, and Thomas Paine. And the arguments were powerful, but they had no more to do with the debate than had the supposed "man in the moon."

In April Mr. Watts and Mr. Putnam commence a lengthy tour through the Western states, after which they return to the East. All applications for lectures to be given during the present season should be sent to Mr. S. P. Putnam at once, so that tours may be arranged with as little outlay for railway traveling as possible. It should be remembered that Mr. Watts cannot be in two places at the same time; and as that gentleman is desirous of complying with as many requests to lecture as possible, the secretary, Mr. Putnam, wishes to receive all intended invitations for Mr. Watts's services without delay. The cause of the friends being disappointed recently in Ohio and Michigan was the applications coming too late. All engagements are made some time in advance. If branches of the League will remember this, every effort shall be made to accommodate all.

After much trouble and delay arrangements hav at last been made for Mr. Watts to meet the Rev. Dr. Sexton in three nights' debate in Montreal. This will be the first encounter these gentlemen will hav had in this country. According to all reports, Dr. Sexton is the ablest debater on the Christian side to-day, and we all know what Mr. Watts is. Therefore a good time is expected. J. B.

Liberalism.

From the Hagerstown (Ind.) Exponent.

As there were many who did not embrace the opportunity to hear the doctrins of Secularism as taught by the distinguished Secularists, Charles Watts, of London, and S. P. Putnam, of New York, in their lectures here this week, the Exponent interviewed the gentlemen yesterday, and below givs the basis upon which they build, or in other words, their foundation principles. In answer to our request to giv the Exponent their principles, etc., Mr. Watts replied:

"Secularism is a science of life, having no necessary connection with any of the theologies of the world (1) That as this life is the only one of which we hav any knowledge, we seek to promote, by material means alone, the physical, moral, and intellectual condition of society. (2) That personal excellence and general usefulness in human affairs, being regarded by us as of greater importance than the consideration of theological speculations and the adherence to alleged supernatural teachings, should be the chief objects of human solicitude and labor. (3) That the basis of all conduct is the temporal well-being of the people, and the object of all action is the acquirement and practice of wisdom, truth, temperance, fortitude, and justice. (4) That reliance upon the discoveries of science, and in the benefits arising from their application to the needs of mankind, is preferable to reposing trust in theological faiths and the teachings of the Bible. (5) That the motiv prompting to action should be the attainment of the highest possible individual and general happiness on earth, not the desire for personal enjoyment in the alleged heaven of Christianity. (6) That if a just God exists, and if a judgment day ever arrives, honest inquiry, earnest conviction, integrity of character, and fidelity to principle should secure as warm an approval and as good a reward for the Secularist who rejects the faith of Christendom as could be obtained by the Christian who is able to believe in the teachings of the New Testament. (7) That to select the good and to reject the bad in any or all religions is a right that any and every person should be allowed honestly and conscientiously to exercise, without incurring any disadvantages here, or any punishment in any possible hereafter. Our basis of morality is utility—that is, the usefulness of an action to the general society, not merely to the individual. We accept all that is good and true in the Bible and in Christianity, rejecting only those portions which are impracticable or that are injurious to society. In reference to God, his nature, and a future life, we are Agnostics—that is, we do not profess to hav any knowledge upon these subjects."

Reckoning from their standpoint, the gentlemen handled their subject in a masterly manner; but we hav heard ministers of the Christian gospel who in our judgment equaled if not excelled them, and gave equally as satisfactory explanation and arguments of their side of the controversy. The subject is a very interesting one, and had we the time and space we would discuss it further. We hope to be able to giv, through the Exponent, an extended discussion of the subject. They had a considerable audience both evenings, which were made up principally of those who hav a leaning toward Secularism and of those who hav not yet adopted the views of either side; we also noticed a number of pronounced Christians present.

Clay Rudy acted as chairman the first evening and B. F. Jewett the next.

Tent Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$82.50
J. M. R.,	1.10
A. E. Smith,	1.00
Total,	$84.60

CATALOG of the Truth Seeker Company's publications sent free upon application.

Communications.

Spiritualism.

DR. CHESEBROUGH.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: As I am made to appear in the last number of your paper either a dishonest man or an idiot, I hope you will hav the comity and justice to allow me to explain to your readers some phases of Spiritualism, which, when understood by the public, will, I believe, fully justify my course, and at the same time apologize for my traducers.

For many years past a stupendous battle has been raging in the spirit-world between the aristocratic and diakkas, or earth-bound spirits.

Among the former may be named Confucius, Plato, Esop, Apollonius Tyaneus, of Ephesus; while in the latter army prominently appear Tiger-Faced Jim, Rocky Mountain Jake, Leopold Solomon Silver-Skin, Bob ——, and other desperadoes.

Ten years ago the battle-ground of these hosts was transferred to Syracuse, N. Y., and since that time most of the engagements hav taken place under the very roof of my house and in the presence of my own family and other reliable witnesses.

Two years ago the higher spirits, through one of the most wonderful and trustworthy mediums, Mr. John W. Truesdell, began writing a book called "Bottom Facts," which they designed as a defense of the grand truths of Spiritualism.

During the progress of this work a villainous and utterly remorseless diakka, whose name I will not pollute my pen to write, controled the author to destroy certain portions of his manuscript, substituting the diakka in the place thereof, with the view of changing truth into falsehood and spiritual facts into ridicule.

So well did these desperate creatures succeed that on the appearnce of the book a majority of the Spiritualists of the land at once condemned the work, voting it an exposure of Spiritualism. It has since transpired that among those most cruelly and heartlessly deceived by the diakka was Prof. Henry Kiddle, president of the American Spiritual Alliance, who was controled to write me the following letter, which the band of desperadoes quickly dematerialized, and on the 2d of February, 1884, reproduced in a Western Spiritual paper.

Here is the letter:

7 East 130th street, New York, July 11, 1883.

Dr. Chesebrough, My Dear Sir: Several papers hav been sent to me containing reviews of the "Bottom Facts," in each of which the writer seems to think that Spiritualism has received the coup de grace, and "must giv up the ghost." The injury done to the cause of Truth by such a series of artfully concocted and ingeniously arranged and presented misrepresentations is incalculable, and to us appears irreparable; but I hav full confidence that all the devilish schemes of the wily "adversaries" will be brought to naught, and they sent back to the pit of darkness where they belong. How mortifying that a Spiritualist journalist, as J. C. Bundy claims to be, should publish a commendatory notice of this infamous book, pronouncing it a "valuable book for Spiritualists." Does not this show where the R.-P. Journal stands? Ought it to be sustained in such almost treachery?

But I write you for suggestions and information. I cannot attack this book without ammunition. It is most craftily constructed, with a devil's malice and cunning. See how our guns are spiked in the case of Crookes and the Fays. If such men as Crookes can be deceived, and with his scientific appliances, why not Wallace, or Zoellner, or Hare? So the world will reason; so our enemies will say; and as has been said, the parsons and priests hav now a rifled gun with large bore, that will be trained against our best positions. Of course, the man is a self-confessed thief and liar; but our virtuous foes will laughingly say, "Set a rogue to catch a rogue." The Banner's article was good and strong, but we must get a strong one in a good secular paper. I hav received a copy of the Rochester Democrat containing a long and favorable notice of Truesdell's book, and almost challenging reply. I desire to respond, if I can do so effectually—you know what is said, "We need a long spoon when we eat soup with the d——l."

Now, I want the particulars of the "great stone;" how did it occur? What are the best evidences of T.'s mediumship that can be used? Particularly of independent writing? Any other facts that can be used? Can your statements be publicly referred to. Ought not his disguise of your name to be exposed? Please write me an early reply, giving any advice or suggestions as to this matter. How sad it is that Spiritualists hav no effectiv organization to deal with such a man and such a publication. After more than a generation of investigation and accumulation of evidence, to be placed hors du combat before the public by a confessed mountebank and trickster! Still I am sure the truth will come uppermost.

Yours fraternally, Henry Kiddle.

It is no breach of etiquet on my part, but justice to all, in thus presenting this letter to the public, when accompanied with the above explanation.

I do not consider Mr. Kiddle in the least censurable, or even responsible, as its author. I desire in this public manner not only to fully exonerate both Kiddle and Truesdell, but to relieve myself of the unjust charge of any intended breach of confidence. Let the blame rest where it belongs, upon the heads of those invisible devils who hav so long succeeded in puzzling the world.

Mr. Kiddle would never hav indulged in such epithets as liar, thief, etc., while in a normal condition, but under the pressure of spirit devils we find some of our most exemplary citizens engaged in strange and almost incomprehensible deeds.

In regard to Elmina's report, all I hav to say is that "none are so blind as those who will not see." This good lady (Mrs. Slenker) witnessed many phases of the "sacred slate" phenomena which she does not refer to in her report. On the evening when the spirits removed an obnoxious name from said slate and substituted in my own hand a duplicate, she witnessed my anger at the imposition; and while demanding of Mr. Truesdell my own slate, he (Mr. Truesdell), under control, before our very eyes, in broad gaslight, simply breathed upon the duplicate slate, when it dematerialized, and the "sacred slate" was then and there restored.

Mrs. Slenker witnessed writing upon her own tied-up slates without human hands, and had many other evidences which would convince any one not already prejudiced against truth by lying and mischievous spirits.

Mrs. Slenker is a medium, and I hav definit information from the spirit-world that the same despicable character who affected Professor Kiddle now openly brags that he is daily influencing Mrs. Slenker to ridicule truth and continually assault the sacred cause of Spiritualism.

Syracuse, N. Y. Silas J. Chesebrough, M.D.

MR. PERRY.

Mrs. E. D. Slenker bas gone to great pains to show up the tricks of her Materialistic friends, who by a conspiracy were enabled to impose on Dr. Silas J. Chesebrough and the general public in a slate-writing enterprise they engaged in, which is published in your issue of March 7th, which she designates as "a wonderful slate and a genuin humbug."

To persons outside of the operations of the spirit realm, and unacquainted with the deep animosity of some spirits of both spheres of existence, her slate imposition might be thought to hav great weight against the truth of spirit communion; but to Spiritualists who for a long time hav studied the subject it becomes the silliest trash to display the methods of such a conspiracy and expect it to operate against spirit phenomena. Who does not know and admit that just such tricks can be performed, and when persons of heretofore honest reputations engage in such business, it were a wonder indeed if they did not deceive even a spirit medium.

If ten thousand such conspiracies were exposed, it would not prove anything against such phenomena as usually convince persons of Spiritualism. These professed communications from the ancients or from persons unknown to us amount to nothing, but one line, characteristic of the intelligence of some friend we hav known and loved, will do for us in a moment what all such conspiracies cannot undo. And when Mrs. Slenker assures us that her slate-trick "is the key to at least nine-tenths of all the spirit slate-writings that hav ever been produced," she is exposing her ignorance of the subject and is unconsciously writing nonsense.

A few weeks ago, Dr. Slade went before the Seibert committee of Philadelphia for the investigation of such phenomena as occur in his presence. After some twenty sittings, in which the committee prepared their own slates, and by changes of rooms and locations and furniture, etc., they were utterly astonished at the communications which they received and the phenomena they witnessed. Utterly unable to account for it on any other theory than that of spirit intelligence, they asked him to state candidly how he did it, or by what means they were produced; to which he replied that he believed they were spiritual, that he was simply the instrument through which the spirits operated, but that the committee of learned doctors were as well able to tell how it was done as he was. They, feeling that he had acted fairly, paid him $300 for his seances. Subsequently they engaged a man who professed to do the same or similar things—a legerdemain performer. He did writing on slates, and some wonderful tricks, and tried to make them believe that his slate-writings were just like Dr. Slade's, but it was no go. When the committee did not let go of their slate, so as to allow the great thaumaturgist to write upon it with a tincture of tannin and wash it with a solution of oxalic acid, they could get no writing on it. Dr. Slade's writing conveyed intelligence directed to individual members of the committee, but the great Keller's did not. And yet it is well known that when Dr. Slade was surrounded by a set of Materialists in Canada who were likely to imprison him and subject him to a long and costly trumped-up conspiracy charge against his mediumship, having gone through a similar ordeal in England, he was willing to say there was nothing in it all, and refunded the money they had paid him, glad to escape the clutches of these honorable (?) Materialistic investigators.

Spiritualists know just the kind of influences that are at work when these tricks are being done, but it were useless to advance them to explain the cases of deception and conspiracy, as arguments, when writing for eyes that cannot see a ghost of any kind; but I hav received communications of intelligence that all the jugglers of the world cannot perform nor imitate; and Mr. Truesdell is just as well satisfied to-day that he cannot do what he witnessed at Dr. Slade's room, and the phenomena which occur at Slade's seances, as he did know that his Caffray conspiracy was a cheat and falsehood that no honorable man should be engaged in performing. It is no excuse for him or his friends to say that he did it to expose Spiritualism, because he had not and has no reason to presume it a fraud, except in such cases as he was personally engaged to make it such. It is a singular fact that the expositions of fraud are invariably, when fully sifted, the work of Materialists and fraud-hunters. They concoct a fraud by means of a conspiracy, inveigle a medium into it some way, and then explode it, dragging down the unsuspecting one along with their own deception and humbug.

There are just two sides to this question, the Spiritual and Material; and while they are both true and in reality inseparable, the ignorance and stupidity of our century hav arrayed them against each other in an irrepressible conflict, and sooner or later each person flops into the camp of one or the other party, and, like the "Kilkenny cats," they are destroying each other; while, if each party would content himself to mount his side of the inclosure, they might smile across the chasm and understand that each fence rested upon the same foundation.

It will never do to build up a man of straw, very much like a real man, and then bravely batter him down, expecting to destroy any real man.

If the real facts and phenomena of Spiritualism cannot be met and explained, they will recommend themselvs to the intelligence of mankind and will be accepted by them in spite of all such silly and vicious frauds as Mrs. Slenker delights to hav published; and if she expects to show by them that the millions of Spiritualists are a pack of noodleheads, she may liv to find that she was utterly mistaken in her estimate.

If Mr. Truesdell & Co. will send me an intelligent communication, purporting to come from any of my spirit friends, giving names, incidents, dates, etc., such as I hav received through Dr. Slade and other mediums, I will inclose him $10 for every one such case. No, no, my friends, it will not do; your tricks and your conspiracies against Spiritualism only make the genuin the more precious and desirable. If you concoct nine-tenths of fraud, that other tenth is of more intrinsic value to an honest truth seeker than all the other and larger fraction, constituting the unit, although your object seems to be to bury the one-tenth with your nine-tenths of fraud.

Yours truly, J. R. Perry.

P.S.—I may add that the evidence in favor of Dr. Slade's mediumship, as attested by the renowned Samuel Bellachini—who has lately deceased, and who was conjuror to the court of King and Emperor William I., who had private investigations, all he wanted, by request of his king, to which he swore and subscribed his renowned name, and which induced the king to investigate the subject incognito and to become a full believer in the phenomena—is a striking instance to show the difference between prestidigitation and Spiritualism when honestly applied and truthfully investigated; and when the acknowledged master of prestidigitation, with full opportunity to examin the whole case, declares that he cannot account for the phenomena on the theory of his profession, it is a poor argument for Mrs. Slenker and others to make efforts to induce the world to believe that it is all a simple matter of sleight-of-hand and fraudulent performance.

J. R. P.

M. BABCOCK TO MRS. SLENKER.

My Worthy Friend: You hav given your ideas upon the subject of invisible slate writing. You no doubt will recollect that long ago I wrote you that I thought of writing you an open letter, and you replied by saying that you really hoped that I would do so. But somehow I never got at it, and as the subject I designed to write about was slate writing, your last article in The Truth Seeker seems to make it a duty which I owe to you, the Spiritualists, Slade, and others, to giv my experience with the slate writer.

I was kindly invited one evening to be present at a sitting with Mr. Slade and a few others, but I declined for the reason that I wanted broad daylight. I didn't want the lights extinguished. The next day I and my wife called on Slade at the Lansing House, and in broad daylight we had a sitting. I tipped the table bottom side up, and became satisfied that the table was honest, free from wires or springs, and then we took our seats at the table.

I selected one of the slates which was free from any writing whatever. The slate, like the table, was, in my judgment, honest. I held the slate so that Slade could not hav seen what I wrote. With the writing down I placed a little pencil on the other side, and Slade, with his thumb, all the while on top of the edge of the table and his fingers below the slate, held it firmly to the under-side of the table. He then asked if the spirits would write, when three raps were heard.

Slade's one hand, and my wife's and my hands were spread upon the table, and all touched so as to form a connection. When the pencil began to write we could very distinctly hear it, and I then raised my hand, unbeknown to Slade, about a quarter of an inch, and then the pencil stopped its work. But when, unknown to Slade, we let our hands touch, the pencil every time would again begin to write. When the writing was finished the slate was handed to me, and there was a message in a large, bold hand purporting to hav been from my brother. The signature was in a different hand, and, I must confess, like, or very much like, the writing of my brother. It was signed Wm. Babcock, and on saying to Slade that I would prefer that the first name should hav been written in full, Slade wiped out the name, and on placing it again under the table called for the name in full. In an instant the pencil began to scratch, and when the slate was withdrawn it contained the full name of William Babcock.

I am afraid that my old friend, Elmina, fell into wrong hands for an honest investigation. Now, Elmina, what made the pencil stop writing when I raised my hand? There was invisible writing connected with intelligence—where did it come from, God, the devil, or spirits? Or was it the result of natural causes—or was I deceived? M. Babcock.

St. John's Mich.

SEWARD MITCHELL.

"It has been shown that a belief in Spiritualism, whether true or false, is not as good for this world as a belief in Atheism."—"Judas."

It has been shown nothing of the kind. On the contrary, it has been shown thousands of times that Spiritualism teaches more grand and elevating ideas than any and all other religions and philosophies put together, and the only belief that brings joy, sunshine, peace, and true happiness to all true believers.

Who ever taught the belief in "dead-man's-land?" There are no dead men, and no Spiritualists ever taught anything of the kind.

There never was a Spiritualist—no, not one—who ever taught the doctrin, "Believe or be damned."

If human brotherhood ever comes to this earth, it will be by the teachings of Spiritualism, or it never will come.

If there was ever more deception and disgusting nonsense put into the same space than "Judas" has in his communication, I never read it.

Seward Mitchell.

The Mayor of Montreal.

When Mr. Putnam visited Montreal some two months ago, he described it as a quaint mixture of the nineteenth century and the Middle Ages. The nineteenth century, however, seems to be coming out ahead, for Montreal has just distinguished herself by electing an outspoken Freethinker to the highest office in her gift. Mr. Beaugrand, who has just been elected mayor of Montreal, is a young journalist of great promis. He is the editor of La Patrie, the only French newspaper in the country which is entirely free of the trammels of the Roman Catholic church, and, as a natural consequence, its religious contemporaries are on the verge of hysterics at the unlooked for result. Le Monde says:

The country will ask the question if Montreal is a city of Anarchists, seeing that it has elected a mayor who professes to be an enthusiastic admirer of the principles of the French Revolution.

The Presse says:

Mr. Beaugrand is not the candidate we would hav wished to see succeeding Mr. Beaudry, but we do not view his election under unfavorable auspices. . . . There are many persons who think Mr. Beaugrand's election means the destruction of the churches, the extinction of all the lights of the sanctuary, and the overturning of all religious and social institutions. . . . The English proverb is almost universally true, which says, "A new broom sweeps clean."

Says La Minerve:

The red flag floats on the City Hall. Mr. Beaugrand is elected mayor of Montreal! Many can hardly believe it, but nothing is more true. His majority is a large one, 401 votes. This was an act of public aberration that we seldom see. We regret it and blush. After this anything is possible. Our English fellow-citizens desired to hav revenge on Mr. Beaudry, whom they hav accused for several years of having wished to monopolize the mayoralty to their detriment. This reproach is not unfounded, and it is not our fault if he had his reason to be so. They can now boast of having taken a startling revenge, however humiliating it may be, because without their support the man elected yesterday would hav been a sorry looking individual. They wished to defeat Mr. Beaudry without any regard to the choice of instrument. This election will hav a sad re-echoing through the country. With Mr. Beaugrand rougeism and the radicalism of days gone by again raises its head audaciously. Many who voted for him lightly, by antipathy to Mr. Beaudry, will regret their conduct after mature reflection. We owe this in great part to our internal divisions; otherwise it would hav been impossible. Whilst we tear ourselvs to pieces the Liberal party organizes, agitates, and pushes forward those whom, even yesterday, they would not hav dared to put to the front. . Must we hav some catastrophe to show us the danger of these dissensions and unite us as formerly?

La Patrie feels at liberty now to speak of the election, and to thank the electors for this signal victory. During the six years that Mr. Beaugrand has been in Montreal he has been terribly slandered, but the city has made up for it by electing him as its chief magistrate. Its adversaries ought to be convinced that the reign of hypocrisy and religious prejudices is ended.

To the young men of Montreal, however, the results of the election are entirely due. With their headquarters at the Freethought Club Rooms, they worked with a vim and an enthusiasm which guaranteed success from the start. Their efforts were gracefully acknowledged by Mr. Beaugrand in a speech made as soon as the result of the voting was made known.

He said that he wished he could find words to express his heartfelt thanks to the people of Montreal for placing him in such a proud position. He would especially thank the young men of the city—his friends—"the boys" of Montreal—for the gallant manner in which they had fought the battle for him. They had invited him to be their candidate, promising at the same time to stand by him, and they had kept their word.

The Witness, in commenting on the election, says:

If Mr. Beaugrand is a Freemason, as he is accused of being, it proves that he is in an attitude of defiance toward the ecclesiastical absolutism under which he has been brought up, and he should get credit for the courage of that attitude. For the rest, Mr. Beaugrand is what is, unfortunately, very rare in this province, a consistent and outspoken Liberal, and his success as such is a happy omen. It may encourage other men to call their souls their own.

The Christians of Montreal are evidently waking up to the fact that Freethought is making rapid strides in their midst.

In October last, when Dr. Sexton was challenged to hold a public debate with Mr. Watts, Dr. Potts, as spokeman for the clergy of Montreal, said "no reason existed in Montreal, or any part of the dominion, for such a debate. Nothing would giv the Freethought men, so-called, greater gratification than to hav their small wares advertised by such a debate as they professed a desire for." But now it appears that there is a necessity for such a debate, as we clip the following from a Montreal paper of March 5th:

The Rev. Dr. Sexton will shortly return from a lecture tour in the Western states and will take up the challenges received from Mr. Charles Watts to debate on "Christianity vs. Freethought."

The following manifesto has also been widely circulated within the past two weeks:

Being aware of the fact that there are those who, having assumed an attitude of open hostility to the Bible and Christianity, justify their position by professing to believe that anything and everything can be proven from the Bible, and affecting to believe that Christianity is responsible for all the moral and dogmatic monstrosities palmed off upon credulous society, in the form of popular tradition, or so-called church standards,

We hereby challenge any member of the Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club, or any of their recognized public lecturers, to prove by a scholarly, honest, and honorable exegesis of scripture that Christianity is in any way responsible for any of the following popular superstitions:

1. The Natural Immortality of the Soul of Man.
2. The Hell of so-called Orthodoxy.
3. The Doctrin of Endless Conscious Torment.
4. Belief in a Personal Devil.
5. The Doctrin of a Trinity in Unity.
6. The popular belief of going to Heaven at Death.
7. That this World is to come to an end; or that Man is to inhabit any other World.
8. The Supernatural and Plenary Inspiration of the whole of the Old and New Testaments.

And, until they hav done so, we would respectfully suggest to all Freethinkers the propriety of discriminating between Christianity as enunciated in scripture, intelligently understood, and its numerous pretentious counterfeits.

The Executiv of the Advent Christian Congregation.

We hope Dr. Sexton is in earnest, and hav no doubt that Mr. Watts will be able to accommodate him either in Montreal or elsewhere.

A Collateral Idea.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Acknowledging your courtesy of The Truth Seeker, which arrived yesterday, and noting your letter to B. R. Tucker, which, of course, he will answer himself, a collateral idea flashes across my mind which I impart to you, as it seems, though by implication only, to put Anarchism in the proper point of view as a social philosophy awaiting experiment.

Human nature being essentially an uninformed capacity or potency, and equally plastic to influences or disciplins of honesty and of rascality, the actual state of society, the increase of crime in the United States, and the diminishing loyalty or honor in all personal transactions, I might say even the general prevalence of perfidy and ruffianism, attest the tendencies of our actual system of government, in which the political and religious elements are intimately combined.

The motivs which underlie, impel, and sustain this morbid condition of persons and things belong to the cruder sort of egoism or animal selfishness on the plane of the senses, or proximate advantages to the exploiter. Anarchism implies the prevalence of loyalty and honor; so does the people's exchange bank; its characteristic financial institution, which may, however, exist under government, while Anarchism may exist independently of the bank.

Now, as to their motiv forces. There are two radicals in the constitution of humanity, egoism and altruism. Anarchism claims both altruism and the enlightened forms of egoism, both of which, or either, are inherent to loyalty and honor in personal transactions as expressed in > "This, above all things: to thyself be true;

> Thou canst not then be false to any man."

Which, coupled with Terence's

> "Nihil humanum a me alienum puto," is the spirit of Anarchism's gospel.

Now observe that, with the postulate of a well educated self-interest, an education which it is the primary object of the Anarchist school of Boston to impart, it meets the actual society with a twofold advantage of motivs. The Boston teacher, I think, underestimates the importance of segregation with a view to obtaining a fair field of experiment; but they ought to be better judges than I am of the possibilities and opportunities of their local sphere.

To resume: Anarchism implies the moral education of society. It will be spontaneously organized by personal contracts, when, if ever, such education has reached a certain degree of culture. I would willingly call this degree Emersonian, since privilege has spoiled the words gentleman and lady. Such a gentleman, however, as Miss Mulock's "John Halifax" will do well enough for a standard.

Fraternally yours, Edgeworth.

Still Conjuring by the Moloch that Crushed Him.

> "If we err in human blindness,
> And forget that we are dust;
> If we miss the law of kindness
> When we struggle to be just;
> Snowy wings of peace shall cover
> All the pain that clouds our way,
> When the weary watch is over,
> And the mists hav cleared away.
>
> "When the silver mists hav veiled us
> From the faces of our own,
> Oft we deem their love has failed us,
> And we tread our path alone.
> We should see them near and truly,
> We should trust them day by day,
> Neither love nor blame unduly,
> If the mists were cleared away.
>
> "When the mists hav risen above us,
> As our father knows his own,
> Face to face with those who love us,
> We shall know as we are known.
> Love, beyond the orient meadows,
> Floats the golden fringe of day;
> Heart to heart we hide the shadows,
> Till the mists hav cleared away."

In my next lecture on the treatment of criminals, insane, and paupers, I think I shall commence by reading the above three verses, then read a few most plain and positiv commands from him I am most anxious to obey, such as, "Feed the hungry," "Clothe the naked," "Visit the sick and imprisoned," "Set all captivs free;" then go on and state what I actually know is done in many of our jails, prisons, insane asylums, and almshouses.

While I know it is useless to say to a hangman, "Thou shalt not kill," and also know the fate of Gov. Benjamin F. Butler, who uncovered Tewksbury, as well as other places of actual torment, so long tolerated in the great state of Massachusetts, I dare and I will tell the truth. The truth is a part of God, and the truth is to make us free indeed. I hav some truths to tell, and am sorry I am unable now to be at my master's business telling said truths. But one year in one of the best conducted jails has, I fear, ruined me in health for life. I found it much worse than two years in a rebel jail in time of mad war. I, however, wish to forget myself and remember those who are now undergoing daily crucifixion. So long as bedless dungeons are provided for beardless boys and young and old men, as well as nursing women, in the great name of him who has said, "I will hav mercy and not sacrifice," I will enter my little protest.

As the entire nation appear to be truth seeking at this time, perhaps, humble as I am, I may be heard through the columns of The Truth Seeker.

All I wish to do is to kindle a fire of brotherly love in the hearts of the people. May I not do as I would be done by? I called on God Jesus and all true followers of Jesus to aid, succor, and save me during my terrible suffering in Dedham jail during the year 1884, it being the most horrid year of suffering I hav ever experienced.

Humbly I ask God and man for wisdom and aid. "Guide me, O thou great Jehovah!" is my sincere prayer to-day. Burnham Wardwell.

219 Tremont st., Boston, Feb. 24, 1885.

Resignation.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hereby resign my position as the president of the New York State Freethinkers' Association. I do this to favor the officious faction of "leading spiritual and general understanding" opposition, who try to convince all whom they meet at the conventions that "spirits are around." When defeated in such efforts they complain of unfair treatment from those who defensivly offer reasons in answer. Such "leading" may be good for the mediums and the Chainey converts, but is no help to the Nine Demands of Liberalism and the radical growth of the association.

As a private member, I can do a better work than remain their presiding officer.

I am under many obligations to all the truly Liberal and radical members for their timely and consistent support of our organization, and for which I sincerely thank them. Duty, liberality, and consistency prompt me to thus willingly giv the "spirits" and their complaining friends a lively, unobstructed "boom" and personal satisfaction. T. L. Brown.

Binghamton, N. Y., Feb. 2, 1885.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MARCH 21, 1885.

The Growth of the Tiger.

No more effectiv argument can be framed against the admission of Catholicism into our statutes and institutions than the "picture without words" published a long time ago by Puck, and reproduced for the benefit of our legislativ Solons on the first page of THE TRUTH SEEKER this week.

This picture accurately represents the Catholic church. Harmless when small and powerless, no sooner does she attain strength than she becomes a veritable tiger, ready with claw and fang to tear whatever shall oppose her. When she had only a few hundred thousand adherents in this country, our public schools were safe from her rapacity. With six or seven millions of followers, her demands for a division are fierce and brazen.

Precisely will this history be repeated in our reformativ institutions through the alleged "Freedom of Worship" bill. Content at first to share with the Protestants (those other humbugs) the profits indirectly accruing to the church through connection with the government, now that she is strong she asks for that which would practically place her far ahead of them in the race for proselytes. The demand for chapels in the houses of refuge and state prisons is intolerably impudent, but it is paralleled by the bill to exempt two millions of dollars' worth of property of the "Home of the Immaculate Virgin," and is surpassed by the amendment offered by a senator to increase the sum to five millions. This Freedom of Worship bill is the second link of the chain the church is forging with which to bind the state and make our government a slave of ecclesiasticism. It is artfully wrought, but none the less strong. The chief public supporter of the bill is Bishop McQuaid, the arch enemy of our school system. It will be a dangerous experiment to pass the bill, for the church evidently knows her strength, and it is in the consciousness of power that she makes her demands at this time.

We hope the men entrusted with the lawmaking power in this state will study thoughtfully the two opinions printed on another page of this paper by Felix Adler and the editor of the New York Times. The position taken by them is the only one that can be considered true, safe, and consistent with our Constitution and the genius of our institutions.

What Religion Costs.

The Rev. S. T. Dekins, of this city, says that "the cost of the maintenance of religion in the United States is estimated at one-half a cent per annum for each individual."

Mr. Dekins is a curious statistician. Of course it is impossible to get at the precise figure of the religious burden borne by the people, but surely a closer approximate can be arrived at than this. Let us see.

There is now about seven hundred millions of church property in the country, judging from the United States census of 1870 and from some of the state censuses of 1875. The average rate of taxation is about 2 1–2 per cent. The exemption therefore entails a financial burden on the people of some $17,500,000.

There are eighty-one thousand and a few odd hundred preachers in this country. Probably the eighty-one thousand draw salaries ranging from $20,000 to $600. Call it $1,500 average. That is $121,500,000.

Something like seventy thousand churches are to be found in our cities and villages. It costs a great deal to keep them in repair—say $200 each. This is $14,000,000.

Seventeen million and odd communicants are on the church rolls. Let them hav twenty millions of young and old who support the churches at an annual cost of $5 apiece; $100,000,000 goes there.

Now what do we get?

Loss by exemption from taxation, - -	$ 17,500,000
Salaries of ministers, - - -	121,500,000
Cost of maintaining churches, - -	14,000,000
Twenty millions spend five dollars each,	100,000,000
	$253,000,000

Or very nearly $5 each for every man, woman, and child in the country. Let Mr. Dekins figure again.

They Want the Earth.

What is called the "Father Drumgoole bill" came up again in the Senate of this state last week, on a motion to amend by Senator Cullen. The original bill provided that the "Home of the Immaculate Virgin" may hold property to the amount of $2,000,000. The senator saw the governor, who suggested that, instead of confining himself to Father Drumgoole's institution and having the old experience of constant applications for enlarged building by one institution after another continue forever, he introduce an amendment to the general act to apply to all charitable or religious societies. Senator Cullen moved to amend the law to fix the limit at $5,000,000. This aroused opposition from Senator Titus on account of the large exemption from taxation it necessitated. Senator Lansing favored limiting the sum to $2,000,000, and Senator Thomas got it laid over until the bill be printed.

The Catholic church is certainly coming out strong this winter, and there appears too much reason to fear that the politicians will be too cowardly to oppose, even if they are not in favor of, the outrageous demands of the ecclesiastics. With millions and millions of dollars' worth of useless property exempt, the church yet asks for more. "Father" Drumgoole's Mission is a comparativly young institution, yet by its persistent begging, state aid, and exemption from taxation, its property has grown to the enormous dimensions of two millions, and its senatorial lobbyist wishes to allow the still larger limit of five millions. It is an outrageous and an impudent demand, and if our legislature grants the petition every member voting aye will be as much a traitor to our institutions as was Benedict Arnold.

Flunked.

The Catholic Union and Times responds not a word to our fair offer of Feb. 28th; and Mr. Lambert has wrapped himself in equally dignified silence. We are not even "chastised" for our presumption.

We notice, however, in the last issue of the Union and Times an offer to discuss with the Express (Buffalo, we presume) the respectiv merits, or rather demerits, of Catholicism and Protestant Episcopalianism, and it givs us courage to hope that the editor may in time pluck up courage to accept our proposition. It seems the Express has impliedly challenged Father Cronin to defend the teachings of Ligouri; but with great breadth of view (and not a little discretion) Mr. Cronin wishes to substitute for Ligouri's teachings the proposition that the Catholic church comes nearer to Christ's idea of a church than does the Episcopalian. "Why," he asks, "if truth be the object of the proposed discussion, should this controversy be narrowed to the writings of this one doctor of the church? Why not rather raise it to a broader and loftier plane?" In the event of the controversy being thus elevated, Mr. Cronin professes himself willing, and even eager, for the combat.

If we can edge a word in here, before the battle is on, we would like to ask Mr. Cronin a question or two. Why narrow the controversy to a discussion of the respectiv claims of two sects of the same religion? Why not rather raise it to a broader and loftier plane, and discuss the respectiv claims of Christianity on the one hand and Secularism on the other? We hav Mr. Cronin's word for it that Mr. Lambert is a very able man; why not, then, permit Mr. Watts, or some other Freethinker, to debate with Mr. Lambert in the columns of the Union and Times. We renew our offer to publish such debate simultaneously with our Buffalo contemporary, and guarantee that Mr. Lambert shall hav every courtesy extended to his opponent. Let the debate be arranged as Mr. Cronin proposes to the Express: "For instance, each party to attack and defend in turn a stated number of theses; the subject matter in debate to be clearly defined and closely adhered to, and no wandering to extraneous questions."

The only limit we should put upon the disputants is that neither, to make a point, should quote in extenso the following bits of scripture: Isa. iii, 17; xxxvi, 12; Ezek. iv, 12–15; Gen. xix, 30–36; xxx, 1–16; xxxviii; 1 Kings, xiv, 10; 2 Kings, xviii, 27; Lev. xv, 16–33; Job. xl, 16–17. We feel sure, however, that the Freethought champion would never use them, and we presume Mr. Lambert entertains the opinion of the Rev. Father Maguire, who, in a debate at Dublin, said he would not read them to his audience for all the money in the world. We should also hope that Mr. Lambert would not ask any one to adopt the biblical injunctions profusely scattered throughout the Old and New Testaments—injunctions better honored in the breach than in the observance.

With these limitations, set solely in the interest of morality, truth, honesty, decency, peace, freedom, justice to women and love for children, kindness and benevolence toward all mankind, we are willing and eager for the debate. In the words of Mr. Cronin to the Express, "What does the" Catholic Union and Times "say to this proposal? We pause for a reply."

Doing Good.

A few days ago Mr. J. G. Rodman, of Locust Valley, called upon us, leaving, at the close of his visit, a five-dollar bill, to be use where it would do the most good. We hope he will consider it a good use of the money to apply it on the considerable cost of the picture on our first page and the sending of a copy of this issue to every Assemblyman and Senator of our legislature. Of course the "V" extends but a little way in this expense, but we are heartily thankful for the aid. We are ready to "carry the war into Africa," and shall do so as fast as means are provided, either through donations for the purpose, or by new subscribers, or by the sale of books. We believe in the practical work of lectures, distribution of literature, and the influencing of legislatures to remove the disabilities of Freethinkers and to repeal all laws which make the church a public burden, borne alike by those who hav faith in it and by those who regard it as a pernicious humbug. If those in sympathy with us will hold up our hands, THE TRUTH SEEKER will enter upon a crusade that shall never end till victory is won and justice to Infidels shall be an accomplished fact.

Editorial Notes.

THE Senate judiciary committee has reported a bill to remove the restrictions placed upon Atheistic witnesses in the commonwealth of Massachusetts.

THE Rev. Samuel H. Virgin, of this city, calls belief in "'faith cures' skeptical philosophy." What, then, would he call Tyndall's prayer test?

"THE churches seem to be more than usually anxious for a revival this winter," says the Independent. Perhaps the reason for this is that they more than usually need one.

T. B. WAKEMAN, Esq., will speak before the People's Spiritual meeting, Arcanum Hall, 57 West 25th street, Sunday evening, March 22d, upon "The Latest Phase of the Religion of Humanity."

To the legislativ Committee on Taxation, the junior editor of the Boston Index said he "had no hostility to any ecclesiastical sect or theory." The junior editor should be provided with a harp.

A CHRISTIAN speaker recently proclaimed that "the gift of the holy spirit to such as yield utterly to God in Christ is a reality to our day." Being a reality, of course the "gift of the holy spirit" is producible. We should like to see it.

USING the words of the Declaration of Independence, the New York Sun alleges that men are endowed by their creator with certain rights familar to all. Will the Sun show two things: 1. That a creator of man exists; and 2. That he endows anybody with anything?

THE Romish church noisily asserts that religious liberty was first proclaimed in this country by the Maryland Catholics. Twice within the past few weeks has this been declared publicly by men who should know better. The statement is a downright, positiv falsehood.

BY a vote of 261 to 214 the legislativ body of France has decided to abolish the Catholic faculties entirely, but, "for special political reasons," to continue those of the Protestant church, depriving them, however, of their stipend, and thus decreasing their already small income.

AMONG the "Freethought Jottings" in the Philosophic Inquirer, of Madras, India, we find this:

"In the New World, or rather the Unitsd States of America, there is not an abler and bolder Antichristian Freethought journal than THE TRUTH SEEKER, founded by the late great D. M. Bennett."

We can say the same of the Philosophic Inquirer in India.

THE Christian Advocate laments: "A great daily of this city, advertising on Saturday last its Sunday edition, says, 'Five hours of interesting reading for three cents.' Not ten minutes of that reading is religious. One of the chief attractions is an article on whist." This is indeed shocking.

EXTRA copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER can be had upon application. Single copies seven cents; in quantities of ten or over, five cents each. In addition to those we circulate, we hope our friends will interest themselvs to put a large number of this issue where they will do the most good.

MR. BHAGWAU DASS is the name of a Hindoo gentleman whom the missionaries (padris, the nativs call them) converted to Christianity. After his conversion he studied the system more deeply, with the result that he relapsed back to Hindooism, as the more philosophical faith. He is now lecturing throughout India against Christianity.

THERE was a time in the history of Israel when "the highways were unoccupied, and the travelers walked through byways," and "when every man did that which was right in his own eyes" (Judges v, 6; xvii, 6). Would a revival of this period under the modern title of Anarchy be one of S. P. Andrews's antithetical repetitions of the lowest in the highest?

THE eccentric religious people are again howling. A Baptist congregation in Wales has discovered that football is a snare of the devil, and one of the congregation has been censured for joining in the game. The Dundee Presbytery has condemned fancy fairs, and the Presbytery of Glasgow has denounced the observance of Christmas Day as a historical fiction and a popish abomination.

ALLEGING that George Eliot was in early life a Christian, a writer is trying to prove that she died a Christian on the ground that "the theologians of the Reformation declared with one voice that the new life, once kindled by divine grace in the soul, could not be extinguished." If that is the case, what is to prevent all the Infidels who were Christians in their youth from getting their mansions in "my father's house?"

WE judge by the following that some wicked advertiser has deceived the Religious Telescope:

"'What a dime will do for you,' which appeared in the Telescope of January 28th and February 4th, was a hellish deception and related to an advertisment of malt whisky. It was imposed on our columns in a devilish manner."

We implore the editor of the Telescope to peruse Matt. v, 34, ff.

"Is there not a fallacy in allowing free speech up to the very verge of an overt act, and then condemning people for doing that which we allow to be advocated with impunity?" asks the Christian Advocate. This idea of suppressing opponents is pre-eminently Christian doctrin, but hardly American. Applying this doctrin would empty a good many revival pulpits and prevent numerous cases of bastardy and insanity.

JOE COOK says that "Socialistic voters increase their numbers rapidly where Atheistic notions prevail. In Germany, in 1871, there were only 120,000 Socialistic voters; in 1877 there were 497,000. In the city of Berlin, in 1871, there were 1,900 only; in 1878 there were 56,000. There has been a similar growth in Hamburg, and in Leipzig, and in nearly every other great German city." According to this, Germany must be a nation of Atheists.

THE orthodox church of Russia has anathematized the Standists, a Protestant sect in southern Russia, numbering about five millions. They are declared the enemies of the state, and are pronounced guilty of blasphemy, which, according to Russian law, is punishable by exile to Siberia. The anathema is approved by the czar, who is bound to keep his country Christian as he understands Christianity, if it "kills every hen in the barn." Great country—Russia!

IT is not probable that Heber Newton will be tried for heresy. His bishop wrote to him to cease his heretical preaching or he (the bishop) would not administer the rite of confirmation in Anthon Memorial Church. With a pliability peculiarly his own, Mr. Newton ceased. And as if to show his willingness to wear the collar, he has begun to preach up religion and abuse Colonel Ingersoll. Mr. Newton is one of those unfortunate men who, with greatness thrust upon them, cannot sustain the weight.

MURAT HALSTEAD contributes to the North American Review for March an article on "The Revival of Sectionalism." In the same number, Archdeacon Farrar presents his views on "Future Retribution," and Prof. N. K. Davis discusses "The Moral Aspects of Vivisection." Max Muller describes the ideas of the Buddhists on the subject of Charity, and George John Romanes opens up a great subject with an article on "Mind in Men and Animals." The other articles are one by President Gilman on Titles (chiefly scholastic), one by Judge John A. Jameson on "Speculation in Politics," and one by John W. Johnston on "Railway Land-grants."

RUN athwart the hawse of a Catholic, and the chances are about ninety-nine and ten-tenths in a hundred that you will get roundly cursed for it. If James Gordon Bennett, of the Herald, were thin-skinned, the following fling, from the Catholic Union and Times, might annoy him: "The spiteful, mean, contemptible New York Herald twits American Catholics for having to submit the deliberations of their hierarchy 'to a foreign prince'—the pope—before they are of binding force. No doubt the reprobate son of a reprobate father will also be calling for a priest when he is dying. If so, we hope the priest will make the suppression of the indecent Personal column of the Herdld a sine qua non of absolution."

THE Rising Sun is a new paper devoted to expounding and supporting the doctrins of the "Deistarian church." The editor maintains that the Deistarian religion is the best religion for this life, and as good as any for the next. He holds that the Bible is "fictionated" history; that hell, Satan, and Santa Claus exist only in the imagination; that profane swearing is a Christian custom not worth adopting; that we can disbelieve the stories of Washington and the hatchet, William Tell and the apple, Esop's wolf and lamb, Robinson Crusoe, and the Bible miracles, without impairing our patriotism or our morality; and that all divine revelation has been a cruel imposition, and productiv of crime and misery. The Rising Sun is published by Marvin Fosdick, Kalamazoo, Mich.

THAT some of the Canadian papers are capable of taking a sensible view of the school question may be seen from the following extract from a Toronto paper: "Our Catholic friends seem likely to discover that a predominance of clerical influence in school affairs is a serious evil. One clergyman counts for more than two laymen in a school board, because of the deference paid his cloth. Clergymen are prone to be dictatorial and impracticable. They are seldom or never good business men, and they are so intolerant of criticism that they are permitted to hav their own way, even when that is a wrong way. No Catholic wants to sit on a school board, where he must either wink at irregular and illegal proceedings, or else embroil himself with his pastor, and earn the ill opinion of all the old women in the parish. The separate school system is a mistake, and a very serious one for the poorer class of Catholics."

IT appears from "Jefferson's Financial Diary," now in the possession of Samuel J. Tilden, extracts from which were recently printed in the Sun of this city, that the noted Infidel president was very charitably disposed, going so far as to donate handsome sums to churches and chapels. The following entries in the "Diary" are given as samples:

1792
Nov. 27 Pd Mr B—— a Subscription for missionaries 15D
1798 Feby 26 pd 5d in part of 20D Subscription for a hot-press bible
1801
June 25 Gav order on J Barnes for 25D towards fitting up a chapel.
Sept 23 pd Contribution at a Sermon 7.20
1802
April 7 Gave order on J. Barnes for 50D charity in favor of the Revd Mr. Parkinson towards a Baptist meeting house.
9 Gave order on J. Barnes in favr the Revd Doctr Smith towards rebuilding Princeton College 100D
1802
July 11 Subscribed to the Wilmington Academy 100D
1803
Feb 25 Gave Hamilton & Campbell ord. on J. Barnes for 100D charity to Carlisle College.
" Gave Genl Winn ord. on J. Barnes for 100D charity to Jefferson Monticello Academy in S. Carolina.
March 1. Gav in charity to the Revd Mr Chambers of Alexandria for his church an order on J. Barnes for 50D
Nov 18 Gav order on J. Barnes for 100D in favor of Revd Mr Coffin for a college in Tennessee.

Possibly if Mr. Jefferson could hav foreseen how the ministers and Christian colleges would vilify Freethought and Freethinkers he would hav withheld some of these donations.

MENTION has before been made of the fanatical sect known as the "J. Elimar Mira Mitta Congregation of the Lord." The sect was founded by a woman whose claim to having been the Holy Ghost will now be passed upon by a Philadelphia court, to whom the Lutherans applied for an injunction restraining her worshipers from incorporating as Lutherans, on the ground that they hav nothing about them to connect them with Lutheranism other than that they use the Lutheran hymn book. The case was placed on the general argument list, after which William H. Staake, on behalf of the exceptants, filled three affidavits, in which it was stated that the deceased, Anna Meister, had claimed that she was entitled to worship as the Holy Ghost. She required her followers to pray to her, and claimed ability to forgiv sins. She did not accept the teachings of the Bible, nor did she teach anything in accordance with Lutheranism. She required that her followers should say prayers eight times each day, and obliged them to confess to her any omission to do so, when she would beat them. "The world," she said, "would come to an end in 1885, but those who worshiped her would never die." She claimed to hav gone to the moon and stars by way of hell, where it was revealed to her that she was the Holy Ghost. She had been disseminating these teachings for a quarter of a century.—Why is it that the Christians will believe in the pretensions of a man who lived eighteen hundred years ago, but will not take the word of a woman now? Christ claimed to forgiv sins; he did not accept the current theology; he required his followers to pray; he promised believers in him eternal life; he claimed he went to heaven. Finally when he was taken before the courts he was crucified as an impostor and seditious blasphemer. If he had lived to-day not one in a million would hav believed his preposterous claims, any more than Anna Meister's allegations. Shakspere hit the case when he said, "What fools these mortals be!"

A Handful of Plums.

Colonel Ingersoll's lecture last Sunday night in this city was on "Orthodoxy." The audience filled the Bijou Opera House from footlight to roof. We take this account from Monday's Herald:

In the early part of the lecture several persons in various parts of the house made a disturbance by loudly uttered exclamations and questions. After these interruptions had been repeated some half dozen times a cry of "Silence!" and a hiss rose from the audience. "Oh, don't trouble yourselvs about them," exclaimed the lecturer, and the house, catching the colonel's meaning in an instant, broke into an outburst of applause which lasted for fully two minutes. From that moment there was no further interruption. In the course of his lecture Colonel Ingersoll said:

"After all, we know so little. Life is so short, it is such a little way from the lap of our mother to the lap of the mother of us all, we are so hampered by the force of habit, so trammeled by custom, that it is impossible for us to know much, and the more we learn the less we find we know. It becomes us to hav the modesty of mortality.

"In the graveyard of the ages, in the cemetery of time, there are thousands of dead gods. Many of them, in their day, were just as powerful, had just as many followers, as the Christian God of our day.

"In the natural course of human events the new attacks the old, and the old givs way to the new. Yet, there are to-day men who, if you differ from them, will denounce you as everything that is bad, will conceive that you are doing something, in thus differing from them, which is equivalent to a crime. These are the kind of people who imagin that heaven is a kind of museum filled with Catholic curiosities, Baptist barnacles, Methodist mummies, and Presbyterian petrifactions.

"Yes; the new attacks the old, and the old givs way. There hav been the astrologer, pretending to forecast the future; the prophet, in rags and long of hair; the alchemist, bent and wrinkled, striving with pestle and mortar to convert the baser metals into gold—all these hav gone, and hav been replaced by the scientist, adding wealth to the world and giving new joys to the human race. We hav lost nothing by the exchange. There hav been, too, the soothsayer and the medicin man, pretending that they knew something of the desires of their deities. They also are gone. In their places we hav popes, cardinals, bishops, parsons, and exhorters. We hav gained nothing by that exchange. But they in their turn will hav to go, and in their places will come better teachers and truer interpreters. We shall lose nothing by that exchange. We are tired of getting skimmed milk here and a promis of butter by and by up in the clouds.

"No man has a right to stand at the altar as a high priest unless behind him he has a fact—unless he can teach how there shall be less poverty, less unhappiness, less human agony, more comfort, more happiness, more brightness. Let one of the chief duties of the priest be to show how to deepen the dimples of joy in the cheek of mankind.

"Giv expressions to your doubts, I beg of you. A doubt is the bud of an idea. If you giv it the sunlight of thought, it may blossom. The man who suppresses a doubt is a kind of Herod who kills a child of the brain.

"I am doing my best for the clergy. They teach that you are to love your enemies. But, somehow, they don't seem to love me. Sometimes I believe that this is because they know that I know that they don't know, and these feelings toward me are, under the circumstances, quite natural, for there is just as much of human nature in the preacher—when you are not looking at him—as in anyone else.

"The old-fashioned preacher was a terror. He used to go about his parish bringing gloom into every place of joy he could find. To look at him you would think that joy had died and that he was one of the pall-bearers. He went about talking of coffins, epitaphs, tortures, hell, and similar cheerful topics. These he characterized as 'tidings of great joy.' People in those days used to ask the preacher if they wanted to know about anything. Now they only ask him if they don't. I tell you the new is getting away with the old.

"So many new forms of promotion, so many new avenuss to preferment, to fame, to glory, to wealth hav sprung up for bright men to enter into that the pulpit has to put up with what is left. You all know how the clergyman is made. Some good young man is selected. He has not constitution enough to be very wicked; he has not quite enough breadth of chest to sit up late at night; at once the cry is raised, "What a good clergyman he would make." So he is sent to an institution where he pledges himself not to think. Just imagin a teacher who is not to think! He does not reason. If an idea comes into his head he forthwith believes that it must hav been put there by the devil. He becomes a sort of phonograph with memory as the crank. He makes a living talking about what he does not know, and there is no danger of his running out of raw material. Now and then some minister gets an idea and makes up his mind to go on a species of intellectual spree. Next Sunday he really givs expression to this idea. There ensues quite an excitement among the congregation. The parson has got an idea. The newspapers eagerly chronicle the unusual happening. Parson is elated. Next Sunday he has two ideas. Then the bishop puts his hand on him and—he sits down.

"According to description, Jehovah stands over man with a club in his hand and cries, 'Love me, or I will knock you to hell in a moment.' Man cannot love by compulsion. We are told to love a God who once ordered a man to commit murder. If God bid me to murder my wife I should firmly but respectfully decline. I would giv him the satisfaction of knowing that he had created one man who loved something more than he feared anything.

"It is better to love your wife than to adore God. It is better to love your little children than to love Jesus Christ. Put joy into their hearts, fill their lives with happiness—that's religion. But, cries the parson, you take away the consolation of our religion. What consolation? Hell—that is all."

Letters from Friends.

TWINSBURGH, O., March 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The people of sub-district No. 8, located about twenty-two miles southeast of Cleveland, hav been holding lyceums during the winter; and the best of harmony has prevailed until, a few weeks ago, the society adopted for discussion the question:

Resolved, That Colonel Ingersoll is a benefit to the country.

Nothing was said in opposition until the Sunday preceding the Tuesday evening set for the discussion. Upon this day the two directors sent a written communication to the managers of the society, addressed to the president, W. J. Birdsill, requesting the question be withdrawn, and saying that if the society were unwilling to acquiesce in their request the house would be closed.

M. Koniger and H. Beardsley were the directors, and when things began to wax warm A Brown was appointed as director, the law of Ohio providing that there shall be three directors.

C. O. Fenton, the teacher, opposed this domineering power, and proposed to go on with the debate. Two parties were soon formed, prominent and good people on either side. Argument had no weight, force must conquer; and recognizing this, the directors went to Hudson, got a little legal advice, bought a couple of padlocks, and came home. The keys to the house were in the teacher's possession, and to get them was the main object of the directors. Hence they drew up some obnoxious rules for the teacher and his pupils, and when the teacher returned to his boarding-place (A. Brown's) at about 4:30 P.M. upon the evening set for debate, Mr. Beardsley gently tapped him on the shoulder and proceeded to read what they styled "rules and regulations." They provided that the teacher must not enter the schoolhouse before 8 o'clock A.M., must not remain in it after 5 o'clock P.M., and must surrender the keys upon demand of the directors. The teacher immediately informed his "rulers" that he should enter the house when he saw fit to do so, leave it when he got a good ready, and that he would keep the keys in his own possession, and told them to help themselvs if they could. There was only one way left, and that was to use the padlocks bought for the occasion, and when the teacher was eating his supper, Mr. Beardsley was busy at the schoolhouse. He nailed a piece of shingle perpendicularly over every window, fastened the blinds, padlocked one door from the inside and the other from the outside, and the work was complete—no Bob Ingersollites should enter there. Thus the disciples of Jesus and "Bob" were alike locked out. The society peacefully adjourned, after proposing to hire a hall at the center of Twinsburgh and go on with the debate. They rented "Uncle" Sam Bissell's Hall. Uncle Sam is over eighty years old, a classical graduate of Yale College, very religious, firm though kind, generous to a fault, well endowed morally, mentally, and physically. He has been engaged in education all his life; was a poor boy, worked his own way through college, and has been at the head of a flourishing school in Twinsburgh for nearly fifty years—and no doubt many who read this will say, "And I used to go to Uncle Sam;" for over six thousand hav attended his school. He has built two large buildings, one a wooden structure, and the other stone. The former, built a long time ago, is now going to decay, but the stone structure stands "four-square to all the winds that blow." But the school has gone, and ere long Uncle Sam must go, too. Some of the church people denounce Uncle Sam for granting the use of the building for the discussion of the Ingersoll question. But he did let them hav the hall, and his memory will remain long after some of the church-members of Twinsburgh shall hav been wholly forgotten and their prejudicial bones returned to the elements from which they came. The question was argued by the Messrs. Cochran, Carl, Eno, and Fenton, the two former against, and the two latter for, Ingersoll. The judges, Hawkins and McElroy, Christians; Scouten and Lusk, Infidels; and Chamberlain, a neutral, gave the question to Eno and Fenton, and thus the question ended. The writer has nothing to say against the directors; his fight is with principles, not men. He can see wherein they err, and that they may hav been, and probably were (at first), following the most perfect guide they had—conscience. But such men are to be pitied, rather than too radically condemned. It may be truthfully said, however, that such men are very narrow-minded, and cannot tolerate anything differing materially from themselvs; that they cannot draw a conclusion from a large generalization of facts; that they never spent much time in meditating over the philosophy of Bacon; and, in short, that they are the men that must step down and out, that their places may be filled by those more competent.

It is too late in the nineteenth century to stop thought and investigation. But we are getting better. "Every day is the world made new." Instead of padlocking the doors, their ancestors would hav burnt us at the stake. Yes, sir, they would hav kindled the fire, and with hands uplifted in the name of God they would hav implored him to finish the work in the lower regions. And hence I say we are getting better—imperativly so—when we see that the simple padlock takes the place of the rack and the stake. C. O. FENTON.

A LETTER TO MR. REYNOLDS.

CLARA, PA., Feb, 22, 1885.

CHAS. B. REYNOLDS, Dear Brother: Feeling that you still hold our little band of Liberal workers in your heart, I send you a few notes of our doings since your visit among us. There has been quite an interest awakened by your lectures and the reading matter you left behind among the people; and I think another speaker, well advertised, will receive a rousing welcome. We called a business meeting of the League at Brother and Sister Gline's, Feb. 8th. About twelve old members were present and four more paid in and were enrolled. Three of our charter members hav removed to Nebraska, and now we hav twenty-seven left. Quite a nucleus about which to gather, after all.

We decided to hold a basket social the evening of Feb. 14th at the residence of Brother and Sister Gline's. As there is no church organization here we hav felt a great want in social organization, and henceforth mean to fill this blank by suitable League work. I know of no reason why one may not work as enthusiastically for humanity as for Christ. The love of man should be as soul-inspiring as the love of God, and will be when ignorance and superstition hav given way to science. Were ever such soul-inspiring words uttered as those of T. B. Wakeman at the close of his lecture on "Liberalism—Its Mission!"

The TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL is a perfect treasure to any Freethinker. What a pleasure it is to see face to face (if only on paper) those noble brothers and sisters whose words and thoughts hav grown familiar to us! Hoping you may not forget your promis to come to us at the end of the month of October, I remain Yours for U. M. L.,

EVA BARNES, Sec. League No. 3.

SACRAMENTO, CAL., Feb. 2, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I hav traveled over the greater part of the state of California from San Bernadino county, in the south, to Del Norte and Siskiyou, in the north, and the southwestern and southern counties in Oregon, from E.M. 249 to 285, and though churches are few, and in some of the counties none, yet the morality and good behavior of the people will not only compare favorably with those of the New England and Middle states, but will greatly excel them. Good schoolhouses abound, and the intelligence and general information of the people are praiseworthy.

There is much less rowdyism, gambling, and fighting in these two states than in the old, orthodox states east of the Missouri river. There is also much less drunkenness than in the old states east of the mountains. I was surprised when I commenced traveling through the country, over the plains, through the foothills and up into the mountains, when I found that the stables were never locked, the whip, blanket, lap robe, and overcoat were left out in the buggy, and the doors of dwellings only latched, or, in warm weather, left standing open!

The people laughingly remarked, "Oh, everything will be perfectly safe. No one ever carries off or steals anything in this country." And experience has proved this to be true in my case, and so far as I hav been able to ascertain. Since December, 283, I hav traveled over 7,500 miles in California and Oregon and hav not lost one single article from my buggy or barn, stable, office, or dwelling where I hav stopped. And all this in states where there are no such blots and tyrannic restrictions as orthodox Sunday penal laws!

Just think of it! Orthodox priests claim that restrictiv Sunday laws are necessary to force people to be moral, but experience and practical tests disprove their claims. The priests, sky-pilots, grasshoppers, are no more necessary to make the people moral and virtuous than the small-pox is necessary to conduce to the physical good health of men and women.

The weather is mild and warm; the grass is growing rapidly. Yellow oranges are yet hanging upon the trees. Roses and other flowers are in full bloom, and appear as fresh and glorious as in New York in June. Cabbages, turnips, and other vegetables are daily gathered fresh from the fields near Sacramento. Yours, P. V. WISE.

EAST CHATHAM, Feb. 12, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find stamps for The TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885, containing the portraits of our illustrious Liberal leaders, whose minds do not appear to be confined within the prison bars of orthodoxy, but like the eagle when freed from his loathsome cage spreads his imperial pinions to the breeze and mounts his heavenward course as though he had never been encompassed with creeds and dogmas saying "thus far and no farther shalt thou go." How refreshing to one standing nearly alone to receive from week to week, through your Liberal journal, the best thoughts of the best minds of our age, after having spent nearly fourscore years and on nearly every funeral occasion listened to the (to me) senseless twaddle of original sin, a vicarious atonement, personal devil, a brimstone hell, and justification by faith.

With these adverse impressions firmly fixed in my mind, I hav already instructed in my will to my Liberal daughter, now my only living child, that when I pass to the unknown and unknowable, if a Liberal speaker cannot be procured whose standard is justice and humanity, without reference to creed or blind faith, let my remains be consigned to earth in silence, with the assurance on my part that brighter days are dawning, plainly pointing to the real peace on earth and good will to men, without adding, "I come not to bring peace but a sword." Your last year's ANNUAL, with "Big Jack Small" and other selections, has been to me a real household treasure, and I anxiously wait to see its successor, and look upon the shadows of those whose words are burned into my memory with veneration, JOHN M. BARNES.

NEWARK, N. J., Feb. 15, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $1, being one third of annual subscription; will send the balance in a week or two. I like the paper very well. It suits my mind since it has been freed from the bondage of priestcraft. It deserves the support of all free-minded thinkers. I wish the word Liberal could be changed to something that would better express the idea of those that are free from all kinds of priestcraft.

The Roman Catholics are among the first to clamor for freedom of worship, but in Rome, the seat of their religion, they complain of the Italian government for giving freedom to other sects to build places of worship. Sir, I look upon the Roman Catholics as a menace to our free institutions. Their numbers can be counted by the hundreds of thousands, for the most part ignorant tools, waiting to do any dirty work that their crafty leaders bid them to do. Use your pen freely against those vipers; spare them not, they are a cruel crowd. I hav suffered much from one of the lambs of that fold, but they cannot harm me when I am out of their reach.

CHAS. EVERETT.

MARYVILLE, Mo., Feb. 7, 285.

MR. EDITOR: You will find inclosed $1, which you will please place to my credit. I would like to find a community of Liberals where I could open a good school. I hav good qualifications and can giv first-class recommendations. If you can put me in correspondence with some prominent Liberal in a community where I could be likely to open a school I would be most truly thankful.

I delivered my first Freethought lecture last Thursday night, to an audience of entire church-members. The subject was "The Soul and Its Destiny," from a Materialistic standpoint. I can say that I was treated with great respect. When I closed, a minister was called upon to reply. He said but little, however, but said my lecture was a "most excellent production, and worthy of a respectful hearing any time." He requested me to send it to A. Wilfrid Hall, of the Microcosm, of New York, for publication. The lecture was delivered where I am teaching, and I am satisfied that I made friends by my straightforward presentation of the gospel of truth.

Fraternally yours, GEO. H. DAWES.

ST. CATHARINE, Mo., Feb. 9, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, and "Bible Morals," by J. E. Remsburg.

I am in favor of that tent and will subscribe something toward it. I think a good lecturer could make it pay well to lecture the whole length of the H. & St. J. R. R. from Hannibal to St. Joseph. There are plenty of Liberals, but it would be difficult to hire a hall to lecture in. But if a good lecturer ever comes through he will be greeted with a large following. There are plenty of Liberals at Brookfield to form a good League. W. E. CRANDALL.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WIS., Feb. 23, 285.

MR. EDITOR: It seems to me that since the late presidential election your neighbor Puck has striven with as much energy to misrepresent as he did before election to giv truthful representations. Now he claims that the Rev. Heber Newton is seeking martyrdom at the hands of Bishop Potter. Whereas the veriest fool can see that

Mobocracy now rules the church,
While Potter dies the martyr;
Their shameless creeds, their cross, their Christ,
Will soon come tumbling arter.

In this case Puck is several laps behind Newton in the race after truth. Yours for Newton, every time,

NELSON HUNT.

FRACKVILLE, PA., Feb. 14, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I trust a few lines from this town away up in the hills of Pennsylvania will prove acceptable to THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are perched on the top of the Broad Mountains, in a town of about 2,500 inhabitants, with no architectural pretensions, the houses being of the simplest construction, perhaps a few degrees removed from the style of our worthy progenitors. We hav no social nabobs in our midst, but are happy in the condition of hard-working miners who delve in the bowels of the earth every day for our bread and butter. I hav no doubt many of your readers will shrug their shoulders and savor their remarks of this place with "Maguireism." Well, it is true that this place has been the scene of such terrors, but they are a thing of the past. To-day there is not a more peaceful or law-abiding community in the country.

Secularism is the ism that all parties in this region are gaming for; and it is amusing to witness the eagerness with which the chase is kept up. The keepers of our neighbor's conscience hav decreed that we are "an abomination;" that we are "blasphemers," and worthy of all condemnation from the faithful, and of course our neighbors look upon us as the heirs apparent to an estate known for ages as "demnition bowwows." The result is, when we meet one of these orthodox saints he assumes a look of fear and trembling as though a mere look from us would breed infection. It is truly piteous to be conscious of the credulity of these people, and almost ludicrous to observe the care with which they avoid us socially. While in our society they conduct themselvs as though they were in the middle of a church-yard after dark.

However, we are happy, and mean to be so, even in the face of all the orthodox calamities that Jonathan Edwards has stored up for us in the future. We meet every Sunday afternoon and hold a session of school, at which everything that can be of any possible use to us is taught. We hav no doubt many of your readers would be agreeably surprised to witness the degree of intelligence with which their miner brethren assume the role of pedagog. It is gratifying to observe the avidity with which the young people receive every crumb of information. We hav as bright and intelligent a lot of children as can be found in any other "Sunday-school." Then the knowledge we wish them to attain is much more readily imparted than if we had to assume the role of necromancer, and, in the language of an alchemist, induct the children into a mysticism incompatible with their buoyant, frolicking spirits. We tell them the truth, and they find it accords with their happiness to observe what we teach them. We endeavor to entertain while we instruct, and the result is a fearful blow to the institution of our orthodox friends, who retaliate by subjecting us to a kind of social ostracism.

While writing of ostracism, let me interject an exception, presumably not local. Our friends hav not yet learned to distinguish a heterodox from an orthodox dollar. We suppose that by some wonderful translation our dollar is converted into a graduated orthodox one against it gets into the coffers of our friends.

Brother C. B. Reynolds paid us a visit, and during his stay delivered three lectures. Standing-room was at a premium, and many of our neighbors carried away seeds of truth that will germinate and bring forth fruit in abundance. Mr. Reynolds is an excellent speaker. His arguments are unanswerable, and his logical force will admit of no "dodging." His delivery is good, and his dramatic tact when clenching the nail very effectiv. Socially we were all delighted with the gentleman, and eagerly look forward to a renewal of friendliness with pleasurable anticipations. The local press gave two columns to a synopsis of the lectures, and the effect upon the public is hard to be determined. Up to date, no worthy divine has deemed it necessary to respond to them, consoling themselvs in their own bombastic way of saying "it would never do to countenance such people with the dignity of a replication." Worldlings here hav very strongly intimated that "discretion is the better part of valor," and their reverences, true to their own interests, seemingly think so too.

It is very difficult to impress the workingmen with the idea that man was made for Sunday; they will persistently believe that Sunday was made for man and stubbornly conserve their own happiness. We work six days from dawn to dark, and when the seventh comes feel like indulging in a little relaxation, which we take in the form of assembling together, discussing the questions of the day, reading essays, or, when a kind brother like C. B Reynolds comes around, listening to a lecture. We labor under the impression that by this means we become better citizens, husbands, and parents, and more charitable to our neighbors. But just here, on this point, a practical question presents itself to us poor unsophisticated creatures—shall we plod through life unconcerned about these duties, solely depending upon a few starched, conventional sentences, served up according to homiletics for our edification by a man whose policy it is to make us subservient to his interests? We hav thought likewise, and hav elected to be free and independent searchers after the truth, for in its temple alone is happiness to be found. Receive our congratulations upon the success of your almanac, which we received and found to be all its friends could desire or represent it.

Yours for the truth, RICHARD CHAPPEL.

CRAINVILLE, KAN., Feb. 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed postal note for fifty cents, for which please mail the undersigned the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL and the "Agnostic Annual." We hav had a Cambellite preacher lecturing on "Modern Infidelity." He was to hav been on hand last Saturday evening, but failed to put in an appearance, so after the "brethren" said that he would not be there that evening some of those "modern Infidels" being present, and one of them having Remsburg's "Bible Morals" in his pocket, it was proposed that he read it. It made the deacons squirm, but after the reading was through, one of them rose and said it seemed pretty tough charges, but his faith was still unshaken, and it would take more than that to shake it. J. J. WILKES.

ORANGE, CAL., Feb. 5, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Your valuable favor of Dec. 31st just came to hand, and I hasten to reply and inclose $5 as per circular, for which please giv me credit. I am sorry that I could not send my subscription sooner, but the wailing cry for gold is felt here in California as elsewhere. It is harder to get $5 this year than twenty-five dollars in former years. We hav our crops on hand, but cannot realize a dollar on them even at a sacrifice. Should crops fail this year, half the ranchmen will be broken up.

There are some books that I want, but I shall hav to wait until I hav the funds. One is six lectures by Cooper on the Bible, which I will send for as soon as I hav the money.

I hav located in a new colony, and it is a very hot-bed of orthodoxy. Why, I was asked yesterday what I was going to do with my fruit this year if the crop was a success. I answered, "Use what I can, and sell the rest." Question: "What, to the distillers?" Answer: "Yes, if they will pay the best price." Then came the rejoinder, "If you do, we will come and pull up all your trees, and clean you out as we did the saloon the other day." "Well," I said, "when you come to do that bring your dancing-pumps, for I will play you some lively music while you are at work." This is something of the class of people by which I am surrounded. I was asked by one why I did not attend church and join one. I answered that when they could convince me that any female brought forth an offspring without the assistance of the male man, and that offspring a god, then I thought he might count me among them; but, until he could do that, I thought I had too much reasoning powers to believe in their mythical God. The poor fool called me a blasphemer, and left in disgust. They call me very hard names, but I guess I am able to stand it a little longer. I hav already had over sixty years, and I am willing to stand a little more. I think it doubtful if I can get you a new subscriber among these people, but I will try, and, until you hear from me again, believe me,

Yours truly, H. S. BORRETTE.

ALLIANCE, OHIO, Feb. 13, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: As announced, Messrs. Watts and Putnam lectured here Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, 10th and 11th, to very good audiences considering the weather (the thermometer registering twelve to fifteen degrees below zero). On Tuesday evening Mr. Watts's subject was "Liberalism: its Struggles, Hopes, and Achievements," and to state that it was a grand lecture is only stating what every one knows that has heard him. After the lecture, Mr Putnam explained the object of the Liberal League, or the American Secular Union, and announced that Robert G. Ingersoll had accepted the presidency of the same, which is certainly just what was needed to unite the Liberals of America and bring about grand results.

On Wednesday evening, Mr. Putnam lectured on the "Religion of the Future," which was well received, after which Mr. Watts spoke on "Agnosticism," and succeeded in convincing some of his hearers, who thought they were not Agnostic, that in fact they were and were glad of it.

As an immediate result of the visit and labor of Messrs. Watts and Putnam, I think that, at no distant day, a branch of the American Secular Union will be formed here, some ten or twelve persons having signified their willingness to assist in such a movement, and with Colonel Ingersoll at the head, and Messrs. Watts and Putnam in the field, there ought to be some grand work done for the liberty of "man, woman, and child."

Now, Mr. Editor, this being my first attempt at correspondence, I will close by wishing THE TRUTH SEEKER and the American Secular Union success beyond their most sanguin expectations. Youre truly, GEO. W. THORNBURGH.

BROOKLYN, Feb. 9, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Your issue of Feb. 7th contains a communication from N. H. Dillingham, M.D., of Boston. He states that "from the mineral ultimates the vegetable, and from the vegetable ultimates the animal." Our friend is evidently a little mixed up here. The real facts of the case are that from the mineral ultimates protoplasm, and that this protoplasm is of the vegetable or the animal kingdom, according as it is capable of assimilating either mineral or organic substances; but even to these rules there are a few exceptions, notably, in the vegetable kingdom, the fungi which liv upon organic substances; and in the animal kingdom the Bathybius of Huxley, which is supposed to be able to assimilate mineral substances, although it is an undoubted animal. There is, at bottom, but one life, which is the whole life of some creatures, and the common basis of the life of all, a life of simplest moving and feeling, of feeding, of producing its kind, and lasting its day—a life which, so far as we at present know, has no need of such parts as we call organs. Upon this general foundation are built up the manifold special characters of animal and vegetable existences, but the tendency, the endeavor, so to speak, of the plant is one, of the animal is another, and the unlikeness between them widens the higher the building is carried up. As we pass along the series of either branch, from low to high, the plant becomes more vegetativ, the animal more animal. These are facts, and when Mr. Dillingham tries to convince us to the contrary, he is simply talking nonsense, and stating things that will not bear the light of modern scientific investigation.

I fail to see how he reconciles his statement that the mineral ultimates in the vegetable, and that the vegetable ultimates in the animal, with his statement toward the close of his communication that there is no end of life, that it is an eternal principle, and that it is only the bodies which die and decompose, for if the mineral ultimates in the vegetable, life must certainly hav had a beginning the moment that the first plant began to exist as such. The same is the case when we start from the scientific basis that the mineral ultimates in protoplasm. Now, as we hav seen that life had a beginning the moment the first particle of protoplasm ever existed as such, life (whether we speak of it as individual life, or life in the aggregate) must hav an end, and I fail to see how the gentleman is going to prove, either logically or scientifically, that life has no end, and that it is an eternal principle.

Mind is a mode or process, so to speak, it is the natural outcome of the action and reaction of the brain in relation to the stimuli of external objects; the brain is inseparably connected and in intimate relationship with all the other organs of the body; and if the action of any organ in the body becomes deranged in any way, all the other organs become proportionately deranged.

I will not stop here to argue as to which has the precedence, mind or matter. Scientists affirm that matter is the beginning and mind the result, and I consider it to be conclusivly proven that such is the case.

He quotes himself as follows: "What," I said, "the great power folded up its arms, nothing more to occupy its mind and forces—after the development of puny man—it don't look reasonable." Well, I shouldn't think it did; but right here let me say that I do not recognize mind as an independent existence. I know mind only as it exists in connection with matter—the result of matter. What the gentleman means by "the great power," I don't know, and I don't believe he does. And when he writes of this great power folding up its arms and having nothing more to occupy its mind and forces, he is simply writing nonsense. It will be remembered that, at the time all this was passing through the gentleman's mind, he was, according to his letter, an Atheist, Materialist, and Infidel, and that Nature was his God. A curious conglomeration, truly. How a man can hav a god of any nature whatever, and at the same time be an Infidel and Atheist, or how he can be an Atheist and an Infidel at the same time, I cannot comprehend. Perhaps the gentleman can explain this to me. If the gentleman means nature when he speaks of "the great power," it is the first time I hav ever heard of nature having arms. I doubt whether the gentleman can giv me a description of these arms. But to return. If the gentleman means to insinuate that man is the highest object in the animal kingdom, that nature (by means of natural and sexual selection) is capable of producing, that I deny; for all scientific evidence goes to prove that man will go on improving until he is as far in advance of us as we are in advance of the Aborigines, and it is not at all improbable that, in course of time, an entirely new species may be evolved, entirely different from any form with which we are acquainted, but much higher in the animal kingdom than man. It will, however, be a living, breathing, tangible animal. No natural agencies with which I am acquainted can produce any such mysterious spirits as our friend writes about, and science givs us no reason for believing such to exist.

He writes that "for four years before the Rochester knockings, he was looking, watching, and listening for some demonstration of a higher plane of life." This explains the whole thing; he had got himself into such a condition of expectancy that he really believed he saw, heard, or felt anything that he was told he saw, heard, or felt, and he has been in that condition ever since. The poor old gentleman has, however, been grossly imposed upon. Is it possible that he is not aware of the fact that the Fox girls were nothing more or less than frauds? If he is, indeed, in such deplorable ignorance on that point as this, I refer him to the appendices of W. B. Carpenter's treatis on Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc., in which he will find the sworn statement of Mrs. Culver, a relation of the Fox family by marriage, who, as soon as she became cognizant of the fraudulent practices of these Fox girls, exposed them fully. And so this Spiritualism, which originated by fraud, and which was fostered by ignorance and credulity, has continued to exist by the same means ever since.

He says, "All done by those electric sounds which hav bid defiance to the literary world. Prove that they are not what they claim to be." I think that our friend might study a primer on logic with great benefit to his intellect; he would there find, among the first formula laid down, that in an argument it is not the place of the negativ to deny until the affirmativ has first striven to prove. In regard to those electric sounds—which hav bid defiance to the literary world—he will find (if he will again refer to the treatis mentioned above, page 102) that Dr. Austin Flint has conclusivly proven that these sounds are produced by the repeated displacement of a tendon which slides through a sheath behind the external protuberance of the ankle, and that this tendon may be repeatedly displaced without the slightest observable movement of the legs or feet. Fraternally yours, CHAS. F. GAUL.

GRAND MOUND, Jan. 29, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Your favor of the 31st ult. came to hand on time, and I take the first opportunity to reply. The circumstances that rendered it necessary to remind me of the amount due THE TRUTH SEEKER I regret exceedingly, but it could not well be avoided without saying, "Stop my paper," and I do not want to say that just yet, and I presume you do not want to stop it. I esteem the paper much, but if it had less to say concerning Freethought, and more to say concerning free money, and if the space now devoted to Liberalism was devoted to the cause of humanity, it would not only be esteemed more highly by me, but by every earnest Liberal who really believes in equal rights and privileges with regard to money and taxation. So long as the entire money (public credit) of the nation is transferred by law from those who create and earn it to individuals and corporations, without any consideration, just so long said corporations can compel the wage-workers and producers to support them, and pay all the taxes. Now it is these unequal laws that create, build up, and perpetuate an aristocracy, and defrauds, degrades, and brutalizes those who labor, until they hav no capacity to think, much less to indulge in Freethought. Hence Paine, Jefferson, and all the founders of the Liberal movement, saw at once that no reform could possibly be inaugurated without first abolishing all unjust and unequal laws, and as there was absolutely no way to abolish any law that the king and aristocracy proposed to inflict, they struck at the government or law-making power, abolished it, and established a new government based upon the Constitution, which is the supreme law of the land. If the spirit and letter of the instrument was observed and carried out by our government officials, no unequal or oppressiv laws, either state or national, could ever hav been passed. But what hav we to-day? I think I speak within bounds when I say more than half of our so-called laws, state and national, are in direct conflict with the Constitution. And many of our Congressional instruments are the same old infamous, oppressiv acts inflicted upon the colonies by King George and his Parliament, and which caused the fathers of the republic to overthrow his government.

As at that time there was no remedy for existing evils short of a political revolution, so, to-day, it is all that is needed. And yet, instead of attacking and trying to abolish or repeal the statutes giving individuals and corporations a monopoly of the nation's credit, and taxing labor to pay the entire expense of the government, by means of which the bankers and clergy are enabled to dictate legislation, the National Liberal League, or those who hav assumed its leadership, has surrendered the vital principles that actuated the founders of Liberalism, ostensibly to promote harmony, but really to build up and establish an organization the exact prototype of ecclesiastical organizations, minus a heaven and hell in a future state, while "mum" is to be the word (in the League) with regard to the heaven and hell already established on earth.

If this is to be the outcome of Liberalism, now is the time for it to die.

But I think I hear you say, "What is all of this to do with the $3.00 due THE TRUTH SEEKER?" According to my views of the "eternal fitness of things," it has very much to do in every way. First, if I could obtain a just price for the products of my labor, I should pay promptly in advance for my paper, which would be quite satisfactory to you, no doubt. Now to obtain the $3.00 which you find inclosed herewith, and to meet other obligations now due, I was compelled to sell my hogs for $3.20 per cwt.; and nearly every article the producer has to spare is in about the same proportion with regard to price. Every person of ordinary intelligence and observation knows that this state of affairs results from the financial policy of our government officials, and if it is continued it will only be a question of time when I, and no doubt a thousand other subscribers, will be unable to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and will be obliged to discontinue it. "As a special inducement" for me to advance the money to pay for the paper to May 1, 1886, you make a deduction of $1.00, and say I will save a dollar by remitting now. But I can't see it. I hav no money, and it is impossible to sell anything to obtain it, short of a sacrifice. It would giv me pleasure to send in a list of new subscribers, but those who earn their money by labor think they can't afford it, and those who get money by their wits, and like the principles advocated in the paper, and could support it as well as not, are afraid it might injure their social standing.

In, conclusion allow me to say that if we allow bankers, bondholders, and ex-priests to shape the course of the League, we may expect that its meetings will be opened by prayer at no distant day. CHARLES DUTTON.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Hymn Six Hundred Years Old.

Guard, my child, thy tongue,
That it speak no wrong;
Let no evil word pass o'er it;
Set the watch of truth before it,
That it speak no wrong.
Guard, my child, thy tongue.

Guard, my child, thine eyes;
Prying is not wise;
Let them look on what is right;
From all evil turn their sight;
Prying is not wise.
Guard, my child, thine eyes.

Guard, my child, thine ear;
Wicked words will sear;
Let no evil word come in
That may cause the soul to sin;
Wicked words will sear.
Guard, my child, thine ear.

Ear, and eye, and tongue,
Guard while thou art young;
For, alas! these busy three
Can unruly members be.
Guard, while thou art young,
Ear, and eye, and tongue.

Lillian's Dolly Song.

Out on the lawn on a summer day,
Making a handkerchief hammock in play,
Two long strings and a couple of chairs,
Giving the dollies the breezes and airs.
Hammock a dolly bye baby bye,
Rock a bye, dolly bye, baby.

One big mamma doll tall and slim,
Two wee baby dolls, Lillie and "Jim,"
All with the handkerchief, hammock, and string,
Taking a nap and a jolly good swing.
Hammock a dolly bye baby bye,
Rock a bye, dolly bye, baby.

Birds and butterflies up in the trees,
Singing and fluttering rock in the breeze,
While in the shadow the babies in fun,
Hammock the dolls till daylight is done.
Hammock a dolly bye baby bye,
Rock a bye, dolly bye, baby.

Later all cuddled as snug as a mouse,
Mamma has charge of them all in the house,
Dressing in night-clothes the little bare feet,
Cooing and singing a lullaby sweet.
Hammock a dolly bye baby bye,
Rock a bye, dolly bye, baby.

Escanaba, Mich. ISAAC A. POOL.

Aunt Patty and the Wolves.

A TRUE STORY.

One winter's day, many years ago,
When the skies came down with December snow;
When prairies unrolled through the empty space,
And only the brave sought a dwelling-place
Where wolves held council in concert of growls,
A multiplied chorus subtracted from howls,
And this wild nomadic, blood-curdling band
Had a true squatter's right to the out-lying land,
And pleaded their cause in quavers and trills,
Pre-empting their claims, and tunneling the hills;
Black wolves from the far-away timber and streams,
With gray prairie cousins, came torturing our dreams;
'Twas there Patty Grimm and a thrifty neighbor
Conspired to drop their routin of labor,
The whirling of swifts, and dial-faced reels,
The din of their looms and great spinning-wheels;
The ferry boat shuttle was tossed on the tide,
Neglected the reeds, though reared in the pride
Of silv'ry streams where white lilies stood,
Dreaming 'neath pines of a dark southern wood.
No treadle be pressed with the busy feet,
Nor pulse of the oaken beam should beat;
No household song might arise that day,
While sweet Betty Taylor, ten miles away,
On the French creek road lay ill of fever,
With Death in waiting glad to receive her,
As Betty so modest, gentle, and kind,
An angel would make quite to his mind.
But Madam Millard and Patty Grimm
Were hast'ning on to frustrate him.
With sweats and potions, powders and pills,
Blisters and plasters, senna and squills;
With incantations o'er boneset tea
That no young mother his garnered sheaf be.
Neighbors were scarce, I've mentioned before,
And Betty's dead mother a friend of yore.
Thus the twain set out to walk the long way,
While snow showered down its white array
From the plumy wings of a wintry sky,
And the path was dim, and a wolf passed by.
But these sturdy mothers, willing and strong,
Heeded not the wail of his dismal song.
Parcel and part of the vast frontier
In a time of need had captured a deer,
When hunger loomed with a visage wan,
And the children cried and the fathers gone;
They felt the dark shadows that over them lay
When molding bullets for the Indian fray,
And shrank from no duty, though men were afraid,
When the land awoke to the "Black Hawk raid."

Along the uncertain grassy road
No cabin's six-light windows glowed;
No landmark tow'ring tall and clear
But the first faint strokes of the pioneer
Had heaped the rails in drifted dunes
That whistled the wind-harp's wand'ring tunes,
And mapped the farms in dotted lines,
Outposts of corn, and wheat, and vines,
Where zig-zag fences mark the lane
That opened up the spring campaign,
And tortuous ways brought law and order
To settlers on that Western border.

Through rising wind, and falling snow,
They reach the log-house, dark and low;
The children whisking in and out,
And graceful greyhounds roundabout.
Upon the outer walls were hung
The strangest islands ever sung.
Peninsula and continent
In weird chaotic grandeur blent;
Like Malte-Brun's brave charts and maps,
This wealth of toil, and tramps, and traps,
Harvest of fur from mink and coon,
Garnered beneath November's moon.

The doctor was there, and Betty was better,
The fever allayed that so nearly upset her;
But the room revealed the hurricane's blight,
And Madam Millard would stay over-night;
As fields where man has triumphed alone
Resemble the path of a young cyclone.
Universal the ruin—complete the debris,
Where incense of onions breaks a medley of tea;
A ground-work of grime, and billows of steam,
The grand ideal of a batchelor's dream;
But the babies were fresh from an artisan hand,
Who frescoed their clothes with a waffle-cake brand;
Spilling dough on the dresser, the table, and floor,
And sighed for the worlds he would conquer no more.
Near the bed where the battle with Death was fought,
Were the wrecks of meals the neighbors had brought,
And the youngsters had eaten—but little the matter,
Since Bettie but craved a cup of cold water.
Drinking in dreams that could only deceive her,
While the fever, like hades, a garment did weave her.
Water, the antediluvian forbade,
While monstrous and blue were the pills that he made;
With a good constitution, and sweet baby hands,
Betty pulled to the shore leaving Death on the sands.

The voice of the wind, with sobbing moan,
Reached Patty's ear as the cry of her own.
In spirit she saw her empty chair,
And faces framed with clustering hair,
Waiting for mother and the evening song,
And though skies are gray, she must haste along;
Her flowing mantle, wide and warm,
A pilgrim's shield from snow and storm;
And rounded rails in billows lay,
As beads upon her thread of way.
A pure white rosary to tell
Her prayers, and winds the vesper bell;
These long, low mounds her only guide
To lead her home by eventide.
A hickory staff to lean upon
Through snow and twilight coming down;
Forgetting for a time her care,
Singing a simple, soothing air,
'Till the wind-blown swath of snowy dunes,
Echoing her low-sung, wayside tunes,
Seem further swept, like lapsing waves
That heap the shells from ocean caves.
At morn they had not stretched so far
To touch the brim of sunset bar.
Her stick shall test them, thro' and thro',
She'll know the worst—her fears are true.
Mocking, and fair, and white they stood,
And ne'er a one had heart of wood.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—DARWINIAN EVOLUTION.

This gentleman is no ——t,
Neither does he eat the ——t.
His voice for a truth does ——e,
Myths and fables to ——e.
He cares not for priest or ——r,
Neither for the devil ——r.
Sees both sides with glass ——r,
Talks on side just now ——r,
He discredits ——n,
Believes in natural ——n.
The initials of the "missing links"
Will spell a name the author thinks
Familiar to all good truth seekers,
One of our best public speakers.

Grand Rapids, Mich. ESPRIT FORT.

2.—ENIGMA.

My 7, 3, 1, 5, 1, 8 is a vegetable.
My 2, 3, 4, 11 is a pleasant place.
My 4, 8, 9, 10, 11 is a state.
My 6, 9, 10 is a wrong.

3.—QUESTION.

Where may you find and see
A lucky family,
In content company,
And happy harmony?
On forest chair, papa,
Before him there, mamma,
And playing her around,
Their darlings on the ground?

New Braunfels, Texas. WM. HILLERT.

ANSWER TO PANTAGRAPH IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, MARCH 7, 1885.

S
U
M P PRIMARY
A R
R A PYRAMUS
I
D

[We would inform Timmie Sickmore that his answers are correct, and we shall be pleased to hear from him any time.—ED. C. C.]

Correspondence.

LISBON, IOWA, Feb. 28, 1885.

MY DEAR MISS WIXON: I am so well pleased with the "Children's Corner" that I shall hav to write you a letter to try to express my appreciation. It is just the thing for the children. and I often feel sorry that they had not a "Corner" in THE TRUTH SEEKER before I grew up. But I read it now with as much interest as any child could do. We hav received the "Story Hour" and are all delighted with it.

I hav been more fortunate than a great many and hav never had to outgrow old superstitions. My parents are both Freethinkers, and hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER ever since it was first published. We liv in a very bigoted neighborhood. Indeed, I do not believe that I am acquainted with half a dozen Liberals. Owing to our belief I hav had to spend my leisure time in reading and study rather than in other amusements and church going, which was better for me in the end, though not always so pleasant.

I am teaching my third term of school this winter. I hav never read one word out of the Bible to the children nor said one prayer; nor do I intend to. Nothing has been said to me about it, though it would please the director that I hav had last summer and this winter very much.

But I must close for this time, or I shall take more time than this letter is worth. I inclose with this some puzzles, which, if you think worthy, you may use. I cannot hope to come up with J. K. P. Baker, H. E. Juergens, Rekab Semaj, and the rest of our great posers.

Wishing you great success in the cause of Freethought, and to the "Corner," I remain,

Yours very truly, A. LAURIE SAILOR.

CORRECTION.

BURLINGTON, WIS., March 9, 285.

In "Children's Corner" of March 7th, article "Why It Rains," I notice the statement, "Vapor, as it rises from the ocean, is not as heavy as air, therefore it rises," etc. I do not believe this is the true reason, and would refer you to art. 242, p. 318, of Deschanel's "Natural Philosophy" (part ii, Heat), as translated by Professor Everett, and published by D. Appleton and Co., 1874; also to two laws given in same work, p. 322. By these references you will find that evaporation is more rapid in a vacuum than in the open air; and, of course, it must follow that air does not lift it up as a cork rises in water.

I am not desirous of getting my name in print, and only aim to correct what I deem an error. Yours very respectfully,

GEO. E. SAWYER.

ESCANABA, MICH., March 3, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I am a little girl reader of your Children's Corner in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I feel very thankful to you for having introduced that department, as it givs us something to look for every week besides the theological discussions that please papa so much. Very respectfully yours,

FLORENCE R. POOL.

WEST UNION, O.

DEAR EDITOR CHILDREN'S CORNER: I do not feel like an entire stranger to you, for the love of truth binds all seekers together in kind and fraternal feeling. I am a school teacher, and wish to write to your bright household of children about anagrams.

An anagram must contain each letter found in the word or sentence anagramed, just as often as it occurs in such word or sentence, and no oftener. Any letter left disconnected is a failure of so much to complete the anagram.

Robert Bernheim's effort in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 24th, though apt in its fitness of thought, overshoots an anagram, since it contains an h and an e more than the sentence which it should exactly duplicate as to number and name of letters used. This shows that "he" (h, e) surpasses "The recent strike in Hocking Valley" by striking for more letters than his capitalist could honestly furnish, and also thrusting poor c into durance vile, behind "lock" and "key."

I like the Children's Corner and the whole TRUTH SEEKER. It is a happy thing that such a brave and good paper can be published. I hope the heart of every boy and girl of the Children's Corner thrills with joy at the thought that they hav not been born in the chains of superstition, in homes where THE TRUTH SEEKER with its light and cheer dare not come. Rejoice! Use diligently such glad preferment. Free from the chilling dread of angry gods in the sky and from the fear of fiery fiends underground, be happy and free on our own dear earth, having found those frights are frauds which folks who think know to befalse. Safe from the sad shame of such sorrowful superstition, strive to grow strong and free. Seek to scale the hill of science, fronting your course to the morning sun, shooting its silver rays amid the sublime mountains of the more glorious times to come. Aspire to the summit of true manhood and womanhood, hights seldom gained.

Be of good cheer. Good-bye for now.

J. F. BECK.

NEWTON, IOWA, Feb. 24, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I am a reader of the Children's Corner in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I liv in Jasper county. I go to school. We hav a new schoolhouse, and I like to go; we all like our teacher. I am ten years old, and read in the third reader. We had a spelling school last Friday. I hav three sisters and one brother. We liv two miles from town, just a few rods from the railroad. Good-night.

NELLIE WADSWORTH.

Imitating Her Elders.

Are the babies learning the ways of this wicked world before their time? An exchange gives "as a fact," the following incident, when a bright little four-year-old was imitating her elders by playing and "making calls."

"Now, mamma, you be Mitheth Dones, an, I'll be Mitheth Smith, an' tum an' mate you a tall."

Mamma: "Very well, Mrs. Smith. I'm glad to see you. How do you do, and how are the children?"

Totty: "I'm twite well, I tank you; but the children has all dot the hooping toff."

Mamma: "I'm sorry to hear it. How many children hav you, Mrs. Smith?"

Totty: "Oh, I hav ten, and dey is a gate tyal to me wif my housekeepin'."

Mamma: "They must be, indeed. But how does your husband, Mr. Smith, do?"

Totty: "He's very well, tank you, but he's had bad bithness, and he hath failed."

Mamma: "I'm sorry to hear that your husband has failed; but you havn't lost everything, Mrs. Smith, for I see you make calls in your own carriage."

Totty: "Oh, yes! I teep my carriage. We has paid one cent on a dollar, and dose right on."

INGERSOLL CATECHISED;

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Funciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies for a dollar. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ORTHODOXY.

A Lecture by

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

"The clergy know that I know that they know that they do not know."

One of the best documents to circulate ever printed. Every man, woman, and child in the United States should read it. Every reader of the paper should send for a dozen.

Price, singly, 10 cents; twelve for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

"ANTICHRIST."

Proving conclusivly that

THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST

His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth

TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York.

A BOOK FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

PRICE, $1.25; TWO COPIES, $2.00.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT

IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

FACTS.

A Magazine Devoted to the Statements of Mental and Spiritual Phenomena.

Single Copies 10 cents.

39tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE HISTORY OF FREETHOUGHT,

Its Rise, Progress, and Triumph.

BY CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS—Sec. I.: Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II.: What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III.: Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV: Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V.: Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

Price, $1 25

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

"Little Lessons" for Little Folks,

Are now ready to mail to any address, at 30 cents for board cover, and 20 cents for paper. Address

Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Virginia.

"'Little Lessons' are grand. I hashed and rehashed the lesson on spiders this evening in the Sunday-school. I am running two Sunday-schools. The children are slow in learning the mystery of the God-head; in comprehending the Trinity; but their eyes brighten and they take kindly to discourses on snails, toads, spiders, and lizards, so I think I'll keep it up."—Bertie Stone.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.

Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY,

OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who have helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

PRICE, ... $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXO . Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellen work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles.

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Handy Pocket Account Book

Containing four parts, each important and convenient for pocket use.

Part I.—Shows plainly how to keep accounts.

Part II.—Consists of business forms as notes, orders, receipts, etc., useful rules and tables for reference.

Part III.—Shows how to write good letters.

Part IV.—Consists of 48 blank pages, ruled for Dr., and Cr., heavy paper, on which to keep accounts.

Size. 6x3 3-4 inches, 32 pages, printed; price. in cloth, 40 cents; in leather, 50 cents; both with pocket and flap. Sold by dealers, or sent post paid on receipt of price. Two-cent stamps accepted. Agents Wanted. Unsold books returnable, money refunded. Address F. O. JOHNSON,

2teow12 Sharon, Wis.

John Swinton's Paper,

PLAIN, PRACTICAL, GENUIN, STRONG, AND FREE.

A WEEKLY PAPER OF AMERICAN IDEAS, PROGRESS, AND RIGHTS.

21 Park Row, New York.

$1 PER YER (post paid). 3 CENTS A COPY.
Specimens Free.

1—Boldly upholding the Rights of Man in the American way.

2—Battling against the Accumulated wrongs of Society and Industry.

3—Striving for the Organization and Interests of Workingmen, and giving the news of the trades and the unions.

4—Uniting the New Political Forces; searching for a common platform, and giving the news of all the young bodies in the field.

5—Warning the American people against the treasonable and crushing schemes of millionaires, monopolists, and plutocrats, and against the coming billionaires whose shadow is now looming up.

6—Looking toward better times of fair play and public welfare.

7—Living views of public questions and social topics.

8—Literary sketches and stories.

A SMALL FARM WANTED.

An Appeal to the Philanthropists.

I am 71 years old, hav been a producer for at least 65 years. I wish to find some philanthropic person who has a small farm to rent—I am unable to buy—for a term of years, for a small sum. Any person who has such a place, and will communicate with me, giving full particulars, I should be happy to hear from.

SEWARD MITCHELL,

4t11 Newport, Me.

WYANDOTTES!

Seguan Poultry Yards, Lowell, Mich.

I hav one pen headed by my splendid two-year-old crower mated to five of my handsomest females. Eggs for setting, $3; also beautiful W. C. B. Polish and Brown Leghorns, $1.50 for setting; no fowls to sell. MRS. S. A. FOX,

3t11 Lowell, Mich.

THE RIDDLE

OF THE

AMERICAN SPIRITUAL SPHINX

OR,

THE "LOST KEY" FOUND.

Sent to any address upon receipt of stamps to pay postage. Address

JAMES A. BLISS,

Developing Medium National Developing Circle,
121 W. Concord St., Boston, Mass.

4t11

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Traditon to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office,

46tf

Selected Poetry.

A Modern Madrigal.

Come, for the buds are burst in the warren,
And the lamb's first bleat is heard in the mead;
Come, be Phyllis, and I'll be Coryn,
Though flocks we hav none to fold or feed.

Come for a ramble down the dingle,
For spring has taken the earth to bride;
Leave the cricket to chirp by the ingle,
And forth with me to the rivulet side.

Lo! how the land has put from off her
Her virgin raiment of winter white,
And laughs in the eyes of the spring, her lover,
Who flings her a garland of flowers and light.

Hark how the lark in his first ascension
Fills heaven with love songs, hovering on high;
Trust to us for the spring's first intention,
Trust to the morn for a stormless sky.

I know a meadow for daffodowndillies,
And the haunt of the crocus, purple and gold:
I'll be Coryn, and you'll be Phyllis;
Springs to-day are as sweet as of old.

Quatrains from Omarkhayyam.

DEATH.

I dashed my clay cup on the stone hard by;
The reckless frolic raised my heart on high;
Then said a shard with momentary voice:
"As thou hav I been: thou shalt be as I."

Annihilation makes me not to fear;
In truth, it seems more sweet than lingering here.
My life was sent me as a loan unsought;
When pay-day comes I'll pay without a tear.

Has God made profit from my coming? Nay.
His glory gains not when I go away.
Mine ear has never heard from mortal man
This coming and this going, why are they.

I'd not hav come, had this been left to me;
Nor would I go, to go if I were free.
Oh, best of all, upon this lonely earth
Neither to come nor go—yea, not to be!

Oh, that there were some place where men could rest,
Some end to look for in this lonely quest,
Some hope that in a hundred thousand years
Our dust might blossom on the Mother's breast!

Alas for me! The Book of Youth is read;
The free glad spring is now December dead;
That bird of joy whose name was Youth is flown;
Ah me, I know not how he came or fled!

Clouds and Sunlight.

Wanted: Men.
Not systems fit and wise,
Not faiths with rigid eyes,
Not wealth in mountain piles,
Not power with gracious smiles,
Not even the potent pen;
Wanted: Men.

Wanted: Deeds.
Not words of winning note,
Not thoughts from life remote,
Not fond religious airs,
No sweetly languid prayers,
Not love of scent and creeds;
Wanted: Deeds.

Men and Deeds:
Men that can dare and do;
Not longings for the new,
Not praisings of the old;
Good life and action bold—
These the occasion needs,
Men and Deeds.

"Papa Can't Find Me."

No little steps do I hear in the hall;
Only a silver laugh, that is all.
No dimpled arms round my neck hold me tight;
I've but a glimpse of two eyes very bright,
Two little hands a wee face try to screen,
Baby is hiding—that's plain to be seen.
"Where is my precious I've missed so all day?"
"Papa can't find me!" the pretty lips say.
"Dear me! I wonder where baby can be?"
Then I go by, and pretend not to see.
"Not in the parlor and not on the stairs?
Then I must peep under the sofa and chairs!"
The dear little rogue is now laughing outright;
Two little arms round my neck clasp me tight,
Home will indeed be sad, weary, and lone,
When papa can't find you, my darling, my own.

Books.

We feel justified in saying that the "Story Hour" is the finest appearing juvenil book that has ever been issued from the Freethought press. The author, the engravers, and the printers hav all done themselvs great credit in producing this beautiful publication. It is an ornament that any Freethought family will be proud to hav on their center table. We congratulate the Truth Seeker Company on their success in bringing out so valuable a book for the young Freethinkers of this country. And every Freethought parent, who can possibly pay for it, will be guilty of injustice to his or her children who does not purchase a copy. Then the thirty-six stories therein contained are precisely the kind of reading that all children should hav. They all inculcate good morals and teach that the only way to procure real, lasting happiness is to follow strictly in the paths of truth, virtue, and honesty. There is no intimation in these stories that one can avoid the result of wrong-doing by accepting of the righteousness of another; there is not a word favoring superstition in the whole volume. And this book is not only interesting for children, but for older people. Miss Wixon is in full sympathy with humanity, and she does not take up her pen without saying something that stirs and stimulates the noblest aspirations of her readers. There are very few books written for the young that are as well adapted to their wants as is the "Story Hour," and we bespeak for it a very large sale.—Freethinkers' Magazine.

The "Story Hour" is a delightful book for children—as clean, pure, and free from superstition as the heart of its author. Every page is replete with intellectual amusement and instruction—all real, all true. How many fond mothers enter a book-store, in search of holiday or birth-day gifts for their darlings, and exclaim, "I wish I knew just what to buy! I want books that will please, will awaken healthy thought and stimulate to right endeavors; something that will interest, amuse, and instruct at the same time." Miss Wixon has certainly put into this volume every requisit embodied in this "wish."—National Equal Rights.

"The Story Hour," for Children and Youth: by Susan H. Wixon. We hav been most pleasantly surprised by the reception of this most handsome book. We though the Truth Seeker Company had done wonderfully well in the publication of last year's Truth Seeker Almanac, but in this book they hav far surpassed themselvs, and produced a book which compares most favorably with the best typographical work.

It is a book for children, but such as grown folks will look over with pleasure, especially the engravings, of which there are nearly one hundred, of the very best style, and all full of interest.

We are glad to see this house, the oldest Liberal House in New York, showing such signs of enterprise, and giving such convincing proof of their success, and we hope that the Liberals all through the country will make it a point to send for the book and make this publication a paying one.

The progress of Liberalism depends mostly upon the dissemination of the truth, and it is through newspapers, books, and pamphlets that it can be made to reach the largest number of people. But there is little inducement for publishers to spend their time and their money in Liberal publications, for there is not a very large demand, and the prices are not very remunerative. Of the many persons who hav tried to commence such publications the largest number hav had to stop, unable to stand the necessary expenses. But out of the number a few papers here and there are able to maintain themselvs, and prominent among them is The Truth Seeker. Such a paper is a power in the land, and by its publication and the printing of many Liberal books its proprietors are doing a work that no other publishing house could undertake. To enable them to do so, they must engage in other publications, and it is with pleasure that we see them branching out in a direction where they may hope for satisfactory returns. They hav published quite a large edition of "The Story Hour," some two thousand, we believe, and we hope that every Liberal in the land will feel sufficiently interested in their success to send for one copy at least, for they will be doubly paid for the money expended. They will receive a book that is worth every cent. which is asked for it and more; which will be an ornament in any drawing room and upon any table, which will both please and interest their children, and they will help to success the most efficient power by which the truths they advocate can be brought before the mass of the people. We sincerely hope that this publication will prove as complete a success in a pecuniary sense as it is undoubtedly a success in its composition and its execution.—Sociologist.

The Truth Seeker Annual and Freethinkers' Almanac is a valuable and interesting publication, and very cheap for the price. There are a number of articles in it, either of which is well worth what the book costs. The portraits are most of them very good, and the reader will hav no difficulty in recognizing them all, as each has the autograph of the individual directly under it. Such a work as this is very much needed in the Freethought ranks, and it should hav a large circulation. If the Freethought public will giv it a generous patronage it will encourage the publishers to increase the value of this Annual with every issue. It is for sale at this office.—Freethinkers' Magazine.

We hav received the Truth Seeker Annual, a notice of the contents of which was given a few weeks back as taken from The Truth Seeker. It contains excellent articles by Liberal writers, besides portraits of leading Freethinkers of the age. Everyone should hav a copy. It only costs 25 cts., and it is worth that to see the portraits it contains, to say nothing of the reading matter and the calendar.—The Liberal.

The Truth Seeker Company sends me its Annual and Freethinkers' Almanac for 1885, a large and handsome pamphlet containing interesting articles by and in some cases excellent portraits of eminent Liberals. These portraits are grouped, six on a page. On the fifth plate appears John R. Kelso, surrounded by five well-known ladies. Will not the gallant colonel take this as a hit at his recent vigorous articles in behalf of the rights of Mormons? The book is worth its price, 25 cents, and worthy of its enterprising publishers.—Benj. J. Tucker, Editor Liberty.

LIBERAL LECTURES
IN PHILADELPHIA.

BY CHARLES WATTS,

ON SUNDAY APRIL 5th, 1885,
IN
Memorial Hall, 9th St., & Girard Ave.

Afternoon at 2.30—Subject:
Secularism; Wherein it is Superior to Christianity.
Evening at 7.30 Subject:
Christianity; What Has it Done for the World?

The clergy are especially invited to be present and reply.
ADMISSION FREE.
3t12

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline, history the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1833, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE
PROBLEM OF THE UNIVERSE,
AND
Its Scientific Solution,
WITH SOME
CRITICISMS OF UNIVERSOLOGY
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.
Price 20 cents. For sale at this office

Man, Whence and Whither.
By R. B. Westbrook, D D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.
1 vol, cloth. Price, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place. New York.

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

The Bible Analyzed.
BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:
The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.
Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

Iron-Clad and Manna Series.

IRON CLAD SERIES.

Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake. 5 cts.
Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Muller. 10 cents.
Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison. 20 cts.
Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall. 15 cents.
Essay on Miracles. David Hume. 10 cents.
Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Were Adam and Eve Our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Why Do Men Starve? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cts.
Logic of Life. Deduced from the Principle of Free-thought. G. J. Holyoake. 10 cents.
A Plea for Atheism. Charles Bradlaugh. 10 cts.
Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake. 5 cents.
Defense of Secular Principles. Chas. Watts. 5 cents.
Is the Bible Reliable? Charles Watts. 5 cents.
The Christian Deity. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Moral Value of the Bible. Chas. Watts. 5 cts.
Freethought and Modern Progress. C. Watts. 5 cents.
Christianity: Its Nature and Influence on Civilization. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Thoughts on Atheism. A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Is There a Moral Governor of the Universe? A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Philosophy of Secularism. C. Watts. 5 cts.
Has Man a Soul? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Is There a God? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Poverty: Its Cause and Cure. M. G. H. 10 cents.
Science and Bible Antagonistic. C. Watts. 5 cents.
Christian Scheme of Redemption. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Logic of Death; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? G. J. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Poverty: Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

MANNA SERIES.

New Life of David. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
200 Questions Without Answers. 5 cents.
Dialogue Between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin. 10 cents.
Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian. 10 cents.
Search After Heaven and Hell. A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
New Life of Jonah. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
A Few Words About the Devil. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
New Life of Jacob. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Daniel the Dreamer. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Specimen of the Bible. Esther A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Acts of the Apostles: A Farce. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Who Was Jesus Christ? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
What Did Jesus Teach? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents
New Life of Abraham. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cts.
New Life of Moses. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
A Secular Prayer. A. Holyoake. Per doz. 10 cts.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
ce, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1 00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. Putnam. 25 cents.

The Darwins. A Domestic Radical story. By Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. Ball. 25 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. Slenker. 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

D. M. BENNETT'S WORKS.

ADDRESS THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

A Truth Seeker Around the World. Four large volumes. With a steel-plate engraving of the author in Vol. I., and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price $1.50.

A Truth Seeker in Europe. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. Giving some account of the International Freethinkers' Congress held at Brussels, to which Mr. Bennett was a delegate, followed by a description of what he saw in England, France, Holland, and Italy. The letters from Rome alone are worth the price of the book. With a steel-plate portrait of the author. 850 pages. $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity, between D. M. Bennett and Rev. G. H. Humphrey. This book has had a very large sale, and is a splendid work for Freethinkers to loan to Christian neighbors. 550 pages. Price, $1.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. Bennett and Cyrus Romulus R. Teed. Jesus the Lord God Creator of Heaven and Earth. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

What Objections to Christianity? A discussion between D. M. Bennett and G. M. Mair, divided into the following theses: 1. Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.

2. Miracles and supernatural achievements hav been as fully and truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

3. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

Bennett affirms; Mair denies. This is an exhaustiv discussion. Price, $1.50.

Trial of D. M. Bennett in the United States Circuit Court upon the charge of depositing prohibited matter in the mail. This givs a full history of this celebrated case, and shows what monstrous injustice was perpetrated upon Mr. Bennett. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. 5 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Deacon Skidmore's Letters. First Deacon of Zion Hill Baptist Church, giving many church incidents and his evolution from Christianity to Liberalism. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Book of Chronicles of the Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh: also the Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. Cloth, $1.00

The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. 10 cents.

The Great Religions of the World. 10 cents.

Open Letter to Samuel Colgate. 10 cents.

Jesus Christ. Considered as an Infidel. 10 cents.

An Hour with the Devil. 10 cents.

Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds. 10 cents.

"REPUBLIC."

[Published in the rapidly growing young city, on Longfellow's "mountain of the prairie," Pipestone, Minn.]

Eight pages, weekly, $1.50 a year. Contains the news of the day, short stories, scientific miscellany, literary selections—but best of all, the REPUBLIC is unqualifiedly, uncompromisingly opposed to the LIQUOR TRAFFIC! It puts LIBERTY AGAINST LIQUOR! It opens its columns to Free Discussion. It challenges all opponents to meet it on the burning question of our time, PROHIBITION! The plea, that legal Prohibition annihilates PERSONAL LIBERTY will be met and refuted. All opponents to Prohibition will be accorded the right to reply. This is the WORKINGMAN'S REPUBLIC. And an advocate of WOMAN SUFFRAGE. When the mothers, wives, and daughters vote there will be an end to the RUM CURSE! When women vote we will hav a true Republic, and never before. The REPUBLIC is published to disseminate these principles. Shall we receive your aid?

Send all remittances to

W. F. JAMIESON, Editor and Publisher,
PIPESTONE, MINN.

If you are in want of Guide, price 10 cents, from first order. ROCHESTER, N. Y. SEEDS send for Vick's Floral which can be deducted JAMES VICK.

SPECIAL TRIAL OFFERS! For sixteen 2c. U.S. postage stamps I will send 13 papers Choicest Seeds, growth of '84, 75 to 500 seeds and mixed colors in each paper: New Diamond Pansies, of largest size, over 100 superb variegated sorts, all mixed; Large Double Rose Asters, 14 cols; Double Everlastings, 12 cols; New Scarlet Poppys, spotted black; Alyssum: Large fl. Phlox, 16 cols; Japan Pinks, 35 double and single vars., mixed; Asperula: New Double Gaillardia, the best annual introduced in 10 yrs; Calliopsis; Double Portulaca, double as roses; Candytuft: Old Clove-scented Pink. For only 52c. I will send 23 papers (worth $1.95 at regular rates), all the above & Verbena, 100 sorts mixed; New Emperor Petunia, 20 blotched, striped & beautifully fringed sorts mixed, best strain ever offered; Ice Plant, Velvet Flower; Chrysanthemum, 8 c; Blue Daisy; New Cockscomb; C Bells; Clarkia; Double Dwarf Aster, 10 c. Buy from grower and get live seeds sure to grow. Catalog with elegant plate of pinks, in 8 c. 5c, or with seeds, free. GOODELL, the Seed Grower, Amherst, Mass.

SEEDS. CHEAPEST, Pure & Best. Gardeners trade a specialty. Packets only 3c. Cheap as dirt by oz. & lb. Postage or Exp. paid. 50000 Guides FREE. Send your address for my most Beautiful Illustrated Garden-Guide ever printed. R. H. SHUMWAY, Rockford Ill.

PROSE POEMS

And Selections,

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued.

It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author.

The work is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it.

In the more elegant styles of binding, this volume is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.

In workmanship the volume is a masterpiece. The type is large and beautiful; the paper heavy and richly tinted; the presswork faultless; and the binding, as perfect as the best materials and skill can produce. The book is quarto in size, and contains 248 pages. No item of expense has been spared to make the work worthy of author and public.

PRICES:

Silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side,	$2 50
Half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style,	4 50
Full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine,	7 50
Full tree calf, highest possible style and finish,	9 00

Sent to any address, postpaid, on receipt of price. THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S

Popular Jewelry Store

Rochelle, Ill.

A FEW OF MY PRICES;

Solid silver stem-winding American Watches, hunting or open case; 2 oz. 7 jeweled, $10; 3 oz., $11; 4 oz $12; 5 oz. $14. Same cases with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13.50, $14.50, $16.50. Same case with full (15) jeweled movement, patent regulator, $17, $18, $19, $21. Same cases, with full jeweled adjusted patent regulator movements, $22, $23, $24, $26; key wind, $2 to $5 less; for best cases, silver caps and gold joints add $1.50, and for best filled gold cases (warranted for 20 years) add $10 to best silver cases, making a 11 jeweled hunting (filled case) stem-wind quick train watch only $28; same for ladies, $23. Ladies' solid gold stem-wind watches, latest styles, good American 11 jeweled movements, 10 kt, $24; 14 kt, $32; same full jeweled, $32 and $40—for fancy engraving add $3 to $5.

Prices and specifications for finer ladies' and gents' watches, including all the finest, richest, and most elaborately finished watches in the world, sent upon application.

Watches cleaned for $1; main springs, $1. Bank time-locks, chronographs, music boxes, etc., repaired at lowest rates, and all work warranted the best in the world or no pay.

Best steel spectacle made, $1; genuin pebbles, $2; good common, 25 cents. Best tripleplated teaspoons, $2; tablespoons, $4; knives, $1.75; forks, $1.75—all per set of six.

Parties desiring silverware, jewelry, diamonds, etc., for presents will do well to order sample package on selection and save money. Cash will be refunded on all goods not satisfactory.

Watches, etc., may be safely sent in unsealed packages per registered mail, and will be returned at my expense. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

P. S.—Stop over and see me when near Rochelle, Ill.

A NEW BOOK OF DIRECTIONS FOR

CLEANSING THE BLOOD,

And Curing all forms of Disease that the Human Family is Subject to, Without the Use of Any Medicine Whatever.

By Professor Nathaniel Pierce.

Price, 30 Cents.

6tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Five numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y3

ONE MILLION COPIES will soon be sold TWENTY YEARS OF CONGRESS—By James G. Blaine. The only history of our Government from 1861 to 1881. Hon. John S. Wise, M. C. from Va., says: Whoever takes it up, no matter whether he be Mr. Blaine's friend or enemy, will never put it down until he has read the whole." $200 per month to good agents. Apply at once, The Henry Bill Pub. Co., Norwich, Ct.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

Will Cure all Forms of Disease Without Medicine.

CONSULTING ROOMS,

471 WEST MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Something for Invalids to read and study over.—Stop Drugging and try Nature's Remedy, MAGNETISM.

For years past it has been known to the profession that Magnetism and Electricity were powerful agents for imparting vital force and energy to the worn-out sufferer from disease. Many humanitarians in the profession, thinking more of the alleviation of suffering than they did of the code of ethics by which they were bound, have resorted to magnetic treatment as a last resort and found themselves astonished at the effect upon their patients. They had been taught that medicine was an absolute essential in all cases, and that that failing, the patient must die, as nothing more could be done. Here and there an advanced thinker has flung aside the tie which bound him to his dogmatic brethren and has resorted to other and more scientific methods of treatment. As a result many, having broken the bonds which bound them to a system as barbarous as it was unscientific, have used their best energies to devise means for the alleviation of human suffering. Here and there the wondrous power of MAGNETISM was established, and many diseases hitherto classed as incurable readily submitted to its mild but potent influence. This agent to the intelligent observer was found everywhere. Being, as it is, the very essential of all life, it was found that the human body when in a diseased condition was almost bereft of this vital principle. If we can supply this vital force to the worn-out body the patient will get well.

Ah! but how is it to be done, says the physician. Science, however, came to the rescue, and solved the problem. Here and there throughout the world are fields of what are known as magnetic ore. It was observed that the ore, when carried upon the person, was found to be a safeguard against disease, and to this circumstance we are largely indebted for magnetic wearing apparel, for it was an easy transition from carrying magnetic ore to covering the body with permanently charged magnets, placed in garments fitted to every part of the body. Since the first introduction of magnetic appliances as a curative, there has been a number of these so-called magnetic garments foisted upon the public by men whose sole object was gain. Unscientific in construction, and having little if any magnetism in them, their life was of short duration; it was long enough, however, to demonstrate that when constructed upon scientific principles there was scarcely an ailment that human flesh is heir to that would submit to their healing influence.

THE EUREKAM AGNETIC APPLIANCES are superior to everything of a similar character heretofore offered to the public, being the only scientifically constructed appliance in the market; it is now two and a half years since they were first offered to the public, and during that time we hav treated thousands of patients, and not a single case of failure to receive benefit reported to us, while we are in daily receipt of testimonials of cures from all parts of the country. We know that disease cannot exist where these garments are worn in quantities as advised by us.

To all who may be afflicted with any of the following complaints, we say unhesitatingly, the Eureka Magnetic Garments will cure you:—Faralysis, Rheumatism, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Bleeding at the Lungs, Spinal Disease, Gout, Asthma, Bronchitis, Congestion of the Kidneys, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Loss of Energy, Heart Disease, Constipation, Consumption, Prolapsus Uteri, Chronic Peritonitis, Cancer, Ovarian Tumors Syphilis, Epilepsy, St. Vitus' Dance, and all form of chronic invalidism.

PRICE LIST.

Lung Invigorators,	$ 6 00
Gentlemen's Body Belts,	6 00
Sciatic Appliances,	5 00
Knee Caps,	3 00
Leg Belts,	4 00
Anklets,	4 00
Shoulder Appliances,	4 00
Wristlets, each,	1 50
Hat Bands,	1 00
Head Caps,	4 00
Sleeping Caps,	4 00
Abdominal Belts (ladies),	6 00
Gents' Vests,	15 00
Ladies' Jacket and Corset (combined),	18 00
Superfine Insoles (all leather),	1 00

While these garments can be procured at the above low prices no one can afford to be ill. Our ladies' supporters are just what every lady in the land needs, as it will be found a great assistance at certain periods; all these garments are made to measure, and a fit guaranteed. To ladies who are all dragged out a combination jacket and corset will restore you to new life and energy, and pay for itself an hundred fold in a few weeks' wear. This garment is only made from actual measure, and a perfect fit assured.

All communications answered free of charge. Address, DR. L. TENNEY, 471 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill. Agents wanted for Boston, New York Brooklyn, and Philadelphia.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

News of the Week.

THE great railroad strike at Sedalia, Mo., was won by the workmen.

GENERAL GRANT'S physicians say that his disease is at present stationary.

THE trades unions of New York hav resolved to boycott Doelger's lager beer. This is a good beginning.

MR. BLAINE called on Mr. Cleveland at the White House last Friday. The meeting is said to hav been cordial.

THE interior of St. Dominic's Roman Catholic church at Washington, D. C., was burnt out on the 12th at a loss of $100,000.

ENGLAND and Russia make no progress toward meeting each other in battle array. It is believed that England is not anxious for war.

A MISSIONARY called on O'Donovan Rossa last week, and labored for half an hour to make a Quaker of him. Mr. Rossa remains a good Catholic.

FRANK TOUSEY, who attempted to "rat" the printing business, was boycotted by the Typographical Union, and failed last week for $100,000.

MR. GORSUCH lectured before the Anarchists of Jersey City last Sunday. At the close of his speech a "group" of dynamiters was formed, two members being young women.

COUNTERFEITERS are making money by coining genuin specie. They melt up trade dollars and bullion and run them into standard coin. There is a profit of about 27 cents on the dollar.

THE Rev. Dr. Burchard, who arranged the words, "rum, Romanism, and rebellion," in so rhythmical but disastrous a manner, has been retired from the ministry on a pension of $500 per annum.

THE temperature on the night of Saturday, the 7th, was two degrees below zero at Watertown, Wis. This, however, did not prevent fourteen persons with more piety than brains from being immersed in the Rock River at that place.

GOVERNOR PIERCE, of Dakota, vetoed the Woman Suffrage bill which had passed both houses of the legislature of that territory with good majorities. The Connecticut house has passed a bill allowing women the right to vote in school districts.

THE current number of the British Medical Journal denies the possibility of smoking having caused the cancer with which General Grant is afflicted. The Journal says that the risk of cancer in the throat incurred by smokers is infinitesimal.

THE school board of Lewiston, Me., hav taken charge of a Catholic parochial school, and will pay the salaries of the teachers to instil Catholicism into the scholars. The measure was opposed, but three-fourths of the board were Catholics, and with a priest for an advocate, it was adopted.

ELIAS BRAY, the man who went to the Advocate office and appointed Assistant Editor Doherty his first lieutenant to remove Cleveland, has been lodged in the insane asylum at Flatbush, L. I. He lost his reason by taking on too much religion in 1881, and was sent to an asylum, but escaped during a fire, and had not been heard from since until he turned up in the manner described.

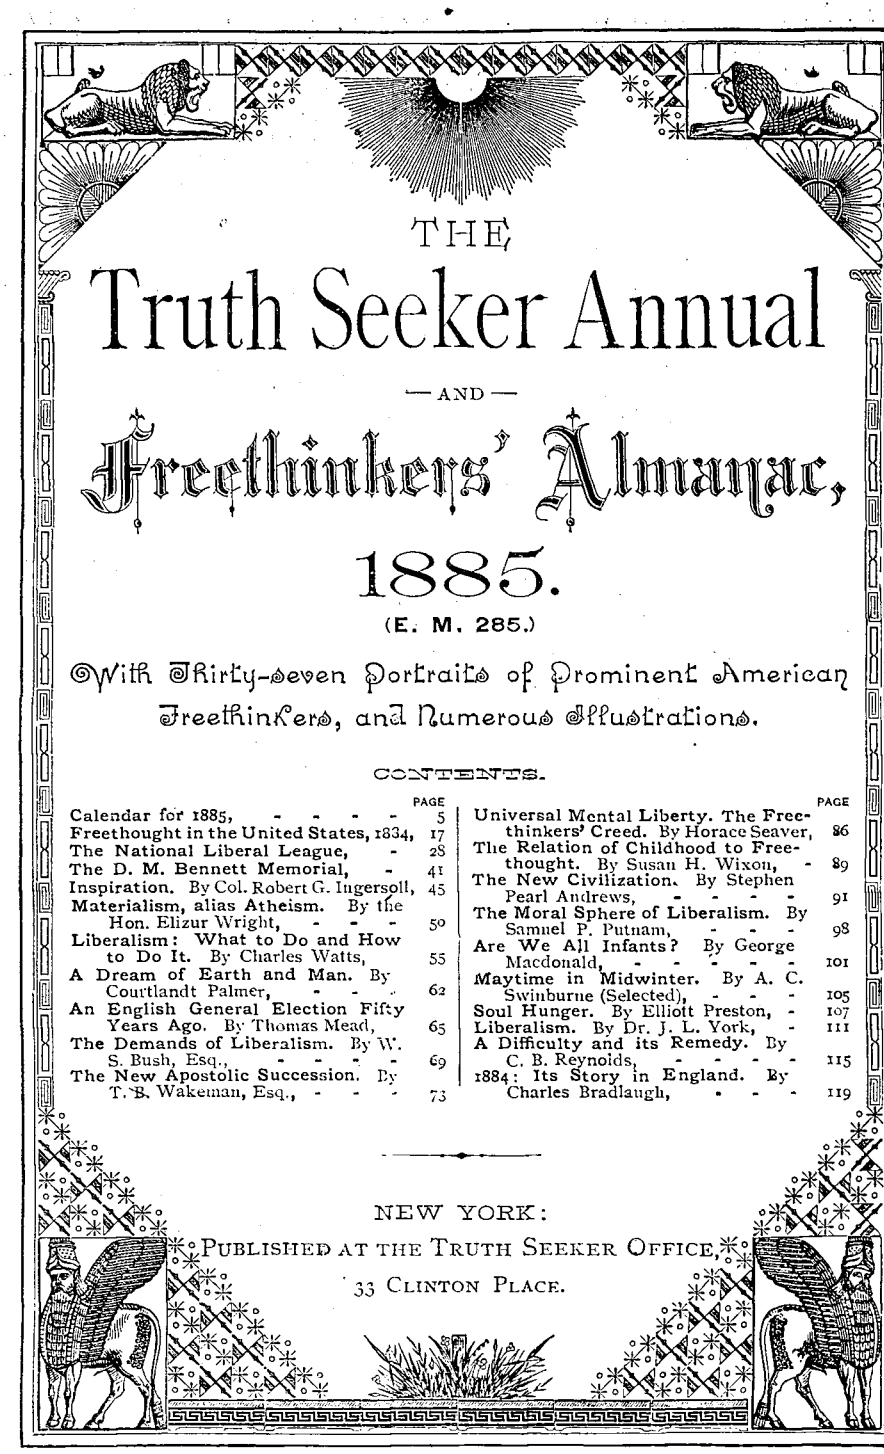
THE committee of the Austrian legislature having the Socialist question in charge has decided to draft a bill providing for the trial of Anarchists without a jury. From the trouble the Eastern powers are having with labor and political reformers, it would appear that European Anarchists are of a more dangerous character than the mild-mannered persons who advocate dynamite in America.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has issued his first proclamation. It is a warning to the residents on the Oklahoma Indian land in the Indian territory to move out. These residents are called "boomers." It is reported that they will resist eviction. Mr. Louis Post sets forth in John Swinton's Paper that the boomers really hav a prior claim to the lands, which capitalists wish to pasture and are using government means to oust the legitimate owners.

MRS. HUDSON, of Boston, came to New York last week and stopped at a first-class hotel until the money question was raised, when she claimed she had been robbed by some one in the house. She was arrested as a swindler. Mrs. Hudson is well known in Boston as an adventuress. She is a woman of great piety and is in intimate correspondence with the Rev. Mr. Drysdale, of the Calvary Protestant Episcopal church in Brooklyn, having letters from him in her possession which place the writer in the position of her very intimate friend. Mr. Drysdale says he has no explanation to offer. Mrs. Hudson claims he is the cause of all her trouble.

AN eclipse of the sun, lasting from 12:13 M. till 2:51 P.M., occurred last Monday. The most interesting feature, says the Sun's astronomer, was the appearance in profile of the great mountain ranges on the eastern edge of the moon's disk. There are several places in the eastern hemisphere of the moon where a powerful glass will always show the serrated horizon line of the peaks and craters that lie close to the moon's edge, but when these same mountains are seen, as they were last Monday, with their outlines showing absolutely black against the white sun, their appearance is much more striking than usual. At moments when the air was steady, permitting the use of a high magnifying power, it was a grand sight to see the profiles of the gigantic ranges of the D'Alembert and Rook mountains, and the Lunar Cordilleras, pictured with sharpest outline against this brilliant background. The whole forward edge of the moon was seen to be deeply notched and lined with sharp peaks, presenting a striking contrast to the perfectly even curve of the sun's edges. Even with a small magnifying power the outlines of the principal mountains could be clearly seen. In one place a broad, dish-shaped valley was conspicuous, with a ridge of mountains on either side and a lofty peak in the center, whose sharp, conical form stood out from the blaze of sunlight behind it with beautiful distinctness. Here and there the edge of the moon appeared flattened, and sometimes scalloped out, showing the presence of broad, deep valleys sunk far below the general level. The large mountain masses presented a peculiarly impressiv spectacle just as they entered upon the sun's edge, peak after peak slowly moving into view, while the light streaming through the intervening valleys brought them into still greater prominence. Some of the mountains in this part of the moon rise to a hight of 20,000 feet, and there are valleys among them which in some cases appear to sink in an almost equal depth below the lunar surface. It is no matter for wonder, therefore, that this rugged region presented a grand appearanee when cut out, as it were, in blackest silhouet against the sun. There was a group of sun spots a little west of the center of the sun, and the gradual concealment of the center of the spots as the moon advanced over them, followed by their reappearance as it passed off, was an interesting feature of the telescopic observation of the eclipse. The chief importance of this eclipse is to enable astronomers to correct the moon's position. There has not been so large an eclipse before since 1869.

Odds and Ends.



A COUNTRY minister recently made the followin announcement to his congregation: "On next Sabbath morning the bishop will be with us, and will deliver the sermon. May the Lord help and strengthen us all."

"I HAV neither time nor inclination to pass paregorics on the deceased," remarked an orator. "Panegyrics," corrected a person present. "As you please, sir," remarked the orator, stiffly, "the words are anonymous."

AMONG the testimonials given at a religious revival in Chicago was one by a young man who stated that when he went to Chicago, about a year ago, he was a ruined sot, and walked the streets at night hoping that somebody would sandbag him. His testimony was followed by that of a man who confessed that if he had met the other brother when, a year ago, he was walking round looking for somebody to sandbag him he could hav accommodated him, as he was in that line of business at that time.

THE Arizona editor has got into trouble. He explains it thus: "We edit our paper this week from the jail, where we are living for the present. We hav been put in the jug for a month because we resented the insult offered us by the pin feather journalist who tries to run an opposition paper in this town. But if he thinks he will muzzle the press in this way he is mistaken. Like Edmund Yates, we shall come out of jail stronger than ever, and, shall take our place in the world with renewed vigor and strength. A month is not a long time to a man with a good conscience, which is our case. We would request our friends to turn in all items of news to the gentlemanly jailer, who will giv them to us."

MARY was a buxom country lass, and her father was an upright deacon in a Connecticut village. Mary's plan of joining the boys and girls in a nutting party was frustrated by the unexpected arrival of a number of the brethren on their way to conference, and Mary had to stay at home and get dinner for her father's clerical guests. Her already ruffled temper was increased by the reverend visitors themselvs, who sat about the stove and in the way. One of the good ministers noticed her wrathful impatience, and desiring to rebuke the sinful manifestations, said sternly: "Mary, what do you think will be your occupation in hell?" "Pretty much the same as it is on earth," she replied, "cooking for ministers."

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine, R. G. Ingersoll, D. M. Bennett, T. C. Leland, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, James Parton, Parker Pillsbury, S. P Andrews, W. F. Jamieson, G. H. Walser, John Peck, J. H. Burnham, J. R. Monroe, H. L. Green, Chas. B. Reynolds, Chas. Watts, W. S. Bell, S. P. Putnam, J. E. Remsburg, Courtlandt Palmer, Lucy Colman, John R. Kelso, Elmina D. Slenker, Amy Post, Helen H. Gardner, Mattie Krekel, Horace Seaver, Luther Colby, J. P. Mendum, J. L. York, Chas. P. Somerby, E. M. Macdonald, Juliet H. Severance, Susan H. Wixon, Wm. Denton, Mrs. H. S. Lake.

Gems of Thought.

THOSE who pretend to bring intelligence from the gods know no more about them than the most ignorant person to whom the announcement is made. Those who claim to speak for the gods simply speak their own thoughs. What they wish to make men believe they pretend is said by the gods. Simple men hav believed these statements, and in this way the grossest errors hav been spread and the deepest darkness has existed among mankind. The very claim that the gods speak unto men, or send messages to them through the offices of a mediating party, is based upon deception and falsehood. The more men listen to such falsehoods the worse it is for them.—D. M. Bennett.

THE believer in the inspiration of the Bible is compelled to declare that there was a time when slavery was right—when men could buy, and women could sell, their babes. He is compelled to insist that there was a time when polygamy was the highest form of virtue; when wars of extermination were waged with the sword of mercy; when religious toleration was a crime, and when death was the just penalty for having expressed an honest thought. He must maintain that Jehovah is just as bad now as he was four thousand years ago, or that he was just as good then as he is now, but that human conditions hav so changed that slavery, polygamy, religious persecutions, and wars of conquest are now perfectly devilish. Once they were right—once they were commanded by God himself; now, they are prohibited. There has been such a change in the conditions of man that, at the present time, the devil is in favor of slavery, polygamy, religious persecution, and wars of conquest. That is to say, the devil entertains the same opinion to-day that Jehovah held four thousand years ago, but in the mean time Jehovah has remained exactly the same—changeless and incapable of change.—R. G. Ingersoll in the Christian Religion.

MEN who are able to make discoveries are generally disposed to make allowances. Men who are eagerly pressing forward in pursuit of truth are grateful to everyone who has cleared an inch of the way for them. It is, for the most part, the man who has just capacity enough to pick up and respect the commonplaces which are fashionable in his own time who looks with disdain on the very intellects to which it is owing that those commonplaces are not still considered as startling paradoxes or damnable heresies.—Macaulay.

A HUNDRED YEARS TO COME.

Who'll press for gold the crowded street
A hundred years to come?
Who'll tread yon church with willing feet
A hundred years to come?
Pale, trembling age, and fiery youth,
And childhood, with its brow of truth,
The rich and poor, on land or sea,
Where will the teeming millions be
A hundred years to come?

We all within our graves shall sleep
A hundred years to come.
No living soul for us will weep
A hundred years to come.
But other men our lands will till,
And others then our streets will fill,
And others words will sing as gay,
And bright the sunshine as to-day,
A hundred years to come.

YOU ought, when you are investigating a simple matter of fact, to make your brain a clear, calm, cold logic-machine, without any feeling, without any care, so far as your brain is concerned, as to whether the thing you are investigating be true or false. It is your business to find out a matter of fact Do not let feeling come in, then. The brain of metaphysicians is, I think, like a pair of scales that are not balanced—a magical pair of scales. You may cast the universe of truth into one side, and you put a little whim, a prejudice, or dislike into the other, and it will go down to the abyss, and the universe will kick the beam. Most persons' brains are not machines for the discovery of truth. And yet, when a matter of fact is in question, the brain should simply be a clear and polished glass to reflect. A painter sometimes flatters a face that he is copying, but a looking-glass never; it tells the truth because it cannot help it. You ought to train your brain into precisely that attitude toward questions of truth or falsehood.—M. J. Savage.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 13. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, March 28, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A MICHIGAN man claims to hav been miraculously cured of a rheumatism which had made him helpless for many months. His hired man was carrying a hive of bees through his room and dropped it. The patient is now an activ member of society, and says he is "thankful to an inscrutable providence."

THE earnest, practical Christian has appeared in Hartford, Conn.—a novel place for such a production, for that is where all the insurance companies come from. This good man is one whose wife lately abandoned him to join the Salvation Army, and he is working for a divorce, hesitating not a moment about sacrificing her permanently in the cause.—Chicago Tribune.

THERE are a good many things at which his Satanic majesty is said to laugh, and according to the Richmond Religious Herald this is one of them: "When a batch of balked and sorepated Baptists roll up together into a hard knot, and in a spirit of spite start a new church, it is always a thing at which devils laugh and over which good people shed sorrowful and helpless tears."

A LARGE number of students in the medical school at Harvard College hav been guilty of an act of heresy. They hav combined in a request to a prominent member of the homeopathic school inviting him to deliver before them a series of lectures upon the theory and practice of homeopathy. The old-school professors refused to allow the lectures to be given in the college building, and they will be delivered in an outside hall.

ONE of the most remarkable people with whom missionaries hav to do are the Falashas of Ethiopia. They are black Hebrews, about 300,000 in number, living west of Jordan, who hav as their holy writings the Old Testament in an Ethiopic version, and who still rigidly adhere to the Mosaic ceremonies and laws. They are the children of Hebrew immigrants, who, in the time of the great dispersion, settled in Abyssinia and married wives of that nation. Efforts made during the last 200 years to convert them to Christianity hav proved unavailing.

IT is so rarely that we can approvingly quote what a Methodist says that it is with peculiar pleasure we read these words spoken by the Rev. M. C. Wright of this city: "The Freedom of Worship bills are so artfully framed as to make this state the slave of Roman Catholicism, to join the church and state in an unholy compact, for it is well known that all its most ardent supporters are men who for years hav endeavored to destroy our grand public school system, and little enough they care for the welfare of the little ones upon the island. This bill, brethren, I assure you, is a blow at free American institutions."

HERMANN FUCHS is an inmate of the Essex county, N. J., Insane Asylum. He has been there but a short time. A month ago, while living in Newark, he began to take great interest in religion, and joined the church. It is evident that his conversion was thorough, because he shortly thereafter became insane, and was lodged in the asylum mentioned above. Last week he killed a fellow-patient by breaking his skull with a stone spittoon. He said by way of apology that he thought the man would be better off in heaven. He was put in a straitjacket. Meanwhile the revival work of Moody, and the Salvation Army, and other encouragers of insanity, goes merrily on.

A CORRESPONDENT sends to the Boston Journal the following account of a mistake made by a little girl in his vicinity: She always joins the family in reading the scriptures during family devotions, taking her verse in turn. She easily reads the shorter words, but needs some help about the longer, but is always eager to pronounce all the words herself, and sometimes guesses. Recently it came her turn to read the verse, "No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." She made a slight variation at the end, and finished the verse, "Ye cannot serve God and woman."

ACCORDING to Dr. Hyades, who has lately returned from Terra del Fuego, whither he was dispatched on a mission by the French government, the Fuegians are the lowest human beings in the scale of existence. Their language contains no word for any number above three; they are unable to distinguish one color from another; they hav no religion and no funeral rites, and they possess neither chiefs nor slaves. Their only weapons are bone-pointed spears, and, as they grow neither fruits nor vegetables and their country is naturally barren, they are obliged to liv entirely on animal food. Even these savages possess, however, social virtues. They are not cannibals; they ill-treat neither women nor the old, and they are monogamous.

A DEACON in a Pennsylvania town holds the opinion that certain young men and maidens of his church do not attend prayer-meetings for the glory of God, but for the love of each other. They do their courting, he thinks, while the services are in progress, and though they sing and even lead in prayer with great vigor, they are animated more by profane than holy motivs. In fact, he objects to their singing as too loud under the circumstances, and as calculated to disturb those devout souls who are accustomed to drone through hymn and prayer. Therefore, as the young people will not be saved according to the manner which the deacon thinks proper, he is resolved to snatch them, not out of the burning, but out of the church, and to that end he has procured their arrest on the charge of disorderly conduct.

THE Jewish World devotes three columns of its pages to the Soudan, the wild and desolate region which has lately come into such prominence. We are reminded that the Soudan is a Bible land. The Jews, in the time of their bondage, worked at the quarries at Syene, the modern Assouan of the first Nile cataract. The Soudan, it is claimed, is the Kusu of the ancient Hebrew times, the Ethiopia of the ordinary Bible translation. The Jews and the Soudanese were old-time enemies. More than five and twenty centuries ago the streets of Jerusalem rang beneath the tread of the wild tribes from the "southern country;" and if there be, as is not improbable, a Jew among the twenty thousand troops who will shortly cross swords with the Arabs of the Soudan, he may boast that 2,500 years ago his ancestors under Asa, king of Judah, chased the dark-skinned hordes, pellmell, from the land they had invaded, under, Zerah, the Kushite, or Ethiopian.

THE Erie Dispatch relates a peculiar religious case. A family named Yaber, living a few miles from the city on the Lake Road, called a physician to attend to their child, who was subject to fits through teething. The doctor learned that an aged itinerant quack, who has the reputation of being a witch doctor, had called and insisted that the little lad could be cured without medicin. The doctor found a small muslin bag suspended with a string around the child's neck. The bag was sewed up, and inside of it was a sheet of foolscap paper closely bent together. One side was filled with writing in high German. The doctor further learned that the aged doctor had left a long briar switch, and after he had tied the bag around the child's neck he told the mother that whenever the child became restless she should take the switch and vigorously beat the air about the child's crib to drive off the supposed witches, who, he alleged, were holding a spell over the little one. The mother exhibited the switch, but says she did not use it. He took off the bag, translated the manuscript, and gave the result of his discovery to the parents. The writing was a lengthy prayer to the almighty to deliver James Yaber, the child, from all his enemies, who see but cannot be seen: "That they cannot come near me nor hurt me, body nor soul. Little pigs of my bed and all bad spirits, I forbid ye my bed, my house, my property. I forbid ye the nail holes of my house until the hills jump, all the water bubbles; until all the leaves be counted on the hills. Ye hav taken hold of my bones, so fall back again. I pray to the almighty I may be well again. I throw myself at thy feet. Bless me! bless me! Amen." It is said that the old witch-doctor is carrying on his practices in a number of families, and that a prosecution will follow.

JOHN T. LANE, sheriff of Saline county, Nebraska, accompanied by a Mr. Smith, and armed with a requisition from the governor of Nebraska for one Clark Braden, arrived in town yesterday morning, and asked our officers to assist them in effecting his capture. Braden has been expounding Christian doctrins to the people of Liberal for the past two weeks from a Campbellite standpoint, and going for Infidelity and Spiritualism in the roughest manner possible, attributing all rascality, immorality, drunkenness, and debauchery to non-believers of Christianity. He was arrested for defrauding B. L. Caster, of Wilber, Saline county, Nebraska, out of $800 by mortgaging to him a printing office which he afterwards sold and took out of the state, depriving the mortgagee of the benefit of his security, then skipping himself. Such a transaction is a felony in Nebraska, subjecting the offender to ten years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.—Kansas City Journal, Feb. 23d.

THE Christian Intelligencer says: "At the funeral of Dr. Damrosch last week Mr. H. W. Beecher made an address, in which, according to the press report, he said of the dead man: 'Now I thank God that I believe with all my heart and soul that he stands with the sweet singers of Israel.' We do not dispute this fact. It is not our province to determin the future state of any one. Each stands or falls to his own master. Only we may be permitted to say that if Dr. Damrosch, after leaving this world, found himself among the sweet singers of Israel, it must hav been a surprise to him. He was not used to such things here below. He was an adept in music as an art, but not as a means of worship. Going to church was in his view 'a waste of time.' It is not easy to see how one who never cared to join in God's praises on earth could find enioyment in the company of those who sing God's praises in heaven. Death is a great change, but it does not transform one's moral nature."

JOHN WOODING writes to Dr. Holbrook's Monthly: "I noticed in the Monthly a communication referring to a birch growing out of a chestnut tree. A similar curious instance came under my notice, in England, some fifteen years ago. With a friend of mine, I visited a place called Lucien, in Hertfordshire, about eighteen miles from London, to see, as was said, 'the greatest curiosity ever heard tell of,' situated in Lucien churchyard. There we saw seven ash and three sycamore trees growing through a tombstone out of a grave. The stone was about twelve feet long, six inches thick, and eight feet wide. The growth of the trees had split the stone in all directions. Some of the trees at that time were seven inches through, and about fifteen feet high. The grave lot was inclosed with an iron fence twelve feet high, and the branches of the trees and some parts of the trunk had grown into the fence in all imaginable shapes and forms. Of course, there is a 'true story' connected with the circumstance, as the people of Hertfordshire will strongly affirm. The person buried in this grave was a lady of title, Lady Anne Grimstone, who was buried there somewhere about a hundred years ago. She was an unbeliever in a supreme being, in fact, an Infidel, and those who doubt it can buy a book, sold by pedlers for six pence, strongly confirming the horrible story in detail. This lady asseverated previous to her death that if there be a God or devil, heaven or hell, she hoped ash and sycamore might grow through her body. No one planted these trees there, and the people religiously believe that to prove to the living the horrible heresy of the dead, the trees came from her body, and the more to attract attention, hav grown up through and broken the stone." This is about as good evidence for its truth as Christianity possesses.

News of the Week.

THE New Jersey state capitol was partially destroyed by fire on the 21st.

EMPEROR WILLIAM of Germany celebrated his eighty-ninth birth-day on Sunday, the 22d inst.

THE Langham Hotel at Chicago was burnt last Sunday. Five persons were killed and a number injured.

THOMAS W. THORNE, for thirteen years police inspector of New York, died suddenly on the 20th, of heart disease.

GENERAL GRANT'S condition is reported easier than a week ago. The trouble in the throat obliges him to liv altogether on liquid food.

A MEMBER of the Elmira, N. Y., Park church, of which the Rev. Thomas K. Beecher is pastor, was arrested last Sunday for picking pockets.

THE weather for the past week has been remarkably cold in New York. In some parts of the country the coldest weather of the season prevailed.

DURING the performance of the Renz Circus in Vienna, Austria, March 20th, one of the lions attacked a lion-tamer named Smith and devoured him.

IT is reported that the French government has intimated to the Chinese minister at Berlin that it considers a renewal of peace negotiations desirable.

THE Rev. Elias Bray, the insane clergyman, who said he had a mission from heaven to kill President Cleveland, has been sent to England by the charity commissioners.

THE Presbyterian church at Moosic, Pa., burnt up last Sunday at a loss to the society of $8,000. This was not a dispensation of Providence, as would hav been the case if the building had been a Freethought hall.

THE war in the Soudan goes on. The British troops were surprised last Sunday by a rush of Arabs, who killed or wounded about sixty men and officers and hamstrung many camels and mules. They were repulsed, with what loss is unknown.

A LOT of New York women hav addressed a petition to the legislature praying that the right of voting shall not be extended to female citizens of the state. These weak sisters who are afraid to trust themselvs with the ballot deserve the pity of all intelligent persons.

THE apathy in Boston upon reception of the new date of the end of the world (May 19, 1885) recalls the reply of Theodore Parker when informed by a Millerite of the pending destruction of our planet. "That does not concern me," said Parker, "for I liv in Boston."

MRS. KRUEGER, a German woman living near St. Louis, Mo., killed her three-year-old daughter on the 20th inst. The woman claimed that she had been "commanded" to make the sacrifice, and laying the child upon the table nearly severed its head with a butcher knife.

THE alumni of Princeton College, N. J., entertained the alumni of Harvard College, Mass., at a dinner in this city last week. Dr John R. Paxton, of Princeton, said he did not wish prayer and God to be made optional in colleges. Charles C. Beaman, of Harvard, defended the right of choice.

COLONEL INGERSOLL delivered his lecture on "Blasphemy" at the Bijou Opera House in this city last Sunday evening. Every seat in the house was filled, and hundreds stood up. The lecture occupied two and a half hours. It made religious people gasp for breath. Next Sunday night he will talk on "Which Way?"

A CASE of the failure of faith cure has just terminated in the death of the wife of A. W. Parry, a minister of Sycamore, Ill. The cause of the death was, according to medical authority, puerperal fever. The patient refused medicin and medical aid, and the whole church indulged in a seventy-two hour prayer for her recovery. Her death ended the service.

Communications.

Evolution and Anarchy.

We are now in a transitory state. The doctrin of evolution has destroyed all the foundations which formed the basis of religious beliefs, moral principles, and laws of conduct, but its logical results hav not yet been worked out, and thus we see a number of sincere Christians who accept the doctrin of evolution, and yet retain beliefs entirely opposed to it; and in the same way the most of reformers hav surrendered the belief in the free will, and yet advocate ideas which were logical under the old belief, but now hav no foundation to rest upon.

According to the theory of evolution, progress in society is the natural result of certain forces, and is compelled to take a predetermined direction; and intelligence, instead of being the impelling force of progress, is only its controler and director. Man progresses because he desires happiness, and for the same reason that water flows down hill, because both are in the line of the least resistance; and the intelligence that directs this progress is itself nothing more than a manifestation or endowment of matter, and is based upon memory and knowledge.

This theory brings progress in society under the realm of exact laws. Under certain conditions a certain form of society will be evolved; change the conditions and the form of society will change.

The practical result of such a belief will not be to oppose the aspirations to greater freedom and abundance for the lower classes, but to teach them, first, to confine their aspirations to that which is possible; and next, to teach them the best means by which they can attain their ends. Improvement in society, promoted by aspirations for better conditions, is as natural and irrepressible as the growth of planets; but there is a vast difference between aspirations wasting their strength in trying to accomplish that which is impossible, and the same aspirations intelligently directed.

It will teach men to turn their efforts to the accomplishment of that which is within their reach. In times past, a great deal of thought and labor has been wasted in search of perpetual motion and the philosopher's stone, and if it is not done any longer, a great deal of power is now wasted in trying to secure future salvation. This all Liberals acknowledge, but very few reformers realize that much reform power is wasted in trying to bring about changes that are either entirely opposed to natural laws, or that are premature and cannot be attained without a previous change in conditions.

The bearing of this theory of evolution upon Anarchy is, to me, very plain. The best description of social freedom I hav seen, and one which I believe is accepted by the Anarchists, is, that a man is entitled to entire social freedom, limited only by the same right to freedom in others. Let this definition be my starting-point.

Suppose one man alone on an island. He would hav entire social freedom. Giv him one companion and his freedom is curtailed by the freedom of the other; giv him ten companions and his social freedom is further curtailed; increase the number by one hundred, or one thousand, and, with each addition, the modicum of each will be further reduced, for the number of persons who limit the freedom is steadily increased. And we may, theoretically, go on increasing the number of persons on the island till they will be so numerous that they will each hav just standing-room, and be entirely unable to move, and their social freedom will be entirely gone, and yet we will not hav infringed upon our definition, for each will hav entire freedom, limited only by the same freedom in others.

The deduction of this fact is very plain. As numbers increase, social freedom decreases. But another law comes in here. The more intelligent the persons are, the less they will infringe upon each other, for they will so order their lives that there will be the least amount of friction possible. An ignorant mob could trample over each other where an intelligent crowd could soon establish such regulations—and enforce them also—as would enable each person to make the most of the limited space in his possession. From this I make another deduction. Freedom increases as intelligence increases.

Thus we hav a double evolution going on. As the individual increases in intelligence, he needs less government, being better able to make use of greater social freedom, but as population increases at the same time, the individual uses his intelligence—not to follow his will, but to obey certain natural laws that control the organization of large numbers of people, or nations, so as to reduce the friction to its minimum.

It is very clear to my mind that to fight against this evolution is a pure waste of time, for no man, or body of men, is stronger than natural laws; and it is precisely what the Anarchists are doing. So long as they claim more personal freedom, they are in the current, and are making advances, but when they want to use this increased freedom to overthrow the regulations that centuries of experience hav shown were necessary to reduce the friction of large numbers of people, kept together in narrow spaces, and all obeying the law of the struggle for existence and the survival of the fittest, they utterly fail to realize what they are trying to accomplish, and the hopelessness of the task that they hav set themselvs to do.

So far as I am personally concerned, I hav no great love for governments. I find no pleasure in paying taxes, nor in being partially controled by other men's beliefs and opinions, enforced by their superiority of numbers. Like many other men, I would gladly see all governments abolished, if it were true that they are an unnecessary evil. But I hav no such belief. What little intelligence I possess tells me that without some organized power, strong enough to compel obedience, able to arbitrate between the thousand and one contending interests of all classes of men, there would be no prosperity and no peace. And if we must hav such organization, I much prefer to hav one to whom all belongs, and in whom all persons can hav one vote, to the voluntary associations proposed by Mr. Tucker.

I can see that, at some far-off time, man may hav made such progress in intelligence that he will need no government whatever—but when that time comes, no more will he need the substitutes proposed by Mr. Tucker. A perfect ideal society will probably hav no government, nor taxes, nor armies, but then it will hav no need for mediums of exchange, banks of any kind, free or privileged, no mortgages, nor any personal property. But this result, if ever reached, is too far off to be of any practical value to us, and, in the meantime, our best efforts ought to be used in improving our governments, and not in their destruction.

ALBERT CHAVANNES.

The Bold Dynamiter.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your late issues hav occurred various articles, comments, insinuations, etc., in regard to the ideas, aims, and attitude of the Anarchists.

Seeing our movement provokes thought on the part of even those who congressionally hav fossilized their whole reform into abusing God and scaring the devil, though surprised that such intellectual reformers should so soon "kick over the traces," I am impelled, in my non-intellectual and brutally chaotic way, to do a little plain talking. An Anarchist rejects reliance on Gods, ghosts, kings, presidents, legislatures, laws, knowing that all that has bettered man's condition has evolved through the efforts of man, individually or collectivly applied, and ever under the repressiv burden of direct conflict with these constituted authorities. I said he "rejects reliance"—more, he demands the removal of all such hindrances, such barriers to man's progress, holding they but perpetuate slavery, and prevent a societary evolution, based on justice and guaranteeing happiness that man, if left free, would freely establish. If this be chaos, Mr. Editor, then, in the name of humanity, Chaos, thou white-winged messenger of Liberty, we welcome thee to an enslaved and degraded world!

"Poetical," you say; "but how will we get there, and what will we hav when we arrive? I won't trade off a battered coin till I'm sure of getting an equally good one in return."

To-day ten per cent of the population absolutely own as private property all the means of production; ninety per cent are their absolute slaves. He who owns the land, owns the men who must use the same in order to liv. Ninety per cent are but allowed to exist on such terms as the ten per cent choose to grant. As a result, according to the United States census for 1880, the average wage is $304 per year, and the average profit on the work of the wage-worker to the owner of the means of production is $4,000. Due to this we witness overproduction vs. starvation. We demand use alone shall constitute a valid title to land and the means of production. But one argument is possible to-day, as it ever was in the past, with the masters who, surfeited with luxury, cannot, if they would, think clearly and justly of human rights, and that argument is Force, unanswerable, exterminating Force.

This is how, friend Eugene, at one fell blow we wipe out the whole army of infamous blood-suckers I hav instanced above. Can it be done? Of a surety. Dynamite in the hand of a pauper makes him more powerful than Bismarck backed by the armies of Prussia.

After the deluge, What? We will take care of that when we get to it. You know the pope said, "One world at a time." Bob was right; so say we Anarchists. One thing no man can deny—the hell of the present. Free men certainly can do no worse in the future than slaves governed by slaves do in the present. We believe in the sense of the mob, and hav no fear of liberty evolving demons. If in the first flush of freedom's intoxication men should go wild, who could blame them? Compensation is ever activ, and wrongs suffered cry for vengeance. We do not believe men can be made angelic in a moment, but we hold this—non-belief is no excuse for continuing conditions that perforce make them devils.

If you say we do not place before you a thoroughly formulated plan of future society, and request us to do this before moving on the ranks of the enemy, I answer, the masters would be well pleased if all efforts were dissipated in dreaming of a future heaven either beyond the skies, or here on earth, for he who so acts has no time or energy to devote to destroying the hell of the present. This latter is our work—we deal with the now. The evils of to-day must go. The systems that uphold the same we will destroy, no matter what means we may be forced to use, and then, and not till then, shall we find time to discuss methods of interaction. We appreciate the magnitude of the conflict, and our energies can not be sapped, or our attention diverted, from the one single point in view.

One word more. An Anarchist is, perforce, an Atheist. He who looks to God for help, helps not himself. A Christian Socialist is an impossibility. As well try to mix oil and water. We recognize but man and his material surroundings. Metaphysics we repudiate. We confront real, physical, demonstrable facts, and with those alone we deal. If the contract we hav on hand is rather large, you hav known me long enough to be aware I understand not such a word as "Fail."

W. J. GORSUCH.

New York, March 16, 1885.

Our London Letter.

Owing to the recent events in the Soudan a question has been raised of some importance to the Christian community, viz., the efficacy of prayer. We are continually being informed, both in the pulpit and in the religious press, that there is a wonderful power in supplication to the particular deity patronized by those calling themselvs Christians, and that he being far more powerful than any other god, the prayers of those who believe in him will undoubtedly be answered if they are accompanied by faith. Whether Jehovah and Allah are distinct beings or one and the same under different names has not yet been satisfactorily decided, some inclining to one view and some to the other. It will be more difficult than ever to decide this most weighty matter now, for, if they are two different beings, the latter has shown himself more powerful than the former, or more attentiv to his followers; and if the two are identical, the Mohammedans must be his favorit children. It remains to be seen which side he will favor when a larger British army is brought into the field. It appears that the Mahdi, who is popularly supposed to be a rebel, has been busy at the praying business, and as doubtless the entire Mohammedan world has joined in the same direction, and, as is their custom, far more frequently every day than any other religious body, these numerous prayers crowded out those sent from the other side, and on the principle of "first come first served" the followers of the False Prophet hav had first innings. It may seem somewhat strange that an Ishmaelite who has never been properly consecrated to the priestly office should hav more power with the Almighty than a whole bench of bishops and an army of parsons, all duly oiled and filled with the holy ghost, and it must be a somewhat difficult matter for the true believer to solve the mystery. I hav not come across any explanation yet from anyone possessing authority, and therefore can only conclude that inquiries are being made into the matter, which will be eventually cleared up in the usual lucid manner. It may be that the Lord, being a man of war, prefers supporting an individual who backs up his prayers with his presence in the army, and if such is the case, the way to regain his favor and get him on the right side will be for the English government to make up an army of all the black-coated and white-chokered individuals, headed by the bishops, and start them off for the seat of war at their own expense. They could be well spared, and if any demand was shown for the article, presuming they did not return, no doubt a plentiful supply could be obtained to meet it. It would of course be necessary to keep one or two properly ordained parsons here, or the unction, or whatever it is, might get lost, as I hav been given to understand there is a kind of subtle essence which has to be passed from one to the other, or you cannot get a genuin priest, and it would be awkward and humiliating to hav to apply to a foreigner for the article. As the clergy are all in such a mad hurry to reach heaven, I hav no doubt that they would all volunteer to a man to go out if the scheme was proposed by our defender of the faith. The Salvation Army might also be sent, and would doubtless be allowed to take the front, for the true, unadulterated, apostolic succession parson is conspicuous for his deep humility, and however much he might be desirous of bearing the brunt of the battle and displaying his bravery and patriotism, possessing this virtue in so great a degree, he would permit his humbler and somewhat irregularly ordained brother to take the post of danger.

It would be a glorious sight—the dignitaries of the church in their full canonicals, and the rank and file in their black and white livery with tall hats, together with the church missions with their banners and lanterns, well armed with Bibles in every known and unknown language, as supplied by the British and Foreign Bible Society, together with General Booth and his troupe of howling dervishes, marching on to Khartoum. They would, in all probability, frighten all Africa, and convert the rest of the world at one stroke, which is more than the whole force can now do under the present system of evangelizing.

A solemn farce is shortly to be played here. The persons entitled to vote hav received permission to elect a new bishop of London, but are informed that the present bishop of Exeter has been chosen by the queen for the office, and must be elected, and as the clerical voters say the holy ghost guides them in their decision, it can only be supposed that the ghost has to take its orders from the queen, or the two are synonymous. J. D.

London, Eng., March 3, 1885.

Canadian Notes.

Mr. W. E. Norris, of Stirling, Ontario, a Canadian pioneer of labor and Freethought, over seventy years of age, is on his death-bed—from moment to moment he is expected to breathe his last.

The family hav just received the following letter of condolence:

TORONTO, March 14, 1885.

DEAR BROTHER, and fellow-laborer for the cause of emancipation of humanity from the slavery of superstition and priestcraft: If your dear, good, kind father is still alive and conscious, and in possession of his faculties, please convey to him my most earnest sympathy and admiration for his noble and philosophic mental attitude in the presence of death and that bourne from which no traveler returns, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. Nature speaks to man a various language. For his gayer hours she has a voice of gladness, and a smile, and eloquence of beauty, and she glides into his darker musings with a mild and gentle sympathy that steals away their sharpness ere he is aware. Thou shalt lie down with patriarchs of the ancient world, with kings, the powerful of the earth, the wise, the good, fair forms, and hoary sages of the past, all in one mighty sepulcher. Your beloved father sinks into the arms of Nature, wrapped in the dreamless drapery of eternal peace. "Upon the shadowy shores of death the sea of trouble casts no wave. Eyes that hav been curtained by the everlasting dark will never know again the touch of tears; lips that hav been touched by the everlasting silence will never utter another word of grief; hearts of dust do not break; the dead do not weep."

Those we hav loved and lost hav returned to earth, to unconscious dust, and hav become a part of the elemental wealth of the world. We think of them as gurgling in the stream, floating in the clouds, and bursting into light upon the shores of worlds. "This brave and tender brother in every storm of life was oak and rock, but in the sunshine he was vine and flower. He climbed the hights and left all superstition far below. He was a lover of liberty, a friend to the oppressed. He believed that happiness was the only good, reason the only guide, justice the only creed, humanity the only religion, and love the only priest."

Let all that is noble and worthy in the life and character of your dearly beloved father be fondly cherished in our heart of hearts. Let the same be held in sacred remembrance as an impetus—an inspiration—to those of us who remain behind for a while, but soon to follow after.

"So liv that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan that moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go, not like the quarry slave at night
Scourged to his dungeon; but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch around him,
And lies down to pleasant dreams."

Please assure your mother, brothers, and sisters of my deepest sympathy with them in their sorrow—my heart goes out to you all. Yours, R. B. BUTLAND.

Taylor says Apollonius Tyaneus was born in Cappadocia a few years before the Christian era. Behind the extravagance of his eulogist Philostratus, and the endless marvels ascribed to him, and the miracles without number which it is said that he accomplished—miracles far greater in number, and infinitly more wonderful in character, than those ascribed to the Christian Christ—we can recognize in him a sort of literary Jesus of Nazareth, but formed quite independently of all Jewish influence. The adversaries of Christianity began by setting him up as a superior God to Jesus, but the eclectic emperor Alexander Severus in his little shrine to all the gods placed him judiciously by the side of Moses, Abraham, and Jesus of Nazareth. He traveled much in Persia, Egypt, and India, working miracles wherever he went. He preached the immortality of the soul, providence, the efficacy of prayer, rectitude of life, and rigid adherence to the strictest rules of right conduct. In his daily life he was a man of the most austere morals. He is the true forerunner of the Spiritualists and electrobiologists of the present day. He had the gift of second sight, and could distinguish at a glance a god from a demon. As he spoke all the languages, without having learned them, he could converse fluently with the departed spirits of all nations. He cured all complaints, not to speak of insanity and death; he raised the dead to life; and when about to be condemned as a magician he vanished mysteriously from the world. After his death and burial he arose the third day from the dead; ascended into heaven, where he sitteth at the right hand of God the father almighty; whence he shall come again to judge the quick and the dead. Whosoever believeth on the Lord Apollonius shall be saved. After his death Apollonius appeared unto one of his disciples, who doubted. The doubting disciple's name was Thomas. And the Lord Apollonius spake and said unto Thomas: "Leave all your doubts; the soul is immortal. For the rest, in order fully to understand these things, wait until your present vile body is decayed. For then shall be given you a more glorious body, which shall endure to everlasting life. As for me, I go to my father, for my father is greater than I." And having said these words, he ascended into the clouds and disappeared out of the apostle's sight. Apollonius had twelve chief apostles and seventy-two disciples, and many years after his death they anxiously awaited his second coming to reign upon the earth a thousand years. And the saints shall reign with him. "Our Lord Apollonius is god," they said, who merely passed over the earth and is gone. Did he not say, I will come again unto you. I will descend from the clouds, and every eye shall see me, and every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess that I am the only begotten son of the only true and living God? Every tongue shall exclaim, Behold our Lord Apollonius. Lo! he comes with clouds descending. If he has any followers at the present day, I suppose they are still expecting his present coming. At all events, I hav not heard of his arrival as yet. Perhaps he prefers company. Perhaps he is waiting to come with Christ. We may be sure that when the Christ comes Apollonius will come with him. But not until then.

Toronto, Mar. 21, 1885. R. B. BUTLAND.

The Laborer and His Hire.

I would like to say a few words in THE TRUTH SEEKER on the condition of the laborers of our country. In about every ten years we hav had a financial crash. I commenced business in 1851. I worked and got ahead a few hundred dollars, and a money panic took what little money I had. Then times began to get better, and I succeeded in business for twenty years. Then another crash, and I lost the accumulation of property of twenty years—about ten thousand dollars. Then again another start, and now, 1885, another financial crash; and for some time I could not find the cause.

Some of our best men say it is overproduction. Some tell me it is extravagance of the laboring people. I see the people out of employment, and poorly fed and clothed, and no means to provide for their necessities; no money in the country to do business, or not enough for the requirements of the people. I knew there was a cause for all the evils we hav been afflicted with, and to all my inquiries I could not get a satisfactory answer. So I thought I would try and find an answer for myself.

And I hav got it, sure. We had the panic in 1854 or '55, and in 1873–4, and in 1884–5; and why did we not hav it in 1864? It was because government was paying its troops, and there was plenty of money to do business with. And if government had reserved the right to control the money, and not given it to the banks, the people never would hav seen the financial trouble they hav. I don't know as there is any way to tell how much the people are owing—the public as well as private debts. I hav no doubt it is ten billions. If so, government will hav to issue money enough to the people, under proper security, at two per cent, to pay it. That would be as much as one-fifth of the wealth of the country. The interest at two per cent, paid to the government, would build railroads and telegraph lines, and make other public improvements. And only a charge of one per cent on the actual cost of them (to the people), and that would break up those gigantic corporations that now exist, and are sucking up the life-blood of the nation and making slaves of working people. Only a few years more as we hav been doing, or letting monopolists do, and all the wealth of the country will be in their hand. Let me show you how it is doing:

If the circulating medium in the country is one billion, and loaned as the banks do, they hav all control of it; at 10 per cent compounded from every ten to ninety days, means double every seven years, that is, brings itself back in seven years and debts against the people of one billion more. Then in seven years more, or fourteen years, it will be four billion; then in twenty-one years it will be eight billion; in twenty-eight years it will be sixteen billion; and in thirty-five years thirty-two billion; and in forty-two years it will be sixty-four billion; fourteen billion more than the whole wealth of the country, and only one billion of circulating medium or money. The rate of interest is more than any people can stand. When money is high the products of labor are low; and when money is low the products of labor are correspondingly high. At the close of the war, money could be got for 3 per cent, and wheat was over three dollars per bushel. Now, when money is 10 per cent, wheat is seventy cents per bushel; so with nearly all the products of labor. People say it is overproduction makes the price of cereals so low. When wheat was three dollars per bushel there was all the wheat we needed, and much more than was used. It was not the scarcity of wheat that caused the rise, it was the value of money. There never was such a thing as overproduction of the necessaries of life. Yet we are told there is an overproduction. Yes, an overproduction of wheat, and people hungry; an overproduction of clothing, and people nearly naked. But there is an overproduction of knaves to tell us this; and an overproduction of fools to believe it. This may be a little rough on the overproductionists, but I can't help it; it is a fact nevertheless.

Now, if the government should issue legal tenders direct to the people under proper security at 2 per cent per annum, payable when the borrowers wanted to pay it, whether in ten days, or fifty years, or never, only the interest paid annually, and government build railroads and make other improvements, the laborer could go to work, and the monopolist could go to work after he has used his money up. We must hav a tax on all lands held in large quantities from 10 to 25 per cent, and monopolies will let that alone. Government should hav the whole control of loaning money, none others to be lawful; and if government loaned at 2 per cent, interest would never be below nor above 2 per cent; and if money was too scarce, it could be had of the government, or plenty of people could pay back to the treasury. That would regulate the volume of the currency to the requirement of business, and those per capita chaps could find an answer to their problem. Government could run the money system as easily as it could the postal system.

Professor MacLeod asks, if labor is the sole cause of value, what is the cause of the value of labor? I liv in the wilds of Michigan, and I ask, not knowing any better, who is Professor MacLeod, and what is he professor of, that he should ask such a question? I guess he is a professor of asking questions easy to answer. The cause of the value of labor is the need of the people, otherwise there would be no labor, or value of labor. And all value is in labor, or nearly all. If labor should cease, I think values would cease.

Or would the professor send to Europe for pauper labor? Some will say we must hav gold and silver to buy the products of other countries. I supposed we had a tariff to keep the products of other countries out and encourage home industries. Are our legislators knaves or fools? They hav legislated a protectiv tariff and caused a tax of nearly 50 per cent to the consumer. And about 85 per cent are laborers. Then tax them 100 per cent to buy gold to purchase the products of other countries, which costs us 100 per cent more when we get it. The consumer pays 200 per cent when he buys foreign products, and 150 per cent when he buys home products; then pays 10 per cent when they get the money to buy, for all our money leaves the bank at 10 per cent, and we hav to pay about 6 per cent for having our produce carried on the railroad, and the same for manufactured articles brought us, and they, the railroad monopolists, will water their railroad stock until we, the laborers, pay about 18 per cent. Do you wonder at crime, Uncle Samuel? The greatest criminals in the country are those men that instituted these things and are making the people believe it is all right. No highwaymen were ever so successful in getting wealth and not giving its equivalent as the monopolists hav been for the past twenty years. This is plain talk, but you see the facts are apparent. Let us look at what was done when our country was struggling for national existence.

When our civil war broke out the people were taxed alike, unless the monopolists were not taxed at all, for I never saw one in the army—none but the laboring classes made up the rank and file of the army, and they had to go, and were paid in money that a certain class of men would not take, nor could the government compel them. They would take it at forty cents on the dollar, but the men who were risking their lives to save the country had to accept it, and when the monopolists were paid they were paid in money worth $2.85. When the monopolist was paid, gold was at par and greenbacks had gone down; when the soldier was paid, greenbacks were at par and gold had gone up.

We hav a tariff to protect home industries and the laborer. Let us see who is taxed. The unborn babe is taxed about three dollars for his first outfit in earth life to protect the poor laborer and home industry. The imbecil, the pauper, all that are not able to work, are taxed to protect home industries, and when we get old and helpless, and go to the poorhouse and die, then our bodies are sent to Ann Harbor to be cut up to help advance science in the medical school of Michigan. I tell you, we are worked up pretty close—nearly as close as the hog in our slaughter-houses.

We are taxed to buy money (gold) 100 per cent, and then it is not ours until we pay 100 per cent more for it; then we hav to protect home industries, and we hav to protect railroads, and we are protected out of our money and out of our labor. Thus our government protects us—such protection as vultures giv to lambs. Let our country lay aside our flag, the emblem of liberty, and hoist the black flag of piracy; and, not to forget we were once free, let us keep the stripes and that bird of prey, the glorious American eagle, that sings to us so sweetly on the Fourth of July, then flies away and snickers to think of the fools she has lulled to sleep by her siren song.

Edgewood, Mich., March 4, 1885. R. A. PEET.

The Liberal Club.

"Did you know Arthu was very low?" inquired a Funny Man of the reporter last Friday evening. "Arthur who?" said the guileless one. "Our thermometer," replied the Funny Man. It was indeed a cold day. Winter lingered in the lap of Spring—frozen down and waiting to be thawed out. But this did not prevent a large and intelligent audience from assembling at the 371st regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club. The interior of the hall was cheerful and warm. Mr. Eckhart and other solid men sat in the northwest corner and gazed critically at what was going on among the less sedate. The ladies were out in force, so that the scene which met the chairman's eye as he arose to open the meeting was one fair to look upon. Mr. Wakeman spoke of the picture in last week's TRUTH SEEKER, which represented what would happen if we turned the public institutions into a hunting-ground for the papal hierarchy. A petition against the passage of the so-called Freedom of Worship bill was upon the treasurer's table, and all were asked to sign it. It received many signatures. Mr. Wakeman expressed a belief that the bill would pass. There was no politician who would dare not to support it.

Dr. Eccles was introduced as the speaker of the evening. He was welcomed with applause, and launched at once into his subject, which was as follows: "The Utter Nonsense of the Socialistic Movement in This Country." It evoked both hisses and enthusiastic applause. Dr. Eccles scored a point by saying that in a church, where there was no opportunity for reply, hissing would, if anywhere, be justifiable; but in the Liberal Club, where criticism was not only permitted but invited, it was reprehensible in the extreme. To show the speaker's rather conservativ position as regards Socialism, a few extracts are here printed:

Socialism is a dream of passion, and aims at gratification. Like a wanton, it dresses to tempt. It darkens reason by sympathy, and seeks to expel sanity by rage. It points to suffering, want, and injustice to engender hate. It pictures an ideal elysium to enrapture hope. It drowns cool, constructiv reason in the deluge of projects. Its blind men, not content with leading the blind, propose to force men who can see into the ditch with them. In the mere launching of a ship, the calculations of skilled engineers are required. The Socialist, with the cool bravado of Mephistopheles, proposes to launch the world of civilization into a new sea of conditions whose depth and surface are unknown. Without compass, without rudder, without guide, without knowledge or experience, they would cry out, "Let her go!" and in a roar of dynamite send us all to hell together.

They call honest men thieves and frugal men robbers.

They propose to make theft scarce by doing away with its necessity. But how do they propose doing away with rape and adultery? They propose the same cure for this as for theft. Such a criminal thing as marriage shall be suppressed. By making every woman a courtesan and every house a brothel, they will do away with the sins of adultery and rape.

But who and what are these men? They are a few fellows who, too lazy to work and too stupid to do any thinking the world of intelligent men is willing to pay for, hav taken to preaching Socialism for a living. They are the paid agitators of the great new order whose business it is to suppress all objections to the same by bluff or threat.

Nothing but foul, downright murder actuates their movements. Knowing that from their masters no good may be effected, there remains but one recourse—force!

Mr. Gorsuch here ejaculated, "Every time! and don't you forget it." Mr. Gorsuch was prevailed upon to be quiet, and the doctor went on. The latter part of his discourse was devoted to argument, and propounded some of the difficulties in the way of Socialistic reform. He sat down at the close amid the heartiest applause.

As though on the opposit end of a teeter-board, when Dr. Eccles went down, Mr. Gorsuch came up. He stood patiently until the chairman's attention was directed his way, and then was invited to the platform. Although a bold dynamiter, he is not a dangerous looking person. On the contrary, with his wavy beard and good growth of hair, he closely resembles the current likenesses of our savior. Mr. Gorsuch has evidently studied the art of ten-minute speech making. He spent three minutes in an introductory way, five minutes in argument, and two minutes in summing up, closing in the last half of the tenth minute with a peroration that won great applause. No man, he said, had a right to own more property than he could use. A hungry man had a right to bread without paying for it. A homeless man might enter an unoccupied house on the same conditions. So with unused clothes: a man who was in rags might appropriate a suit.

While Mr. Gorsuch was speaking the chair had great difficulty in suppressing Mr. Ormsby, who seemed intent on badgering the orator. He asked Mr. Gorsuch where he got that gold chain. Mr. Gorsuch replied that it was not gold; it was brass. He had performed productiv work enough to pay for a thousand gold chains, but he did not own one.

Mr. Shevitch presented the scientific side of state Socialism. He said that Dr. Eccles was not sufficiently acquainted with the subject to discuss it intelligently. Mr Shevitch is a Russian by birth, a journalist by profession, and altogether a fine appearing and able man. He left a fortune in Russia to come to America and earn his living, because America was free.

Mr. Furbish compared the Socialists to the abolitionists of twenty-five years ago. There were Eccleses in those days, but they were forgotten, while millions revere the memory of old John Brown.

Mr. Blissert thought that the lecturer, in describing the results of Socialism, had pictured the present state of Christian civilization quite accurately.

Mrs. Leonard, in taking the platform, explained, apologetically, that she might possibly say nothing more sensible than the lecturer did, in which case she hoped for forgivness. Under Socialism people would be allowed to work at that to which they were best adapted. Mrs. Leonard made some further remarks calculated to wound the feelings of Dr. Eccles.

Mr. Cohen observed that there were people who were amenable to reason, and others who were amenable only to force. Dynamiters made that distinction, and applied reason or dynamite accordingly.

Mr. Ormsby, ex-president of the club, assured the audience that Eccles had been telling them gospel truth. Freelove was at the bottom of Socialism. Such was the verdict of Noyes, who had tried it. One Jay Gould, who kept so many men at work that would otherwise be idle, was worth a thousand Socialists. Vanderbilt was worth a million of them.

Dr. Eccles said none of the speakers had answered his arguments. He was willing to accept the communism of Christ.

Madam Delescluze: "Jesus drove the money-changers from the temple by force."

Dr. Eccles: "Why did he do it?"

Madam Delescluze: "Because they were usurers and frauds."

At the close of the debate the lecturer and his critics mingled together harmoniously, and at about half past eleven went joyously and serenely home.

The next lecture will be given by Madam Delescluze; subject, "The Red Terror." THE TRUTH SEEKER, which makes no discrimination between the Trojan and Tyrian, will be represented, and will, as ever, render a veracious report.

Salvation Cock-a-Whoop.

When Weather Prophet Wiggins predicted that a blizzard would strike New York on the 19th inst., it is not probable that he had a very clear idea as to the nature of the impending catastrophe. He felt a premonitory symptom of something which he described as a storm. It turned out to be the Salvation Army, which closed on that day, with a blood and fire parade, its fifth annual War Congress. About three o'clock in the afternoon this Crusade redivivus strolled through Clinton Place, past THE TRUTH SEEKER office, five hundred strong. A snow squall was in progress, and their banners and helmets were white. Half the force were women. All were apparently crazy. They waved their flags, shouted, beat their tambourines, and danced like monkeys on a hot griddle. The women wore poke hats, with a red ribbon across the front bearing the words, "Salvation Army," in gilt letters. The men's caps were similarly decorated. The army was headed by a brass band, which was not playing, but a man with a bass drum thumped that instrument industriously.

These warriors and Amazons were on their way to the Academy of Music, where the congress was to be held. The afternoon meeting was a sort of rehearsal, and all hands lay back stiff for a great demonstration in the evening.

About eight o'clock a man from THE TRUTH SEEKER office went around to the Academy, paid fifty cents for a seat, and entered the auditorium. On the stage Bedlam had been let loose—all for Jesus. Two or three hundred Salvationists, men and women, were there, the men in scarlet jerseys and the women in black. All bore the brand, "Salvation Army." They were singing a song and weaving about in their seats as though in pain. Major Frank Smith, commissioner of the American forces, was in charge. He is a slim youth with a face pinched like an oyster; erect hair, which he took great pains to keep in that position, and the general freshness of style peculiar to the cockney. He had a coat over his red jersey, and wore glasses.

Services were opened by Major Smith lining a hymn from the "Blood and Fire Song Book." At the close of each verse he turned to the orchestra and observed "Let her go," and the musicians did so. The warriors sang, danced, and waved big red handkerchiefs. The women rattled their tambourines. The fat and bald-headed color-bearer jumped into the air, threw up the flag, and yelled "Glory to Jesus!" An officer of high rank pulled off his coat and stood on it. Another tried to stand on his head in a chair, but failing in that, inverted the chair and put his head under it. By the time the first stanza of the hymn had been sung, the singers were out of wind, and from that time till the end of the song the orchestra had things its own way. When the band dried up, the army said hallelujah as loud as they could.

Prayer followed, partly sung and partly howled. All went on their knees, many upon their stomachs, and one man ground his forehead into the carpet and kicked his heels into the air. The women refrained from kicking. They rolled a little from side to side and groaned. The devil looked on from the pit and smote his chest with pride, congratulating himself that it was not in his name that men and women in the possession of their senses were acting like maniacs. At the proper time for Amen to be said, the bass drum received a bang that shook the building.

Captain Robins, a very "tough" appearing girl, sang the song, "Under the Blood and Fire Flag;" prefacing the performance with this remark:

"Yous'll find dis song wot I'm goin' ter sing in our song-book. It sells for five cents. Everybody git one, so if I makes a break yous kin pick me up."

She had the metallic voice of the dive singer.

"Ash Barrel Jimmy" gave his experience. He got drunk once, dropped his cap in an ash barrel, tried to get it, and fell in also. He couldn't get out. A policeman saw his legs sticking out of the barrel, and arrested them. Jimmy said that Captain Williams, of the police, had often clubbed him. All the army jumped up at this and shouted, "God bless Captain Williams!" When Major Smith thought Ash Barrel Jimmy had talked enough, he led him back to his seat.

Capt. Nellie Keizer and Lieut. Lilly Gonzales sang "Numbered with the Transgressors." The voices of these vocalists were slightly impaired by colds contracted in jail at McKeesport, Pa. A tall man with a banjo related to the tune of Captain Jinks how he had once played pool for drinks before he joined the army. George Washington, a colored man, picked up his accordion to accompany himself in a song, but the top of his instrument blew off and he sang the song without it. Professor Hudson, of Alliance, Ohio, said he gave his heart to Christ two years ago. Somebody yelled "Glory to God," the bass drum got an extra thump, and a volley, as they call it, was fired; that is, everybody shouted and acted as much like an idiot as nature would permit, and nature was very generous in that direction with the majority. Captain Pugmire sang himself red in the face; an infant was brought in and dedicated to Jesus, and a collection was taken up by a hallelujah lass. Major Smith invited all who felt like it to go to their hall and spend the night with them; as for the Salvationists, they all felt like it.

With a grand pow-wow, amid the blare of brass and boom of the drum, the army waltzed out upon the street and took up the line of march to their quarters for the night. What occurred there will appear in the census returns and police reports.

From the Sun of March 21st.

Maggie Carrigan, a Salvation soldier of the Third Army Corps of Paterson, is seventeen years old, and has an innocent face. Policeman Courtlandter found her in a James street dive at quarter past twelve o'clock yesterday morning, and asked her what she was doing there. She said that Capt. Fred Hamilton of her company had brought her there after the jubilee meeting in Brooklyn on Thursday, and that she was waiting for him to come and take her away.

A charge of abduction was made at the Tombs yesterday against Hamilton. He protested. "We belong to Major Moore's Salvation Army," he said. "We had our jubilee in Brooklyn yesterday. After the jubilee we went out to march on the foe. Maggie and I marched to the Bowery. I talked to some tipsy sailors in the saloons near Bayard street, and Maggie talked to the women. It was after a late supper that we went down to the house in James street. I used to know the women there in my days of sin. Maggie went to work to convert them, and I left her there and went around to Jerry McAuley's. I was kept there later than I supposed, for we were going to take the midnight train to Paterson. Maggie and her parents hav faith in me. Whatever I hav been in the past I am not now a sinful man. Maggie is to be my wife when old enough."

The captain was locked up in the Tombs on the charge of abduction. Maggie was turned over to the Children's Society.

Among the visitors at the Tombs yesterday were Capt. McVey, of Alliance, Ohio, and his daughter of the Fifth Columbus, Ohio, Corps. They had been up at the Congress of War at the Academy of Music on Thursday.

"Many sinful people come in here during the day," Capt. McVey suggested to Policeman Irving.

"A great many," Irving replied. "We just sent down a Salvation Army captain."

The Bruno Statue.

Previously acknowledged,	$113.25
Josia Elliott, Kent, Iowa,	1.00
S. R. DeLong, Fort Bourie, Arizona,	1.00
Otto Wettstein, Rochelle, Ill.,	1.00
Richard Hazelton, Kings, Ill.,	1.00
Society of Moralists, Hannibal, Mo.,	6.40
R. P. Barton, Richburg, N. Y.,	1.00
C. W. Mandelfield, San Carlos, Ariz.,	1.00
Jonathan Nichols Wakefield, Mass.,	1.00
Alex. Risk,	1.00
J. D. Kruschke,	1.00
Total,	$128.65

Send further subscriptions to T. B. Wakeman, 93 Nassau street, New York city.

Tent Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$84.60
Richard Haselton,	2.50
Otto Wettstein,	2.00
Josiah Elliot,	1.00
Total,	$90.10

ERRATUM.—The dollar contributed to the Tent Fund by E. Dabell was credited to E. Daheel by mistake.

CATALOG of the Truth Seeker Company's publications sent free upon application.

Answers to Inquiries.

D. W. WHITNEY.—The idea of infants in hell a span long originated with some cheerful old Puritan of New England. It is asserted that Jonathan Edwards preached the doctrin. The size of the damned is not specifically set forth in the Bible.

R. M. ORMSBEE.—1. We do not know any means of determining how many Infidels there were in the convention that framed the United States Constitution outside of those you mention. Perhaps W. H. Burr, of Washington, D. C., can enlighten us all. 2. According to the church statistics there were 81,717 "priests" of all sorts in this country at the the beginning of 1884.

LOUIS LANGE.—"Overwhelming historical facts show that the cross was used as a religious emblem many centuries before the Christian era by every nation in the world." See chap. xxxiii of "Bible Myths," the author of which cites among his authorities for the foregoing sweeping statement Colenso, Bunsen, Baring-Gould, Higgins, Maurice, Inman, Bouwick, Knight, Hoskins, and others. "Bible Myths" is a very exhaustiv and scholarly work, and will giv you in detail all the information you seek.

P. J. BURTON.—1. It is said that some of the ancients, as also some of the moderns, regarded "firmament" as meaning a fluid substance, but Genesis i, 6-7, says it was made to divide, and does divide, the waters above and below; and how could a fluid substance do that? Water cannot well be divided from water by water. 2. Genesis viii, 4, says the ark rested upon the mountains of Ararat. The conjecture of biblical cyclopedists is that Ararat was a mountainous country north of Assyria, and in referring to Ararat as the resting-place of the ark Colonel Ingersoll has the sanction of this commonly accepted idea. As there never was such an event as all the animals getting into a box and floating around for six months, of course it is difficult to precisely locate its landing-place. We are forbidden by the language of the Bible from accepting the hypothesis of a local flood. Any biblical cyclopedia will giv you authorities. We hav not room to quote at length the different ones.

M. B. SHELTON.—1. There is nothing concerning Solomon's Temple outside the Bible except a reference in Josephus and in some Christian collections of "heathen" and Jewish writers. Josephus and the Bible disagree in their statements regarding it, and most rational scholars look upon the tale as a myth like many of the other alleged occurrences related in the Bible. 2. Apollonius was born four years before Christ is said to hav occupied the manger, and he did a great many miracles. Higgins's Anacalypsis cites nearly fifty parallels between Jesus and Apollonius (see the "World's Sages," etc., by D. M. Bennett). 3. The Catholics allege that Christ gave the keys of heaven to Peter, that he was therefore the first pope, and that there has been an unbroken succession of them since. There is no historical proof of it, however, and the Protestants all deny it. In this instance the Protestants are right. 4. You will find in the "Champions of the Church" a list of the most detestable of the popes, with an enumeration of their crimes. 3. Henry the Eighth was the first head of the English church. He and his advisers founded it.

Current Literature.

STUDENTS of Agnosticism will find in C. A. Watts's Agnostic for March many enlightening interesting and articles. Among the contributors to this issue we notice Charles Watts and Samuel P. Putnam, not unknown to Americans. The English writers are all men of ability. The Agnostic is published by H. Cattell & Co., 34 Bouverie street, E. C., London. Price fifteen cents.

MR. GREEN'S March magazine is no less interesting than its predecessor. The leading paper is a reprint of Frederic May Holland's great speech on "Secularization," and this is followed by very readable articles by Lewise Oliver, Hacker, and others. Courtlandt Palmer contributes a poem, and Mr. Green himself writes upon a variety of topics. Altogether, there is a large twenty-five cents' worth in this issue.

THE March number of Mr. Foote's Progress contains "Faith Healing," by Hero Jewel; "The Duke of Argyll on Science," by W. W. Collins; "I Do Not Know," by L. J. Nicholson; "Seen Thrice," by James Thomson; "Christian Schools;" "Primitiv Marriage," by J. M. Wheeler; "Man's Manufacture of Organic Substances," by Edward Aveling; a continuation of "Prisoner for Blasphemy," by G. W. Foote, and several other interesting contributions. Progress is published at 28 Stonecutter street, London E. C., England. Price 15 cents.

WILLIAM E. BEAR, editor of the Mark Lane Express, in the North American Review for April discusses the agricultural crisis in England. In the same number, Charles Dudley Warner presents an interesting "Study of Prison Management," while Robert Buchanan, the English poet, discusses "Freethought in America" in an exceedingly bigoted spirit, T. V. Powderly "The Army of the Discontented," and Professor Hunt "How to Reform English Spelling." The other articles are: "The Law's Delay," by Chief-Justice Thomas F. Hargis, and "Characteristics of Persian Poetry," by A. R. Spofford. The editor has added to the Review a department called "Comments"—somewhat like THE TRUTH SEEKER "Letters from Friends"—which consists of brief comments upon previously published articles, and is a spicy novelty in an otherwise rather heavy number.

THERE were sold in London, March 2d, several literary souvenirs and curiosities, among them twenty-two letters by Byron. One of these reads:

"Newstead Abbey, Sept. 3d, 1811. . . . I will hav nothing to do with your immortality. . . . I am no Platonist, I am nothing at all; but I would sooner be a Paulician, Manichean, Spinozist, Gentile, Pyrrhonian, Zoroastrian, than one of the seventy-two villainous sects who are tearing each other to pieces for the Love of the Lord, and Hatred of each other."

The National Liberal League.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

CHARLES WATTS, First Vice-President. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Secretary, 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$3,568.21
Lexington, Ky.,	5.00
Cincinnati collection,	18.00
Mrs. Lotta A. Raymond (annual membership),	1.00
Geo. Fisher,	5.00
Alfred Warren,	10.00
Richard Haselton,	2.25
Josiah Elliot,	5.00
Total,	$3,614.46

News and Notes from the Field.

I had a royal time at Cincinnati with my friend Beall, the practical phrenologist, who understands the science of the brain if anybody does. The readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know him by that splendid criticism on orthodoxy, "The Brain and the Bible," which is unanswerable in its terse and vigorous arguments. Mr. Beall is a thorough student, and he follows out the logic of phrenology with unswerving fidelity—which can not be said of all those who profess to know its revealings and who endeavor to make a compromise with the popular theology in order that they may hav more heads to examin. Mr. Beall has not a particle of the spirit of compromise. He sees the tremendous drift of his science, that, if true, the mind must be the result of matter, and without the forms of matter ceases to be, at least, in action. He is intensely in earnest, but there is nothing dogmatic in his character. He recognizes the mysteries of the universe, and that all is not yet explained and one is to continually learn. Mr. Beall is highly successful in his profession. His patrons are among the most intelligent citizens of Cincinnati. It must be confessed that he has a marvelous faculty of reading character. Of course his method of interpretation is not by the "bumps," but by the size, shape, lines, etc., of the head, and by the whole body and temperament of the man, so that a most thorough research is made and a valid conclusion reached. As presented by Mr. Beall, in the crystal of his own individual thought, I can see far more reasonableness in phrenology than I ever did before, for I can see the logic of his positions. At any rate, I hav been both entertained and instructed by a thorough discussion of the whole subject.

The meeting on Sunday afternoon at Robinson's Opera House was a splendid success. Nearly a thousand people were present. There were many school-teachers among them—both ladies and gentlemen—and also members of the other professions. It was a representativ assembly, and I was proud to address an audience of such culture and intelligence, and who so thoroughly appreciated my most radical utterances. There was a good report of the lecture in the Cincinnati Enquirer (which is the leading paper of the city), which shows that, as a matter of business, a sharp-sighted editor is desirous of publishing the most advanced thought of the day.

A Freethought organization auxiliary to the National League will be formed in Cincinnati, and I hav no doubt it will be one of the largest and most successful in the whole country. It has magnificient home material to work with. Such men as Professor Beall, Mr. Junkermann (superintendent of music in the public schools), Alfred Warren, and others—and ladies, too, for many of them are enthusiastic for the progress of Freethought—will make a social and intellectual power that will compel the churches to a respectful consideration of the rights of humanity, and destroy that ecclesiastical tyranny which is used even to-day with such degrading effect.

I met our mighty Materialist, the veteran Winter, who, though bent with age, is vigorous as the north wind, and as sharp, too. I suspect that I did not strike quite hard enough for him, for he likes to hit straight from the shoulder, which is no doubt very beneficial, but I must confess I like a little gentleness now and then. Those who profess the Christian faith are not all fools or hypocrits, but men and women of culture, of nobleness; and while we must deal with the severities of logic and hav no mercy on the theological system itself, which is such a curse, yet we must hav some sweetness and light in our methods, and wreath the keen edge of argument with the flowers of charity. But each man for himself. We must speak the truth as our own being tells us to do; only nature is infinit, many-sided, and besides the thunders and storms it has the sunlight, the fragrant flowers, the sweet song of birds. It won't do any hurt to our Liberal movement to imitate nature in some of her softer moods.

I am now at Louisville, Ky., where I expect to lecture a week from next Sunday, March 29th. There are hosts of Liberals in this city, and I shall do my best to gather them together and form a successful organization. The Germans are doing nobly. For thirty years they hav held up the banner of progress, and now it is time for the rest to take hold. There is splendid material lying round about loose, and if it can be crystallized there will be a power indeed for liberty and humanity.

I am with my good friend, Reuben Daly. He is with us heart and soul, but is busy as a bee with his profession. We all know what an editor has to do, but spite of that, Mr. Daly has done much noble work for our cause and made many sacrifices, and he is ready still to lend a helping hand to the pilgrim, and giv the warm grasp of fellowship and all neighborly assistance.

I hope to write something good of Nashville, Tenn., where I shall lecture on the 22d. Fraternally yours,

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

From Cincinnati.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Our gallant, valiant, brilliant Mr. Putnam has been here, and left a wound in the heart of the old superstition which can never he healed. Ingersoll has come to us once a year, like a great meteor, dazzling and thrilling us for the hour, but to Mr. Putnam belongs the honor of gathering our scattered embers into a unity of flame which promises to glow and grow to the end of time.

Former waves of enthusiasm for Secular philosophy hav swept over our land, but they sank into beds of sand created by the old creeds. These sands hav now become cemented by science into a bed of rock over which the ocean of truth shall grandly roll till it covers the world. This is the hour for great hope. The seed sown by so many of our martyrs is beginning to blossom. Science is in the air. Thought is on the wing, and we need only to draw all our swords and let our blows fall thick and fast. We need no longer doubt our strength. It is now simply a question of organization and united action. In Cincinnati there is a splendid Liberal element, which has been quietly developing for years, but from a lack of facilities for studying the subject, the scarcity of lecturers, and the absence of any organized effort, we hav never been able to show our power. A League was started here a few years ago, during the "storm and stress period," but, like nearly all new ground, ours was a little too stony, and so the plant died early. The soil is better now, however, and we are confident of excellent results in the near future. But we must keep in mind the French saying, Pas de zele, or the German Sile mit Weile. We must "hasten slowly," and remember the fable of the pliant sapling, which in the storm fared much better than the stubborn oak. If we succeed in our Nine Demands, the other reforms will follow in good time. Liberty of honest thought will soon break every chain that needs removing. Now is the time to emphasize our constructiv policy. By showing our new faith we can do mucht to weaken the old for nothing stands more obstinately in our way to-day than the idea that sound morality rests upon belief in the supernatural. When the world sees us united we shall be respected, but we cannot expect to be understood if we keep back in the darkness of mere denial and negation. Nothing else is so truly positiv as our philosophy, for we accept everything that is good and true. The church clings to a shadow, we to the substance. Forced goodness is not goodness at all. True morality is natural because it is born of experience, and therefore we need no revelation to tell us about it.

The only thing that prevented Mr. Putnam from having a really magnificent ovation here was the fact that our people know very little concerning the operations of the National League. I did my best to advertise him, and notwithstanding my own inefficiency, and the other difficulties, I am happy to say that we had an audience of nearly a thousand of our most intelligent and refined citizens, a very large proportion of whom were ladies. They applauded the lecturer frequently, and from many private expressions that hav reached me since I am sure they were delighted with the poetical picture of the "New Heaven and Earth." If there was any lack of numbers, there was superexcellence of quality, and altogether it is a success of which we are proud.

Everybody was pleased with our secretary. The gentlemen liked his dignity and his philosophy, and the ladies admired his poetry—and, I may as well say it, his personal appearance, too.

We hav already taken steps to organize a League, and you may expect soon to hear good things from the "Cincinnati Secular Union." With hope and best wishes,

Cordially yours, EDGAR C. BEALL.

27 Arcade, Cincinnati, O., March 18, 1885.

Charles Watts.

OUR information as to the doings of Mr. Charles Watts is exceedingly limited this week. J. B. informs us that, since our last issue, Mr. Watts has been breaking new ground in the North of Canada, and that for two days he has been snowbound, and has only just returned to Toronto in time for his Sunday evening lecture. We hope, next week, to giv our readers full particulars of our first vice-president's Northern trip. This week he is at Park Hill and Hamilton for two nights each, and concludes his present course of lectures in Toronto next Sunday, March 29th. His debate with Rev. Dr. Sexton takes place the following Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday in Montreal. On Sunday, April 5th, Mr. Watts lectures afternoon and evening in Philadelphia, after which he will be in New York a few days on his way to the Western States.

On the evening of March 20th a crowded audience assembled in Albert Hall to hear Charles Watts on the subject of "Christ and Buddha." Buddha, he said, was born five hundred and fifty years before Christ. He was born of a virgin who had a husband. A star in the east heralded his birth to the wise men. His parents lost him when a boy, and found him in the company of the wise men in the temple. He taught his followers to seek after righteousness, and, when rendered necessary for the good of their fellow-men, to renounce wealth, station, and all their worldly possessions. His precepts embrace all the Ten Commandments, together with "Do as you would be done by," and "Love your neighbor as yourself." There are five hundred millions of Buddhists to-day.

R. B. BUTLAND.

Obituary.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE, from her home in Omro, Wisconsin, March 4th, Elizabeth Challoner, wife of John Challoner, in her sixty-fifth year of age. She had been a Spiritualist for over thirty years; was a kind companion and a devoted mother. The funeral services were held in Spiritualist Hall on the 7th inst., Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood speaking to a large concourse of friends and relativs. DR. J. C. PHILLIPS.

Duty and Life as I Find Them.

As no two brains, any more than two pairs of eyes, are constituted exactly alike, it is not surprising that people differ so much on almost all questions presented for their consideration. The question, or questions, of human duty toward each other should find some stable basis on which to rest—some point of agreement whereby common justice should or could be understood and enacted.

Before this much can be wrought out, a few simple principles hav to be mastered; and yet they are so simple that all appear to understand them when they themselvs are the aggrieved party—when their "ox is gored." If enslaved, how quick we are to perceive its injustice! If overreached in a trade, to discover the meanness of the act! If betrayed, to detect the treason! And if trifled with, to assert our dignity! This ready perception of injustice, when we are the recipients, ought to be sufficient to enable us to see clearly the rights of others, and, in so seeing, to understand clearly the question of "human rights." The true solution of "human rights" givs us the key to human duties; and with this knowledge correctly formulated in methodical thought, the brain is clear and able to grasp much that is considered inexplicable in radical ideas. To "remember those in bonds as bound with them" was the cardinal virtue of the antislavery crusade. It suggested very clearly on and in what lines our duties lay. There was no uncertainty in its call to arms for the moral conflict we waged so long. Whether we stealthily pursued our work under cover of the darkness by the underground railroad, or openly faced the respectable mobs of church and state, it was all one to us. We heard the calls of duty, and obeyed them.

The fight of the pro's and con's on the question of how to control or eradicate the evil of intemperance reminds me of the old-time work of pro-slavery days. Much has been said on both sides, for and against prohibition, and, as might be expected, there has been a good deal of spicing with acrid personalities. I hav been sorry to see this spirit of narrowness in our Liberal ranks, and yet, perhaps, it will work as much good as harm. Who of us does not enjoy an ingenious argument, well worded and clean cut, though we are satisfied the logic is faulty, and the application of the theory productiv of no good results? To my mind, Brother "T. E. L." topples over Brother Bell's cob-house completely and unceremoniously, while the beauty of his method consists in its brevity and clearness. Several years ago we attended a Temperance Alliance meeting, and left disgusted with the cant about saving souls, and the sniveling sympathy about the "poor drunkard," and ponderous cursing of the rumseller. A few nights thereafter we were called to speak at Grange Hall, close to where the Alliance held its camp-meeting. We took up the Alliance attitude, and said we were sick at heart of this cant for the "poor drunkard," and had quit cursing saloonkeepers. Our appeal was to the fathers and mothers present. They were asked what was to be thought of the man who took one of their daughters from her pleasant home under the plea of love and the pledge of his honor to be true and faithful, to work with her to build up a true, pure home for her and those that in the order of nature would come as mutual pledges of their love—what should be thought of him who, under such circumstances, should, for the sake of gratifying a depraved appetite, take part of his earnings (not his, but equally his family's) and spend it for strong drink, in time destroy his manhood, making what should be a heaven, his home, a hell of discord—turning love into hate and hope into despair.

We asked in this case who was the criminal? Not the rumsellers, but the direct destroyers of their child's happiness, as well as those that were "bone of her bone, and flesh of her flesh." The rumsellers in many cases hav this to justify them: they do it to make for theirs the means of comfort and elegance. At the close of the talk many took us by the hand saying those are our sentiments. If Brother Bell has a daughter that suffers from this crime of crimes, he will not deal so gingerly about vices, but will welcome law or gospel that will prevent the possibility of such outrages.

Is there any particular difficulty in seeing where our duties lie with reference to this overshadowing curse? As you observe, the Materialists and Spiritualists giv and take telling blows, and the circling-round of Sister Elmina has left her in the enjoyments that "death ends all," and that "one world at a time" is enough for her, and all she wants. I like this; there is a ring of honesty about it that is admirable; and yet, as you say, both sides remain about the same as ever, being constituted differently. The only unpleasant feature about it consists in the fact that some Spiritualists consider Materialism so dreadful. and nearly all Materialists imagin that any and all belief in continued life destroys to a great extent our usefulness here. We opine that both sides are a little "off." For it will not do to deny that a goodly per cent of the true reform workers do believe that "death ends all," and certainly it would be fatal to deny that a much larger per cent of equally as good workers do believe in future conscious, practical, working existence. We are of that number. We know, as far as we are concerned, that so-called Spiritual phenomena hav given us this assurance, and we know it has not retarded our growth in our scientific, truth-loving, or truth-working direction. We hold the one-world-death-ends-all theory to be very unsatisfactory. We can't keep the mind concentrated on this one-world idea, and, while "sufficient for the day is the evil thereof," it won't be satisfied with them. It feeds in part on the evils that are past, as well as those it sees in the future; so with the good. In fact, our real life consists more in the result and the conception of the prospectiv than in its realizations of the present. We grasp the present tangibilities only as resting-points, while what has eluded our grasp, and what we aspire to, are often more tangible to the mind, and too often torture us with what we hav lost, or frighten us with fears at what may result in the near future. To chain the mind to one world, to the "now-time," were a task more futil than to "sweep back the tide with a broom." Do not say this condition of mind is weak, cowardly, or superstitious.

It is simply natural. Ask the mother or father to blot out the past, or take no thought for the future, to simply liv in the now and attend to its manifold duties, and they will tell you, "Yes, we will do the duty that lieth nearest, but we cannot blot out the past, or shut our eyes to the future that awaits our loved ones." We can but feel that the pendulum of our existence links the past and present in its extremes, while a very small portion of the now-time lies between. The sum total of life, as I find it, is the measure of the seen and unseen that can be thought about, and in some measure understood, coupled always with the enduring hope that justice will be evolved, and righteousness rule; and as it does not appear to me that earth-life is sufficient to work out this (to me) seemingly natural result, I do not think what we call death will stay the evolutionary process. With all due deference to science, it is yet in the stage of "room pork," as no Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, etc., has as yet produced a scientific rule or principle that advocates or looks to equal justice to womankind, and until these saviors drop down from their pedestals of masculin conceit long enough to take woman by the hand and say, "You are our equal; help us in our scientific work," we shall not doff the cap to their superiority, nor spend much time in worshiping at the shrines they and our Materialistic friends erect in their behalf.

GEORGE LYNN.

Volcanic Outlets.

Any one can see that a difficulty, if it is confined to a state, is easily settled. So is a state reform easily effected. The whisky insurrection, the Dow rebellion, the anti-rent and anti-Mason excitements, the terrible Astor Place riots, the Philadelphia riots, the Molly Maguires, the Hocking Valley and other disturbances, the abolition of slavery in New York and Rhode Island, the slavery agitation in Kentucky, woman's rights settlements in Wyoming and Washington territories, are illustrations. Had these questions become national, they must hav been terrible.

We cannot even settle polygamy in little Utah, nationally, without undue labor and excitement. Knowing this, the Founders devised the system of sovereign states. The fools who strike at state rights by increasing the central power, and making national every question, little dream they are preparing despotism for us as surely as the earth keeps revolving. Abolish the revenue and tariff system, do more through states and less through the United States, and quietly the states will grow in potency and respect, and all these ominous questions of labor and capital, Communism and rent, Socialism and Anarchy, will be settled state by state. There may be riots and bloodshed and dynamite explosions, but the system will stand firmly.

By making the slavery question national we almost ruined our country. A silly fallacy about cotton being king and the increased value of slaves has blinded us to the cause why slave abolition ceased after it had made free states down to the Mason and Dixon line. Tobacco was king before cotton. When slaves sold for five hundred dollars, that sum was equal to three thousand fifty years later in purchasing power, and the old slave-holding nabobs of Massachusetts, New York, and New Jersey enjoyed more power, wealth, and distinction than ever did those of Virginia, Kentucky, or Missouri. It was the national agitation that ended the gradual abolition of slavery. The South enlisted the general government in its protection and extension. The tariff question may become just as dangerous, being in its very nature national. Once already it nearly blazed up into a sectional strife. The slave question was settled in Kansas without involving the nation, or even adjoining territory, although the nation had been wrought to frenzy on it before.

Oh, that we had men at the head of affairs with the deep, clear knowledge of human nature and history our Founders had! Frightful questions are looming up. New systems of labor are playing upon the social system, unfitting us for the old systems. All these may be settled by communities and states, quietly by comparison. But if we continue this administrativ centralization, the whole mass of people will look to a national settlement. This cannot be done without the intervention of armies, and a civil war that can end only in despotism. Our state governments are the most perfect systems ever devised for the long-continued happiness of the people.

CLARKE IRVINE.

Oregon, Mo.

Let Them Get Divorces.

It was doubtless at the solicitation or instigation of the clergy that governors of sovereign states hav recommended additional legislation with respect to marriage and divorce. That men and women who cannot agree—hatred having taken the place of love—should be permitted to separate for causes not in the canon, has long been a source of lamentation and grief to ecclesiastics, who claim to be vicegerents of the Almighty, and it may be a fine stroke of policy thus to make use of governors in calling attention to the subject. It remains to be seen, however, whether or not our legislators will take the backward step. It does seem as though those who become dissatisfied and cannot liv together in peace and harmony, and wish to dissolve the relation of husband and wife, ought to be permitted to do so, as other partnerships are dissolved, and that all laws hindering or preventing such separation at will or pleasure of the parties ought to be repealed.

The increased frequency of separations and applications for divorce are the result, no doubt, of increased educational facilities—increased intelligence and knowledge of human nature and human rights—the rights of women, their duties and responsibilities; and it does seem to me that the backward step ought not to be taken—that education and intelligence should be permitted to work out their natural and legitimate results. The desire to separate proves that the separation ought to take place, for in the absence of love there is no marriage at all. Marriage is a divine institution and must harmonize with the laws of nature, which are the laws of God, if there is a God, and all are amenable to those laws, whether there is a God or not, and no one can be released from this accountability; and all laws not in harmony with the laws of nature, or in contravention of the laws of love, ought to be repealed.

Love is nature's bond of union, and all other bonds are useless and pernicious—galling chains which chafe and annoy the victims—and productiv only of unhappiness, degeneracy of the race, and despair, often resulting in elopement, suicide, or vainly seeking relief in the courts of law. And what a sight it is to see the parties in court, and there, before that august tribunal, with shrinking modesty and shame, call upon their neighbors and friends, and oftentimes their own children, some on one side and some on the other, to tell before a gaping, vulgar crowd all the ugly things done and said by the parents during long years of inharmony, irritability and suffering!

Elopements and suicide, too, may be placed in the category of results flowing from the intermeddling of human law within the sacred precincts of love's domain, and thus abrogating divine law. And then—no law preventing—timely separation would prevent the multiplication of ill-begotten and ill-trained victims to fill our jails and penitentiaries and asylums; and this would be an incalculable blessing to future generations. Children hav rights, and one is to grow, both before and after birth, in the midst of love and harmony and beauty, and then they will take on those qualities as part of their inheritance, and be a blessing to the world instead of a curse. But quite otherwise will it be when, under the influence of dissatisfied, irritable, and unhappy parents, where inharmony, discord, and hate prevail instead of love, the iniquities or qualities of the parents are visited upon the children in accordance with natural law.

Another very important consideration is, that when divine law is supplemented, or interfered with by human law, the social evil always prevails as an adjunct, and all the efforts of both church and state hav failed to suppress it.

But without such interference there would be no such adjunct, for love is conservativ, chaste, and exclusiv, and—nothing to hinder congenial mating—there would be no field for profligates to revel in. The love instinct is pure and holy, and, if not interfered with, would soon triumph over many of the irregularities which hav so long troubled the world, and for the removal of which legislation has proved so inefficient.

Supplementing the divine laws of reproduction, or substituting human laws, has been the mistake of the ages, and the results evil, only evil, and that continually; while conformity to natural law would be an efficient means of promoting happiness and improving the race.

To improve the race, children must be reared under, or surrounded by the holy and benign influences of love and harmony; and all past experience proves that this cannot be done, when legal enactments are the bond of union instead of love. Much of the prevailing marital infelicity and unhappiness may be attributed to this legal but unnatural bondage; and why should it be continued?

WM. WATSON.

Liberal News.

Inasmuch as THE TRUTH SEEKER is the best Liberal newspaper in the world, we who are in the harness of actual lecture-work should be willing to assist its managers in obtaining news of the Liberal movement. The news and notes of such workers as C. B. Reynolds, and S. P. Putnam, as reporter for Watts and Putnam, do more to enliven the cause of Freethought than essays, short or long, profound or popular, scientific or theological. They hav their place, and are invaluable.

In 1859—twenty-six years ago—I entered the lecture-field. What changes in the relativ positions of the armies of Liberalism and Christianity! Those who might feel discouraged over the internal dissensions of Liberal Leagues can comfort themselvs with the thought that a quarter of a century ago there were no Liberal Leagues to hav dissensions. These frictional things are incidental merely.

How many more workers we hav now, compared with ante-Rebellion days—men who are full of intellectual fire and matter-of-fact zeal, Reynolds, Remsburg, Watts, Putnam, Burnham—the page is too short to name all the live, aggressiv, no-compromise-with-old-theology workers. It makes one's heart bound with delight to know that the Freethought work of a quarter of a century has emancipated a million, or more, men and women from the gloomy, mind-enslaving notions of the Christian religion. It has made this life worth living if there were no other to supplement it, and if there is it is worth living. Not so with Christianity.

How faithfully our friend Putnam describes the Detroit, Mich., appreciativ audiences and their hospitable reception of the thoughts of an independent speaker! For four months, twice every Sunday, it was my privilege to address those hearty, eager-hearing people of Detroit ten years ago.

Well, the years are rolling by and here we are at it just as hard as ever, only instead of confining ourself to one society, or city, we visit all over the broad land and arouse people to think, start a score of societies every year to bring trouble to the churches and freedom to the mind.

Since the winter began I hav had lecture calls, and filled them, in Salem, Mitchell, and Wentworth, Dakota; Seward, Ulysses, Creighton, and Stanton, Nebraska; Currie and Delavan, Minn.; Spring Valley and Hersey, Wis.; Maquoketa, Iowa.

In nearly every one of these towns Freethought is obtaining a good following. The clergy, in every place, I hav politely invited to come and save us from our errors. For that purpose I hav offered to giv up one-half the platform and one-half the time. In Ulysses, Neb., I had the felicity of the presence of the three clergymen of the place. They were furnished a front seat. They came, as we learned, to make short work of the "Infidel," yet I had to almost tease beyond the limit of politeness to induce them to expose my errors, if any, to which they had listened. The tallest one finally arose and said he did not "wish to get into any controversy." They all say that. I could tell a minister, if heard speak, if I were blindfold. The question was, Does a Christian know anything about a future life but concerning which he says more than he does of this life? It was interesting to witness the twisting of that Methodist parson, in his effort to show that what a Christian does not know he knows, and he knows what he does not know—in other words, how many threads of faith it takes to make a rope of knowledge. During the shots fired minister No. 3 fled, exclaiming, "I can't stand this!"

At last one little Indi——clergyman was left. He knew there was such a man as Jesus Christ because Josephus acknowledged it. Like an "Infidel" spider that I am, I began to weave a web to catch him, and tied him down to Josephus's well-known forgery. The minister looked blank, the meeting adjourned, and the lights were turned out.

I notice that Mr. Watts is to hav a debate with Elder Aaron Walker, one of my old antagonists. What the elder lacks in the graces of oratory he makes up in self-sufficiency. He has never been conquered! So he says himself, and he ought to know. The elder is a genial man, a student of science, a Greek scholar (a little rusty, I judge, from his difficulty in reading a verse in Greek which I once wrote for him to practice on). I am sorry to say that, with all the elder's good qualities, he will pelt Watts with eggs. Now, don't shudder! Metaphorically speaking, he will throw his scientifically hatched, fecundated eggs at the Secularist. See if I am not a true prophet. "Yes," chuckled the elder, "that fecundated egg is a puzzler for him." What point the elder ever made upon it I was, and am, too dull to see. I asked many people what bearing that egg had on the argument. Everybody gave it up. The only inference that I could suck out of it was that the elder's God hatched it.

I wish I could be present to take a few notes of that debate. Will Mr. Putnam tell us all about it? If Mr. Watts is not a whipped man it will be because he disregards Elder Walker's opinion.

Pipestone, Minn. W. F. JAMIESON.

Ingersoll.

Some two or three weeks ago a Cortland county paper for which the writer subscribes contained a short editorial paragraph commendatory of Colonel Ingersoll (condemning his "blasphemy," however, by way of an off-set, I suppose) for an act of fair dealing and honesty, considered, under the circumstances, rather exceptional. I would hav preferred to furnish you the paper containing the item, but am unable to do so, having sent it to the Index marked, thinking perhaps it might find a place in its columns, but it did not.

It was to this effect: The colonel had an engagement in the past winter to lecture at Norwich, in this state, but failed to meet it by reason of the complete and utter blockade of the railroads by snow. Subsequently, however, when lecturing in that vicinity, he met the committee of the organization whose engagement he had failed to meet, and insisted upon their making out a full and complete bill of all expenses connected therewith, including hall rent at full price, and paid it on the spot, and then and there made another engagement with them, to be fulfilled in the near future. The paragraph, although written by a Christian, did not fail to point a moral by saying that Ingersoll's conduct in this instance afforded an example from which others who made greater pretensions might glean a profitable lesson.

Of course, those who know the colonel perceive in this act of his nothing remarkable, but simply a normal expression of his truly noble and generous character.

And now, by way of postscript, allow me to record my gratification at learning through your columns that Colonel Ingersoll has formally accepted the presidency of the League, and that the League's efforts as an organization are to be confined to the "Nine Demands." Truly, the Liberal sky is brightening. The criticisms on the League's departures, made by the Index and some other papers, were just, and it is well that they hav been heeded. Would that the Index might now fall into line and close up the breach!

S. BREWER.

Ithaca, N. Y.

Social Problems.—No. II.

"GIV ME LIBERTY, OR GIV ME DEATH."

It is said that the descendants of the author of the above thrilling sentiment are poor; and what liberty hav the poor? Liberty to work? No! There are now nearly two millions of them in this country who cannot find anything to do. Liberty to seek for work? No! For then they will be called tramps. Liberty to beg? No! In many of the states this is forbidden. Liberty to plant the uncultivated ground and raise food for themselvs and children? No! They would be arrested for trespass if they should attempt this. Liberty to dig coal from the mines to warm by? No! They would be arrested for theft if they should do this. Liberty to build houses on unoccupied ground in which to find shelter from the storms? No! They would be cast in jail for doing this. What liberty, then, hav the poor? Liberty to breathe; liberty to walk the streets; liberty to kill themselvs; liberty to work for the rich and privileged classes, when they hav anything for them to do, and at wages scarcely sufficient to maintain life; liberty to vote—but, alas, most of them are too ignorant to know how to vote, too much brutalized to know anything of their own rights.

Many people in this country take a great deal of comfort in the thought that we hav no permanently rich class in this country, and no permanently poor class; that the poor of to-day may, by some sudden change of fortune, be the rich of to-morrow, and that the rich of to-day may be, by reverses of fortune, hurled into the abyss of poverty to-morrow; that the children of the poor may be the rich of the next generation, and the children of the rich, the poor of the next generation. Thousands of illustrations can be given to corroborate this belief; and thousands of people, when they find the wheel of fortune against them, and financial disaster staring them in the face, giv way to melancholy, and grow old with sorrow and gray or white with silent grief, and either commit suicide or die before their time.

Is there anything in this condition of things that we should be proud of? Would not the rich be willing to part with a large share of his riches to be assured that none of his descendants should ever feel the pinch of want? Would not even Vanderbilt die happier worth only one million of dollars, if he could be assured that none of his descendants should ever come to poverty and want, than to die worth two hundred millions without any such assurance? Are there not thousands of rich people living their whole lives in fear that they or their children may be reduced to poverty? How many men do we know who hav toiled long and hard, and denied themselvs of the comforts of life, only to leave property to ruin their children! Are these comforting thoughts? Would it not be better to make it harder for the rich to become very rich, and impossible for the poor to become very poor? In other words, would it not be better to giv the rich fewer privileges and the poor more liberty? The pope used to sell indulgences to commit sin, but since the Reformation this traffic is stopped. Would it not be a good idea to hav another reformation and stop the sale of privileges; stop selling the public lands to the rich, and rent them to rich and poor alike? The rich could not then make vast sums of money by simply holding land in an idle condition; but the poor could then easier find homes. The rich could not then make money without working for it; but this would do them good, and the poor would easier find work. The rich could not then own vast tracts of idle land; but the poor could easier find land upon which to work, either to plant or to build. The rich would never be so rich; but their children would never be so poor. Would not this be an improvement worth fighting and working for?

J. G. MALCOLM.

Hutchinson, Kan.

The Unmitigated Devil.

It is about fifty years since I enlisted in the war with the "unmitigated devil," rum. I use the word "rum" when speaking of any and all intoxicants, because it is the meanest, lowest, nastiest word ever got up to designate alcohol, and, with the exception of the late Dr. Trall, of your city, in his "True Temperance Platform," I hav never read my own opinions until I read a brief synopsis of Mr. Gardner's lecture before your Liberal Club, reported in THE TRUTH SEEKER of February 14th. It was wonderfully helpful and mightily encouraging, after fifty years' study and toil in fighting the devil, to find men, in a distant city, even, like Mr. Gardner and Mr. Wakeman, determined to drive him out of his entrenchments, where he has sat for five centuries safe and unharmed.

When I first encountered his majesty, he was safely enthroned in the Eucharistical tankard, the apothecary's gill-pot, the "regular's" prescription, and the cider barrel. The old soldiers and officers in the army of reform had placed their guns in long and short range. The almshouse in this world and hell in the next world were their objectiv and subjectiv points. There are a few most noble specimens of heroism recorded in the history of the first three or four decades of the present century. But the burden of the work was directed to the poor rates in this country and the expense to wicked souls in the other country where the drunkard was sure to bring up at last.

What nourishes and vitalizes drunkenness to-day? Is it the debased drunkard? No, he is the best preacher we hav.

Fashionable society? Terrible has been and terrible is the accountability of those who from their position in the community giv tone and character to deeds that would degrade an Indian, Turk, or barbarian.

Is it the common, moderate drinker, who never gets drunk, who is the fountain-head of drunkenness every time and all the time? It may be; but what nourishes, preinduces, and vitalizes moderate drinking? The regular, the quack, and the priest.

It is full time to trace out causes, and if the knife is needful apply it. Ointment for glass eyes, and plasters for wooden legs, hav had a lengthy run. It is time to ask, What is the matter? Why hav so many sermons, prayers, and talks been lost, wasted, thrown away?

Why hav all the pledges of the reformers used these words, "As a beverage?" Here is the snake in the grass. "Only as a medicin, an emblem, a tonic." The infirmities of age need it! Just what Theoric and Raymond Lully affirmed five hundred years ago.

Are any of THE TRUTH SEEKER household old enough to tell us when priests had not a sacred use for rum in soul-saving, and the doctors had not a body-saving power in rum "as a medicin?" Moral reform is infinit, human patience finite. Therefore resolved, that as by the mistakes of one old Spanish doctor, five hundred years ago, the love of rum became universal, and all men got drunk, so by the intelligence of many doctors and wise men, total abstinence shall be established and verified among men.

Since by one man's folly all were made fools, so by the wisdom of many all shall be made wise.

For inasmuch as total abstinence has been crucified between two fiends, the eucharist and the pharmacopœa, so in the resurrection of morals and prophylactics, all men shall liv and die sober.

A. H. WOOD.

He Means the Ministers.

"O. F. S." in John Swinton's Paper.

It is for their salaries—it is for their luxuries—it is to get a living that they preach such sermons—these mercenaries; and they trim their sails accordingly.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MARCH 28, 1885.

Freethought in the Wisconsin Legislature.

While New York is seemingly captured by the church, and Christianity is being engrafted upon the statutes as a part of the state's corporate being without much opposition, it is pleasant to know that there are a few men in the country holding official positions who are opposed to giving public money to the clergy.

It has been the practice, heretofore, for the Wisconsin legislature to invite the resident clergy of Madison to open the sessions of the senate and house with prayer. This year, when the usual resolution to that effect was brought up, it met with considerable disfavor. In the senate Mr. N. D. Comstock led the opposition. He said he considered prayer in that body to be an invasion of the rights of conscience, and was opposed to forcing senators to listen to orthodox sentiments they might not believe in. The resolution, however, was passed, the vote standing as follows:

Ayes: Conklin, Cottrill, Erwin, Hoyt, James, Kidd, Lord, Maxwell, Nason, Parry, Reed, Stanley, Waddington, Ware, Warner, and Wechselberg—16.

Nays: Comstock, Ginty, Hudd, Hurlbut, Klotz, Lins, McDonald, Minor, Ring, Ringle, and Sherman—11.

Six senators were absent. Two of them would, probably, hav voted for the resolution and four against. This would hav caused the vote to stand 15 to 18—a good showing for the unbelievers.

Mr. C. E. Estabrook, in the house, led the opposition to prayer. Although there was no debate on the subject, the vote shows, says the Milwaukee Sentinel, that the assembly contains a larger number of persons tinctured with Infidelity than in former years. On the passage of the resolution, the ayes and nays were demanded, and the following gentlemen went on the record as opposed to being compelled to listen to prayers at the expense of the state:

Nays: Bachhuber, Clark, C. B., Craig, Darbellay, Dennis, Estabrook, Evans, Fitzer, Fitzgibbon, Haderer, Inden, Isenring, Klein, Kronenwetter, Lamure, McDonald, Miller, Morgan, O'Neil, Race, Robinson, Schoenwetter, Sharp, Strasser, and Thomas.

Subsequently Senator Ginty offered a resolution in the senate ridiculing the prayer-men by providing chaplains for all courts of justice, including justice courts, county boards of supervisors, town boards, common councils, and boards of Alderman, etc., etc., on the ground that, if praying was a good thing for the legislature, it was equally good and desirable for all public functionaries.

From information from a private source, we know there are other members of the Wisconsin legislature who, had they voted as they believed, would hav been included in the honorable list of Nays. But hankering for future votes and elections, and fearing the loss of them if they voted right, they sunk manhood in the dirty pool of politics and personal ambition. Such men are what the chairman of the League executiv committee would call mollusks. However, under the stimulating influence of the braver ones, they may, in time, find their backbones.

If our Liberal friends in the legislature of Wisconsin will not take offense at a suggestion from a nonresident, we would suggest that they deliberate upon the advisability of again introducing a bill to tax the now exempt ecclesiastical property of the state. In 1875 Wisconsin contained $6,905,350 worth of church property, and it is probable that to-day the value is nearer nine than six millions. A recent appraisement of this class of property in Milwaukee alone showed a million and a half, and competent judges of that city think the appraisement at least thirty per cent too low, for the church schools were not included in this estimate, and nearly every church has a large parochial or sectarian school occupying valuable land, which is all exempt.

It needs no argument to show the justice of such a bill. Churches are not conservators of public morals, health, or enlightenment. They are sectarian luxuries for which those who want them should pay, the same as they pay the salary of the preacher, or for the sacramental wine. As well may the non-church goers be asked to foot the bills for the coal used to heat the edifices, as to liquidate the taxes. The state can remunerate Sunday-school teachers with as much justice as it can aid in the support of parochial schools by letting them go scot-free of all public imposts.

From what we learn of the state of public opinion in Wisconsin, we think the legislators who push this question will be surprised at the amount of support they will get.

Import the Pope and Hav Done with It.

The bill to make "Good Friday" a legal holiday is again before the legislature of our long-suffering state. This bill was defeated last year, and, of course, it ought to be this year.

The passing of this bill would be a plain perversion of governmental power. The observance of "Good Friday" is a sectarian act. Those who wish to suspend labor and attend church are at liberty to do so, and are protected by our Constitution in that right. That is all they can reasonably and legally ask.

The reason of the unusual boldness of the Catholic church at this session of the legislature came out incidentally last week. The politicians are playing the tune pitched by one of the candidates for president last fall. The church has practically put up the Catholic vote at auction, and both parties are bidding high. The nearness to success of the man who started the bidding makes the politicians anxious, and the church is shrewd enough to get the price she wants before crying "gone." The three "freedom of worship" bills were all introduced by Republicans, but they were obliged to be very spry to get ahead of the Democrats, who had identical ones in hand. Of course, all parties consulted Catholic authorities in the preparation of these bills.

This is a pretty state of affairs to exist in a state which is part of a union whose Constitution forbids interference in religious matters. A Washington correspondent of a Western journal says he has often heard members of Congress speak of working the "religious racket" in their districts, but we doubt if it was ever carried to the extent that is now being done in this state. The correspondent adds that members of the Republican party at Washington are now groaning audibly over the "racket" in their last campaign, which took the form of a destructiv alliteration at the close, and defeated all the previous efforts to catch Catholic suffrages. Perhaps New York's supple legislators may hav occasion to repent their zeal in bidding for these same Catholic votes. Freethinkers are not fools, and it is too much to expect that they will go on voting with parties that enact laws violating our fundamental rules of government, outraging our sense of justice, and enslaving the people to a theocracy whose long career of tyranny and inhuman cruelty is a reproach to the very name of man, and the horror of the whole civilized world. It is quite likely that within the next short decade there may be a Freethought "racket" which the politician cannot "work."

The Rev. Mr. Walton, of Owosso.

We hav received from a friend the Detroit Post, containing an eight-column reply to Colonel Ingersoll, by the Rev. W. M. Walton, of Owosso, Mich. Premising that he "rises this morning to unmask this egotist and expose his flippant sophistries," Mr. Walton enlightens his congregation thus:

"It may not be known to you that several years ago Ingersoll delivered a series of lectures of this character entitled, 'What Shall I do to be Saved?' Some English journals (unwisely, I think) republished them as soon as they arrived. The celebrated Theodore Parker, of London, immediately preached and published one of the most scathing replies ever known in Christian literature. He met the enemy on his own ground, fought him with his own weapons, and held him up to the wonder and ridicule of the English world. A celebrated publishing house wrote to the apostle of Infidelity and requested permission to republish his lectures in book form, with Theodore Parker's reply, and what did the apostle of Freethought—this astute exposer of Christian ignorance—do? Did he say, 'Certainly, sir. The strength of my cause is omnipotent. I am promulgating Liberal truths, which I shall be most happy to hav compared by the world with the utterances of the ablest representativs of this school of ignorance and superstition.' Did he do this? Far from it. He crawled out of it ignominiously—retired whipped into his kennel, and churlishly refused! I relate this incident as a most potent illustration of this man's own confidence in the strength of his cause."

As Theodore Parker was born in this country and always remained an American; as he never preached in London; as he was a Freethinker himself and the head of a school of theology which renounced the major portion of the Bible as unhistorical; as he resolutely rejected all belief in the supernatural; and as he left this country in 1859 and died in Florence, Italy, May 10, 1860, over a score of years before Mr. Ingersoll delivered his lecture on "What Must We Do to be Saved?" we are forced to the conclusion, painful as it is, that the Rev. Mr. Watson is a trifle rusty in his recollections, and that his facts also are slightly awry. It is a small matter, no doubt, and in reply to the arch-heretic it is not worth Mr. Walton's while to confine himself to the truth on points of fact any more than it is incumbent on him to reason right or quote history accurately. The error is Mr. Parker's in not being an orthodox preacher of London, and in dying so many years previous to Mr. Ingersoll's lecturing. Further along in his lecture, Mr. Walton makes some equally absurd historical statements, and misconstrues scripture with a freedom tolerable only in a revising committee. But we will be charitable, and allow the mistakes to be those of profane historians (who had no means of knowing what Mr. Walton would want to say), and translators of the "Word." All men are fallible (except Mr. Walton and the pope). But the great number of errors on the part of historians, philosophers, and translators forbid our pointing out all of Mr. Walton's accuracies.

"Freethought in America."

Under this head, Mr. Robert Buchanan contributes an article to the North American Review for April. "There is a notion," he says, "even in refined circles in America that the influence of a man like Col. Robert Ingersoll may be an influence for good. I altogether fail to see it. While doiug full justice to the honesty, the courage, and the good humor of this remarkable orator, I am convinced that he is precisely the sort of teacher—I had almost written devil's advocate—to whom Americans should, just now, shut their ears."

It may take the edge off the colonel's pain at being called a devil's advocate, to know that he has an eminently religious associate. In another part of the Review Mr. Walter S. Palmer has written the following concerning the Rev. Dr. Shedd, the popular advocate of Eternal Vengeance:

"The reverend gentleman handles his brief well, and if he fails to convince me that everlasting damnation is a cheerful creed, quite reconcilable with human ideas of the goodness of God, it is not from any want of talent as, literally, a devil's advocate."

It is plain that either Mr. Buchanan or Mr. Palmer has used this phrase without due regard for accuracy. Taking into account the former's general looseness of expression as regards fact and philosophy, we may fairly conclude that he does not know what a devil's advocate really is. Let us see how much he knows about the Freethought advocates.

Mr. Buchanan goes on:

"Ingersoll enters the temples of religion with his hat on one side [of what—the temple?], a cigar in his mouth, and a jest upon his lips. No matter who the god may be—Vishnu, Buddha, Apollo, or Jesus—he is ready to tackle him in his own peculiar vocabulary."

In support of this assertion it may be proper to quote the words of Colonel Ingersoll himself. He says (What Must We Do to be Saved? p. 20):

"And let me say here, once for all, that for the man Christ I hav infinit respect. Let me say, once for all, that the place where man has died for man is holy ground. And let me say, once for all, that to that great and serene man I gladly pay the tribute of my admiration and my tears. He was a reformer in his day. He was an Infidel in his time. He was regarded as a blasphemer, and his life was destroyed by hypocrits, who hav, in all ages, done what they could to trample freedom and manhood out of the human mind. Had I lived at that time I would hav been his friend, and should he come again he will not find a better friend than I will be."

With all his experience as a writer, Mr. Buchanan has never acquired a sufficient command of language to pay to Christ a higher compliment than this. In all his reading it is doubtful if he ever met with one as high.

Now as to the other myths. At ten dollars per page, it would seem that Mr. Buchanan could hav afforded to copy into his Review article the following:

"We read the pagan sacred books with profit and delight. With myth and fable we are ever charmed, and find a pleasure in the endless repetition of the beautiful, poetic, and absurd. We find in all these records of the past, philosophies and dreams, and efforts stained with tears, of great and tender souls. These myths were born of hopes, and fears, and tears, and smiles, and they are touched and colored by all there is of joy and grief between the rosy dawn of birth and death's sad night. They clothed even the stars with passion and gave to gods the faults and frailties of the sons of men. In them the winds and waves were music, and all the lakes, and streams, and springs—the mountains, woods, and perfumed dells—were haunted by a thousand fairy forms. They thrilled the veins of Spring with tremulous desire; made tawny Summer's billowed breast the throne and home of love; filled Autumn's arms with sun-kissed grapes and gathered sheaves; and pictured Winter as a weak old king who felt, like Lear, upon his withered face Cordelia's tears. These myths, though false, are beautiful, and hav for many ages and in countless ways, enriched the heart and kindled thought" (Preface to Some Mistakes of Moses).

This is what our critic calls "tackling" the gods in "his own peculiar vocabulary." It is certain that if Mr. Buchanan could "tackle" any subject in a vocabulary half as beautiful we would not expect to find him working off his literary wares upon the public through the columns of the Sunday Mercury.

Casually the writer, who is an Englishman, describes the United States thus:

"A nation in which the artistic sense is almost dead, which is practically without a literature, which is corrupt from the highest pinnacle of its public life down to the lowest depths of its primalism, which is at once thin-skinned under criticism, and aggressiv to criticise, which worships material forces in every shape and form, which despises conventional conditions yet is slavish to ignoble fashions, which, too hasty to think for itself, takes recklessly at second-hand any old or new clothes philosophy that may be imported from Europe, yet while wearing the raiment openly, mocks and ridicules the civilization that wove the fabric."

This elegant criticism applies only in the main to those with whom Mr. Buchanan has apparently associated most in America—namely, the churches and those idiotic persons transplanted to our soil from his own country, and here denominated dudes.

When Colonel Ingersoll lectures at the Academy of Music, Americans should "shut their ears." On the occasion described in the following religious circular, all ears will be permitted to be open:

REV. W. BOOTH,
General,
THE SALVATION ARMY,
THURSDAY, MARCH 19TH.
FIFTH GRAND ANNUAL REVIEW
IN THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC
14th street, 3d avenue.
AT 3 O'CLOCK
HOLINESS CONVENTION
TO BE FOLLOWED BY
The grand musical tableau, "How We Do It."
HURRY UP AND WITNESS THE VICTORY.

This exhibition, in the words of Buchanan, "can do no harm; it may do no little good."

But it appears that the April number of the Review is an unfortunate one for Mr. Buchanan. He does not hav the whole field to himself to plead for the enthusiasm of religion. Mr. R. H. Stoddard writes in the same issue:

"I am in a hot-bed of revivalism at this present writing, and the shadows of Moody and Sankey darken the pages on which I scrawl these words. It was only last night that three children—for they were little more—entered this chamber, and said that an orphan girl, not seventeen, was walking up and down the windy, frosty road, out of her mind, with a Bible in her hand, crazed with religion. I hav not heard what became of her, but I suppose she spent the night in that maison de sante, the poorhouse."

"I would beg [leave] to remind the Colonel Ingersolls," says Mr. Buchanan, "that we owe much to the gods." Put down to our credit, then, in the Great Book, "One lunatic on account."

"For my own part" (we quote again from our critic) "I should prefer even to accept hell with John Calvin rather than eat cakes, drink ale, and munch hot ginger with Colonel Ingersoll." Every man to his choice. "Let those who believe in eternal damnation," said Frederick the Great, "be eternally damned, as they hope and believe; but in the mean time let them leave other more charitable people alone."

Again: "If the tongue of Freethought had not been loosened once and forever, it might be another matter." If Mr. Buchanan had spent a year in jail with his countryman, Foote, he might hav realized that the "tongue of Freethought," even in the last days of the nineteenth century, is still hampered with a material impediment.

The subject of Freethought, so far as represented by Mr. Ingersoll, is dismissed with the remark that the "gospel preached by Colonel Ingersoll would soon make of New York another Sodom." This is immediately supplemented, however, by the statement that "Freethought, even in America, does not necessarily imply free permission to outrage your neighbor's most sacred convictions." Does the right of free criticism, it might be appropriate to inquire, carry with it the permission to outrage, in the defense of superstition, everybody's "most sacred" sense of decency? The story of Sodom might with profit be dropped from contemporaneous literature. If the story is true, that unfortunate city met with a deserved fate; but those who hav read the account hav been struck with the thought that the Almighty might hav done better if he had reformed the inhabitants and burnt Lot.

In his last half-dozen pages Mr. Buchanan turns his attention to Mr. O. B. Frothingham, and finds fault with him for not possessing the qualities which, according to the critic, make Ingersoll dangerous. Spurgeon is preferred to Emerson, Talmage to Theodore Parker, the Salvation Army to the National Liberal League! That is the logic of "Freethought in America."

From the reading of this article in the Review we turn away with the belief that Mr. Buchanan knows next to nothing about Freethought. Perhaps he knows as little about Christianity; which may account for his defending it.

Editorial Notes.

FREETHOUGHT is progressing rapidly in New Zealand, as we learn by the Wanganui Review for January. A great deal of its success is due to the efforts of a gentleman signing himself "Blue Pencil," who purchases large quantities of literature and distributes it among the societies. We see in the Review acknowledgments from three societies of this gentleman's liberality. The "Inglewood Association" is "especially grateful to the friend for his valuable present of THE TRUTH SEEKER 'Collection of Forms, Hymns,' etc. It cleared our way for action considerably, and more will be received by and by." The secretary of the Wanganui Association has received "a beautiful colored illustration representing the magnificent monument erected at the junction of Sylvan avenue and Osier path, Greenwood Cemetery, New York, in memory of one of America's noblest men, Mr. D. M. Bennett. Our ever mindful friend and helper, 'Blue Pencil,' is the donor. The Association will no doubt hav it suitably framed and hung in a conspicuous part of the hall." Eleven associations report progress and good attendance at their meetings in the Reveiw, the publication of which in its present admirable shape is in itself a most cheerful sign of the healthy vitality of Infidelity at the antipodes.

THE following has been telegraphed from Montreal to various papers in this country:

"A story is being circulated by priests in this city relativ to a miracle which is said to hav taken place at Actonvale. Some days ago a man while threshing grain swore very badly. On some bystanders reproaching, he replied, 'If there is a God let him punish me.' He was at once seized with paralysis and also became rooted to the ground and could not be removed. The neighbors had to cover him with rugs to prevent his being frozen, and although they offered him food, he could not take it. It is further reported that Mgr. Fabre is to visit the place."

The Montreal Herald says:

"Inquiry from reliable quarters proves the case to be a fictitious one throughout, and that Bishop Fabre never heard of the affair and therefore never contemplated visiting the alleged blasphemer."

But that will probably in no wise diminish the gusto with which the Christians will retail the yarn.

MR. E. W. CHAMBERLAIN writes us: "I am glad to see Burnham Wardwell in your columns. I hav written to a number of New England gentlemen who know him and who speak with the highest commendation of his humanity, integrity, and zeal. He is just the man to do a great work that is very necessary to be done, the exposure of the barbarities which are practiced in prisons, and I am glad he is so fearless in it. This business of manufacturing criminals is one of the infamous things in our civilization. Our whole prison system is nothing more than a nursery to propagate crime. Men are not cured of crime, nor led into right ways of thinking and acting, nor brought into harmony with society, by being treated brutally, nor by being put under the control and domination of others more degraded and brutal than themselvs. Mr. Wardwell has done supremely well in showing up some of the most revolting inhumanities, and he should be kept at work and encouraged by all means possible."

WHILE the ministers of England are almost unanimous in their approval of the bloodshed in the Soudan, Professor Beesly and Dr. Congreve, on the part of the two sections of Positivists of London, hav publicly protested against it. The Freethinkers hav also condemned the government's Egyptian policy. "The whole shame of this wicked war of aggression," says Mrs. Besant, "lies on the Christianity of the nation, and until our foreign policy is dechristianized there seems no chance of its moralization."

BY the following from the Los Angeles Sunday Times we should judge that some Christians at least hav not given Colonel Ingersoll entirely over to the devil:

"The statement is freely circulated in Eastern journals that that great apostle of Infidelity, Bob Ingersoll, has declared his intention never to giv another Infidel lecture. Upon being interviewed by a reporter, he was asked if he had renounced Infidelity; he replied that he was not prepared to admit that he had, but that he was not sure that the views he had heretofore advocated were right. Something has touched the conscience of Pagan Bob, and it is to be hoped that his rare gift of oratory will be turned in the direction of nobler efforts than the promulgation of a system of negotiations [negations?] tending toward the unhinging of human faith in all religious creeds and doctrins."

All we can say is we hav not before seen this statement which has been so "freely circulated," and now that we hav seen it we must, from the fact that the colonel is lecturing steadily, doubt its entire accuracy.

IN a communication printed elsewhere Judge Brewer says that "the criticisms on the League's departures made by the Index and some other papers were just, and it is well they hav been heeded." In this our respected friend is mistaken. No one pays any attention to what the Index says, for its course in the past has been so malicious, so untruthful, so destitute of any real sympathy with the League or its objects, that the Liberal people of the country feel justified in ignoring it. We do not think the Index will ever co-operate with the workers of Freethought until it shall be conducted by some one in whom the pique of disappointed ambition and the acidity of personal failure are not controling motivs. A blase minister, and a worshiper of an acroamatic circle he can never enter, are not likely to acknowledge the error of their ways, however plainly they may see it.

ON another page we print an official communication from the Chicago League, and a personal rejoinder to Mrs. Swank and Mr. Simpson, by E. A. Stevens. We shall be very glad if this closes the controversy. In any event, the replies must be much briefer. We commend to the Chicago League the example of the Manhattan Liberal Club, which allows the utmost latitude of thought and expression without being held in any way responsible for the opinions put forth. We hav heard before that body the wildest and most widely divergent theories defended without leading to a newspaper war. If the members of the Chicago League had battered the common enemy with as much energy as they hav one another, who can tell what good work might not hav been accomplished!

ATTENTION is called to the advertisment of Seward Mitchell, who wishes to rent a small farm somewhere upon which to liv for the few remaining years of his life. As he is over seventy-one years old he cannot cultivate a great deal of land, and as he is poor he cannot hire labor. Any one knowing of or possessing such a property as he is seeking will confer a great favor upon him by addressing him at Newport, Me.

THE Detroit Evening Mail says that "in spite of Bob Ingersoll and the Materialists" faith in prayer is not dying out, and instances the attempt of the Chicago Spiritual physicians to pray away General Grant's fatal malady. With more pertinency the Evening News might hav said that the fools are not all dead.

GEO. LONGFORD, of Philadelphia, requests us to copy this notice: "To all whom it may concern: Be it known that I, Geo. Longford, from this date will not receive any more money in behalf of W. W. Broom. Liberals, make a note of this. I hav several reasons for this action."

Lectures and Meetings.

W. F. JAMIESON will deliver a course of five lectures in Delavan, Minn., March 26th, 27th, 28th, and 29th. For lectures address him at Pipestone, Minn.

MR. E. C. WALKER is making preparations for an extensiv lecturing tour through northern Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, and Dakota. Those wishing his services should write to him at once at Valley Falls, Kansas.

THE Southern Association of Spiritualists and the Look-out Camp-Meeting Association hav joined in a call for a convention at New Orleans, beginning April 18th, and continuing three days. The object stated is a "reunion and mutual elevation." Lectures, public tests, and social fraternity are the means to be employed. Public lecturers and mediums are all invited and urged to attend. The hall wherein the meeting will be held will be announced hereafter.

C. B. REYNOLDS will lecture in the Butler Opera House, Bald Ridge, Pa., April 2d. Subject, "Why I Left the Pulpit." Mr. Reynolds made us a call on his way back from Turner's Falls, Mass., to Lancaster, Pa. Sunday, the 22d, he went over the river to Newark, N. J., where he lectured to a good audience, who were well pleased with him. Mr. Reynolds reports that it is hard work to keep in the field on account of the dull times, but he is hopeful for the future, and will do his best to realize his hopes. His intention now is to travel through Pennsylvania, for which state he is the State League lecturer, remaining there at least two months. He would like to hear from every place at which a lecture is possible, and will promptly answer calls to form Leagues. Letters directed to him at this office will be forwarded immediately.

DIED, Tuesday morning, February 10th, at his late residence in Benton Harbor, Mich., of an affection of the heart, Mr. Norman Castle, aged 72 years. Mr. Castle was highly esteemed as a citizen and one whose reading was extensiv; and few were more conversant with the topics of the day than he. Strongly partisan in his political views, he was faithful to the Republican party and was ever ready to defend its doctrins. In religious matters he took no interest, being classed with the Freethinkers, firmly maintaining that "death ends all;" and he often urged that no funeral ceremony be permitted at his death. In deference to his peculiar views religious services were omitted. He frequently contributed to the publications advocating his doctrins, and as a writer manifested more than ordinary talent. His memory will be respected by all who knew him, and his bereaved widow and family hav the sympathy of the entire community.—Benton Arbor Palladium.

Letters from Friends.

MOUNT UNION, OHIO, Feb. 9, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Success to THE TRUTH SEEKER—the very best paper that is now published; that is saying a good deal. There is this about it, the persons that read it regularly, from week to week, cannot help but be bettered thereby. There is a class of reading in it that satisfies—that you cannot get in any other paper; and the information from the reading of it is of great value. Your friend, ZENAS P. EDWARDS.

WEST HOBOKEN, N. J., March 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I am of the Arabic speaking race of Mesopotamia. In appearance these people look somewhat rude, their dresses loose as if out of style, especially of females, but their morality is excellent. I wish to show the difference between oriental and American preachers. In America the preachers in general speak progressiv and advanced thoughts, and the listeners admire and are proud of them, while a few hundred years ago they were declared deluded heretics and were punished. If to-day's sermons, which are preached in American pulpits, were preached in Oreintal pulpits, the majority would not be interested; a few might appear to be interested, but still they would be shocked from the force of their surroundings; and thus the good preacher would be compelled to leave and come to America, where he would find a cordial welcome.

Many years ago, nativ Christians introduced street lanterns (glass); which the Mohammedans, on meeting, broke as an Infidel French invention; but to-day it is used by themselvs and they are proud of it. Some years ago, Papal Chaldeans, among them a few of the advanced classes. wished to hav a few settees in the lower part of the church, because it was uncomfortable to sit cross-legged in European costume, but the greater part of the congregation opposed and were successful. But now they hav put several seats in front of the altar and are, of course, proud of them. By these few illustrations I simply wish to remind the readers of the valuable TRUTH SEEKER, as an eye-witness, that the Mohammedans, too, are modifying and improving in mind and in custom, as well as nativ Christians.

The Christians of America are in foremost advance, their views are different, their costumes and mode of living, habitations and traveling, are new ways. I go so far as to say that even the old revered Bible is interpreted in America in an entirely different manner in order to please and win intelligent communities and to suit the age. In short, I wish to say that this great tide of Christian advance in America is toward your Liberal publications. Tennyson's two lines are priceless gems as long as man exists. They run thus:

"Ring out the old, ring in the new;
Ring out the false, ring in the true."

GOSMA YOUANIDES.

NEWPORT, MAINE.

MR. EDITOR: When the Czar of Russia, father of the present ruler, first came into power he made an address to his subjects saying he received his commission directly from God. That address I once had, but greatly regret I lost it. I hav long wished I had it in print again, and as THE TRUTH SEEKER is a faithful exposer of "Christian frauds," if you or any of your correspondents hav it or can get a copy of it, I should very much like to see it in the intelligent and impartial columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. SEWARD MITCHELL.

P.S.—Since writing the above I hav read your editorial, "Do They Want a Free Paper?" and I assure you it has awakened feelings in me that no one but myself can ever know. I am sad indeed to know the want of tolerance and liberality manifested by those who it would seem ought long ago to hav outgrown such sectarian narrowness. It seems to me that Christians ought to hav the monopoly of intolerance. What if a person is a Materialist or a Spiritualist. Greenbacker, or a believer in any other ist or ism, cannot Liberalism tolerate a difference of opinion? If not, are not the sectarian shackles still on us? What has so long been the curse of the world? Has it not been the intolerant spirit and action of Christianity? And shall we who profess Liberalism, free men and women, cry out, "Stop my paper!" because the editor can not please us all? When I do I hope I shall go back—perhaps not a great way—to the Christian church.

My dear friends, I do not write in anger, but in sorrow. What are we living for if not to get out of this church-cursed world the terrible war, hatred, and strife engendered by Christianity. Brethren, let us show a spirit of true brotherhood in the work of reform. Henceforth I shall work harder to circulate THE TRUTH SEEKER. S. M.

CENTERVILLE, UTAH, Feb. 13. 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The inclosed I send you, to ask you to please send me the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 285. Last year I sent mine to Sydney, N. S. W., and I expect I shall send it to my sister this time after I hav read it. as I send most of my TRUTH SEEKERS there, and they send me the Sydney Liberal and Harbinger of Light. These, and the godless TRUTH SEEKER, and Freethought pamphlets, hav been the means of opening my eyes pretty wide of late. Mr. Remsburg's "Bible Morals" is a clincher. Now, if any learned clerical, priestly person can refute it, let him just step to the front and do so, so that a number of godless mortals may see the necessity of turning from our errors and joining the church. When I was a young man I used to hear the holy clergy try to impress the people to search the scriptures, because of the saying in the New Testament, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye hav eternal life." Well, I hav done so, I expect, as much as any man in this county. And what hav I discovered? Well. I won't befoul this letter to tell you, for if you were to publish the true meaning of that vile and obscene old Jew book, you would soon be landed in the penitentiary, Comstock notwithstanding.

And they used tell us of the wonderful miracles of Jesus, of his turning water into wine, etc. Well, what wine I hav, I want it without Mr. Jesus, or anyone else, sloshing water in it, as any one could do that. I am afraid there are many hotel-keepers and others that act upon this dishonest Jew principle in more ways than the wine trick.

Well, Mr. Editor, the holy spirit is moving pretty powerful of late in Utah. Yes, it has moved Rud Clawson, and others, to the penitentiary, and it is working so powerful in Utah at this time that many of the saintly thugs, and women too, are moving from their homes to try to escape the clutches of the law. Yes, it is quite a moving time just now. And I hope the coming administration will move in the right direction by moving this beastly adulterous and treasonable outfit out of existence.

I see by THE TRUTH SEEKER that Dr. J. L. York is gone to New South Wales. I think the holy clergy there will think the last is come sure, and will intercede with the Lord to close the gate.

But my letter is getting too long, so I will close by saying success to THE TRUTH SEEKER, Miss Wixon, and her Children's Corner, and all the hosts of your subscribers. As ever,

Yours for the truth, WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

P.S.—We hav got an awful deep snow just now, nearly two feet deep, and the mountain canyons are fairly blocked with it. I will just say I admire Miss Helen Gardener's article in your paper; it is very interesting. W. W.

ALTOONA, PA., March 15, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read with much pleasnre your very able editorial entitled "Do They Want a Free Paper?" It is just to the point. I would not like THE TRUTH SEEKER did it not giv all sides a hearing. Of course, I am no Spiritualist, no prohibitionist, no Democrat, but am willing to hear from them all. That is what makes the paper interesting. It is the best Liberal paper in existence. Its editorial department is conducted with great ability; then its able contributors and the department of "Letters from Friends" double its value. The department conducted by Miss Susan H. Wixon is first class, also.

I hav been a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, off and on, since the unjust imprisonment of our good and noble worker, D. M. Bennett. I became a friend of the paper through a bright young Liberal, named B. Frank Haldeman, a stanch friend of Mr. Bennett, and a first-class young man in every respect. May THE TRUTH SEEKER liv a thousand years, and its motto always be, Audi alteram partem.

WILLIAM J. BURNS.

MILWAUKEE, OR., Feb. 11, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Please giv me a little space, for I wish to hit square in the eye a class of people that style themselvs Liberals, but are far from it. It is the Liberal godites that I am after; for I consider it very illiberal, indeed, to try to palm off another God on to us when we are trying so hard to get rid of those that hav been already manufactured. If there is anything that needs putting out of existence, it is that word; it has done more damage in the world than any other ten thousand words ever coined. And so they hav taken that great and wonderful God, that belches forth fire and smoke, and speaks in the thunders, and planted him as high as any heathen or Christian ever planted one, and in the name of God they are determined we shall worship it.

Now, we will take the word good, that has been divested of one of its o's to make it read God, and place it in God's office, and see how it will make language sound. This will show how the meaning of words hav been changed and altered by the doctors of divinity, or those that hav had the handling of our schools. To illustrate:

I'm asked if I believe in Go(o)d,
And hellfire for the ways that man hath trod;
Should we ask a friend to blur his mind
With things that cannot be defined?

It hath been said that Good made man,
Can I say yes? I ask, who can?
Then who is Good? Must I ask my mind?
And what is Good? Hath he been defined?

Did Good plan the ways that man hath trod?
Did Good make the winds? Then what is Good?
Hath Good walked the ways that spirits trod?
Then why try to make out Good.

Man makes his Good as his fancies rise;
Then plants his Good beyond the skies.
These are the ways that man hath trod;
Now look out for another, the Liberal's God.

E. W. CRESSEY.

DETROIT, MICH, Feb. 16, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just been reading the report of the Liberal Club meeting and J. B. Gardner's lecture upon liquor as an unmitigated devil, with Dr. Lambert's remarks and statistics, and wish to doubt very strongly the foundations and conclusions of both. Mr. Gardner goes back in history to show that liquor was an evil thousands of years ago. But the same history may be cited to amply prove that the great majority of people were slaves—debt slaves—and the saying is recorded that it was well to giv liquor to some that they might forget their trials and hardships. A strong illustration of all past time, so far as history goes, may be found in Mexican peon or debt slavery, and I believe that debt is the unmitigated devil behind and underneath all causes of drunkenness. I earnestly recommend the editor, Mr. Gardner, Dr. Lambert, and T. B. Wakeman to obtain and read "Eagle Pass," a book written by Lord Montgomery, and published by Putnam in 1852. It is very strange to think how blind the whole people and press of this country and all others are upon the damnable debt slavery that covers the earth even as the water covers the sea, as the Bible folks used to say. The very fact often stated that one per cent of interest would in one hundred years change the ownership of all the wealth of a nation, ought to strike every thinking person and show them the ridiculous nonsense of trying any other reform while the money-lenders and bankers are allowed to control and contract the amount of money the people shall hav to use, so as to compel them to borrow bankers' debts and pay from three per cent to five hunred per cent (by re-issuing).

All men and women who honestly earn their own living can certify that debt is the worst form of slavery on earth. In fact, there is no slavery where there is no debt, and it is strange that some of our great reformers do not seem to look at want of money as the "great unmitigated devil" beyond all that ever existed. I sincerely hope friend Macdonald will read "Eagle Pass" soon, and learn that the poorer classes of Mexico must sell themselvs into slavery for the privileges of marriage, baptism, and burial, the marriage fee being from twenty to twenty-seven dollars, while a debt of two or three dollars often puts a man or woman in slavery for life. Last week the papers gave the description of a conference on an island in the Rio Grande at Eagle Pass, while a small army of the friends of each were ready armed on each shore to keep order. After twenty years of swiftly and enormously increasing debt on the people of this country, and hundreds of years in Mexico, need anyone to wonder at the crime, vice, poverty, misery, pauperism, and prostitution? Is it strange that our masters are building prisons, jails, and workhouses to put us into, with more than thirty billions of debt drawing interest from labor, drawing all the produce from the land and labor into towns and cities, piling it up in vast structures of stone, brick, iron, and wood, where it is buried, dead to the people, while they must still forever pay more than they can earn as interest upon the cost or value? I say that so long as there is not money enough to put the people out of debt and keep them so we cannot be a free people. And no person can giv a single reason why there should not be sufficient money—not bankers' debts—to do all the business without one dollar of debt, except that bankers may count debts as money, compel the people to pay interest to them, and get rich on the interest of what they owe. When there is money enough in circulation to do all business transactions without debt, there will be no drunkards, gamblers, thieves, pawn-shops, nor churches, prisons, jails, workhouses, nor prostitutes.

It never has been tried, and I fearlessly prophesy that no reform will ever succeed until it is. No nation has ever yet been free simply because they allowed the money-sharks to issue their debts, call it money, and compel the people to borrow their debts and pay them interest over and over hundreds of times, and yet do nearly all the business upon debt and credit, promising to pay principal and interest some time, and always failing. Are we forever to be fools and slaves? J. H. WOOD.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Feb. 18, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find money, with directions as to the disposal of the same; also petition for state secularization, with names attached. The ANNUAL and postal came all right. You wish to know if I wish my paper stopped. As I am paid up to May, and as I shall probably send you more money before that time, you may consider yourself answered. In many respects I like your paper the best of all Liberal papers, but I fear sometimes that you will, like its former editor, finally bring up within the fold of that semi-religious society commonly called Spiritualism.

Now, I like Spiritualists in general, because they are Liberal in sentiment, but they hav several good journals devoted to their cause, so please giv us in THE TRUTH SEEKER a good unbiased Liberal paper, pure and unadulterated. I can well conceive how a person of some religious society could let himself down easy from orthodoxy to Spiritualism, as they like to cling to the idea of a future life, but it is impossible for me to imagin to what a state of mind it is necessary for a once avowed Materialist to bring himself in order to take in that belief upon such flimsy evidence as they offer.

Spiritualism is only a rehash of the old superstitious idea of attributing to the ghosts or spirits all phenomena not easily understood. Although I hav never seen any of the remarkable mediums, I am willing to admit that, outside of the ninety per cent of humbuggery indulged in by the so-called mediums without one word of condemnation from Spiritualists in general, there may be some phenomena that cannot readily be explained; but does that prove that man has any other than a materialistic existence after death? Primitiv man was filled with awe as he heard the distant thunder, and quaked with fear at the lightning's flash, for he thought the gods or spirits were angry with him. The Christian, when he sees the rainbow in the heavens, draws great consolation from the sight, for has not his God said that when that was seen it was a sign that he will not again drown the world? This world has existed thousands, if not millions of years, but still it is but a few years since that we hav had what may be called a correct explanation of the above phenomena; but now every schoolboy can explain the fundamental principles of the thunder, lightning, and rainbow, and we in this enlightened age look back upon the ancients as fools for ever entertaining such an absurd notion that they were caused by the gods.

A man may be placed in a cabinet and be tied to a chair; when the cabinet is again opened, the man may hav his vest on inside out—but does that prove that we hav an existence after the breath has left our bodies? Or the same person may be tied and left in the cabinet, and while he is in there a person other than the spectators in the room may in the indistinct light be seen to wander around the room. It may be a young woman—as it is in most cases—and she may come among the spectators, sit upon the laps of the gentlemen, hug and kiss them, and then gently and gracefully glide away. Now, is that positiv proof that we shall be permitted to return upon this mundane sphere and amuse people in a darkened room by throwing musical instruments and chairs around the room, and thereby add fresh testimony to the correctness of a belief in Spiritualism?

These tricks I mention may be old, as I am not very well posted in the new ones, and may appear ridiculous to believers, but they were once believed in and looked upon as conclusiv evidence to substantiate a belief in Spiritualism as any that are performed at present. We are called upon by Spiritualists to explain that these tricks are not performed by spirits. It would really seem as though it should be their business to prove that they are performed by spirits. Giv science time, friend Spiritualists, and I will assure you that an explanation will be given that will make you appear in the eyes of future generations as silly as you now think the ancients were in their explanations of other natural phenomena.

Without wishing to rob Mr. Winter of his appellation, I beg leave to sign myself L. L. NORTHUP, Materialist.

MOUND CITY, MINN., Feb. 17, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a reader of your paper about six years, and during all that time I hav never given you any "taffy;" but I am going to say now that THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for '85 beats all. I would not sell mine for five dollars, only that I know I could get another. I wish to say, further, that, with the addition of the "Children's Corner," THE TRUTH SEEKER is the best family paper I hav ever had in the house.

And now, with your permission, I would like to mention another subject. The Spiritualists, all of them that mention the matter, tell us that Friend Winter's effusions contain no arguments, and are not worth answering (and really I think they are considerably more than half right). But why in heaven's name do they each and every one sit immediately down and answer him in a long letter to THE TRUTH SEEKER?

It is getting monotonous, and when of them says, in substance, that Ingersoll and Watts hav not yet evoluted up to the plane of the great mass of Spiritualists, it makes me tired.

Perhaps I am cross. Anyway, I am yours for the truth,

A. W. SHUCK, M.D.

COLUMBUS, KAN., Feb. 12, 285.

MR. EDITOR: God and science are incongruous, and badly mixed in our public schools. Church and state co-operate and reciprocate in our free schools.

I was lately on a visit to Baxter Springs, and Brother H. Crum (who has been a good patron of THE TRUTH SEEKER) and I visited the public school, which has five teachers for the white, and two for the colored pupils, all in one building.

The principal is a genial man, and treated me very courteously, but, like many others, is vainly trying to make the facts, laws, and forces of science, as taught in the text-books, to agree with the orthodox God and Bible. The program for the day begins with singing orthodox hymns, and praying to the unknown God. While the class in history were alluding to the many gods of the ancients, the second principal asked the class why we came to hav one god. A sharp young lady said: "Because they had so many gods they could not keep track of them." It came to me that the exchange had not made the labor of "keeping track" any less. I told the principal that all human history was but the product of the human organism, but he would not admit it, for it was the death-blow to his theology.

Professor Youmans, of Liberal, was there, and had classes in music and elocution in the school, and, although an Infidel, the sectarians were highly pleased with him. Brother Crum and I went on Sunday evening to the Methodist church to hear the principal of the school preach. Professor Youmans led the choir. While, during prayer, all around us kneeled, we three Infidels sat upright, like Mordecai, the Jew, at the king's gate.

The preacher gave us quite a scientific discourse about matter and force, and gave many facts and truths, but could not see how matter and force could produce all the effects we see and experience. So he made it all plain (?) and satisfactory (?) by hitching God to matter and force, and then it was as clear as mud.

Well, the world's a great baby, and must hav its playthings, gods, devils, spooks, and, worst of all, blind and selfish preachers. But science will slowly and surely disperse the gods and the God. J. H. COOK.

ANIMAS CITY, COL., Feb. 13, 285.

MR. EDITOR: We need a good lecturer. There never was one here. The population of Animas City and Durango, which are only two miles apart, is about two thousand. There are four or five churches, and quite a number of Liberals. The people are hard up, in so much that I don't think it would hardly pay to come here unless they had other business, or on their way to some other place. Nevertheless, we would like very much to hav a bombshell thrown into this camp. There is another suggestion that I would like to make, and that is, I think the Liberal platform should be published in all the Liberal papers as a standing platform, so that we can show to the bigots at any time what we believe. And another thing, I want the United States history written by the Liberals, with the name of Thomas Paine in it. I will take a copy. Respectfully. E. KEITH.

LONG LAKE, MINN., Feb. 17, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed two dollars, and send me the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885, and the picture of Mr. Bennett's monument; the balance apply to my credit on THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Times are hard here, and prices of farm produce low; otherwise I might send you an occasional subscriber, as I used to. Wheat sells here at from fifty to seventy cents per bushel, and yet flour is no cheaper than in former years. If the low price of wheat gave us cheaper bread, poor people would gain if the farmers should lose, but such is not the case. "The millers' ring," as that monopoly is called here, regulate the price of wheat and flour. The money power, that is, the bankers, railroad companies, owners of coal and iron mines, land-thieves, and other monopolists, are running our government. Majorities are bought to defeat any measure or bill offered in the interest of the farmer and laborer. Witness the Henepin Canal scheme, last session of Congress. Class legislation is making the rich richer and the poor poorer with ever-accelerating pace, bringing to our republic the hateful landlord and tenant system that has obtained in England for centuries. I only write once a year for your paper, and never before on politics. W. ARCHIBALD.

TONTOGANY, O., Feb. 17, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Did I not tell you I would pay you for THE TRUTH SEEKER that you hav been trusting me with? Inclosed please find pay for this year and next; also four new subscribers and the pay, and one dollar for six "Bible Morals," and twenty-five cents for TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885. As soon as you publish "Facts and Fallacies," by Charles Reynolds, I want some of them.

To giv you an idea of the hard times I will say that I hav to furnish all the money for all these subscribers. One is a physician, the others well-to-do farmers. One owns one hundred and forty acres of good land. Our taxes are almost unendurable and take all our spare money. I think I can get some more subscribers soon. M. BROWN.

P.S.—The preacher that I mentioned in my last who was preparing a sermon on the resurrection of Jesus when I handed him the "Resurrection of Jesus," by Mr. Bell, dropped that subject and took up another. M. B.

MURRAY, O., Feb. 15, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, which please apply as per direction. I am still well pleased with THE TRUTH SEEKER, and would like to see more of such papers as that, the Freethinkers' Magazine, the Independent Pulpil, the Iron-Clad Age, &c., scattered throughout the land, not the United States alone, but the whole reading world; also such papers as Liberty, The Alarm, &c., for they are papers calculated to set the people to thinking, and when the masses once get to investigating and find out the tricks and fraud of priestcraft and statescraft, they will then, and not till then, see that it is their duty—their individual duty—to assist to the best of each one's ability in liberating the world from the shackles of slavery—both the slavery of a superstitious religion and the slavery of cunning politicians.

What we want is liberty. Can we hav liberty while the minds of the masses are polluted by the teachings of the Bible? Can we hav liberty while existing law is so discriminating? While one can steal a thousand and be complimented and another steal a loaf of bread and be imprisoned? In fine, while existing law enables one to become a millionaire while thousands are languishing in poverty, starving for the common necessaries of life? D. E. LEWIS.

GARDEN HOME, OR., Feb. 6, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read a few copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I hav noticed that you are always ready and willing to giv your readers information on religious subjects. Now, there is a little matter I would like to be enlightened on, and as I am not ashamed to show my ignorance by asking questions, I thought I would write to you and ask a few. If you cannot answer them perhaps some of your Christian readers can. There are three families living near who belong to the United church and are sanctified and belong to the holiness band, but they hav had some trouble among them. They had a war some time ago, but the preacher acted as peacemaker (blessed are the peacemakers), and they agreed to bury the hatchet. But the hatchet would not stay buried, and now the quarrel has taken a fresh start. Every one of them will get up in class meeting and tell us that the love of God is shed abroad in their hearts, and one lady generally has something to say about the filling powers of the holy ghost (the holy ghost is fond of the sisters). Now, what I want to know is this: How is it possible for men who are children of the same mother, and who claim to be so far advanced in the Christian life that they have lost all desire to do anything wrong; they are sanctified, pure, and holy—I hav heard some of them say in class-meeting that they were whiter than snow; that their sins were all washed away—now, how can people who are so far advanced in holiness liv at enmity with each other? Two weeks ago there was preaching at the schoolhouse and two of the saints occupied one of the back seats; they used to sit in the front before they had their war.

The most curious part of the whole business is the fact that they can all get up in class-meeting and tell us about the love of God and the forgivness of sin, when we hav all heard that they are at enmity with each other.

Now, Mr. Editor, if you can explain this matter to me I will be very much obliged to you. If they hav any more trouble I will publish the names of all parties concerned in it. I am not in favor of war of any kind, and will do what I can to prevent it. Respectfully yours, SAMUEL M. KELSO.

WANSHIP, UTAH, Feb. 18, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I loaned a Bible-reading friend Kelso's "Bible Analyzed," and begged him as personal favor to read it. In about two months I asked him how he was getting along with it. He answered, "Not at all; he ridicules things I hold sacred, and I cannot read it." He then handed me a book—I suppose to answer Kelso—entitled "Nelson on Infidelity; or, The Cause and Cure of Infidelity."

Now, Colonel Kelso proves the utter impossibility and absurdity of the events recorded in the Bible, and the Rev. Nelson givs the cause of Infidelity as "man's depraved nature, and the lack of knowledge connected with the transaction of the garden and the forbidden fruit."

Oh! that God had kept his depravity-producing tree in some other garden, or that he had instructed Mother Eve to hav partaken of the tree of knowledge, so she would hav known better than commit an act that has condemned billions to "total depravity," and necessitated the cruel murder of God's only begotten son. A human judge would hav taken into consideration her inexperience (being just made), and the fact that she was subjected to the wiles of a cunning, smooth-talking person, who must hav been created for the express purpose of persuading her to eat, so he would hav an excuse to damn so many of us.

I do not accept this total-depravity theory. In fact, it requires a depraved person to believe that a just God would provide a horrible, eternal torture, and a curse that we cannot avoid, for so torturing the most of his creatures.

But the cure he (the Infidel-curer) prescribes, I think, is infallible. He says, to effect a sure cure read carefully the following books: "Evidences of Christianity," by Grotius; Paley's, Locke's, Addison's, Campbell's, Sherlock's, Lyttleton's, Douglass', Leslie's, Lardner's Porten's, Beattie's, Soame Jenyn's, Jones's, and Burnett's evidences of Christianity, Alexander's "Evidences," Faber's "Difficulties of Infidelity," Newton on "Prophecy," Stackhouse's "History of the Bible," Scott's "Family Bible," Horne's "Introduction," vol. i, Watson's "Apology," "Jew's Letters to Voltaire," Prideaux's "Connection," "Horea Paulinæ," Paley's "Natural Theology," Shuckford's "Connection," and some others. And says he, "If you do not thoroughly understand them, read them all over again." Now, if these books are anything like Nelson's "Cure," if read, I am certain they will cure, or what is just the same, it will deprive you of your reason, in which state you could understand all the meaningless jargon, impossible fables, unscientific, false theories, and the unjust ideas commanded by the scripture.

You would surely hav to renounce your reason to pretend to understand that a beast with seven heads and ten horns and a woman with child can mean, as Nelson says, the Roman empire and ten kings. What use to attempt to reason with those that will contort words to mean anything they want said? Did ram's horn mean a Krupp gun? and the 'ites God could not whip mean that El Mahdi got Khartoum?

Yours truly, WM. REYNOLDS.

BAY CITY, MICH., Feb. 10, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: In the letter of H. P. Stone in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Feb. 7th he wishes some one to explain why there is so little of the missionary spirit manifested among people who hav outgrown orthodoxy and evoluted into Agnosticism. A man would be very silly, indeed, to go about the world, continually blowing a horn and trying to work off a stock of Agnostic fish. As the very name suggests that he knows nothing at all of the goods he offers, he should rather be satisfied to occasionally extend a quiet helping hand to his neighbor, to assist him on the pathway of knowledge, and use his best endeavors to disseminate an education that shall by all means embrace as much of the arts and sciences as possible; for just in proportion as a person atttains to that knowledge, just in that proportion does that individual commence to lose faith in those old and "blessed truths" contained in the Bible; and after vainly trying, like some of our eminent divines of the present day, to swallow Moses and Darwin both at one meal, he generally finds at last that "he has bit off more than he can chaw," that the Bible and science will not harmonize, and that one or the other must be given up. There are some instances on record where it has been the latter, but they are so few that they are not worth speaking of. When once a person outgrows Christianity he is not liable again to return to it. But we must admit that there is no other way to make the people outgrow superstition except through the medium of well-directed education in the common schools. The charge made by the Catholics that the common schools make nothing but Infidels is logically true, and it now only lacks the total banishment of the Bible from the public schools to see our fondest hopes realized, and we could exclaim, in the language of a certain mythical individual, that "even this generation shall not pass away before all things shall be changed!" That is the last link that binds Christianity to the common schools, and one that I hope to become an important factor in helping to sever, in accordance with a promis I made to the society in New York, as I hav a child there now in the public school. I know of no other way of emancipation for humanity except by education; for, even though we may not be able to formulate a belief of our own, it requires education to giv an intelligent reason for disbelieving the religion of some other person. I shall never forget the bombshell that was pitched into the Christian camp by an old man who was engaged to deliver a lecture on astronomy for the benefit of a Sunday-school in western New York. After giving an interesting lecture on the stars he wound up by telling them that the telescope was one of the greatest factors in the advancement of civilization, that the very first one that was ever pointed at the stars knocked the bottom out of heaven, and drove the New Jerusalem so far back into space that up to the present day it would be a very brave person indeed who would attempt its location.

As Liberals we cannot formulate a creed. As soon as we do that, we degenerate into a sect. As many of us would be called upon to either giv up our honesty or the society, and as we hav already had a taste of that method, it is not at all likely we will try it again soon. The American world is just becoming Liberal. The most orthodox of to-day would either hav been banished or burnt two hundred years ago. Public opinion will no longer submit, in the more intelligent portions of it, to any great pressure on them by the old blasphemy laws; and even though it is less than two years since they were re-enacted in New York, under strong pressure from the Young Men's Christian Association and the clergy, who see their bread constantly falling with the butter side down, there are very few of them who hav sand enough in them to commence prosecutions against violators of the law, knowing full well that they would be hooted out of court in disgrace if they did, notwithstanding the fact that a person can stand on any corner in the city of New York and spot twenty victims every half hour if he is so minded. Truth will triumph in the end through sheer force of advancing evolution, in spite of all opposition, while, on the other hand, quackery of all kinds has at all times to employ a great army of pettifoggers to help tail it up and keep it on its legs; and the more of a humbug it is the louder will its advocates howl. (DR.) H. J. PURDY.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Time for Me.

Snowtime, blowtime, earth is bleak and wild;
Icetime, nice time for a merry child.
Round the cheerful fire-stove, oh, how warm are we!
Social songs and words of love—winter-time for me.

Maytime, haytime; earth is fresh and fair;
Shower-time, flower-time; blossoms everywhere.
In the fields and meadows, oh, how blithe are we!
Plucking many a primrose—spring's the time for me.

Suntime, funtime; earth is grand and gay;
Fruit-time, good time; gathering all the day.
In orchard and in garden, oh, how happy we!
Eating nuts and berries then—summer-time for me.

Wheat time, sweet time; earth one harvest home;
Sheaftime, brief time; see the reapers come,
In the golden cornfield, oh, how busy we!
Storing up the precious yield—autumn-time for me.

Lifetime, strifetime; earth a battlefield;
Breathtime, deathtime, when that breath we yield.
Duty-doing every day, oh, how wise are we!
At home, abroad, at work, at play—any time for me.

She was "Losted."

"I'm losted! Could you find me, please?"
Poor little frightened baby!
The wind had tossed her golden fleece,
The stones had scratched her dimpled knees.
I stooped, and lifted her with ease,
And softly whispered, "May be;"

"Tell me your name, my little maid,
I can't find you without it."
"My name is Shiney-eyes," she said,
"Yes, but your last?" She shook her head:
"Up to my house 'ey never said
A single fing about it."

"But, dear," I said, "what is your name?"
"Why, didn't you hear me told you?
Dust Shiney-eyes." A bright thought came:
"Yes, when you're good; but when they blame
You, little one—is't just the same
When mamma has to scold you?"

"My mamma never scolds," she moans,
A little blush ensuing,
"'Cept when I've been a-frowing stones,
And then she says (the culprit owns),
Mehitabel Sapphira Jones,
What has you been a-doing!"

—Wide Awake.

Aunt Patty and the Wolves.

A TRUE STORY.—CONCLUDED.

Lone tented tombs, though tenantless,
Where Hope's dead flowers were summerless;
No sign anear nor yet afar,
And on the wind wild dirges are.
No lowland stream nor lighted pane,
While threat'ning clamors rend the plain.
Patty was lost in that ocean of snow,
Rain on her tears deriding her woo,
A coat of mail from head to feet,
As twilight heralds in the sleet;
Armor of ice the cloak on her back,
And wolves abroad are loud on her track.
Gray pencilings in the distance lie
Outline of branches against the sky;
A straggling grove of distant oaks,
Miscalled by careless-spoken folks
"The Barrens"—why never yet was clear,
When embryonic woods were there.

A mission of mercy has that young forest brawn,
When a legion of demons is hunting her down,
Now rising, now falling, as waves of the sea
Where they break on the headland and dash o'er the lea.
Like furies they climb to the crest of the hill,
And down on their haunches a moment are still,
Then gath'ring around her, with soul-thrilling yell,
And bounding in air, like bloodhounds of hell.
Their eyes are meteors, burning and red,
When Polly has swung to a tree overhead,
In a haven of shelter that bare branches made.
Oh! weep for her now, all the mothers who read,
Pity had Patty for the world in its need.
The black fiends are baffled, but leap at the tree,
In their fury they surge as a tempest at sea;
They writhe in their rage, and scramble and scream,
And Patty looks down on the doom of a dream;
Their tongues are ablaze as the lights on the shore—
Can this be the nightmare that mocked her before?
Each grapples with each, and glad would devour
The foe that withholds the prey of the hour.
They struggle and shriek, and fall to the ground
To rend but her shoes as rare morsels found.
Their endless endeavors hav worn them with pain,
A brief respite, then, and the onslaught again.
Renewing the charge with white gleaming teeth,
Their breath twines the night in a hot, steaming wreath.
Eternities writ in that slow-creeping age,
Lines haunted with blood, and her own heart the page.
Not 'till morning arose with its pink and its gray
Did the pack roll in billows of midnight away;
One monster returned—'twas the leader she guessed
That stayed in the vanguard to champion the rest,
More cruel, more fiendish, than all of them there,
Howled farewell defiance on the cold morning air,
His vengeful revilings, his wrath, and his scorn
Then slunk to the dens where no daylight was born.

Patty left the wood her deep soul stirred,
And while her lips could form no word,
The world unveiled its sweeter guise
Of welcome hills, and bluer skies.
The grander plains, and prairies 'round,
Were landscapes laid on newer ground;
And new songs played upon the wild,
Whose rustling winds her steps beguiled.
One thought, one glimpse, then on and on,
The barren highlands past and gone;
And there, as the radiant morning broke
Its flaming sword over elm and oak,
And the linden boughs were all a-shiver,
She neared the banks of a narrow river.

Shuttles of sunlight to and fro,
Amber threads in a loom of snow,
Network of gold draping the trees,
And needles of frost flew in the breeze.
Oft in the glow of summer's green,
And bluebells painting the hazel screen,
And sweet wild roses, red and white,
Filled dewy cups in the early light,
And morn with the waking earth was wed;
But never yet had a sunrise shed
Such peaceful rest in her tired heart
And tender tears to her glad eyes start.
As many an erring child to-day,
Her heart was right and her feet astray.
Though weary miles her home beyond,
She knows the ford and glassy pond,
The shelving slope and wooded stream,
And rises out of her wandering dream,
Turns to the path o'er the winding hill,
Where the sun-god tapped each window-sill;
Her mother-love, with eager wings,
Fears snow, nor space, nor frosty stings.
As "home, sweet home" comes into view,
She sings the song and the words are new;
But that dread night of pain and prayer,
When almost dragged to the wolf's dark lair,
Not words of mine may paint its power
As drops the blood on a snow-born flower.
Rehearsing its horrors over and o'er,
Where the firelight shone on the oaken floor,
And crimson flames with roar and rout
Chased the gloom from the corners out.
Threads of gold from the chimney's glare
Were laurels laid on her soft gray hair,
And her voice was low as a knell that rung
From a silver bell by the breezes swung,
And children listened, as they ever do,
To an old, old story ever new.
When the night was wild as a storm at sea,
This is the tale that she told to me.

Clearwater, Neb. MARY BAIRD-FINCH.

A Cup of Cold Water.

There is nothing like it under the sun. Man has made all sorts of beverages, but nothing that he has made can compare with clear, cold water. Nothing is so refreshing to the weary traveler as a drink of cold water; no draught so sweet and cooling to the fevered patient; nothing that he longs for so anxiously. It is the one drink that never cloys. Beasts, birds, flowers, trees, the green earth—all seek it readily and greedily.

"Sparkling and bright in its liquid light," it is like the sweet spirit of truth; and as water is important to the health and purity of our bodies, so is truth in its simplicity and light necessary to the strength and well-being of our minds.

Who thinks that he can find peace, comfort, happiness, in beverages that inflame and stupify the brain is most wofully deceived. He is among the happiest of mortals who seeketh not the drink that intoxicates and bewilders, but finds sweet health, content, and satisfaction in a simple cup of cold water.

S. H. W.

Our Puzzle Box.

METAPLASTIC CHARADES.

1.

The last of it before it; behind, a rodent small—
The whole a word
That names a bird,
No rodent now at all.

The last of it before it, a little horse we call;
'Twixt him and it
A Bee has lit
To make honey of it all—
Or rather, to be more complete,
A piece of anything to eat
That's dainty, rich, or sweet.

J. K. P. BAKER.

2.—ENIGMA.

My 1, 4, 3, 8 is something owed.
My 2, 7, 9 is did meet.
My 8, 7, 6 is a number.
My 3, 4, 5, 1 is a crook.
My whole is an Infidel.

A. LAURIE SAILOR.

3.—INVOLVED CHARADE.

Here in a plant of the crow-foot kind,
Whose name is derived from "the wind,"
"No masculin mortal" we find;
As over private gates, designed
In letters large enough for the blind,
A "No Admittance" is often lined.
But here is English and Latin combined;
To the left is English, bear in mind,
Latin to right, no sex assigned,
And shorter, but else alike defined.

REKAB SEMAJ.

4.—CROSS-WORD.

In hart, not in deer,
In minute, not in year;
In apple, not in plum;
In whisky, not in rum;
In hart, not in deer;
In minute, not in year,
In whisky, not in rum;
In answer, not in sum.

My whole is the hero of a very celebrated poem. BENNY DICTION.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, MARCH. 14, 1885.

1.—Emanation (name, nation).
2.—Asparagus—the last five of these eight letters reversed is s-u-g-a-r; the first five—a spar, less last two—asp.
3.—Hagioscope.
5.—Tallahassee.

Solver of number 5, Maggie Hoadley.

SOLUTION TO "ESPRIT FORT'S" FARM PROBLEM, TRUTH SEEKER, FEB. 28TH, AND CORRECTION OF HIS OWN ERRONEOUS SOLUTION, MARCH 15TH.

Let x be the side of the solid square farm
Ere the gift of 10 acres had bro't it to harm;
Then $4x$ would fence it with something of odds,
For a side of 10 acres has fenced 40 rods.
$4x$ minus 4 sides of the ten;
Transpose, and $4x$ is 200 again.
Whence x equals 50, and squared is the rods
2,500, just minus the odds,
1,600 he gave to the school,
Leaves him 900 rods, or I am a fool.
And this, by the terms he has given to me,
Is left as a remnant in shape of an E.
5 acres 5-8ths, without any pretense,
Takes the same as the square 10 acres to fence.
And the farm, I will wager of oysters two plates,
Had acres 15 and the fraction 5-8ths.
I only review his solution in song
Because his "child's play" is so palpably wrong.
He confuses himself with quadratic display,
While my child with arithmetic solved it to-day.
Will "Esprit Fort" show us some more of his knack?
For this is by no means a "ha nut to crack."

ISAAC POOL.
Escanaba, Mich.

Correspondence.

CARROLLTON, ILL., March 5, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I received your kind and welcome letter some time ago, and the reason I hav not answered sooner was I wanted to hav my picture taken, so I could send it to you. I was at St. Louis last week three days, and I saw more there than ever before. I hav finished your story book, and like it ever so much. I saw in one of the "Correspondence" letters a notice of your book "Apples of Gold." I am going to try and get the book, too, for I know that it will be interesting to me. I saw your picture in the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, and I do not think it as good as the one I hav, for I think lots of it, and show it to most everyone I know. Now good-night, and may you liv long to write more beautiful stories.

From your true little friend,

FANNIE DACUS.

ST. THOMAS, ONT., March 9, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Never having seen in the Children's Corner any letters from this part of Canada, I thought I would write to you. I am a little girl ten years old and go to school; read in the third reader; study grammar, geography, arithmetic, reading, writing, dictation, drawing, and music. I hav four sisters; one is married; she has a little daughter.

I hav never been, and none of us ever go, to Sunday-school or church. We spend our Sundays singing and playing at home, and reading in turns from the Children's Corner, Harper's Young People, "Apples of Gold," "Story Hour," the "Darwins," and other good books. We were all greatly pleased with the "Story Hour," its pretty pictures and nice reading, and we thank you kindly for it. My sisters took the "Story Hour" and "Apples of Gold" to read pieces from at an entertainment that is held every Friday afternoon in the public school, and the scholars all liked the stories well. As you see we are having all our books with no superstition, as pa wishes to hav us all like himself, free from superstition. My two elder sisters and myself hav committed to memory, from Children's Corner Feb. 28th, "Guilty or Not Guilty."

I will now close, hoping that the Children's Corner will always continue to be, what it is at present, the most interesting part of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I remain, with love to you,

ANNIE NEILSON.

UTICA, MINN., March 10, 1885.

MY DEAR FRIEND SUSAN H. WIXON: I hav been reading in THE TRUTH SEEKER a few minutes. I read a piece written by F. Burr, entitled, "Why It Rains." I hope that he will write again. My father says that reading like that teaches children something. We hav twenty-five little lambs. My brother Charles has been down to New Orleans to see the World's Exposition. He came home from Dakota at Christmas-time. He had a nice time at New Orleans. I won the prize in school for best spelling, a nice book of poems by Ingelow. Father says I hav done so well in school this winter he will giv me the money to send for your book, "The Story Hour."

From your friend. ALICE W. PEABODY.

NOW READY!

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED

LITHOGRAPHS

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, 22½ x 28½.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By WILLIAM MCDONNELL, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.

The Darwins. A Domestic Radical story. By MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By MRS. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office,

A BOOK FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

PRICE, $1.25; TWO COPIES, $2.00.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT

IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

THE

HISTORY OF FREETHOUGHT,

Its Rise, Progress, and Triumph.

BY CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS—Sec. I.: Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II.: What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III.: Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV.: Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V.: Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

Price, $1 25

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

"Little Lessons" for Little Folks,

Are now ready to mail to any address, at 30 cents for board cover, and 20 cents for paper. Address

Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Virginia.

"'Little Lessons' are grand. I hashed and rehashed the lesson on spiders this evening in the Sunday-school. I am running two Sunday-schools. The children are slow in learning the mystery of the God-head; in comprehending the Trinity; but their eyes brighten and they take kindly to discourses on snails, toads, spiders, and lizards, so I think I'll keep it up."—Bertie Stone.

THE RIDDLE

OF THE

AMERICAN SPIRITUAL SPHINX

OR,

THE "LOST KEY" FOUND.

Sent to any address upon receipt of stamps to pay postage. Address

JAMES A. BLISS,
Developing Medium National Developing Circle,
121 W. Concord St., Boston, Mass.

4t11

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Traditon to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

A SMALL FARM WANTED.

An Appeal to the Philanthropists.

I am 71 years old, hav been a producer for at least 65 years. I wish to find some philanthropic person who has a small farm to rent—I am unable to buy—for a term of years, for a small sum. Any person who has such a place, and will communicate with me, giving full particulars, I should be happy to hear from.

SEWARD MITCHELL,
4t11 Newport, Me.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXO . Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellen work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALL in a LIFETIME,

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay.

" ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WYANDOTTES!

Seguan Poultry Yards, Lowell, Mich.

I hav one pen headed by my splendid two-year-old crower mated to five of my handsomest females. Eggs for setting, $3; also beautiful W. C. B. Polish and Brown Leghorns, $1.50 for setting; no fowls to sell. MRS. S. A. FOX,

3t11 Lowell, Mich.

Pure Philosophy for Physiologists.

Please send me 5 cents for Foote's Health Monthly for March, and read articles on

DIANAISM AND ALPHAISM.

Send stamps (1 cent ones) to

ELMINA D. SLENKER,
4t13 Snowville, Va.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.

The Greatest of all Anti-theological Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

John Swinton's Paper,

PLAIN, PRACTICAL, GENUIN, STRONG, AND FREE.

A WEEKLY PAPER OF AMERICAN IDEAS, PROGRESS, AND RIGHTS.

21 Park Row, New York.

$1 PER YER (post paid). 3 CENTS A COPY.
Specimens Free.

1—Boldly upholding the Rights of Man in the American way.

2—Battling against the Accumulated wrongs of Society and Industry.

3—Striving for the Organization and Interests of Workingmen, and giving the news of the trades and the unions.

4—Uniting the New Political Forces; searching for a common platform, and giving the news of all the young bodies in the field.

5—Warning the American people against the treason able and crushing schemes of millionaires, monopolists, and plutocrats, and against the coming billionaires whose shadow is now looming up.

6—Looking toward better times of fair play and public welfare.

7—Living views of public questions and social topics.

8—Literary sketches and stories.

Poetry.

The Vampire.

"Now wicked dreams abuse the curtained sleep."
—Macbeth.

I rule the night. When Na'ure nods,
And man hath sunk, supine, to rest;
When Lethe whelms 'neath leaden sleep
Pale thoughts that crowd his careworn breast;

When all is still, save as the wolf's
Fierce hungry howl rings on the air,
Or owlets screech; when lizards creep
From damp Decay's unwholesome lair;

When foul miasmas reek and float
Plague-laden from the pois'nous marsh,
And toward doomed cities ghoul-like glide;
When spotted frogs croak loud and harsh;

When o'er Love's new-made grave the moon
Reveals faint tongues of aural flame,
That shape beneath her ghastly torch
To semblance of that fest'ring frame;

When Murder holds unhallowed tryst,
With all the furies in her train,
Till in his sleep the miser moans,
As prescient of his perilled gain;

When cloaked assassins darkly flit
From arch to arch, and tree to tree,
Unmarked, I spread my bat-like wing,
To hie me swift o'er land and sea!

I love to lap the crimson flood
That courses through the veins of Youth!
What joy to ope those glowing gates
O Life, nor know one pang of ruth!

To watch its tide slow ebb away,
Till o'er the cheek death's hue doth spread!
They lie at morn so strangely fair.
You scarce might deem the worm they'd wed.

What marvel one that spring hath found,
From whence eternal youth I draw,
Since each new night a victim adds
To those gaunt shadows gone before?

Ho! to my cave! for 'pon the breeze
A fatal freshness heralds day!
Fell's horrors curd my elfin blood!
The dawn draws nigh—away, away!

Boston, Mass. ELLIOTT PRESTON.

The Fear of Death.

Thy name, O Death, hath sent a throb
Of sick'ning pain through many a heart,
But they were not by wisdom taught
That it of nature's plan was part.

To those who read in nature's book
'Tis plain that Death to Birth is brother,
For nowhere in the world we see
That one obtains without the other.

If then these two so near are kin,
Why giv to Birth such welcome grand
And sorrow so for Death, which is
But birth into the other land?

Is it the parting givs the pain?
Or coward fear of unknown woe,
Which ignorant priestcraft points to men
Who walk not in the way they go?

None who go hence come back to tell
What there transpires. Since all things ever
Here turn to good, then who can say
They are not so beyond the river?

If there is one, both good and true,
Whose power extends from shore,
Would he rule here with reason clear,
And lack it there forevermore?

Lancaster, Pa. WALTER P. KING.

The Difficulty at Chicago.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir:

"For some time past," says Mr. Simpson in his article, "Liberal Mugwumps at Chicago," "the League has not paid expenses." And for some time past, he might hav added, our best members hav remained away from our meetings. For this, of course, there was a reason. Night after night the debate would be on dynamite, no matter what the subject of the lecture, the speakers, some of them members, making our League merely an auxiliary to 54 Lake street, where, Sunday afternoons, might be heard the most radical assent to the extermination of all civilization in any way represented by capital. Monday morning papers would report the names of the speakers, and also report the names of the same speakers as taking part in the debate at the Sunday evening meeting at the League, until our hall received the soubriquet of "Dynamite Hall." Intelligent men and women, good Liberals, who had become members of the League with the understanding that they were identifying themselvs with a society working for the Nine Demands, became tired of this, and the consequence was, as the dynamiters monopolized the hall night after night, without contributing even so much as a nickel, that, as Mr. Simpson says, "the League had not been paying expenses."

When we had a radical theological lecture, a good many more Liberals would attend, and the contributions would be five, six, or seven dollars, instead of two or four.

Our League is the only society in the city where the discussion of radical questions is permitted. There are many labor societies where the labor question in all its phases may be considered, and where no other question would be given a hearing. Those members, then, who were interested in the League work objected very strongly to our society being given up so entirely and persistently to the discussion of questions outside of its legitimate work. Mr. Stevens was requested at various times by these members to secure only Radical lectures, and finally the debates became so disgraceful that a majority of the League members, twenty or more, held a meeting at Mr. Freeman's, and instructed Mr. Stevens to hav no meeting on the Sunday preceding the Paine anniversary, without he could secure a good Liberal lecture. This meeting was held on Thursday night. On Friday night there was a business meeting at the house of Mrs. Hunt (Mrs. Swank's mother). Mr. Stevens informed those present that he had not succeeded in finding a suitable lecturer. Mr. Simpson said that August Spies would lecture, but Mr. Simpson did not inform the lecture committee, a majority of whom were present, that he had already, on his own responsibility, secured Mr. Spies, and had tried to engage the hall, without notifying the lecture committee. Let me here say that the League has never yet dictated to that committee who should or should not lecture. This shows who was trying to be the "pope" against the wish of the majority. Mr. Spies being an Anarchist of the most pronounced type, Mr. Stevens, remembering the instructions he had received from the majority of the old members the night before, objected. Mr. Stevens, Mr. Fraenkel, Mr. Freeman, and Mrs. Freeman were not in favor of having August Spies lecture.

Mr. Simpson, Mrs. Swank, her mother (Mrs. Hunt), and her brother (Mr. Charles Hunt) were in favor of August Spies lecturing, and that is the famous majority—Mr. Simpson and the Hunt family—only eight members being present in all. Mr. Freeman then mentioned to Mr. Stevens that he thought only the lecture committee had power to decide. Mr. Stevens left the room, but came back and said that the lecture committee were the proper persons to decide the question. Mrs. Freeman was chairman of that committee.

Mr. Stevens and Mr. Fraenkel voted not to hav August Spies lecture. Mr. Simpson alone voted to hear him, and then, in direct opposition to the will of the majority of that committee, he engaged August Spies, for which he received the censure of twenty-seven members of the League. There was no prejudice against Mr. Spies as an individual. We understood his ability. The objection was only on account of the class of discussion his lecture would be liable to call forth. At Mr. Spies's lecture there were not more than ten members of the League present.

At the attempted impeachment of Mr. Stevens there were ten only who signed it, and half of these not in good standing. On the side sustaining the president, who had only acted in accordance with their wishes, there were twenty-seven members.

I beg Mrs. Swank and Mr. Simpson to remember that the meeting instructing Mr. Stevens to dispense with the lecture was held before August Spies's lecture, and before the meeting at Mrs. Swank's, and not because "things looked black" for Mr. Stevens, as he asserts. "The membership book was not cooked." There was not the least necessity for it. Mr. Stevens's friends were old and tried members of the League. Business meetings of the Chicago League hav never been noted for their numbers, but on the side represented by Mr. Simpson there were only himself, Mrs. Swank, and Mr. Fielden, who had attended them, and Mr. Fielden not more than once or twice this winter. When held at Mrs Swank's house, of course, her mother and brother would attend; not otherwise. Indeed, among that ten there were only Mr. Fielden, Mr. Hinkley, and Mr. Simpson who had not expressed themselvs, again and again, as having no particular sympathy with the theological question, and only two, Mr. Hinkley and Mr. Simpson (and I think I may say only one, Mr. Hinkley), who hav not repeatedly spoken in condemnation of Robert G. Ingersoll. Mr. Stevens has repeatedly defended Ingersoll in the League whenever he has been attacked in the debate. Mrs. Swank has invariably spoken of him bitterly, and always depreciatingly of his work. One of that ten, Mr. Schilling, after their pronounced defeat, withdrew from the League with the remark that "if the League was going to confine its work to the Nine Demands, he could no longer work with it."

Mr. Vickers, a lawyer, and one of the finest speakers, historians, and lecturers in the West, became so disgusted with these dynamiters that he was absent for many months, and returned to assist in purging the League of this obnoxious element. He was delegated to act for the League in renting the hall, and rendered effectiv service by securing entire control of it for the society, whose representative was and is Mr. Stevens. Mr. Stevens remained at the door for the reason that only members were to be admitted to our business meeting. On the stairs were fifty or more clamoring to enter, Mr. Simpson and others having gone to the different societies and secured members by paying twenty-five cents to come and vote Mr. Stevens out. Among them were men who had never heard of the Nine Demands of Liberalism, having some sort of vague idea, because the League was getting back to its legitimate work, that there was a suppression of free speech. This is not in the least true. No one is denied the floor who complies with our rules, and these are only those governing all decorous debates. In the new by-laws adopted some two weeks ago at a business meeting, at Professor Baumgras's studio, there is one clause which states that anyone indulging in acrimonious personalities shall be denied the floor. This rule will not debar any lady or gentleman from all the privileges of free discussion. The floor is absolutely free, strangers being given the preference. Mr. Simpson says that it was not a question of dynamite, but of a free platform. Mr. Simpson was the first person who ever made a motion to suppress a free platform, for as member of the lecture committee he offered a motion that Charles S. Griffin, who had become president of the dynamite party, be not allowed on that account to lecture before the League.

Mrs. Swank complains that two vice-presidents were not notified. The first vice-president only is entitled to act as one of the directors. Article VI. of our constitution says: "The officers of the League shall consist of president, vice-president, secretary, financial secretary, and treasurer, and an executiv committee of three members, which, together with the officers, shall constitute a board of directors who shall be intrusted with the general management and control of the League."

Article VII. says: "The officers shall be elected semi-annually at the first regular meetings in May and November, holding office for six months, unless sooner superseded on account of neglect of duty, prolonged absence from the city, sickness or death."

Mr. Stevens could not be charged with a neglect of duty, nor with absence. Neither was he sick or dead. Our constitution does not provide any other reasons for the removal of an officer.

Article VIII. says the standing committees of the League shall be:

Committee on Public Discussions.—This shall arrange for all lectures, essays, debates, or literary entertainments held under the auspices of the League.

Committee on Public Work.—This committee will co-operate with the National League in printing or circulating tracts, pamphlets, or books calculated to forward the objects of the League.

Committee on Finance and Social Affairs.—This committee will provide ways and means to replenish the treasury by collections, soliciting donations, arranging for balls, musical and dramatic entertainments, etc.

The chairman of these committees shall constitute the executiv committee, and the executiv committee and the officers of the League are the board of directors. Section eight of the by-laws says that five members of the board of directors shall constitute a quorum. Five members were present at the meeting of the board at the anniversary referred to by Mrs. Swank as illegal. And Mr. Melrose is the man she accuses Mr. Stevens of having appointed chairman of a committee at a moment's notice, because he could use him. Mr. Melrose had been chairman of that committee for nine months, and was the proper person to act. Mr. Melrose, Mr. Freeman, and Mrs. Freeman sustained the action of the president, and Mr. Frankel voted for the first two motions, and then absented himself because there was enough to pass them satisfactorily. Mrs. Swank was in favor of holding that meeting, but when she found that she was the only one who condemned the president, then she pronounced it unfair. Mr. Simpson took so little interest in the celebration that he was not present, though expected, and the first vice-president was opposed to Mr. Spies lecturing.

There is no inquisitorial committee to examin every applicant for membership. Any person wishing to become a member, givs in his name one week before. This is to prevent the running in of twenty-five-cent members, just for the purpose of voting, as was tried so recently to be done.

The Chicago Liberal League was never in a more flourishing condition than at present, many old members having come back, and many new ones having joined.

And it is not true that the squelched minority were the most intelligent men, and the best speakers in the League, Mr. Swank and Mr. Simpson being the only ones who hav ever lectured for us, and no better debates hav been given than since their absence.

I hav written somewhat at length because I felt that the minority did not understand the situation, for the reason that they persistently throw all the blame of suspending the meeting upon Mr. Stevens. And let me say right here that not a single member who had ever been on our books was refused admitance to our business meeting that Sunday night, whether Mr. Stevens's friends or not, and no member was denied a vote, and among the ten there were several who had no right to vote, not having paid any membership fee for nearly two years. Some paid a quarter, and were permitted to vote in the opposition.

Now, whether the suspending of the Sunday meeting was right or wrong, Mr. Stevens only did what he was requested to do by the majority, and in corroboration of this we, the undersigned, affix our names:

MRS. A. M. FREEMAN, vice-president and chairman of lecture committee.
CHAS. A. FRAENKEL, treasurer.
A. M. FREEMAN, financial secretary.
CLARK M. GIBE.
O. MELROSE, chairman of public works.
Countersigned by authority of the Chicago Liberal League in full meeting assembled, March 10, 1885.

CLARK M. GIBE, sec. pro tem.

Malicious Misrepresentations.

A. H. Simpson's screed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 7th exhibits such a dog-in-the-manger snarl that it will defeat his purpose, especially when he shows the desperation of his case by attempting to drag into the controversy matters entirely foreign to it. As the League, unsolicited, has seen fit to take up my vindication, I shall merely refer to his personal allusions.

1. "E. A. Stevens, under cover of the Paine celebration, has managed to put a number of the oldest members in a very false light."

I simply quoted the published reports, only adding the resolutions passed by the board of directors, and ratified by the League, giving, with equal impartiality, the statements reflecting against myself.

2. "Not content with getting himself interviewed twice, and himself writing an unfair report of one of our meetings for the Herald, and waiting on the Inter-Ocean office, until, to use the words of one of the reporters, he had made himself a general nuisance."

Mr. Taylor, city editor Herald, says:

"Mr. E. A. Stevens neither wrote a line for our paper, nor asked to be interviewed, in connection with the recent 'dynamite' controversy at the Chicago Liberal League. [Signed] W. A. TAYLOR,
"City Editor Chicago Herald."

I never wrote a word for any Chicago paper, nor asked to be interviewed, and will forward you a statement from the Inter-Ocean editor, just as soon as he returns to the city.

Went to the News to protest against the publication of the unauthorized meeting, and was as much surprised as anyone to find they had given the matter so much attention.

3. "The janitor, armed with a poker, a policeman, and the president, stationed themselvs at the door, and after enough mugwumps had been permited to enter to form a majority, the doors were closed and the circus commenced."

If that janitor gets hold of Simpson he will play poker with him, as he very indignantly says:

"FORT DEARBORN HALL, CHICAGO, March 8, 1885.
"The statements by A. H. Simpson that I prevented members from entering the Liberal League Hall, Sunday evening, Feb. 1st, or that I had a poker in my hand, are absolutely false.
"[Signed] WM. JOHNSON, Janitor."

The policeman was called up from the street, as those worthies who want everything "done legally" had broken the glass out of the door to force an entrance to the hall before the lights were lit. The policeman stated that he would not interfere with anyone going in or out, but would merely preserve order.

4. "Who boasted how he had helped to expel what he called the Star Route Liberal from the League."

This will be a piece of information to Liberals, and shows both the malice and ignorance of the writer. At the convention, when Ingersoll withdrew, there was no League here, nor was I a delegate, although invited to serve as proxy, nor did I, nor could I, hav made any such ridiculous statements. Simpson made some boasts of what he would do with me—and got left.

But his contemptibleness is shown in his malicious misquotation, pretending to be from my article in Lucifer of October last. Being a printer, there is no possible palliation for his misuse of the quotation marks, but proves his deliberate purpose was to falsify.

5. "Who had also written a tirade against the 'cowardly Watts,' who retreated from the party in England when that party was in danger."

I confess to being prejudiced against Watts at that time, but the chief source of that prejudice was Simpson, who, as a recent arrival, professed to know all about the feud between Watts and Bradlaugh, and gave me the impression that his elevation here would be construed as a reflection upon Bradlaugh.

Here is the "tirade," which Mr. Harmon has just sent me from Kansas, and there is no "cowardly Watts," or word about "retreating from the party in England when that party was in danger," in the entire article. What I said was:

"At the previous Congress a resolution of cheer and encouragement was sent Charles Bradlaugh and his brilliant associate. In strange contrast, this 'new deal' Congress elevates to the second place (with the strongest probability that it will be the first) one who, as a seceder from Bradlaugh at a critical period, whose antagonism to the former became so pronounced as to threaten a serious breach in the ranks of British Secularists (until Bradlaugh's attitude was better understood and his course thoroughly vindicated) is scarcely likely to rouse enthusiasm among American Radicals or giv assurance of their faith in Bradlaugh. One of the most severely sarcastic letters of Moncure D. Conway was written deprecating Watts's position at that time. Mr. Watts possesses remarkable ability, and it is to be hoped his course here will not take the drift it did in England."

It is presumed that Mr. Watts can survive such a "tirade." The above statements and evidence form conclusiv proof as to who did the "misrepresenting" which Mrs. Swank professes to deplore, and show that Simpson in this matter has been liberal with everything but the truth.

Mrs. Swank says it was not a question of dynamite and "but one member could be accused of advocating dynamite." Was not Mr. Fielden also a member? This extract from the Daily News throws some light on the matter:

"DYNAMITE AS A SAVIOR.

"'Dynamite is a peacemaker,' said Mrs. Swank, at the Socialists' meeting at 54 West Lake street last night. 'It is certainly quick and does not torture its victims to death like the present system does. I see no half-way ground between the present system and the Commune.' Thomas Keegan said it would be easy enough to adjust affairs after the Socialists took possession. 'The first thing we would do,' he said, 'would be to get a suit of clothes and what we wanted and go to work running the machines the next day. The public is listening to us. The best thing to make it listen is the dynamite bomb.'

"'The government which makes laws to help both the rich and the poor helps neither, and ought to get out of the way,' said Samuel Fielden. 'Sooner or later we shall hav to adopt the idea of Communistic Anarchy.' John A. Henry believed that all the Socialists had to do was to convince the capitalists that they (the Socialists) had the power to take what they wanted and they would get it. Mrs. A. R. Parsons said: 'Dynamite is our savior. We don't want a better savior. Let us learn how to make it and then not spare its use.'"

Everybody has had a good laugh about "the most intelligent men and best speakers," etc. I hav no doubt they thought so, and are, of course, entitled to that opinion. No one will ever accuse Simpson of being "climacteric and cumulativ." One night he lectured his friend

Hinckley said: "What does Stevens mean by having Simpson lecture? Does he want to break up the League? I had a half a dozen friends who were coming, but they could not be bored." Mrs. Swank need not be so doleful about "the downfall of the high aims" of the League. Dry your tears; they are quite unnecessary, as the original aims are exactly the same, only we hav determined to stick closer to our text. E. A. STEVENS.

LIBERAL LECTURES
IN PHILADELPHIA.

BY CHARLES WATTS,

ON SUNDAY APRIL 5th, 1885,
IN
Memorial Hall, 9th St., & Girard Ave.

Afternoon at 2.30—Subject:
Secularism; Wherein it is Superior to Christianity.
Evening at 7.30 Subject:
Christianity; What Has it Done for the World?

The clergy are especially invited to be present and reply.
ADMISSION FREE.
3t12

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline, history the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1883, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

The Bible Analyzed.
BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:
The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.
BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES. THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.
PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

"REPUBLIC."
[Published in the rapidly growing young city, on Longfellow's "mountain of the prairie," Pipestone, Minn.]

Eight pages, weekly, $1.50 a year. Contains the news of the day, short stories, scientific miscellany, literary selections—but best of all, the REPUBLIC is unqualifiedly, uncompromisingly opposed to the LIQUOR TRAFFIC! It puts LIBERTY AGAINST LIQUOR! It opens its columns to Free Discussion. It challenges all opponents to meet it on the burning question of our time, PROHIBITION! The plea, that legal Prohibition annihilates PERSONAL LIBERTY will be met and refuted. All opponents to Prohibition will be accorded the right to reply. This is the WORKINGMAN'S REPUBLIC. And an advocate of WOMAN SUFFRAGE. When the mothers, wives, and daughters vote there will be an end to the RUM CURSE! When women vote we will hav a true Republic, and never before. The REPUBLIC is published to disseminate these principles. Shall we receive your aid?

Send all remittances to
W. F. JAMIESON, Editor and Publisher,
PIPESTONE, MINN.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SPECIAL TRIAL OFFERS! For sixteen 2c. U.S. postage stamps I will send 13 papers Choicest Seeds, growth of '84, 75 to 500 seeds and mixed colors in each paper: New Diamond Pansies, of largest size, over 100 superb variegated sorts, all mixed; Large Double Rose Asters 14 cols; Double Everlastings, 12 cols; New Scarlet Poppys, spotted black; Alyssum; Large fl. Phlox, 16 cols; Japan Pinks, 35 double and single vars. mixed; Asperula; New Double Gaillardia, the best annual introduced in 10 yr's; Calliopsis; Double Portulaca, double as roses; Candytuft; Old Clove-scented Pink. For only 52c. I will send 23 papers (worth $1.95 at regular rates), all the above & Verbena, 100 sorts mixed; New Emperor Petunia, 20 blotched, striped & beautifully fringed sorts mixed, best strain ever offered; Ice Plant, Velvet Flower; Chrysanthemum, 8c; Blue Daisy; New Cockscomb; Q Bells; Clarkia; Double Dwarf Aster, 10 c. Buy from grower and get live seeds sure to grow. Catalog with elegant plate of pinks, in 8 c. 5c, or with seeds, free. GOODELL, the Seed Grower, Amherst, Mass.

SEEDS.
CHEAPEST,
Pure & Best.
Gardeners trade a specialty. Packets only 3c. Cheap as dirt by oz. & lb. Postage or Exp. paid.
50000 Guides
FREE. Send your address for my most Beautiful Illustrated Garden-Guide ever printed. R. H. SHUMWAY, Rockford Ill.

PROSE POEMS
And Selections,
BY
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued.

It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author.

The work is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it.

In the more elegant styles of binding, this volume is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.

In workmanship the volume is a masterpiece. The type is large and beautiful; the paper heavy and richly tinted; the presswork faultless; and the binding, as perfect as the best materials and skill can produce. The book is quarto in size, and contains 248 pages. No item of expense has been spared to make the work worthy of author and public.

PRICES:

Silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side,	$2 50
Half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style,	4 50
Full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine,	7 50
Full tree calf, highest possible style and finish,	9 00

Sent to any address, postpaid, on receipt of price. THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
Popular Jewelry Store
Rochelle, Ill.

A FEW OF MY PRICES;

Solid silver stem-winding American Watches, hunting or open case; 2 oz. 7 jeweled, $10; 3 oz., $11; 4 oz $12; 5 oz. $14. Same cases with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13.50, $14.50, $16.50. Same case with full (15) jeweled movement, patent regulator, $17, $18, $19, $21. Same cases, with full jeweled adjusted patent regulator movements, $22, $23, $24, $26; key wind, $2 to $5 less; for best cases, silver caps and gold joints add $1.50, and for best filled gold cases (warranted for 20 years) add $10 to best silver cases, making a 11 jeweled hunting (filled case) stem-wind quick train watch only $28; same for ladies, $23. Ladies' solid gold stem-wind watches, latest styles, good American 11 jeweled movements, 10 kt, $24; 14 kt, $32; same full jeweled, $32 and $40—for fancy engraving add $3 to $5.

Prices and specifications for finer ladies' and gents' watches, including all the finest, richest, and most elaborately finished watches in the world, sent upon application.

Watches cleaned for $1; main springs, $1. Bank time-locks, chronographs, music boxes, etc., repaired at lowest rates, and all work warranted the best in the world or no pay.

Best steel spectacle made, $1; genuin pebbles, $2; good common, 25 cents. Best tripleplated teaspoons, $2; tablespoons, $4; knives, $1.75; forks, $1.75—all per set of six.

Parties desiring silverware, jewelry, diamonds, etc., for presents will do well to order sample package on selection and save money. Cash will be refunded on all goods not satisfactory.

Watches, etc., may be safely sent in unsealed packages per registered mail, and will be returned at my expense. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

P. S.—Stop over and see me when near Rochelle, Ill.

A NEW BOOK OF DIRECTIONS
FOR
CLEANSING THE BLOOD,
And Curing all forms of Disease that the Human Family is Subject to,
Without the Use of Any Medicine Whatever.
By Professor Nathaniel Pierce.
Price, 30 Cents.
6tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.
An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Five numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.
3tf

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humoug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y8

ONE MILLION COPIES will soon be sold TWENTY YEARS OF CONGRESS—By James G. Blaine. The only history of our Government from 1861 to 1881. Hon. John S. Wise, M. C. from Va., says: Whoever takes it up, no matter whether he be Mr. Blaine's friend or enemy, will never put it down until he has read the whole." $200 per month to good agents. Apply at once, The Henry Bill Pub. Co., Norwich, Ct.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

BIBLE MORALS.
TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Will Cure all Forms of Disease Without Medicine.

CONSULTING ROOMS,

471 WEST MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Something for Invalids to read and study over.—Stop Drugging and try Nature's Remedy, MAGNETISM.

For years past it has been known to the profession that Magnetism and Electricity were powerful agents for imparting vital force and energy to the worn-out sufferer from disease. Many humanitarians in the profession, thinking more of the alleviation of suffering than they did of the code of ethics by which they were bound, have resorted to magnetic treatment as a last resort and found themselves astonished at the effect upon their patients. They had been taught that medicine was an absolute essential in all cases, and that that failing, the patient must die, as nothing more could be done. Here and there an advanced thinker has flung aside the tie which bound him to his dogmatic brethren and has resorted to other and more scientific methods of treatment. As a result many, having broken the bonds which bound them to a system as barbarous as it was unscientific, have used their best energies to devise means for the alleviation of human suffering. Here and there the wondrous power of MAGNETISM was established, and many diseases hitherto classed as incurable readily submitted to its mild but potent influence. This agent to the intelligent observer was found everywhere. Being, as it is, the very essential of all life, it was found that the human body when in a diseased condition was almost bereft of this vital principle. If we can supply this vital force to the worn-out body the patient will get well.

Ah! but how is it to be done, says the physician. Science, however, came to the rescue, and solved the problem. Here and there throughout the world are fields of what are known as magnetic ore. It was observed that the ore, when carried upon the person, was found to be a safeguard against disease, and to this circumstance we are largely indebted for magnetic wearing apparel, for it was an easy transition from carrying magnetic ore to covering the body with permanently charged magnets, placed in garments fitted to every part of the body. Since the first introduction of magnetic appliances as a curative, there has been a number of these so-called magnetic garments foisted upon the public by men whose sole object was gain. Unscientific in construction, and having little if any magnetism in them, their life was of short duration; it was long enough, however, to demonstrate that when constructed upon scientific principles there was scarcely an ailment that human flesh is heir to that would submit to their healing influence.

THE EUREKAM AGNETIC APPLIANCES are superior to everything of a similar character heretofore offered to the public, being the only scientifically constructed appliance in the market; it is now two and a half years since they were first offered to the public, and during that time we hav treated thousands of patients, and not a single case of failure to receive benefit reported to us, while we are in daily receipt of testimonials of cures from all parts of the country. We know that disease cannot exist where these garments are worn in quantities as advised by us.

To all who may be afflicted with any of the following complaints, we say unhesitatingly, the Eureka Magnetic Garments will cure you:—Paralysis, Rheumatism, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Bleeding at the Lungs, Spinal Disease, Gout, Asthma, Bronchitis, Congestion of the Kidneys, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Loss of Energy, Heart Disease, Constipation, Consumption, Prolapsus Uteri, Chronic Peritonitis, Cancer, Ovarian Tumors Syphilis, Epilepsy, St. Vitus' Dance, and all form of chronic invalidism.

PRICE LIST.

Lung Invigorators,	$ 6 00
Gentlemen's Body Belts,	6 00
Sciatic Appliances,	5 00
Knee Caps,	3 00
Leg Belts,	4 00
Anklets,	4 00
Shoulder Appliances,	4 00
Wristlets, each,	1 50
Hat Bands,	1 00
Head Caps,	4 00
Sleeping Caps,	4 00
Abdominal Belts (ladies),	6 00
Gents' Vests,	15 00
Ladies' Jacket and Corset (combined),	18 00
Superfine Insoles (all leather),	1 00

While these garments can be procured at the above low prices no one can afford to be ill. Our ladies' supporters are just what every lady in the land needs, as it will be found a great assistance at certain periods; all these garments are made to measure, and a fit guaranteed. To ladies who are all dragged out a combination jacket and corset will restore you to new life and energy, and pay for itself an hundred fold in a few weeks' wear. This garment is only made from actual measure, and a perfect fit assured.

All communications answered free of charge. Address, DR. L. TENNEY, 471 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill. ☞ Agents wanted for Boston, New York Brooklyn, and Philadelphia.

Gems of Thought.

SCHOOLTEACHERS are needed to giv lessons to the uninformed regarding nature and her laws—men who hav made a thorough study of her phenomena and her principles, and who correctly place her above all priestly claims and pretensions. These men are called scientists, for science is the sum of all demonstrated knowledge, which is acquired by close observation, accura'e tests, and continued study and application. These are the true friends of mankind; these show men what is truth; they point out falsehoods and errors; they prove that everything that takes place is natural; that nothing ever was or ever can be supernatural.—D. M. Bennett.

BOOKS! Wondrous is the virtue of a true book, Not like a dead city of stones, yearly crumbling, yearly needing repair; more like a tilled field—but then a spiritual field; like a spiritual tree, let us rather say, it stands from year to year and from age to age (we hav books that already number some hundred and fifty human ages); and yearly commences its new produce of leaves (commentaries, deduction, philosophical, political systems; or were it only sermons, pamphlets, journalistic essays), everyone of which is talismanic and thaumaturgic, for it can persuade men. O thou that art able to write a book, which once in the two centuries or oftener there is a man gifted to do, envy not him whom they name city-builder, and inexpressibly pity him whom they name conqueror or city-burner! Thou, too, art a conqueror and victor; but of the true sect, namely, over the devil; thou, too, hast built what will outlast all marble and metal and be a wonder-bringing city of the mind—a temple and seminary and prophetic mount, whereunto all kindreds of the earth will pilgrim.—Sartor Resartus.

HE who thinks that we are to pitch our tent here and hav attained the utmost prospect of reformation, that the mortal glass, wherein we contemplate can show us, till we come to beautiful vision—that man, by this very opinion, declares that he is yet far short of truth.—Milton's Areopagitica.

HE is the freeman whom the truth makes free,
And all are slaves beside. There's not a chain
That hellish foes, confederate for his harm,
Can wind around him, but he casts it off
With as much ease as Samson his green withes.
—Cowper.

ON parent knees, a naked, new-born child,
Weeping thou sat'st while all around thee smiled.
So liv that, sinking in thy last long sleep,
Calm thou may'st smile, while all around thee weep.
—From the Persian.

INSTEAD of a pure question of truth, Christianity has been made a question of sentiment, and the wishes of the heart hav mingled with the exercises of the understanding. Since, however, the inquiry is not about its character but its truth, the philosopher will be careful to separate the exercises of the understanding from the tendencies of the fancy or the heart. He should be prepared to follow the light of evidence, though it may lead him to conclusions the most painful and melancholy. He should train his mind to all the hardihood of abstract and unfeeling intelligence. He should giv up everything to the supremacy of argument, and be able to renounce, without a sigh, all the tenderest prepossessions of infancy the moment that truth demands of him the sacrifice.—Dr. Thomas Chalmers.

TRUTH ought to be the object of every man; for without truth there can be no real happiness to a thoughtful mind, nor any assurance of happiness hereafter. It is the duty of every man to obtain all the knowledge he can, and then make the best use of it.—Paine's Age of Reason.

THOSE who, though they hav a very good opinion of philosophy, still think that it should be followed only in a moderate degree, require a temperance which is very difficult in a thing which, when once it has the reins given it, cannot be checked or repressed; so that I almost think those men more reasonable who forbid us to apply ourselvs to philosophy at all than they who fix a limit to things which are in their nature boundless, and who require moderation in a thing which is excellent exactly in proportion to its intensity. For if it be possible that men should arrive at wisdom, it should not only be acquired but also enjoyed by use. Or if this be difficult, still there is no limit to the search after truth till you hav it, and to grow weary in the search is base indeed when what you are searching for is so glorious and so divine.—Cicero.

THE devout philosopher, trained to the investigation of universal system—the serene astronomer, fresh from the study of the changeless laws which govern innumerable worlds—shrinks from the monstrous irrationality of asking the grand architect and governor of all to work a miracle in his behalf—to interfere, for the sake of his convenience, or his plans, with the sublime order conceived by the Ancient of Days, in the far eternity of the past; for what is "a special providence" but an interference with established laws? And what is such interference but a miracle?—W. R. Greg.

THEY take very unprofitable pains who endeavor to persuade men that they are obliged wholly to despise this world and all that is in it, even whilst they themselvs liv here. God hath not taken all that pains in forming and framing and furnishing and adorning the world, that they who were made by him to liv in it should despise it; it will be enough if they do not love it so immoderately as to prefer it before him who made it; nor shall we endeavor to extend the notions of the Stoic philosophers, and stretch them further by the help of Christian precepts, to the extinguishing all those affections and passions which are, and will always be, inseparable from human nature. As long as the world lasts, and honor and virtue and industry hav reputation in the world, there will be ambition and emulation and appetite in the best and most accomplished men in it; if there should not be, more barbarity and vice and wickedness would cover every nation of the world than it yet suffers under.—Lord Clarendon's Essay on Happiness.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,

ORTHODOXY.

A Lecture by

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

"The clergy know that I know that they know that they do not know."

One of the best documents to circulate ever printed. Every man, woman, and child in the United States should read it. Every reader of the paper should send for a dozen.

Price, singly, 10 cents; twelve for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

INGERSOLL CATECHISED;

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies for a dollar. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."

Proving conclusivly that

THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST

His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth

TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine." "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

COMPLETE WORKS, in One Volume. Half calf, 5.00

THIRD EDITION.

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

1 Vol. Royal 8vo. Cloth. About 600 pages.

Price, - - - - - - $3.00

Sent postpaid, on receipt of price, Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Odds and Ends.

"ME FIND," tellingly remarks an editor, whose compositors hav struck, "tyAt Me caN Gat oxt owr pepor withant thn aid of af ony of thase besky onlun combosutors." There is nothing better in this world than self-reliance.

STRANGER (to Chicago citizen): I hear that one of your prominent divines has said that Chicago is a religious city, containing a breadth and sweetness of the Christian faith not common upon earth. Chicago citizen (indignantly): You shouldn't believe all you hear about Chicago. That minister must be a crank.

MRS KILGRAIN PIDGEON, of Austin, is very conscientious in the discharge of her religious duties. Yesterday, at breakfast, Mr. Pidgeon, who was reading the morning paper, remarked: "That was a horrible affair in Paris. Day before yesterday a lion tamer was eaten up by the lions." "W-h-a-t!" exclaimed Mrs. Pidgeon. "In Lent?"

A PRETTY rough story on somebody is told of a short but spirited conversation taking place between a prominent Presbyterian citizen and a Catholic priest, both residents of this city. The p. c. was passing the Catholic church while the vestibule was being put through a course of renovation. "Pretty dirty water. Was it made so by the washing away of sins?" smilingly inquired the p. c. "Yes," answered the priest, "I hav just baptized two Presbyterian ministers." Exit p. c.

LAST week the tired editor, after laboring hard in the vinyard, concluded that he would go out among the brethren. While down in the Dry Fork neighborhood we preached at Ebenezer, and accompanied Brother Sam Hayfoot home to dinner. There were several of the brethren present, and among them we were pleased to notice old Brother Shopwell. He is an old servant of the Lord, and had the small-pox kept out of the way we think that his countenance would hav escaped a great wrong. Sister Hayfoot, kind reader, knows how to get up a good dinner. She has our idea of cooking cabbage, for, like us, she thinks that they should be boiled until all their brittleness melts into the everlasting pot. After having served the inner man we again assembled in the sitting-room, where Sister Stovepall favored us with a hymn and seventy-five cents, for which she wanted six months' subscription. One dollar would hav struck us with a little more warmth, but in these days of sin and hard times a half loaf is better than a Boston cracker. Brother Smithfield, a good old soul as ever lived, declares that he will take the paper when he sells his red steer. Gentle reader, do you know of any one who wants to buy a steer?—Arkansas Traveler.

THE BABY OF THE FUTURE.

NURSE.—How doth the little busy bee
Improve each shining hour,
And gather honey all the day
From every opening flower!

BABY (coldly).—How does the little bee do this?
Why, by an impulse blind;
Cease, then, to praise good works of such
An automatic kind.

NURSE.—Let dogs delight to bark and bite,
For heaven hath made them so;
Let bears and lions growl and fight,
For 'tis their nature to.

BABY (ironically).—Indeed! A brutal nature, then,
Excuses brutal ways.
Unthinking girl! you little know
The problems that you raise.

NURSE (continuing).—But, children, you should never let
Your angry passions rise;
Your little hands were never made
To tear each other's eyes.

BABY (contemptuously).—Not made to tear! Well, what of that?
No more, at first, were claws.
All comes by adaptation, fool!
No need of Final Cause
And if we use the hands to tear,
Just as the nose to smell,
Ere many ages have gone by
They'll do it very well.

NURSE.—Tom, Tom, the Piper's son,
Stole a pig, and away he run!

BABY (reproachfully).—Come, come! Away he "run!"
Grammar condemns what you've just "done."
Should we not read, "The piper's man,
Stole a pig, and away he 'ran?'"

NURSE.—Hush-a-by, baby,
On the tree top;
When the wind blows
The cradle will rock.
When the bough breaks
The cradle will fall;
Down will come baby,
Cradle, and all.

BABY (slyly).—This is a truth
So familiar, you see,
As hardly to need
Illustration to me.

NURSE.—Twinkle, twinkle, little star.
How I wonder what you are!

BABY (pityingly).—Do you really wonder, Jane?
And to me all seems so plain!
Go downstairs, my girl, and find,
Books that will improve your mind;
And if heavenly bodies then
Still remain beyond your ken,
You had better go and ax
Good Professor Parallax.

NURSE.—Bye, baby-bunting.
Father's gone a-hunting,
All to get a rabbit's skin
To wrap the baby-bunting in.

BABY (sternly).—The cruel sport of hunting
To moral sense is stunting;
And since papa's objection
To useful vivisection
Convicts him, as it seems to me,
Of signal inconsistency,
I must, with thanks, decline the skin
For wrapping baby-bunting in.

[Puts Nurse to bed. Scene closes.]

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 14. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, April 4, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

In an address at the Louisville University the late Dr. Yandell is quoted as recommending a habit of cheerfulness: "A wide-spreading, hopeful disposition," he would say, "is your only true umbrella in this vale of tears."

"Accounts of revivals," says the Independent, "still fill our exchanges. Their fruits are precious and abundant." As for instance, Mr. Chris Dongel, of Ohio, who was so recently converted from a peaceable citizen into a religious maniac.

The Baptist Weekly says: "Joseph Cook is now trying to get Boston ministers to beg him to attack secret societies, that is, he sent petitions to the meetings, saying if the ministers would sign them and back him he would be dreadful brave."

The intolerant sort of people would begin with the extreme heretics, and when they had silenced them they would naturally go to work against the next, until finally the intolerant people would be eating each other up. —Galveston News.

The Rev. Mr. Pentecost, of this city, took Colonel Ingersoll for his text last Sunday. He said, among other things, that the colonel "once belonged to the Liberal League." The amount of information with which the critics of Freethought arm themselvs is surprising. It is a wonder where they get it all.

Bishop McQuaid, of Rochester, has ordered that hereafter in his diocese none but Roman Catholics and actual communicants shall sing in the choirs. He says: "How revolting it is for the congregation to hear the voice of one who does not believe in what he or she is singing. It is mockery, instead of worship." It would be well also, perhaps, to inquire as to the religious soundness of the men who manufactured the organs, as well as of their ancestors. There is no doubt that the Almighty is very particular about these things.

The Catholic citizens hav petitioned the Mercer county courts, asking that the school directors of Sharpsville, Pa., be restrained from allowing the use of the Bible in the public schools. The petitioners claim that the service is offensiv to all members of the Catholic church, and calculated to injure their children by inculcating erroneous views. The question is agitating the whole county, as it is the first time that it has been carried into the courts in the history of the state. It is the intention of the defeated side to take it to the Supreme Court.

At Winnebah, on the west coast of Africa, the people are always hungry, more or less, and the only way it can be accounted for is that the missionaries hav full control of the place. The nativs had a square meal, recently, though, and the missionaries came pretty near giving up in disgust. Some of the people got to discussing religion, and a quarrel arose which ended in a riot. When the riot was over it was found that several of the nativs had been killed. The bodies were seized upon by the people, and a grand feast was immediately prepared. The missionaries were invited to partake of some of the human steak, but respectfully declined.—Peck's Sun.

The subscription for the relief of Charles Newdegate, Mr. Bradlaugh's persistent persecutor, has been closed. Some $2,217.22 were collected, but the cost to Mr. Newdegate reached about $10,000. Newdegate's animosity to Mr. Bradlaugh is explained by the fact that he is a great sufferer from fits, falling down in them at unexpected times. Last August he was prostrated in the lobby of the House of Commons, of which he is a member. On hearing of the incident, Mr. Bradlaugh is said to hav exclaimed, "What! another drunk!" This remark intensified a hatred that had long existed between the two men, and Mr. Newdegate sought revenge by suing Mr. Bradlaugh to compel him to pay the statutory penalty for taking his seat as a member of the House without having taken the prescribed oath. The suit failed. Mr. Newdegate's friends sent the hat around, appealing to everybody for help, with the result seen.

The Salvation Army abduction cases show very plainly what temptations young girls are subjected to in the midst of religious revivals, with the sequence of unhealthy excitement in which both sexes commingle. Talk about the immoral tendencies of the rinks, they are nothing to the religious "Love Feasts" of the Methodists.—Skater's Gazette.

The first page of The Truth Seeker is occupied with an object-lesson for those who favor the "Freedom of Worship" bill before the legislature in New York. It impresses more forcibly than words the position that Catholicism is assuming in this country, and should open the eyes of legislators if they are not too corrupt to care what they do.—Missouri Liberal.

The territory of Dakota, says the Fargo Argus, pays more revenue to the post-office department than any one of thirty-two states of the Union, and has a population as large as Nebraska or Connecticut, and nearly twice as large as Vermont and Florida. It boast 2,500 miles of railway, 2,000 school-houses, and 275 newspapers, or more periodicals than any New England state except Massachusetts.

Thomas Judson Cluverius is now in jail in Richmond, Va., charged with having caused the death of a young lady by throwing her into the reservoir. His piety is phenomenal. On rising mornings he spends considerable time in prayer and other devotional exercises. In King William county, his home, he was an earnest Baptist, and so fervent in this respect that the community was at first horrified at the bare idea of his being arrested for such a crime. After he was arrested and was being driven to Richmond in a buggy, a policeman sitting on each side of him, he seemed to derive much pleasure from singing to himself the hymn: "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand."

The Hon. John A. Martin, governor of Kansas, makes two very interesting statements in his proclamation which designates April 2d as Arbor Day, when old and young turn out to plant trees. He says that "the state which the pioneers found treeless" and a desert, now bears upon its fertil bosom "more than twenty millions of fruit-trees, and more than two hundred thousand acres of forest-trees, all planted by our own people." And the governor also says: "That there has been an increase in the rainfall in Kansas is fully proved by the statistics of our oldest meteorologists." Every state should establish an Arbor Day, and every citizen should remember that it is a good thing to plant trees on any day in the season.

The St. Paul Times alleges this to be the reverie of a church sexton: "Splendid day! We'll hav quite a turn-out. There's nothing like sunshine to draw an audience. It's better than all the popular preachers that ever were born. Oh, there's my memorandum-book; I'd like to hav forgotten it, and if them directions hadn't been attended to, most likely I should hav lost my place. [Takes out a memoranda and reads]: 'By order of Judge R., the woman who squints and eats cardamon seeds is not to be put in the seat in front of him. By order of Squire B., the young man who ogles his daughter and wears plaid pants is to be put somewhere on the other side of the church. By order of the wealthy Miss Prudence Prim, the young men whose clothes smell of cigars and brandy shall be set behind her. The request of Mr. A., mechanic, that strangers be not shown into his pew—to be attended to if convenient.' Quite a chapter, anyhow, But people are beginning to streak in. There's two young women waiting. They are common sort of folks, I guess; gentility don't come quite so early as this. Hav a seat, marm? She says, with a bow, 'If you please, sir.' No matter—politeness is a cheap article; it don't cost nothing. So here goes the two women into one of the back wall pews. Here's two more birds of the same feather; woolen shawls, straw bonnets, and cotton gloves; wall pew second from the door—good enough in all conscience. Ah, there's a bride! Satin, velvet, and white kids; fine broadcloth and white vest. Shall I hav the pleasure of showing yourself and lady some seats? They must hav some first-rate seats, for they are evidently somebodies. What difference there is in folks! Now there's a dressmaker and a schoolmistress, nobodies. Back seats good enough. Two young lawyers—somebodies; I must find a seat in the middle aisle. A broken-down minister, coat rather seedy, cravat rather coarse—nobody—side aisle. Six fashionable boarding-school girls—somebodies—middle aisle, if possible. Rouged cheeks, but a splendid silk cloak, somebody—middle aisle. An apprentice boy, decent-looking, but a nobody—side aisle. Who'll say I aint a judge of human nature? Don't I know who a man is the minute I see him? Now there's one of our seedy-coated old fellows coming. Don't I set him down as a nobody, and won't he be glad to get any kind of a seat? I'll show folks that I understand my business. Hav a seat, sir? . . . Confound my ill luck. Just as I was putting him into one of the poorest seats of the house, along comes Judge R., who, spying him, comes up and says he, 'Ah, how d'ye do, Governor B.? Take a seat with me, sir; my wife will rejoice to meet you.' Shaking hands with the seedy coat, he looked daggers at me, and I'll bet a fourpence I've lost my place. Who'd hav thought the old fellow was an ex-governor?"

Respectable Citizen: "Mr. Policeman, I giv this fellow in charge. Just look at my face. The blackguard struck me without the least provocation, and raised this big lump on my right cheek." Mr. Robert: "Praise the Lord, my dear brother in Christ, and obey his holy word—'Whoso smiteth thee on the one cheek, turn unto him the other also.' Ask him to giv you a lump on the other side." R. C.: "Why, you confounded fool, what do you mean?" Mr. R.: "Ah, my dear friend, say not so. Remember the text, 'Whoso calleth his brother a fool is in danger of hell fire." R. C.: "Oh, hang your texts. I tell you the fellow wanted to rob me. He snatched at my overcoat and nearly got it." Mr. R.: "God be thanked. Sir, your duty is clear, 'If one take from thee thy coat, giv thy cloak also.'" R. C.: "D'ye call yourself a policeman? You're more fit for the Salvation Army. I tell you the fellow is a trained thief. He had his pals with him, and they tried to draw me down that dirty alley." Mr. R.: "Bless his holy name! And why didn't you go? Sir, you should ask them to drag you down another alley—'If one compel thee to go with him a mile, go with him twain.'" R. C.: "Confound you, you idiot. What's your number? I'll report you at the police-office." Mr. R.: "Do sir, and I shall be promoted. Our superintendent is secretary of the Policeman's Christian Association." R. C. "Indeed! So London is to be given over to thieves, is it?" Mr. R.: "Hallellujah! For of such is the kingdom of heaven."—London Freethinker.

In a recent issue Blackwood's Magazine thus describes an old-time religious ceremony: "The sufferers at the hands of the Inquisition had been generally peasants accused of witchcraft, Moors, or Jews; but on occasions there was a more remarkable train of prisoners. Nobles and gentleman, ladies of the highest rank, eloquent divines, were among the convicted. The regent took her place under a canopy of state; the multitude gathered round a platform in the middle of the area, on which the inquisitor-general and his train were stationed. The long line of prisoners consisted of 'the black-gowned penitents who were to be reprimanded and set free; those in robes painted with downward pointing flames, who were to suffer fine and imprisonment, and those whose garbs, hideous with fire and fiends, denoted that their bodies were to be burnt for the salvation of their souls.' A sermon was preached, then an oath of faith was administered by an archbishop to the regent and to her nephew, the heir to the throne. A secretary made known to the multitude the terms of this oath; the archbishop blessed their highnesses; and then a crier shouted forth the names, crimes, and sentences of the accused, fifteen of whom were to die. They were executed at once. 'The princess regent of Spain, and the noble knights and dames of Castille, looked on as the flames crept and eaped round the tortured limbs of men who had been their familiar friends and spiritual advisers, of fair and delicate women dragged from splendid homes or from the solitude of the cloister.'"

News of the Week.

A war is in progress between several of the states of central America.

Tom Thumb's widow is to be married on the 6th instant to Count Primo Magri.

The people of New Jersey think of transferring the capital of the state from Trenton to Newark.

The city treasurer of Oswego, N. Y., Thomas Crawford by name, is missing. So is the sum of $26,000.

Dangerous freshets are feared from the thaw which has set in on the upper Hudson in New York state.

There is a good prospect of peace between England and Russia, though both countries profess to be ready to fight.

Strawberries can be purchased in New York at 50 cents per quart. Green peas are worth 60 cents per peck.

The British are not very activ in the Soudan at present. Their reception by the Arabs has not been such as to encourage them.

The Spiritualists in many places began on Sunday, the 29th, to celebrate the thirty-seventh anniversary of modern Spiritualism.

The Chinese forces gained a victory over the French at Langson, in Tonkin, China, last Friday. The French troops retreated with heavy losses.

A New York Herald correspondent has canvassed the Assembly of this state and concludes that the majority will vote for the bill giving the Catholics freedom to inflict their worship on the convicts, called the Freedom of Worship bill.

A bill has been passed by the Nevada Assembly imposing a fine of $20 on any person who treats another in a saloon. The bill does not prevent any number of persons from going into a saloon and drinking together, but requires that each man shall pay for his own drink.

Colonel Ingersoll delivered the last of his course of lectures in New York on Sunday evening to one of the largest audiences ever assembled in the Bijou Opera House. His subject was, "What Must We Do to be Saved?" It contained many new points, and was received with great applause.

General Grant is gradually growing weaker. Last Saturday night he was attacked with spasm of the throat and called out that he was surely dying. His physicians were summoned and found the danger imminent, but were able to afford relief. The doctors say that, barring some casuality, the general is not in immediate danger.

The half-breed residents of British America, in the vicinity of Duck Lake, are in rebellion against the government of Canada. They are led by a man named Riel, and hav twice met and defeated the police and volunteer troops sent to subdue them. The insurgents now number 200 or 300, and fears are entertained that they will be joined by the disaffected Indian tribes of the Northwest and make still more serious trouble for the British authorities.

A remarkable story comes from Macon, Georgia. Mrs. Fannie Howard was the widow of James Franklin Howard. After Howard's death, one Sterling came into the neighborhood. The widow, struck by Sterling's resemblance to her late husband, encouraged his advances, which resulted in a wedding; but as soon as the bridal party stepped out into the hallway of the church, while the lady's attention was attracted by some object, she felt her arm deprived of its support, and, looking quickly, observed that she was standing alone; her husband had vanished into a cloud. She came to the conclusion that it was the materialized spirit of her first husband, which, attracted by its strong love for its late mate, clothed itself again in the flesh, and thus presented itself under the name of Sterling. The lady is now a Spiritualist.

Communications.

Talmage Under the Hammer.

When Talmage went down to the New Orleans Exposition to perform the great opening prayer act, he got within speaking distance of his God. It is reasonable to suppose that at the approach of winter God floated down that way in order to enjoy a more salubrious climate.

The smoke arising from the vast amount of beef and mutton which had to be roasted in order to feed the multitude entered his nostrils and made him feel "first-rate," and Talmage was so soft on him that he got promoted. Since he has got another holy star on his shoulder-strap Talmage thinks that he is about equal to God, and has concluded to take matters into his own hands.

God has had so much on his hands, owing to erring ministers, that he has not been able to punish Infidels as they deserve, and matters hav been running at loose ends long enough, and Mr. Talmage is going to hav Infidelity "stopped, and stopped now." Mr. Ingersoll has been turning Mr. Talmage's Great Spoutagligasticus into a "big joke." This will never do. Talmage is wroth, and "Bob Ingersoll" must be suppressed.

Mr. Ingersoll lectured in Brooklyn a few Sundays ago, and got in some good work, and though he assumed no privileges which he would not freely grant to another, and although Mr. Talmage has had him under his great theological hammer, yet somehow it is not satisfactory.

For a man to preach year after year, and then hav all his work kicked over in one lecture by an unregenerate heathen, is a crime so heinous that God will never be able to mete out justice in the case without help from Mr. Talmage.

Talmage is down in the mouth. The people hav lost reverence for the Great Spoutagligasticus. The devil doesn't appear quite as sooty and ugly as he did, and the mercury does not indicate quite as low a temperature in the country where ministers are so anxious to colonize Infidels. In short, Mr. Talmage is in the same fix that the colored man was who bet on the dog-fight—would hav won the money if it hadn't been for the "other dog."

Now, Mr. Talmage, I want to sit down with you and hav a little plain talk in regard to your criticisms on the lecture above referred to, and I wish it distinctly understood that what I am going to say is not in defense of Colonel Ingersoll; he requires nothing of the kind at my hands.

You are pleased to say that "Christianity is the rising sun of our time." Do you draw this conclusion from the great number of bank defaulters and sneak thieves, nearly every one of whom has been a Sabbath-school superintendent, or a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, or in some way connected with the church? Is it because such an undue proportion of Christian ministers are found in the prisons and penitentiaries? Is it because Christianity gave us a thousand years of the most revolting ignorance and degrading superstition that the world ever passed through, when the grandeur of Greece and Rome were exchanged for the reign of a selfish, tyrannical, and bloodthirsty priesthood?

From the fourteenth century we look back through a thousand years of Christian rule, like looking through a desert waste, to the green fields of pagan Greece and Rome which lie beyond. Greece and Rome gleam from the page of history with a brightness as far transcending the Christian ignorance of the dark ages as the light of the sun transcends the light of a glow worm.

And you, Mr. Talmage, are striving with what power has been given you to beat back the men who are bearing aloft the torches to enlighten the minds of men. Welcome the darkness of the bats and the owls, say you, rather than hav the power slip from the hands of a pampered priesthood. Though humanity is trampled in the dust, your great Spoutagligasticus must be glorified. God above humanity, the darkness of ignorance above the light of reason, the priesthood above the masses.

You say, "What the destruction of the sun would be to our planet the destruction of Christianity would be to the world of morals." Was there no morality in the world before the birth of Christ? Are priests and ministers Christians? Hav you read Billings's book on the "Crimes of Preachers?" Hav you read Remsburg's lectures on "Bible Morals" and "False Claims of the Church?"

Did you know that Constantine, the great Mogul of the Christian religion, murdered his own son, and wife, and nephew, and mother-in-law? Did you know that through the past centuries the church of Christ has been adorned with some of the bloodiest monsters and cruel tyrants that ever disgraced the name of civilization? Did you know that the early fathers claimed that they glorified God when they lied in the interest of the church?

Were not the wars of the Crusades, which strewed the country with human bones from the north of Europe to the Holy Land, carried on by Christians? Are not some of the most cruel instruments of torture which the world has ever seen purely Christian inventions?

A Christian minister is as much out of place talking about the morals of the world as a monkey would be in a milliner shop. We hav a man in our neighborhood who was formerly a slave. There are marks on his back, caused by a Christian lash, which he will carry to his grave. He told me the other day that he saw two men bound and whipped until they paid no more attention to a blow of the paddle than blocks of wood. They were carried away limp and insensible. One did not recover in three months, and the other died the same afternoon. Why did your great Spoutagligasticus allow such an outrage upon humanity? Is not slavery a Bible institution? Let us see (Lev. xxv, 46): "And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you to inherit them as a possession. They shall be your bondmen forever." Who can reverence such a God? Talk about blasphemy! I tell you, Mr. Talmage, your heavenly nondescript is a myth.

You represent Mr. Ingersoll as saying, "When we compare our God with men, he is not much of a God." Correct. Now for the proof: "Now therefore behold the Lord hath put a lying spirit into the mouths of all these thy prophets" (1 Kings, xxii, 23). I tell you, Mr. Talmage, a decent man is far above such a God."

"If the prophet hath been deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord hath deceived that prophet." Is this the basis of Christian morality? Any wonder the early fathers lied for the church? Does a man want to look any farther for a license to lie and deceive? "Their children shall be dashed to pieces before their eyes" (Isa. xiii, 16). "Suffer little children to come unto me." Who can tell which way to take such a God?

> "He dodges in and dodges out,
> And leaves the people still in doubt.
> You cannot tell, to see his track,
> If going south or coming back."

"The fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of them, and the sons shall eat the fathers" (Ezek. v. 10); "And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat" (Lev. xxvi, 29). "And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat everyone the flesh of their friends" (Jer. xix, 9). "And thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and thy daughters" (Deut. xxviii, 53). Mr. Ingersoll is right. A decent man is just as much above such a God as civilization is above cannibalism. When a God drops below cannibals it is too late in the day to talk about blasphemy. Cannibals do not eat their own children. If God is the author of the above language, I say, with Colonel Ingersoll, "he is not much of a God," and morality founded upon such teaching is nothing to be proud of.

You further represent Colonel Ingersoll as saying: "When Christ was on earth, he was kind and forgiving, but now that he is a God he would send men into everlasting punishment, and that was doubtless the effect of an office." In this country men are voted into office, and in like manner Christ was voted God. This fact no doubt suggested to the mind of Colonel Ingersoll the idea of office. If there had been more Arians, and more of those of Jewish descent, and fewer of those of paganistic proclivities, in the Nicene Council, the vote might hav been different, and then Christ would not hav been God.

You say, "I believe in all kinds of freedom. I believe in driving horses, but not in driving over others." Are you not trying to drive over Colonel Ingersoll, treating him like a criminal, denying him and every other Infidel in the country the right to speak their sentiments? "I believe in the free use of the knife, but not in assassination." Yes, you believe in the free use of the knife when you can stab somebody in the back; but when the keen knife of Ingersoll's logic is applied to your celestial mongrel of a God, part human, part divine, and part holy wind, then you sneak away to your coward corner and cry police.

Yes, you are a great man for freedom, but you would force everybody to bow down before your three-pronged, triple-headed heavenly hydra or holy mule, without reason or regard for the fitness of things. I never yet hav trifled with a reasonable belief in a reasonable God, which many very intelligent men regard as the soul of things.

But this great Spoutagligasticus, whose mercy endureth forever, who yet orders helpless children to be slain by the thousand; who is all powerful and wise, and yet repents of what he has done; who is filled with love, and yet gets mad and swears in his wrath, I regard as only a fit subject for ridicule. Mr. Talmage, take away from your God this barbaric feature, and reduce him to a respectable God, and then respectable men will respect him.

"I believe in the freedom of speech, but not in the freedom of blasphemy." What is blasphemy? How can one blaspheme such a God as I hav described. Suppose you should see a lot of savages kneeling around a block of wood with a Talmagian mouth carved on it, great glaring eyes, and big ears and nose, and daubed with yellow mud, can you tell me how you could blaspheme such a god? Would you like to be punished because you could not venerate such a god?

Your Bible God is just as hideous to me. Hav I not the same right to say so? Should I be punished for expressing my opinion more than you?

"Freedom to do right, but no freedom to do wrong."

But who is to be the judge? The churches are constantly quarreling among themselvs as to what is right and wrong, and turning out ministers for differing in regard to these matters. It used to be right for ministers to get drunk. It used to be right to send little babies to hell. It used to be right to hang witches. It used to be right to lay the lash on the naked back of a helpless woman, and drag her at the tail-end of a cart through the streets. It used to be right to burn heretics, and mutilate and torture them in the most Christian manner—or at least the church said it was right. Yes, you believe in a great deal of that kind of freedom which allows you to hold your hand over a man's mouth when he does not talk as you believe. Freedom to do all the talking yourself. Why did you wish to set the chief of police on Colonel Ingersoll? Did he say anything to injure you personally? If he said anything against your Great Spoutagligasticus, is he so feeble that he could not punish him?

Do you pretend to assume power which God does not exercise? If Colonel Ingersoll said anything against God, is he not able to punish him? Are you to take the work out of God's hands? Allow me to tell you, Mr. Talmage, there are veins to be pricked in this country before your ideas of freedom will be realized.

The humblest individual has the right to criticise the acts of the president, and I hav the same right to criticise your God that I hav to criticise you. The day has gone by when even the gods can stifle the freedom of speech and pen in this country.

On the same page of the paper which reported your sermon on Ingersoll is a picture of the block on which Mary, Queen of Scots, Sir Walter Raleigh, Anne Boleyn, and many others, lost their heads. The headsman's ax is also represented. Could anything be more appropriate? Fit companions for your intolerant spirit—with the headsman's ax in your hands, and clothed with power, you might silence Colonel Ingersoll, but you can never do it in the arena of fair discussion. All through the Christian ages bigots hav given point to their arguments with cold steel, when overreached by reason and common sense.

"You say: "In all states and nations where Christianity has been dominant, woman has been honored. . . Christianity has lifted her up almost to the skies; withdraw that and she will fall down to the level of savagery."

Rome is one of the most Christian cities in the world, and I will bet you a bottle of sacramental wine (of course that is innocent) that there are more degraded women in that city, according to the number of inhabitants, than can be found in any other city on the face of the globe.

But let us see how the women themselvs regard your statement.

At a convention in Massachusetts they resolved "that every form of religion that has breathed upon the earth has degraded woman."

Has Christianity ever put any woman to death by flaying, hanging, drowning, roasting, and boiling? Hav Christians bored out their eyes, poured hot lead in their ears, slit their noses, pulled out their tongues, cropped their ears, and branded them on various parts of the body with hot irons?

It strikes me that I could refer you to instances in history where women were stripped naked, and, with their babes in their arms, made to leap into flames in the name of the Lord.

"Destroy Christianity and you destroy society."

Mr. Talmage, was there no society in ancient Greece, and Rome, and Egypt? Did you never read of any noble and humane men and women before Christ? Is there no society except in Christian countries?

"Take away from men the fear of hell, and there are many men who would soon turn this world into a hell."

Here the beauty of Christianity is made manifest. What a sweet thought to the Christian that the Infidel is to be roasted in hell! God must be a savage, or he is no God for the Christians. A god who would not indorse and carry out their spleen and spite could not get a corporal's guard of Christians to rally around him. If a man is too humane to desire a hell for anybody, why, then, of course, according to the Christian idea, he will begin to raise hell right off. The more barbarous a Christian is, the less he feels in danger of hell himself, and the more he wants to see some one else roasted.

"I hav known men who flaunted their Infidelity in the eyes of the community for years, but when they came to die they shrieked until they could be heard two blocks away, and neighbors had to shut their windows because they could not endure the horror."

It would hav been well if the names of these Infidel shriekers had been given. It might hav acted as a warning, and been of vast importance to other Infidels. Now, Mr. Talmage, for the name of every Infidel shrieker that you will send to me, I will agree to send you the names of ten Infidels who passed away peacefully and calmly.

I hav no doubt that death is sometimes attended with great pain, but why it should be worse for an Infidel to shriek with pain than it is for a Christian is not apparent. I presume the woman-whippers, and witch-hangers, and heretic-burners all died with some disease which was not painful. Just a Christian's luck.

Some Christians hav a peculiar way of dying. They get jerked from the scaffold right up into the heavenly king-row. Guiteau and hundreds of others hav died that way, all attended by their ministers. All died Christians, and, of course, all died happy.

"The first thing they [the Infidels] will do is to abolish the churches, with their consolations for this life, and their blessed hope for the life to come."

It was said that if Jefferson was elected president, he would burn all the Bibles, and tear down all the churches. The people were mistaken; he was elected, he did not burn the Bibles, and the churches remained intact. If all the people were mistaken about one Infidel, may you not be mistaken about all the rest. But to "destroy the blessed consolations for the life to come!" Oh, how that gravels the kidneys of a Christian!

To turn the gaze of people from heaven to earth, to tell them that they never will sit on a thin cloud and blow a long whistle, to turn their attention to the welfare of the race, will never do. Take away the gods and ghosts, devils and angels, and lift the people above their superstitions, and the minister's occupation is gone; and that is the hell you most dread.

Now, Mr. Talmage, get the views of your congregation of God, heaven, and hell separately. Notwithstanding you hav been instructing them in these matters for years, you will find that no two agree, for the good reason that you had no information to impart to them. Nobody knows anything about these matters, and herein lies the wickedness of your profession. You claim to instruct the people in that which nobody can know anything about. Your congregation hav no definit ideas because you hav none to impart.

Christians generally believe that there is not much hard work to do in heaven, and that it is a comfortable place to stay, and that it is up. They think hell is rather a torrid climate, and that it is down. God is the great Spoutagligasticus whose time is mostly spent in rewarding Christians and punishing Infidels. Everything purely imaginary.

"They [the Infidels] will tear the pictures out of the galleries of Europe—they are Bible pictures."

More Bible pictures will be found in Russia, Spain, Portugal, Italy, and Ireland than in any other countries, and for ignorance, superstition, bigotry, and tyranny they hav no equals among the nations of the earth.

"When they find an angel in marble over a grave they will strike off its wings."

This comes with ill grace from a Christian. How hav the Christians treated the grave of Thomas Paine? If ministers tell the truth, there was so little respect for him that his grave was covered with filth, and the stone which marked his resting-place was defaced and almost demolished.

How long is it since anyone who died outside of the church could be buried in a Christian burying-ground in Spain, Portugal, Italy, or France? In all of these countries holes hav been dug in byplaces and bodies thrown in like dead dogs. In many instances stakes were driven into their graves to indicate that an Infidel or heretic was buried there.

"When they find over a child's grave the words, 'Suffer little children to come unto me,' they will strike them out."

Not so. "Suffer little children to come unto me" is good Infidel doctrin. It is the opposit command that Infidels object to, where God commands the parents to turn cannibals and eat their own children, and commands a lot of bloody monsters to "kill all the males among the little ones." You are looking through the wrong end of the telescope, Mr. Talmage. The chaste, the true, the pure, and the innocent will always find way to the heart of the true Liberal.

"Let Infidelity triumph—faith is dead, self-denial dead, honesty dead, chastity dead; civilization would be driven back into barbarism and the clock of the centuries put back two thousand years."

Faith will never die. As long as Christianity lasts there will be faith in gods, ghosts, and devils, and all things imaginary; while the Infidels, as you call them, will always hav faith in the pure, the true, and the good. Look through the Christian ages; see the grand martyrs who had faith in the true and the good, and self-denial to spurn the favors of popular opinion and meet death with a courage and heroism unknown to any except those whose manhood and intelligence lifted them above old crude legends and myths.

Search the annals of church history and find the equals for honesty of Bruno, Paine, Jefferson, Lincoln, and, last, the man in whose face you recently tried to blow your Christian froth.

And as for chastity—well, we had better call Mr. Billings to the witness-stand. Once more I ask you to read the "Crimes of Preachers," and if you do not find cases enough of seduction, desertion, and abortion to satisfy you that ministers hav no more regard for chastity than they ought to hav, then Mr. Billings is a badly mistaken man.

You are afraid that civilization will be driven back into barbarism, and the clock of the centuries turned back. Did you know that the darkest day Europe ever saw was when Christianity had everything its own way?

Did you know that philosophy, the arts, and the sciences hav flourished only as Christianity has been beaten back by the hand of Infidelity? And did not Christianity contest the ground inch by inch? Did you know that some of the bloodiest tyrants that the world ever saw hav been promulgators of your religion?

Now, Mr. Talmage, I am nearly done with you, and I will say that if a greater number of misstatements can be found in any production of equal length—Christian sermons excepted—I will agree to let you rant unmolested for all time to come. I say "misstatements," for if you are ignorant of all history, that is the proper word to use. But if you are a man of ordinary intelligence, then they are not misstatements, but lies.

You were very anxious to hav the "chief of police march up to Mr. Ingersoll and put his hand on his shoulder and in the name of the common law, and the state of New York, and the city of Brooklyn, command him to stop blasphemy, and to stop now." As I cannot think the statements which you made were made through ignorance, I am inclined to believe that it would hav been far more appropriate if the chief of police had marched up to your pulpit and laid his hand on your shoulder and said, "In the name of the common law, and the state of New York, and the city of Brooklyn, I command you to stop lying, and to stop now."

When you learn, Mr. Talmage, that Christianity has no rights over Infidelity, that the freedom of speech and of the press are of vastly more importance to the people of this nation than creed and dogma, that a man's moral character does not depend upon any religious belief, that a lie in the interest of the church is just as wicked as a lie against the church, that gods and ghosts and devils and creeds and churches must sooner or later be brought to the test of reason, you will be a wiser, and, I hope, far better man.

You hav cited certain authority to show that what you are pleased to call blasphemy can be punished by law. But you will not contend that your authority is above the Constitution? Hav you ever studied that instrument with a view of finding out what particular god it recognizes, and which of all the holy Bibles it rests upon, and what particular religion it was intended to sustain? The Constitution expressly declares that "Congress shall pass no law respecting the establishment of any religion." Do you find anything in that which would prevent me from expressing my opinion of God as freely as I would about anything else?

But it further says that "Congress shall pass no law prohibiting the free exercise of religion." This would seem to indicate that you hav the privilege of shouting and praising God after your own fashion, and to your soul's content. The Constitution seems to giv us each our own way about God. If you feel like venerating him, fall down on your marrowbones—nobody must disturb you. If your God appears ridiculous to me, I hav a right to say so. This seems to be the spirit of the Constitution, your high authorities to the contrary notwithstanding.

The same article declares that "Congress shall make no law prohibiting the freedom of speech or of the press." It is evident that the framers of the Constitution intended to giv the widest privileges in regard to such matters.

Between a dried snake-skin and the highest conception of a supreme being there is a great variety of gods. Hav I not a right to believe in the God which appears the most reasonable to my mind, or to reject them all? I can conceive of nothing more ridiculous than eating a bit of bread and calling it the body of Christ—than drinking a little wine and calling it the blood of Christ. If I were going to represent the body of Christ, I would take putty, not bread; if the blood of Christ, pokeberry juice, not wine. Hav I not a right to ridicule the ridiculous?

Because I speak of these things as they strike my mind, am I to be put in prison? Mr. Talmage, this will never do. If I say anything against God, don't you try to punish me if God don't. If power has been delegated to you to do the work of God, you did not obtain it from the Constitution. If you study that instrument closely, you will find that it is "we, the people," who "do ordain and establish the Constitution," not God.

What kind of people there are over in Brooklyn, whose stomachs can stand the stale pottage which you dish out to them, is past finding out. They must differ widely from the little girl who said she "didn't like to see a donkey, nor she didn't like to hear him donk."

JOHN PECK.

"They Who Liv in Glass Houses Should Not Throw Stones."

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 21st instant, Mr. J. R. Perry goes for our friend Elmina in the following savage style:

"When Mrs. Slenker assures us that her slate-trick 'is the key to at least nine-tenths of all the spirit slate-writings that hav ever been produced,' she is exposing her ignorance of the subject and is unconsciously writing nonsense."

I believe Mrs. Slenker has never claimed to be an expert in spiritual science; on the contrary, upon several occasions before starting out on her tour of investigation she expressed strong fears as to her adaptability to the task, and she was not alone in this apprehension.

All must admit, however, that Elmina has some important qualifications, and among them may be named, strict honesty of purpose, integrity to principle, and a happy faculty to tell what she hears and sees.

The sacred slate referred to has gone into history as a genuin production of dead men's spirits. It passed through the critical inspection of editor, printer, proof-reader, and other experts connected with Whitlock's so-called Facts magazine; it has also been carefully examined by hundreds of Spiritual mediums, not one of whom, with all their pretended occult powers, has been able to discover that it is really the work of spirits still in the form. While here in Syracuse, Mrs. Slenker learned, through several living witnesses, the true history of this slate, which, agreeable to her promis to anxious friends, she faithfully portrayed in the columns of your paper. If this is "exposing her ignorance, and unconsciously writing nonsense," every honest person must say, "Go on, Elmina, let us hav more of the same sort." I quote further from Mr. Perry's zealous and intemperate letter:

"A few weeks ago, Dr. Slade went before the Seybert committee of Philadelphia for the investigation of such phenomena as occur in his presence. After some twenty sittings, in which the committee prepared their own slates, and by changes of rooms and locations and furniture, etc., they were utterly astonished at the communications which they received and the phenomena they witnessed. Utterly unable to account for it on any other theory than that of spirit intelligence, they asked him to state candidly how he did it, or by what means they were produced; to which he replied that he believed they were Spiritual, that he was simply the instrument through which the spirits operated, but that the committee of learned doctors were as well able to tell how it was done as he was. They, feeling that he had acted fairly, paid him $300 for his seances."

The above untruthful statement, modified by different writers to suit their purpose, has been going the rounds for several weeks past, until at last J. R. Perry bites at the tempting bait and "exposes his ignorance" by repeating it as a fact.

This is but a fair illustration of the methods pursued by average Spiritualists in their zeal to uphold the faith.

Nine out of ten of their marvelous stories when followed up will, like the "three black crows," dwindle to "something that was black—black, sir, as a crow."

Allow me to inform Mr. Perry that we hav had no official report from the Seybert commission, as yet, and it is extremely improbable that any member of this intelligent body has been so thoughtless and unfair as to even hint to the public his own unripe opinion, much less that of his associates.

In further proof of the untruthfulness of Mr. Perry's statement, I cut the following from the Religio-Philosophical Journal, a Spiritual paper, dated March 21, 1885:

"We hav seen all that has appeared in Philadelphia papers and elsewhere, but having been long since distinctly told by a member of the Seybert Commission that no credence should be placed in any statement that did not bear the signatures of the commission, we hav refrained from all comment. The propriety of our reticence has been confirmed by the added assertion of the commission that they would publish no results whatever of their investigations until the final close of their labors."

The renowned Doctor Slade having been detected on numerous occasions in producing himself pretended spirit manifestations, it is not improbable that the commission will, in their official report, hav something to say of him as a clever juggler; however, we can all afford to wait.

Now that Mr. Perry is in the reward business, offering the munificent (!) sum of ten dollars for information of no value or interest to anyone, let me advise him to keep his small change and look out for some one to accept my standing offer of $500 to any medium in the world who will cause the dead to write, in my presence, three words upon a slate; for particulars see "Bottom Facts," page 179. This offer is still open.

JOHN W. TRUESDELL.

March 22, 1885.

EVERY metaphysician and theologian should get this sentence of Berkeley by heart: "That we hav first raised a dust, and then complain we cannot see."
—Buckle.

The Liberal Club.

There was a carmine tint about the 372d regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club. The hall was full to the last seat. In the Masonic lodge-room overhead an organist beguiled the time playing hymns to the Great Jubellum, and in the café beneath several German gentleman mingled their Teutonic voices in bacchanalian songs. The subject of the evening's exercises was the "Red Terror," and Madam Delescluze arose from a sick bed to deliver the lecture according to the program. She wore pinned to her dress a red, red rose. When the applause which greeted her appearance had subsided, she spoke as follows:

It is with the history and formation of civil society in one of its phases that I occupy your attention this evening. My theme carries me back to a view of the root, the germ, of civil society as we know it in its best modern sense. You are, no doubt, surprised at this statement. "What," you will ask, "has that horrible thing, 'The Red Terror,' to do with the root and germ of civil society as we know it in its best modern sense?" I answer, everything. The very word commune signifies to many a hideous and insane carnival of crime, rising from the dregs and scum of society—from "the vermin of the sewers," as our learned and polite member, Dr. Eccles, has it. To the Eccles brain the term commune is expressed in two words, plunder and murder. It has its birth in a demoniac hatred of persons who work hard and honestly for a living. Its purpose is to rob such persons and then kill them. This is the Eccles picture of the commune. I trust Dr. Eccles is better as a physician than he is as a painter. If not, I pity him. My canvas will present a totally different view from that which he would offer.

Madam Delescluze then sketched the birth and growth of the cities or towns of the middle ages, and the difference between these and the Roman municipalities. She continued:

The Roman city was founded by colonies or by conquest, the cities of the feudal age by labor and insurrection. The Roman city was aristocratic, the feudal-age town was democratic. One was founded on slave labor, the other on the labor of freemen. In the Roman city the great patrician families ruled, in the city of the feudal period the citizens governed their own affairs. They elected their own mayors, aldermen, sheriffs, and other officers. In the Roman city the father of a family (a patrician father) was priest and magistrate and ruler. In the towns of the feudal period the political and religious functions were entirely separated.

All the French towns were called communes. The word commune was thus a very harmless and a very good word. It was in one of the French communes, and during the 11th century, that we first find "The Red Terror." In the 12th century it had taken root in all directions, and the independence of the communes or towns was the result. When the slaveholder of antiquity liberated his slave he crowned him with a red cap. This was the badge of the poor fellow's freedom, and he wore it as a sign that he was no longer a bondman. Red was, therefore, a very significant color to a labor slave. "The Red Terror" meant simply the struggle for liberty. "The White Terror," the aristocratic color, meant despotism.

From the war of the communes of the Middle Ages on the great feudal chiefs dated not only the birth of modern commerce but the elements of French nationality. It was out of the insurrections of the cities of France that the Third Estate had its birth. And that Third Estate—found only in France in all the details of its history—here at length absorbed to itself wealth, power, influence, government. In its youth it broke the power of the feudal lords. In its manhood it destroyed monarchy and aristocracy, and it now rules France. After having gained all its triumphs through "The Red Terror," it now arms itself with the weapons of monarchy and aristocracy and calls itself, as its old enemies did, "the party of order."

The insurrection of March, 1871, was, in its inception, a movement for local liberty only. Even in the falsely colored narrativ of the terrible events of that episode of French history Fetridge was compelled to publish documents, proclamations, petitions, etc., which prove beyond a doubt that the struggle of the Paris Commune was one of the noblest, as it was the bravest, ever recorded in the world's annals. It was not the movement of a mob, but the work of the National Guard. The calumny that it wanted to destroy French nationality and return to the local municipal rule of the Middle Ages is thus disproved even by its enemy.

"The Red Terror!"—a name given by their despotic masters to the people's struggles for manhood, for the independence of the center of commerce, then the independence of a race, and finally the independence of a nation. Its light, which is a glare of horror to the despots whose trade is robbery and whose whole history is one long story of international murder and pillage, has carried an enthusiasm for freedom and brotherhood to millions. If, as Carlyle said, in the French Revolution a new political world was born in Europe, in the "Red Terror" of March 18, 1871, a new society was born—one not founded on military conquest, spoliation, and robbery of labor, but on the basis of international brotherhood, social and economic freedom. It must be remembered that France is new, is modern; the spirit of the French is modern; the rest of Europe is still semi-feudal, with its powerful landed aristocracies, its respect for rank and caste, its devotion to royalty. As the Red Terror, which has made France a modern democratic state, was born and grew on her soil, so from her bosom came the first plan and the first brave battle for that new society which is destined to replace the old.

In the course of her remarks Madam Delescluze introduced the rather original proposition that Jean Jacques Rousseau was really the author of the sentiments of "The Rights of Man," which the world has heretofore erroneously accredited to Thomas Paine.

Mr. James Redpath said that the French people were third in his admiration. First came the Jews, who, although we persecute them, rule over us, and whose malefactors we worship as gods. Next, the Irish, who, though always oppressed, continued to struggle for liberty. The speaker was not unreservedly in favor of the Commune, and could not see that the tyranny of a mob was any more to be longed for than the tyranny of a king. Radicals, being in the minority, must educate the majority until the majority are radicals.

Mr. Cohen thanked Mr. Redpath for complimenting his (Mr. Cohen's) race so handsomely. He then went on to discuss the French and Prussian war of 1871, or thereabout. Napoleon, he said, was deceived and sold out by Bismarck. He neglected opportunities when he could hav demanded from Prussia anything he chose to ask, and when he might hav obtained anything he could get. According to its resources, France was better off than any other nation ten to one. Mr. Cohen said he would take the responsibility for these statements.

Mr. Guild, of Hoboken, thought this the most excellent lecture he had ever heard upon the platform of the Liberal Club. The greatest strength of the oppressors were the people of the middle classes. We must drop the conventional phrases both of politics and religion. On this ground he took exception to Mr. Wakeman's use of the word "consecrate." To further set forth his views under that head, Mr. Guild produced some manuscript, and was about to read it when called to order by the chair, who arose to suggest that the paper be reserved for some future occasion. Mr. Guild readily assented to this, and discussed the matter amicably with Mr. Wakeman at the close of the meeting.

Mr. Blissert was at the great French Exposition some years ago. The workingmen of Paris regarded the show as useful merely to the idlers in showing them how to extort more money from the workers. As soon as the siege of Paris was raised, the landlords came around and demanded their three months' rent, and showed themselvs to be greater enemies of the French people than were the Prussians.

Madam Delescluze replied to the critics at some length, and made it appear that Mr. Redpath had committed several errors in chronology, and had insulted a desirable body of persons by calling them a mob. She cried "Shame upon him!"

This lecture puts the Commune in a light quite different from that in which it is popularly viewed. At the next meeting Mr. Willey will recommend prophylactic measures to avert the evils which menace this nation. Mr. Shook and the Rev. Mr. Vaughan are greatly missed.

Tent Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$91.10
Hope C. Parsons,	.50
Jas. B. Gay,	1.00
C. E. Elmendorf,	2.50
E. B. Foote, Sr., M.D.,	5.00
E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D.,	5.00
Total,	$105.10

Let's Boom the Tent.

Owing to the backward season—lingering wintry weather—I hav but just thawed out, and my eyes hav been but recently opened to the fact that the season for tents is near at hand, and the prospect of a Liberal Gospel Tent is not as encouraging as it ought to be at this date.

The subscription thus far amounts to only $90.10, and we hav yet to turn the first corner of the four; for I suppose it will require about $400 to make a start—get out on the road, as theatrical people say.

Five dollars each from my father and myself will round the first corner, and secure the first one hundred. I hope this little sprinkle will be but the premonitor of a big shower; that while April showers of rain are preparing the way for May flowers, there will also be silvery showers of dollars that shall prepare the way for flowery Liberal speakers, like Putnam and Reynolds, to blossom out and scatter seeds of Liberalism wherever it may be their intent to go in tent.

That's bad I know, but let it go; and if I've put my foot in it, I hope to do the same by the tent some day; and all who feel the same way should put their dollars in it now. E. B. Foote, Jr.

March 30, 1885.

Mr. Wardwell, Victim of Education.

The Truth Seeker seems a queer vehicle to choose through which to return thanks to the clergy for a trifling humanitarian service rendered, but Mr. Wardwell assures us that "both preachers and people are reading The Truth Seeker," and so we may hope that this letter will reach those for whom it is intended. It is a shame that the editors holding the same religious faith as Mr. Wardwell so persistently bar him out of their columns.

219 Tremont St., Boston, Mass., March 23, 1885.

Mr. Editor: I received last Saturday a paper called Justice, published in New York, dated March 21st. On the tenth page appears an article in relation to the awful treatment of penitentiary prisoners in Tennessee. I wish it could appear in the columns of The Truth Seeker. To anyone who has had so much experience with the wicked treatment of prisoners, insane, and paupers as I hav, it is as easy to believe that horrid cruelty as it is to believe the story of Matthew, Mark, Luke, or John. And as the people—even all the people—appear to be "truth seeking" now, I think it really well for that article to appear in the fearless, independent columns of The Truth Seeker, and I really wish you would request New England papers to copy. Since the uncovering of Tewksbury, the expose at Massachusetts state prison, the looking after other institutions in New England, it is not fashionable to preach the gospel of

"Deal kindly with the erring ones
As God has dealt with you."

Many good and true men hav learned that Massachusetts has jails into which one must go when he speaks the naked truth in defense of those Christ died to save, those who cannot speak for themselvs.

"The morning light is breaking."

Many of God's best servants are looking after prisoners, insane, and paupers as they never hav before.

While I was a prisoner at Dedham, 105 preachers of the gospel either signed a paper or wrote Governor Robinson for my pardon. May I not thank them for their kindness through the columns of The Truth Seeker? On my knees in a stone and iron cell before God, I hav sincerely and humbly thanked them. To-day I thank them, if possible, more sincerely than ever. And as they represented all denominations, I can't see why it would not be even well for me to renew my thanks, which I most sincerely do through the columns of The Truth Seeker, and hope you will renew and increase my indebtedness to you by allowing my most sincere and humble thanks to appear in your columns. Burnham Wardwell.

P.S.—I can send to anyone a printed court copy of what I was sent to Dedham jail for, also my nude photograph, showing the condition I came out of jail in, at a cost of fifty cents for each—and I only ask that to help meet expenses, which are pressing me hard. B. W.

Mr. Kiddle's Opinion of Mr. Chesebrough.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Dr. S. J. Chesebrough seems to entertain some very curious ideas, for which, I trust, Spiritualism will not be held wholly responsible. One of these is that a certain Diakka (A. J. Davis's name for a low, mischievous spirit) is using John W. Truesdell to write against Spiritualism; and I perceive that he publishes in your columns a "private and confidential" letter of mine received by him nearly two years ago; and so oblivious has he become of moral distinctions that he thinks he is guilty of no "breach of etiquet" in this dishonorable course.

Thomas Jefferson once said: "I think it should be made a penitentiary felony to publish one's letters without leave;" but the standard of Dr. Chesebrough is very different, or has recently become so; for a year ago, when I called his attention to the publication of the same letter in a Spiritualist sheet, he said, in reply: "When the letter of which you speak made its appearance in the Journal, I was deeply mortified, and realized fully the position in which I was placed. . . . This appears to be another foul plot to injure the cause of Spiritualism, and destroy me and my good name. I stand before the public as the betrayer of a 'private and confidential' trust, as one utterly unworthy of the respect of honorable people."

Such was his own verdict on his conduct a year ago; and now he republishes this letter, thinking to save his credit by leaving out the words "private and confidential" marked on the letter by me.

In his apologetic letter to me of March, 1884, he said that the letter was stolen from him (taken from his pocket) while he and Mr. Truesdell were together in his office, both being entranced ("controled by devils"); and he further stated that the missing letter could not afterward be found, having, as he alleged, been "dematerialized," and much more to that effect—an incredible and disgusting narrativ, with the whole of which I should not like to occupy your columns.

When Truesdell's "Bottom Facts" was published, I desired to expose its obvious falsehoods and confessed frauds; and this led to the correspondence with this Chesebrough, who gave Truesdell a character a great deal worse than he had given himself in his book.

The published letter was written in pursuance of the correspondence thus opened, and I hav no objection to its publicity, beyond the violation of confidence to which I hav referred.

I hope Spiritualism will not be held responsible for the odious monstrosities that are hatched out in Syracuse. Henry Kiddle.

New York, March 27, 1885.

There is evidence that the editor of the Advocate is an unbeliever. Christ said, "In my name shall they cast out devils; . . . they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover" (Mark xvi, 17, 18). Liston McMillen, a wealthy western lawyer, has challenged Colonel Ingersoll in this wise:

"Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, Dear Sir: I respectfully invite you to engage in a joint discussion with me at the city of Chicago, in which I will affirm either or all of the following propositions:

"1. Christ was raised from the dead.

"2. Delirium tremens is demoniac possession.

"3. Insanity is demoniac possession wherever it assumes a violent or vicious form.

"4. The sick can be healed and devils cast out in the name of Christ through faith in his name and promises.

"Should you accept this invitation I will agree to heal the sick and cast out devils in the method pointed out in the scriptures, and to that end you may select any sick or insane person, differentiated as incurable, if you choose. For my standing as a member of the bar of Iowa I will giv you such references as you may desire."

Mr. McMillen evidently possesses more faith in Christ and has a fuller trust in the truth of his words than Dr. Buckley, for the latter says, "It is not always the foes of Christianity which do it the most harm," and cites this challenge as an illustration. He further insinuates that McMillen has "mistaken superstition for truth and credulity for faith." It would, perhaps, be unkind for us to intimate that McMillen's faith is in inverse ration to his knowledge, and that Dr. Buckley's skepticism comes from a greater familiarity with the subject, but it would certainly be in order for Mr. McMillen to say something about a grain of mustard-seed in connection with the D.D.'s scoffing.

The National Liberal League.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

CHARLES WATTS, First Vice-President. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Secretary, 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York

Annual and Life Memberships.

Every Freethinker should become an Annual or Life Member of the National Liberal League. Life-membership certificates are issued at $25 each; annual membership, $1. These certificates are adapted to framing, and bear the signatures of the secretary of the League, Samuel P. Putnam, and of its president, Robert G. Ingersoll; they are therefore an ornament to any place and a memorial of great value. They should adorn the walls of ten thousand homes before the close of the year. The support thus given to the League would make its success certain. A. C. MACDONALD,

Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Address applications for membership to S. P. Putnam 33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$3,614.46
Toronto,	30.00
W. S. Bailey,	26.00
Parkhill,	20.00
Hamilton,	15.00
Listowel	15.00
Wm. Rich,	5.00
M. Herstein ($1 pd, $2 pl.),	3.00
L. Lille,	1.00
S. H. Tarr,	1.00
James Ramsey	1.00
Dr. Frank Weise.	1.00
F. Pfister,	1.00
W. H. Graham,	1.00
M. McCall,	2.00
L. W. Sibley,	1.45
C. E. Elmendorf,	1.00
Jas. B. Gay,	2.50
Marcus Klein (annual member),	1.00
Louis H. Freligh (annual member)	1.00
Frank Clohiesy,	50
A Friend,	50
Total,	$3,743.91

News and Notes from the Field.

Nashville, Tenn., is quite a center for business, religion, and literature at the South. It is a charming place in the midst of beautiful scenery. There are several universities established here—the Fisk, the Vanderbilt, etc. Also the Methodist Book Concern hold here one of their prominent forts. The churches are well-to-do, and put on considerable style. The religious element is very bigoted. Just now a Rev. Sam Jones, a sort of melodramatic revivalist, is trying to do some execution; but his shots seem to tell more effectually among the Christians than among the Infidels, for he declares that there is not one whole genuin Christian in Nashville. In this he hits the truth, not only for Nashville, but for the whole world. He says that a real Christian will go to church every evening in the week, and will newer venture to turn aside to the opera or the theater; if he does so, he shows beyond doubt that he is a child of the devil, and has never been duly regenerated. A Christian according to the Rev. Sam Jones must hav a pretty hard time of it in these days of railroads and electric telegraphs. He must be 1800 years behind the times.

I did not find the "Sunny South" up to the mark so far as weather is concerned. I expected to find a land of roses, and to revel beneath brilliant skies, and hear the soft winds blow and the birds warble to welcome the warmth and splendor of glorious spring. But alas! I found the icy North ahead of me in this genial clime, and it laid its savage hand upon every particle of sunshine. Nature seemed to hav on one of her "Christian" moods, and her smiles were few and far between. On Sunday, the 22d, instead of the usual magnificence of voluptuous spring, the hills round about were clad with snow, the clouds rolled heavily by, as if the Rev. Sam Jones himself was in their darkening folds, and Boreas blew his vigorous breath with orthodox glee. Under such circumstances we we were obliged to giv up the outdoor meeting that was planned, and seek the comfortable shelter of four walls. On Monday evening Burkhols Hall was filled, and notwithstanding the disappointments we spoke of the "New Heaven and Earth," which is bound to come, in spite of all the superstitions of men, the storms of nature, and "winter lingering in the lap of spring." The flowers will come and the gray locks must disappear, and the clouds and frost, and the sun will march through the heavens, and the banners of joy shall glitter, and in the mind of man, too, shall beauty reign and truth shine, and the music of love be triumphant.

The lecture was so well received that it was immediately voted to hav another lecture, and I expect to return to Nashville on April 6th, and lecture in a larger hall, and to double the audience. There is a goodly host of Liberals in this place, and Nashville can be made one of the vantage points in our great movement, and I propose to hold it for all that it is worth, and not yield an inch to the enemy. There are good men and true here, who will not retreat, but who will keep the artillery of Freethought in position, and ready to pour in hot shot when the foe least expects it. There are some sharp-sighted and eloquent Liberals in the legislature of Tennessee, at Nashville, and when a bill was recently introduced to prohibit "immoral" literature, it was defeated through the influence of the friends of freedom, who saw in this apparently innocent bill the inquisitorial claws of the church, and that its ecclesiastical projectors meant to strike a blow at Freethought publications. There is also a bill now pending to allow base-ball playing on Sunday, and the clergy are fighting this tooth and nail. They want to keep the youth in the dull gloom of the churches, and away from the freshness of nature. But the testimony of the police of this world—as opposed to the "police" and "watch-dogs" of another world—is that crime is diminished one hundred per cent in the city during the base-ball season. Of course the churches care nothing at all about a healthful, natural morality. They want the "grace of God" though it may make men puny, dilapidated, dyspeptic, and vicious. Of course that is the best material to manufacture saints of, but I prefer the bright, brainy, intelligent base-ball sinner to such incurable saints, who hav all the ills that flesh is heir to, and nothing of its advantages.

W. S. Bailey, editor of the Liberal, is indeed a veteran in our cause. He is over eighty years of age, and is still full of youthful enthusiasm. He wants to witness the glorious success that is bound to come after so many years of toil. He has suffered many things in behalf of freedom and has never flinched. We hope he will liv to see something of the noontide glory of the era of man.

W. S. Mathews, Ferdinand Pfister, Dr. Frank Weise, William Rich, J. Lavine, J. Lille, W. H. Graham, James Ramsey, and others constitute a phalanx that will not be broken. I lecture next Sunday at Louisville, and at St. Louis April 5th and 12th, with Mr. Charles Watts. We shall both be at Dodge City, Kansas, April 19th; in Nebraska, April 26th; and at Chicago in Hershey's Music Hall, May 3d. Wherever the Liberals want us we will come on the line of our march.

Fraternally yours, SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

March 27, 1885.

From Canada.

Mr. Watts's recent visit to Listowel created considerable local excitement. It was the first Freethought lecture ever given in the town, and it resulted in the discovering of latent Secularism where it was least expected. Herein is one of the grand results of the extensiv propagandism now being carried on by our friend Watts and Mr. Putnam. These gentlemen hav not only opened up new districts, but they hav also aroused enthusiasm that, but for their presence, would probably hav remained dormant. This was so at Listowel, in Ontario, where, apart from Messrs. Hayes and Tedhope and a few others, no avowed Secularists were known previous to the recent lecture. As soon, however, as Mr. Watts appeared, quite a "crowd" came to the front. The lecture was in every way a great success, and the amusing episode at the close of the lecture, when Mr. Watts had a debate with a local doctor, will not soon be forgotten. It produced the highest excitement, and furnished material for local talk for days after. We can plainly see that Mr. Watts is in his element in debate.

From Listowel Mr. Watts proceeded to Wingham, where he was most hospitably entertained by Mr. Rae, of the Queen's Hotel. Here there are not more than a half dozen known Secularists; but a large number of professing Christians assembled to listen to Mr. Watts expound the principles of Secularism. They appeared highly interested, and in a very kindly spirit asked Mr. Watts several pertinent questions, the answers to which gave every satisfaction—at least so far as the manner was concerned, if not always the matter. It would no doubt be difficult to please Christians with Secular explanations at first, and Mr. Watts appears to desire to lead them on the right path by degrees, and thus secure their assent without shocking them at the onset.

Unfortunately Mr. Watts's visit to the north of Canada has, we fear, given him a very unfavorable impression of a Canadian winter. On two days he was snow-bound, and on the last day kept a prisoner for fourteen hours without anything to eat and drink. Such are the glories of propagandism! Still, this work must be done, and the officers of the League intend doing it. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the friends throughout the states of Canada will giv adequate support to the "Campaign Fund," so that these useful labors may be extended as much as possible.

After Mr. Watts lectured in Toronto, on Sunday, March 22d, he proceeded to Parkhill to speak on two evenings. This place is in every sense thorough orthodox. Still, several hundred attended the lecture each evening, and listened most attentivly. The advocacy of Freethought had never been known in Parkhill previous to Mr. Watts's visit, and the local clergy, one and all, seemed mightily aggrieved that an "Infidel" should dare to invade their territory. It was amusing to listen, before his arrival, to their boasts—how they were going to vanquish our first vice-president; but when he appeared, not one of them dared to cross swords with him. True, on the second night, a leading member of the Salvation Army offered some coarse opposition, for which we guess he and his rude associates had cause to regret before the meeting was over. So great was the outcry against Secular principles from the various pulpits, that some time before Mr. Watts's lecture the following letter appeared in the local paper:

To Priests, Preachers, and Christian Laymen.

GENTLEMEN: You hav not let an opportunity pass to make some unfair fling at Freethought. Either mistakenly or by design you hav untruthfully held up Infidels as obscene, dishonest, free-lovers, and generally vicious, and hav loaded them with such epithets that the word Infidel has become a term of reproach among Christians; whereas, Infidels feel as proud of their name as do Methodists, Presbyterians, or any other sect, of theirs. In defense of the character of Infidels and of the principles of Freethought, I would like to make arrangements with you to hold a debate of the relativ merits of Christianity versus the Religion of Humanity, which Infidels profess. I I hav brought Mr. C. Watts, the Freethought lecturer, here, and will giv the champions of Christianity a fair field without favor to reply to his defense of Infidelity. Now, gentlemen, you who hav been so "brave" as to denounce us when there was no opportunity to reply, here is your opportunity to convince Infidelity that it is wrong, and that your statements were correct. If you feel that you are right, come forward and defend your honest convictions. Remember that the majority of the audience will be in sympathy with you, and you may be able to so thoroughly refute the pleas of Infidelity as to save many sinners from error.

Mr. Watts is a gentleman who has frequently met clergymen on the public platform in courteous and gentlemanly debate, and those to whom this challenge is offered need fear nothing but the most respectful treatment and the fairest hearing. If they come not forward now, let them hereafter hold their peace about Infidels, or the world will term them cowardly slanderers. Arrangements may be made with me at any time this month. W. O. MARREN.

Referring to the first evening's meeting, the Parkhill Gazette of March 26th says:

On Tuesday evening Mr. Charles Watts delivered his lecture —"Secularism vs. Christianity"—in the Music Hall here, to a large audience, about thirty of whom were ladies. Mr. Watts is a very eloquent speaker, a good elocutionist, and treats his subject with becoming seriousness. His claim for Secularism, summed up, amounted to this, "That there was nothing good in the Bible which was not taught hundreds of years before it was written. That whatever of it his reason and experience teach him is good the Secularist wishes to keep, and whatever of it his reason and experience teach him is wrong, he wishes to discard. Reason being our highest gift, it is our best guide. He charged that Christians, whenever their reason objected to their religion, forced their reason back, and gave themselvs up to the rule of impulse, which was an inferior guide."

A very pleasing incident of these lectures was that a number of young solicitors and students sent written inquiries to Mr. Watts at his hotel, after the first night, as to certain difficulties appertaining to the substitution of Secularism for Christianity, asking him to reply to them on the second night. This Mr. Watts readily did, and thus imparted some valuable information to the Christians present. Is not this a practical way of spreading a knowledge of our principles?

Thursday and Friday, March 26th and 27th, Mr. Watts lectured in Hamilton to large audiences. On Sunday March 29th Mr. Watts gave his farewell lecture for the present in Toronto, and on Monday he started for Montreal to debate with the Rev. Dr. Sexton. The return of Mr. Watts to Canada will be looked forward to with anxious interest. J. B.

Correspondence.

TURNER'S FALLS, MASS., March 26, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: We hav had Ex-Rev. C. B. Reynolds here for a few days. He not only delivered three lectures but organized a secular society and got a good part of his first lecture into the Greenfield Reformer. The few Liberals of this place liked him very much. The lukewarm ones are afraid of and the bigots thoroughly hate the ex-reverend. For my own part, I enjoyed his society and lectures very much, and hope to meet him again. Think I will be at the Congress this fall.

The Christians are aroused, and I think it will do them good. At all events, I enjoy their unrest. We will try to hav Mr. Watts here next time, and hope he will come to Lake Pleasant this summer when the Spiritual camp-meeting is in full blast.

I will send for a few books soon. "The Story Hour" is the best book I ever saw for children, and I take delight in lending it to my little friends. I heartily recommend it to all the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

With best wishes to you and paper, I am, as ever,

Yours for truth, GEO. E. HARTLEY.

LEXINGTON, KY,, March 18, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Samuel P. Putnam delivered his new lecture, "Universal Mental Emancipation," at the Opera House in this city March 8th, to a small but intelligent audience. Considering that this was the first Liberal lecture ever given here, I judge from the degree of enthusiasm manifested that Mr. Putnam's visit, to say the least, was by no means a failure. He spoke for two hours, and during the delivery of his address the audience gave vent to their delight by long and continued applause. At its conclusion Mr. Putnam invited anyone who felt disposed to criticise or refute his arguments to come forward and do so. But none came, only a few Christians being present, and they did not care to meet the brilliant and always equipped apostle of Freethought. In the evening we held a meeting in the city court room for the purpose of effecting an organization, but, owing perhaps to lack of education on the part of the Liberals, we failed in our designs. But under the able leadership of that tireless and devoted worker, Dr. J. H. Hallowell, I hope soon to see an auxiliary League established in our beautiful Blue Grass capital, and the good work go bravely on. To say that the Liberals here were pleased with Mr. Putnam would be putting it mildly; they were simply more than pleased, and were unanimous in expressing their desires of hearing him again, which I earnestly hope they will hav the pleasure of doing at some future time not far in the distance.

Mr. Putnam while here disposed of a great many books, notably the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, which shows that the people know how to appreciate a good thing when they see it. I purchased a copy of the ANNUAL, and I can truthfully say it is indeed a triumph of the printer's and engraver's art, and reflects great credit upon the energetic Truth Seeker Publishing Company. Its reading matter is varied, and treats upon different subjects, and while it is not only entertaining, it is also very instructiv to those who hav the cause of Liberalism at heart and who wish to see its final triumph over "priestcraft and the devil." Its illustrations are beautifully designed and splendidly executed, while its portraits of the true and noble workers for humanity are alone worth the price asked for the book. I would not be without it for double twenty-five cents, and I prevail upon all Liberals to supply themselvs with a copy before the present edition is exhausted. All should feel proud in possessing such a beautiful gem, and should never rest until they hav it upon their tables. To all such I will say it will prove a "beauty and a joy forever."

Fraternally, DAVID B. COZINE.

WE call the attention of our readers to the advertisment of Mr. Charles Watts's "History of Freethought," and also to the opinion of Colonel Ingersoll upon its merits. We quite share the view of the colonel as to the value of this work. We can heartily recommend it to every Secularist throughout the states and Canada. It can be had direct from our office, or from Mr. J. A. Risser, 9 Opera House building, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

J. E. REMSBURG is now lecturing in Illinois.

Communications.

The Way a Jew Can Curse When He is Right-down "Godly."

About the year 1656 the Jews of the synagog at Amsterdam excommunicated and cursed one of their number, even the illustrious Spinoza. This great man was distinguished for the spotless purity of his moral character, but being a student and a philosopher, he had, like thousands of others since, thought himself out of the Jewish church, and had taken final leave of the synagog. The charge brought against him was that of heresy. He gave up the ridiculous notion of a personal God, who, if he be really a person, must hav all the parts and functions that a man has, and as the Old Testament Jehovah had, and who, if he be infinit, must hav occupied all space, to the exclusion of all other forms of matter—and attributed to the inherent powers of matter all those phenomena which his co-religionists and the Christians still attribute to a personal God located in some imaginary place called "the heavens." For this departure from the faith the Amsterdam Jews, in synagog assembled, and in the spirit of the law against heresy recorded in the 15th of Deuteronomy, took action against him. He was, under the most solemn circumstances, declared: "Accursed by the same curse wherewith Elisha cursed those wanton and insolent children, by all the curses, anathemas, interdictions, and excommunications fulminated from the time of Moses our Master to the present day.

"In the name of the Lord of hosts, Jah, and in the name of the globes, wheels, mysterious beasts, etc., let him be cursed in heaven and earth, by the very mouth of the Almighty God, by the mouth of the Seraphim, and Opanim, and ministering angels.

"By the seven angels who preside over the seven days of the week, and by the month of the seven principalities. If he was born in March, the direction of which is to be assigned to Uriel, let him be accursed by the month of Uriel, and so on through all the months.

"Let him be cursed wherever he turns; may he perish by a burning fever, by a consumption and leprosy. May oppression and anguish seize him; may he drink the cup of indignation, and may curses cover him as a garment; let his sins never be forgiven, and let God blot him out from under the heavens."

Thus it runs on through several pages of terrific denunciations, which were accompanied from time to time by the thrilling sound of a trumpet, and wound up with a cry of execration by the spectators, who shouted "Amen, so let it be!" All this because Spinoza did not believe any longer that there was a God who came down from heaven and ate veal with Abram under a tree, and because he rejected the idea that God had "back parts" and made an exhibition of them to Moses, whom he had put into the cleft of a rock in order to see them.

Now, it is important to remember that these very curses, only a sample of which is given above, were uttered by Jews who had fled from the terrors of the Inquisition in Spain, Portugal, and other Catholic countries into the free and Protestant country of Holland, whose government protected them in the enjoyment of their natural right to think, believe, and worship as they pleased. Yet this very freedom which these refugees gained was used to denounce in the most horrible manner one of their number who had dared to differ in opinion from them as they had dared to differ with Catholics and Protestants! Who, on reading this, can refrain from saying that the delusion called religion, no matter what dogma or form of worship it takes, is the greatest and most dangerous curse that has ever befallen the human race? The history of Christianity, Catholic and Protestant, and the history of Mohammedanism as well, is written in human blood. And nearly all the wars of Europe hav been, either immediately or remotely, caused by religion. Verily the tree is known by the fruit it bears.

In the 109th Psalm, David, "the man after God's own heart," and a model Old Testament saint, givs us a sample of inspired cursing. The peculiarity of this case is that the curses are all piled up on the heads of the devoted, not because they are heretics who had denied the faith, as Spinoza did, but because they were his personal enemies, made so, probably, by the recollection of their wives whom he had stolen for his seraglio, the murders he had committed, and the property he had plundered from them. The New Testament Jesus, whom the Christian world worships as God, said: "Love your enemies. Pray for them who despitefully use you." But Jesus was not godly. He was only humane. David was godly, for he was inspired by God to curse his enemies, and his character was over and over indorsed by God, with a single exception.

By the way, if any one is cruel enough in his nature to take delight in seeing the agony of a man in trying to extricate himself from a tight place, let him go some Sunday morning into an old God-in-the-Constitution church, where, repudiating as idolatry hymns of human composure, they "sing in praise of God" the Psalms of David in course, the minister expounding one each Sabbath before the congregation sing it, and the 109th being the Psalm for the day. This is the cursing Psalm, and it is as good as a bull-bait to see the minister undertake to show that it is inspired of a holy and merciful God, David being only the divine mouthpiece; to make it agree with Jesus's saying, "Love your enemies," as he goes on verse after verse; to see him use hydraulic pressure in getting out of it any edification in holiness for his listening audience. This is what starts the sweat on the preacher's brow, and makes him labor and puff steam like a locomotiv engin in taking a heavy freight train up an inclined plane. And if the preacher, in looking over his audience, should espy

> "A cheil's amang them takin' notes,
> And, faith, he'll prent it,"

it would only add more heat to his boiler, when the congregation comes to sing the curses in line upon line.

As said above, the Christian church got her divine warrant for cursing those who changed their religion from the thirteenth chapter of the inspired law-book called Deuteronomy, where heresy is pronounced a capital offense. When the Jewish state succumbed to the Roman power, and lost its autonomy, and its people were scattered by the torch of Christian persecution over all Europe, they were compelled to cease stoning heretics, and to let their godly zeal for orthodoxy effervesce in pronunciamentos from the synagog. But the satanic spirit of the law took possession of the pope of Rome, who declares himself the head of the Christian church and the vicegerent of almighty God on earth, and he continued the godly business of cursing all, both Jew and gentile, who did not submit to his authority in matters of faith and practice. The bull "In cosna Domini," which was read publicly at Rome on Holy Thursday, rivals the 109th Psalm, and the Jews of Amsterdam, in the bitterness of its curses. The reformers of the 16th century, in breaking away from the pope, did not disclaim either the right, or the duty, of the church to persecute heretics. All the reformers of Europe justified Calvin in influencing the Syndics of Geneva to put Servetus to death by fire. And if each of the scores upon scores of antagonistic sects which hav sprung from the loins of Protestantism really believed their own creeds, and were consistent now, and had the power to carry out their principles, they would curse and burn each other with the same godly zeal displayed by the pope, Calvin, and the Amsterdam Jews in the seventeenth century. For, just about the time that Spinoza in Holland was being anathematized, and treated like a wild beast, by his Jewish brethren, the Puritans in Massachusetts were banishing Roger Williams into the wilderness of Rhode Island because he believed that immersion was the right kind of baptism. This treatment opened his eyes to see the inherent wrongfulness of persecution, and the right of every man to believe as he could, independently of political government, thus becoming immortalized as the first orthodox clergyman in history who had a correct idea, and proclaimed it, of the relations which should subsist between the state and the church.

It has often been said before, although thousands do not seem to understand it yet, that, no matter how absurd a man's creed is, if he be convinced that it is true, and that the belief in it is absolutely necessary to salvation from the pains of eternal hell-fire, he will, if he hav the power, out of pure benevolence, punish a person, even unto death, who endangers his immortal soul, and sets the dangerous example to others, of not accepting it. It is this fact in the character of human nature, proved to be true by history, that makes every intelligent man suspect, if he do not deeply feel, that the thing called religion, when it is really believed, is a transcendent evil, and should be eliminated from the human character by argument, by ridicule, and by every other moral means. It is like a cancer in a man's stomach—it ruins his digestion of food, poisons his blood, and leads inevitably to death. It is the fly in every pot of apothecary's ointment, except Buddhism, which sends forth a stinking savor that makes it desirable to throw overboard pot, fly, apothecary, and all, and to let men learn their morals, as well as their creed, at the feet of science.

It is perfectly amazing to see how this deep-rooted conceit of infallibility sticks to a man, even after he has repudiated the church, and become a professed Freethinker. This subscriber to a Radical journal orders his paper to be stopped, and to that extent cripples its power as an agent for reform, because the editor allows a Prohibitionist to express his opinions in its columns. Another does the same thing because he thinks there is too much anti-Prohibition sentiment published. One man complains of too much Spiritualism, while another growls because there is too much Materialism taught in the paper. These complainants obviously hav not the faintest conception of the meaning and the mission of Freethought. The Truth Seeker, by its very name, admits to the world that it has not attained all knowledge, but is inquiring, comparing, and advancing toward the goal. The Investigator, by its name, makes the same admission, and its readers every week go to the post-office, and ask for the Investigator to see how far it and its correspondents hav progressed in their search after truth. The Index, like a finger-board where half a dozen roads meet, each leading to different places, simply points out the path in which it is inquiring and traveling. These papers do not profess to hav found out the undisputed truth on all the subjects they discuss yet. Tens of thousands of priests and churches take opposit views, declaring that Radical opinions are false and dangerous to the well-being of society. The Freethought papers open their columns to every man who desires a hearing for his opinions, whatever those opinions may be. Yet, with all this absolute freedom of thought, and absolute liberty to express that thought, we hav in our ranks a lot of popelings who by their actions proclaim that they are infallible in their judgments; and because the editors of our papers allow their correspondents who hav the hardihood to differ from the said popelings to express their honest opinions in our journals, they send a little bull to the office in these words: "Do you not know that I know vastly more than you all put together? How dare you question my infallibility in the case? Stop my paper, and let it go to the devil."

Now, a churchman, Catholic or Protestant, does not pretend to investigate or seek after truth. His written creed, made by his ancestors in the Dark Ages, and taught him in his childhood by his mother and her priest, is the ne plus ultra, the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. To doubt it is to expose himself to damnation. But a Freethinker is a man who does not accept a creed on such authority. He investigates for himself. He knows that it is the free agitation of questions that brings the truth to light, and it is the truth, whatever it may be, that he seeks. He reads arguments which bear upon his own favorit views, but although he grates his teeth at it, he remembers that all questions are open till they are settled by proof, admits that he may be mistaken in his judgment, and, instead of saying to the editor, "Stop my paper," asks, like a true Freethinker, for light, more light.

Whether the dogmatism which shows itself in the way alluded to is natural to a man, or is only the dregs of the old superstition remaining in him, I know not. But it is hateful in every point of view. Those who show it should leave the ranks of the Freethinkers and go straight back to the church where they belong, and where they can do their cursing in the name of the Lord, and to their own heart's content. They are impediments in the way of progress.

A. B. B.

Enon Valley, Pa., March 18, 1885.

Anarchism Implies Personal Proprietorship.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: It is not your fault that crude and turbulent passion should arrogate the name of Anarchism, nor hav you aimed to confound the Communists, at whose meeting you assisted, with the consistent Anarchism of Liberty, which repudiates Communism. Yet you know that words, that names, whether correct and logical, or rashly, or hypocritically assumed, are important factors in society to-day. If you are not our friend, neither are you our enemy. I think you mean fair, and, therefore, in the name of fairness, honesty, and justice, I ask you to giv a little space forthwith to any protest concerning our aspect of Anarchism, that about which it most imports, that we shall not be misconceived.

Private Property.—The individual property of the laborer in the soil which he cultivates, the tools that he uses, and the produce of his labor, asserted by himself and acknowledged by his fellow-countrymen, is the fundamental postulate of Anarchism, as its negation is the fundamental principle of State Socialism. Intelligent respect for rights acquired by the direct exertion of personal faculty over soil, plant, and beast, suffices to Anarchism; but communal property necessarily implies complex regulations, and the intervention of authority, vested either in one or many, in constant or changeable archons; hence, either the maintenance, or the re-formation, of government.

What else than government, i. e., an arbitrary power based on physical force, can prevent individual instincts of self-appropriation from encroaching on the ideally collectiv social property? What is the testimony of experience? Communal institutions, whether religious and industrial like the Shakers', or secular and military like the Spartans', whether of aristocratic origin like Peru of the Incas, or democratic, as in the Russian country village, always imply government, a State Socialism more or less complete. Men must hav, every one, a stake of real estate in personal proprietorship, before their conscience can be educated to respect and not abuse property. If what is everybody's business is practically nobody's, so it is found with regard to public property.

For Elisée Reclus, of Le Révolté, and other European leaders, for Parsons Gorsuch, and the eloquent writers of the Alarm (Chicago), to pretend that they are Arnachists, is a dangerous fallacy; for if they oppose existing tyrannies, it is merely as destructivs, and their explosiv success would find society under the immediate necessity of imposing on itself other masters.

"Communist Anarchism" is a paradox, a contradiction in terms, which, even if possible to a select society of highly refined persons under the higher law of etiquet, or to a handful of religious enthusiasts, is utterly incapable of being generalized. Anarchism, with mutual respect of personal property, is the general desire of honest men, not office seekers, who mean to liv and let liv. The exploiters of labor who claim property in what they hav not produced, and the opponents, whose violence they provoke and then denounce, are equally remote from true conservatism, which finds in the satisfactions of justice the reason of its permanence.

Embracing all conservativ interests of society in its conquests of brute nature, and justifying them by fair dealings between man and man, true Anarchism needs only to be understood in order to rally to its banner all who liv above parasitic knavery. In the relation of words with facts, I remark that the termination ism is characteristic of system, of institution, of permanent establishment, of a truth, therefore, transcending the destruction of the false. The organization of a labor exchange currency is the first social truth in the order of Anarchism; others will follow in logical sequence, will unfold themselvs spontaneously when the incubus of archonism is removed, when state and church collapse for lack of the support of capitalism, which the labor exchange undermines.

What do I mean by undermining capitalism? I mean that in ratio to the general adoption of the exchange of labor or its products exclusivly among producers, the mobilization of values by their symbols now in the hands of non-producers will be frustrated. Iniquitous titles to the soil, or to other natural resources, or to machinery needed for production, will not be ipso facto annihilated, and we do not here broach the question of their expropriation. Only in as much as, without activ labor, they are valueless, and as in America, at least, it is still possible for labor to possess itself peaceably of an elementary minimum for production, it follows that a stop would be put to further accumulations in the hands of non-producers, and that capital would flow toward the channels of production, remaining in the hands of the producers.

But if labor is the dynamic basis of property, property is the material basis of labor. The laborer must own such property as his industrial faculties require, and any social contract he may form for the better exploitation of natural resources must be based upon such personal ownership. His dwelling, and provisions for his sustenance while working, form a part of that working capital of which he is proprietor. Whether more or less dependent on the good will of neighbors, according to the nature of such property, its possession is the egoist basis of self-respect, upon which altruist relations of amiability and co-operation may be predicated. But existence or subsistence cannot be founded on amiabilities, or on the consent of other men equally propertyless individually.

Individuality of character and personal property are inseparable. I seriously question whether the philosophical teachers of "Communist Anarchy" who denounce the personal ownership of property, know what it is to earn an honest livelihood by the plow, the loom, or the anvil, in grappling with nature at first hand. Their intelligence has been perverted and confused by the artificial conditions of social life in cities, where the means of subsistence, as well as the agencies of fortune, are in great measure fantastic and alien to necessary production. I cannot believe it in the nature of the human understanding to evade the consciousness of personal property in what one has created oneself, in applying one's effort, muscular and mental, to nature's raw material. They who deny it are either hypocritical demagogs, speculating on the desperation of the proletariat, with a view to leadership and archonism, or they are, as I suppose Elisée Reclus, sincere illusionists, by default of basic personal experience. Every admiral ought to hav begun his career before the mast, as common sailor; every social politician should know what spade-work means. No printed book, no human voice, can teach such lessons as the soil. Men learn from one another how to lie and steal. From the soil, men learn how to liv by honest work. Anarchism, the true and uncompromising Anarchism of Liberty and Lucifer and Lowell Bell, comes not to destroy but to fulfil the American Declaration of Independence. It alone is conservativ of manhood and of property. It declares personal property the basis of all social order and progress. It maintains this against the aggressions of state, church, and capitalism, the great powers of prey, as against the blind revolt of Socialists, or those more intelligent scoundrels who employ Socialism as a cat's-paw of privilege and ladder of ascension to power.

EDGEWORTH.

Canadian Notes.

Last evening a crowded audience assembled in Albert Hall to hear Charles Watts on the "Secular and Christian Philosophies." He quoted from Thales, Zeno, Epicurus, Socrates, Plato, Lucretius, and other philosophers of the ancient world who taught all the most advanced morality of the present day. Many of the moral teachings and doctrins of our time—such as the universal brotherhood of man, the necessity of devoting our lives to doing good, an exalted conception of rectitude of conduct, and practically carrying it out in our every-day life—these high aspirations, exemplified in the life we lead, are supposed by many to be modern, but were taught and practiced in all their fulness by the Secularist philosophers of antiquity, hundreds of years before the birth of Jesus of Nazareth.

Taylor says while Apollonius was associating the tenets of the far east with the traditions of a fanciful Pythagoras and a false Orpheus, Philo, of Alexandria, who flourished under Tiberius, was harmonizing Plato with Moses. The Jews, already scattered throughout the Roman world in Antiochia, Ephesus, Thrace, and even the slums of Rome—where they began to swarm—had made a second home of Egypt. They had come hither with Abraham and the Hyksos; they had quitted it with Moses. Before bowing the neck to Assyria, Persia, Macedonia, and Rome, they had been often subdued by the Pharaohs and annexed to the Egyptian empire. The era of the Ptolemies had again seen a revival of these ancient relations. In the reign of Philadelphus, a Greek translation of the Bible, the so-called Septuagint version, had rendered the Jewish books and Jewish thought accessible to the world, and, in Alexandria, a very Babel of people and doctrins. A synagog, almost rivaling the temple of Jerusalem, served as a rallying point for a compact mass of immigrant Israelites and converted Egyptians. But this colony could not remain orthodox; the influence of Hellenic thought, already perceptible in the Bible of the seventy, in the book of wisdom, had softened the rigidity and refined the simplicity of the Mosaic law—widened and subtilized the narrow national monotheism. It was the Alexandrian Jews, Aristobulus, Philo, and others, who transformed to the literal sense the Messiah vaguely prayed for by the prophets. Through them Plato became a forerunner of the fathers of the church; and the Christianity of the fourth gospel, and of Justin, and of Origen, is indebted to them for their metaphysics so foreign to the spirit and teaching of Jesus. The Galilean contributed nothing but a legend, itself merely a revival of the myths of Adonis, of Sabayius, of Serapis-Osiris, and an incomplete moral system spoiled by various anti-social views. To the Alexandrian Jews must be traced that essentially Greek and Platonic philosophy which, by doing violence to its nature, was accommodated to this legend and to this moral system.

At length the redoubtable champion of Christianity (in the opinion of the devotees of superstition) is to meet Charles Watts in debate at Montreal. Great efforts hav been made by the Secularists to hav the meeting take place here, but the Toronto clergy are afraid. They are in deadly terror at the bare idea of the exposure of the Christian Mumbo Jumbo. Dr. Sexton is the strongest defender of the three gods, one goddess and one book god of the present day. But his strength consists in evading all the points at issue, and putting forward side questions instead. It shows that the degrading superstitions of Christianity hav not succeeded in totally obliterating every vestige of common sense in Dr. Sexton's case. The leading essentials of orthodoxy are so idiotically absurd that to attempt to defend them in debate with Watts is altogether too preposterous.

According to Taylor, Christianity was built up piecemeal. Philo is so thoroughly imbued with Plato that it was wittily said either Philo Platonizes or Plato Philonizes. For Plato the law is a living being, of which the letter is but the body, hence we must penetrate to its soul.

The letter killeth, the spirit quickeneth. The sacred records are a sort of mythology of which the most scandalous are mere symbols of spiritual truths. Lot and his daughters thus easily become professors of virtue, and the Song of Solomon a pious allegory. The one was thus given by Philo which has been followed by all Christian preachers from that day to this. Philo is a pantheist, as Paul was after him. But he is also a Monotheist. His god is infinit; he is everywhere, and naught exists apart from him. But he is also creator. He is at once pre-eminently impersonal, and at the same time the only person. There is nothing surprising in these contradictions, common alike to Plato, Zeno, and Marcus Aurelius. But without them pantheism is but an expression superadded to the reality of the universe. Without them monotheism is but a simple mirage of the human faculties projected into the infinit, independently of all reality. With Philo God is therefore infinit and one, but his unity assumes three aspects—goodness, that creates; power, that preserves, and wisdom, the word that mediates between goodness and power. Although his trinity is not yet composed of three persons. The famous word of Plato is now no longer a mere metaphysical entity. In Philo it has become the idea of ideas, the supreme type of humanity. Man in his divine essence, "the intercessor, the interpreter of God, who sends him on earth; so that you perceive that the commencement of the gospel of John is borrowed from Philo Judæus.

The New Testament writers hav borrowed most copiously from the ancient pantheistical teachings. Indeed, the nature of the pantheist conception of God has never been better defined than by St. Paul, where he describes the deity as "the by all—the through all—the end all—and the all in all."

Toronto, Mar. 28, 1885. R. B. BUTLAND.

Which Horn Shall We Choose?

In the Boston Commonwealth about every week are printed discourses that, though generally entertaining, are sometimes strangely interlarded with incongruities and thrusts that would excite less wonder to come from such men as Anthony Comstock or Judges Jeffries and Benedict than from James K. Applebee. Not long ago, I think, I read somewhere of his denunciations of Ingersoll, and now I read in the Commonwealth of March 21st his discourses on "Conduct and Creed," in which he says:

"Every true reformer comes into the world not to bring peace, but a sword. If you hold to an opinion and believe it to be true, you ought to be aggressiv with it. Your aggressivness is the best proof you can giv of your sincerity." "A Roman Catholic who is earnest, devoted, and zealous, livs a life of far more value to the world than that of the free religionist, who is too lazy to be earnest, too selfish to be devoted, and too cold to feel the fire of any zeal at all. Let us be earnest for our system of belief, whatever it may be. Let us be aggressiv and enthusiastic with it."

Now, what are we to think of a man that will condemn Ingersoll and THE TRUTH SEEKER for doing that which he recommends? He says:

"That peculiarly brutal publication, the New York TRUTH SEEKER, delights to chronicle the moral infirmities, small and great, in which preachers are sometimes found out; and it evidently thinks that whenever a preacher is shown to hav gone wrong in any way a point is scored against Christianity. All this is very contemptible."

Now, truth seekers, what will you do, continue to be, what Mr. Applebee recommends, aggressiv, iconoclastic, and in earnest, and thus bring down upon your heads the epithet of "brutal," or will you be "too lazy to be earnest, too selfish to be devoted, and too cold to feel the fire of any zeal at all," and merit his disapproval for this? In order to rid the world of that bloody system and curse called Christianity, it becomes us to be aggressiv, zealous, and in dead earnest in showing up its rottenness, its fruits and purposes, by the past, present, and probable future legitimate results; and I hold we cannot be too earnest in the business. We seek not to enforce our theories and opinions by the sword, as do Christians, but we contend for the privilege of persuading by reasonable arguments and appeal to the enlightened conscience and conviction of the people, and lay bare the culpabilities of a designing priesthood, who, beyond a doubt, would, as they hav done in the past, and to some extent in the present, consign us to the rack, stake, and dungeon.

B. F. ROBBINS.

The Devil and the Sabbath.

Another moral tale for the Sunday-school library has been spoiled. While desecrating the holy Sabbath by flying a kite, a youngster fell from the top of a three-story building. Here the awful record should hav ended. A broken neck were a fitting complement to a broken Sabbath. But, alas! while Providence was hurling this sinner from the house-top, the alert and enterprising Satan was stretching a clothes-line across the yard below, to break the fall instead of the spinal cord of the young offender. It is but a repetition of the old, old story, the scene of whose first chapter is laid in the garden of Eden; but it givs one a great respect for the ability of the devil, in whose hand a clothes-line or an apple or any little thing like that can frustrate the divine intention.

Apropos to Sabbath-breaking. Last Sunday, at Saucelito, two ungodly newspaper-men, with their wives and little ones, were wickedly breathing the pure air and blasphemously basking in the rays of the unfamilar sun. It is the only day on which these hard-worked but abandoned persons can giv either themselvs or their families a taste of the health-giving country air. Yet mark how they were haunted in the midst of their guilty enjoyment by the consciousness of the criminality of sitting on the green hillside under the smiling heaven, watching the blessed sunshine reflected in the eyes of their wives and the beaming faces of their little ones, instead of being seated on a hard bench and lulled to a self-satisfied stupor by the soothing tones of improving but monotonous orthodoxy. For was not the gnawing of the troubled conscience revealed in the bravado of the fervor with which one of these depraved journalists exclaimed, "How I thank God that I am not a Christian! If I were, I should hav lost all the divine beauty of the day, shut out from sunshine and gladness within four gloomy walls, absorbing religion and rheumatism instead of strength and vigor to carry me through my next week's duties." And he said it just as if he meant it, too.—The San Franciscan.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - APRIL 4, 1885.

The Burden of Christianity.

In the Independent of March 26th we find these misleading statements:

THE GOSPEL AS A BURDEN.

Among the many journals which come to this office is one which has for its object the overthrow of religion. It calls itself, with fine irony, THE TRUTH SEEKER, and its peculiar province is to seek occasion to hold religion up to ridicule and contempt. To its perverted understanding the truth of God is a lie, and the creature is more than the Creator, who only differs from other idols in being the work of the mind instead of the hand. It looks upon Christians as bondmen to superstition, and deplores the sad state to which Christianity has brought mankind.

But we are not specially interested just now to describe its type of Atheism, nor to inquire into its character and influence. We refer to it because of a thought suggested by an editorial in its columns on the cost of religion to the people of the United States. By an estimate, with whose accuracy we are not concerned, it finds that upwards of $250,000,000 is paid annually in this country for the support of religion. It speaks of this as the "religious burden borne by the people." We must suppose that to the sympathetic mind of our contemporary this seems an awful oppression, laid for the support of the Moloch of superstition. "Every man, woman, and child in the country," pays on an average, $5 for this monstrous purpose. The inference, of course, is that they get nothing in return. Let us see.

In the first place these offerings are all voluntary. No public tax is levied and collected for the support of religion. The $250,000,000 is not wrung from an unwilling people. It could not be raised unless they were willing, nor would they be willing unless they believed that great good is accomplished. Are they mistaken in this belief?

1. One of the features of religion is its kindness to the poor, the sick, and the unfortunate. It fills hungry mouths with meat and drink, it clothes the naked, it visits the sick, and rears hospitals for their sake, and it helps and encourages the unfortunate. It causes money to flow like water for these purposes, and its "dupes" giv their personal service and sympathy as well as their funds. Every church is an eleemosynary institution, every pastor an angel of mercy to the sick, the suffering, the needy.

2. Another channel of the benevolent activity of religion is education. It rears schools and endows colleges everywhere, and invites and urges everybody to use them freely, and pursue all branches of learning. It both stimulates and satisfies the desire for education, and encourages research in every field of human knowledge.

3. Religion seeks to bind society together and uphold the state. It is the strong friend of civil law, and demands equal liberty for all, Christian or Pagan, Theist or Atheist. It inculcates submission to rulers, payment of tribute, and exhorts to industry and diligence in business.

4. It is especially activ in the reform and prevention of criminals. All the influence it can command is exerted to make worthy citizens. It restrains from murder, robbery, dishonesty, drunkenness, adultery, cruelty, and all the crimes and vices which afflict society. It has reformed many a criminal, many a drunkard, and made of them useful members of society.

Here are only a few of the humane, the moral, and the social results of religion, given in the merest outline; and yet they sum up the creed of Mr. Ingersoll and his party. Millions of money are expended annually by religion for this purpose, and its humanity is not confined by nation or continent. It covers the globe. It has created the civilization and commerce of savages in the South Seas and Africa, and developed the better elements in all peoples. This is the fulfilment of the highest demands of Freethinkers. Is it not magnificent beneficence? If religion does this, is it a "burden" on the people? Where is the beneficence, where is the humanity, that are not the offspring of religion? What is the Ingersoll party doing to-day but trying to defeat this spirit of humanity, by attacking its inspiring cause?

Is the gospel a burden to the mind and conscience? Ask him who has accepted it, and lives by it, and hopes in it. The world is full of pain, perplexities, privations; life is a battle with fears and forces of evil, and death is a dark destiny. What help or hope has the Freethinker to offer? None. But the gospel smoothes out the difficulties of life, lightens its burdens, eases its pains, turns its sorrows into joys, and lights with an unquenchable and restful hope down to and through the gates of death. To whom, then, is the gospel a burden?

Passing over the criticism on THE TRUTH SEEKER to get at the meat of the Independent's thought, let us see if the people get anything in return for the money invested in religion. Our contemporary says that for this $253,000,000 the poor are taken care of, the hungry fed, the sick visited and hospitals reared for their sake, children educated by schools and colleges, society bound together and equal liberty for all secured, criminals reformed and crimes prevented, the drunkard led to paths of sobriety, the adulterer restrained, and the people made kind and honest.

This ad captandum vulgus sort of writing is very general, and we are not, therefore, surprised to find our religious friend using it. But, really, there ought to be some little basis on which to found it.

Our estimate of the cost of Christianity, which, we assert, is a religious burden, included

Loss by exemption from taxation, - -	$ 17,500,000
Salaries of ministers, - - -	121,500,000
Cost of maintaining churches, - -	14,000,000
Twenty millions spend five dollars each,	100,000,000

Will the Independent dare assert that any hospitals, or schools, or colleges, are erected with the cash lost by exemption, or from the salaries of ministers, or by the money spent in repairs of churches, or by the five dollars each which we allow some twenty millions to squander on church fairs, picnics, sociables, etc., etc.? We think not. Then what do the people get for it? Simply two sermons a week, two prayer meetings, and a Sunday-school, in nearly every one of which they are assured that they are the most awful sinners whom the Lord suffers to liv; that if they had their deserts, hades would be fuller than it is at present, and that if they do not mend their ways the Lord's opponent will certainly get them. We hav been there, and know just what is received in return for the expenditures enumerated. If the people think such teaching is worth the time and money, they hav a right to it, with one exception—the exemption is a piece of legislativ tyranny.

That exemption is a burden upon the people we hav the words of an authority the Independent will probably respect, though it could not by any possibility admit that THE TRUTH SEEKER is right. That authority is the Independent itself. A few months ago our contemporary discoursed upon "Ecclesiastical Property and Taxation." It enumerated among the property which the "assessor and tax-gatherer must pass by as if it had no existence" the real estate or personal property of ecclesiastics to the extent of fifteen hundred dollars (which is correct); church buildings, including the lots on which they are situated, and all church schoolhouses, academies, and colleges, with their lots, and all the furniture thereto belonging. This property, said our critical contemporary, enjoys all the protection which society, through its laws, affords every species of property, yet pays not a dollar in return. "The consequence of this exemption is an increase in the rate of taxation imposed upon property not thus exempted. A certain percentage of the tax which is paid goes to fill up the vacuum created by this favoritism to ecclesiastics and ecclesiastical property. Indirectly each tax-payer is compelled by the state to contribute to the support of . . church institutions." Further the Independent said: This fact "is wholly inconsistent with our theory of civil government. . . . The legal exemption is an unjust discrimination in their [ecclesiastics'] favor, and by so much a burden upon all the rest of the people." "The exemption makes a virtual union between church and state, by a covenant of bounties and reliefs extended by the latter to the former, and then by compelling the public at large to foot the bills. This in plain words, is the long and short of the matter." In the face of this position (for taking which we hav since admired the paper) we doubt if the Independent will hav the hardihood to repeat its denial that the gospel is not a burden upon the people to the extent at least of seventeen million five hundred thousand dollars.

Let us look at the remainder of our contemporary's assertions. The estimate we gave, as we hav said, was of the cost of bare religion, without accessories, the plain worship of a monstrous myth and an impossible god-man. When the church performs the good work recounted she usually makes the public pay for that too. Let us see. Take the money given by this city to religious institutions for one month only. In the month of August, 1883, New York, appropriated as follows:

Institution of Mercy, - - - -	$8,720.28
St. Stephen's Home for Children, - -	3,124.85
St. Joseph's Asylum, - - - -	2,692.86
Missionary Sisters of St. Francis, - -	3,690.28
Mission of the Immaculate Virgin, - -	4,513.15
Asylum Sisters of St. Dominic, - -	3,072 28
Dominican Convent of Our Lady of the Rosary,	972.57
Association for the Benefit of Colored Orphans,	811.43
St. James's Home, - - - -	857.71
Association for Befriending Children and Young Girls, - - - - - -	141.14
St. Ann's Home, - - - -	310.00
American Female Guardian Society and Home for the Friendless, - - -	746.85
Asylum of St. Vincent de Paul, - - -	504.85
Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society, -	1,997.43
Ladies' Deborah Nursery and Child's Protectory	1,980.00
Home for Fallen and Friendless Girls, -	262.71

The Catholic Protectory, an institution pointed to with exultation by the church, gets from the public treasury about $110 per head per annum, or double the actual cost of supporting its inmates. Who supports that institution? The Sisters of Charity, who care for the foundlings, receive from the city some $354.70 per year for every mother and child cared for. Who supports that institution? The Colored Orphan Asylum also gets an annnal per capita allowance from both the city and state treasuries. Yet the Independent would like the church to hav the credit for that. The city gave the Protestant Episcopal Asylum land worth $250,000. Did the church build that institution? The Chapin Home also has a per capita allowance, besides requiring the inmates to surrender to it their property. Does the church support the Chapin Home? The House of Refuge costs the city $130,000 annually. Who, then, supports the Refuge? The Nursery and Child's Hospital costs the city over $100,000 a year. Shall we giv the church credit for that also? St. Luke's Hospital is another denominational institution, but if the editor of the Independent wished to avail himself of its services he would hav to pay therefor. There are, altogether, some twenty-one Protestant sectarian institutions which under the guise of charity draw from $2,000 to $130,000 per year from the public treasury, eleven reformatories drawing from $1,000 to $10,000 per annum, fifteen asylums drawing about the same, and seventeen hospitals, together with several "special" institutions. Catholics bleed our treasuries from five to ten times as heavily as the Protestants, because this is largely a Catholic city.

Yet the Independent has the assurance to claim for the church the credit of all these beneficences! It is true that "money flows like water for these purposes," but it does not come from the pockets of the pious. If every church is an "eleemosynary institution," it robs Peter to succor Paul. If every pastor is an angel of mercy to the sick and suffering, who are the little devils that torment them? A short time ago we recorded a score or two of clerical criminals. Were those fellows angels of mercy?

"Another channel of the benevolent activity of religion is education," says the Independent. "It rears schools, and endows colleges everywhere, and invites and urges everybody to use them freely, and pursue all branches of learning." Certainly; walk right up to Harvard, young men! Go to Yale or Princeton without a cent in your pockets—and we hope you may get in! But, seriously, what nonsense it is for sensible men to talk about Christianity's furnishing free education. The free schools in this city are supported by the city, and in every town in the state the school tax is a very important item. What does a church in a country town hav to do with education? Absolutely nothing. The Cooper Institute in this city is a magnificent free school, but the church does not support it. The favorit method of ecclesiastics, when they want a college, is to get some rich man to build it, and then they walk in and reap the benefits. Look at Girard College in Philadelphia—the most splendid charity in the country, all the contribution of a Freethinker, stolen by the church for proselyting purposes. We should think every Christian in the country would blush at hearing the name of Girard, the man whose beneficence they hav perverted by their dishonesty and immorality. Christianity build colleges, indeed! It steals them!

"Encourages researches in every field of human knowledge," does Christianity. Oh, yes; it encouraged Bruno in his search for other worlds; it encouraged Galileo in his demonstration of the heliocentric theory; it encouraged Columbus in his search for a new world, and Magellan in his effort to prove the rotundity of the earth. It helped Servetus demonstrate his theory of the circulation of the blood, and stood manfully by the Jewish physicians in advancing medicin! We all know, too, how the telegraph and railroad were helped along by leading pulpiteers calling them "heralds of Antichrist." And the youngest of our Christians know under what great obligations the Evolutionists are to the church, Protestant and Catholic. Geology, chemistry, physics, are all under the same obligations as evolution! Surely the Independent was forgetful in not enumerating Christianity's encouragement of research.

If religion demands equal liberty for all, why is not that liberty secured in every Christian country? Why, in Christian England and America, hav Freethinkers been imprisoned in our day, and dragged through the streets with halters around their necks by Christian citizens? The Christians hav the power to giv equal liberty to the Atheist, the pagan, and the Theist; why, then, is Bradlaugh kept out of Parliament and Atheists out of most American courts?

"Christianity restrains from murder, robbery, dishonesty, drunkenness, adultery, cruelty, and all the crimes and vices which afflict society," we are told. Why is it, then, in this Christian state, that the penitentiaries are crowded with religious murderers, burglars, and thieves? Why is it that Canada is considering the advisability of amending the treaty so she can send back the Christian bank cashiers and defaulters now over the border? Why is it that our police courts are crowded every morning with drunkards of pious proclivities and religious antecedents? Why was "licentious as a priest" once a common saying in Europe, and why is it now that more ministers than men of any other profession are guilty of adultery? Why is it necessary in this Christian city to hav a society to protect Christian children from Christian parents? Why is it that it requires nearly three thousand policemen to protect the lives and property of the citizens of this city, if religion "restrains from all the crimes and vices which afflict society?" New York is certainly a religious city—it has even been called New Ireland.

If Christianity only did all that its intemperate advocates claim for it, then would we rejoice, though we never could believe the truth of the gospel stories. But religion has been a black pall over the face of the Western world. Commerce has spread civilization in dark places, but where religion has traveled she has carried desolation. From South America Catholicism exterminated a civilization which all Europe might hav studied with advantage, and missionaries to-day rely more on the power of government than on the power of the "holy ghost."

We never could see much difference between those who accepted the gospel, and lived by it and hoped in it, and those who did not. The Christian has as many trials, and pains, and perplexities, and privations as the Freethinker. The dark destiny of death is made no lighter by the gospel. No man ever died in more mortal terror than Christ. A resurrection of the body is impossible, and the reality of heaven has never been proved. The gospel is a burden to every poor dupe of a priest, and to every one who pays a cent to hear a preacher make a few score guesses per year about the state of a soul no anatomist can find. The gospel is a burden here, to the people of Ireland, England, France, Spain, Italy, Russia, Austria, and to every other country that supports preachers. That is the "whom" the gospel is a burden to.

Another Critic.

As will be seen from a communication from Mr. B. F. Robbins, the Rev. J. Kay Applebee is much exercised because we printed those cases of clerical wrong-doing that casually came to our notice. Mr. Applebee would probably consider it "peculiarly brutal" should we quote for his benefit the ancient couplet,

> "No rogue e'er felt the halter draw,
> With good opinion of the law."

But, without giving offense, we hope we may remind him that it would be much better to reform the ministers than to denounce us for showing them up. If there is consolation in the knowledge, though, Mr. Applebee is hereby informed that only a few of such derelictions are printed, probably not more than one per cent. The ninety and nine per cent we never hear of.

We never said that a preacher's "fall from grace" is a point against the truth of Christianity. That kind of logic is exclusivly employed in the pulpit. The private character of an advocate is no evidence for or against the cause he pleads. But there are a few very good reasons why we print the derelictions of the clergy. One is that the advocates of Christianity claim as an evidence of its divinity its beneficent influence upon believers. It is claimed that Christians are more chaste, honest, sober, kind, benevolent, and in every way better than the world's people, and, above all, are infinitly superior in morals to the Infidels. And it is claimed that the "blessed religion of Christ" does all this. Now if this were so, it would logically follow that those who had the most of this "blessed faith in their hearts" would be the most perfect people. It will scarcely be denied that ministers are more religious, more devoted Christians, than their flocks or the outsiders. Then what should follow? Why, that they should be the very angels of morality. But what is the fact? That no learned profession in the country furnishes so many offenders against chastity, and minor virtues, in proportion to its numbers, as the clerical. The inevitable conclusion, then, is that Christianity is in no wise synonymous with, or even conduciv to, morality. Theodore Parker, whose pulpit Mr. Applebee, after the manner of the frog in the fable, is endeavoring to fill, said, "It is this false theology, with its vicarious atonement, salvation, without morality or piety, which has bewitched the leading nations of the earth with such practical mischief." That these facts may be patent to the most obtuse, we occasionally furnish an overwhelming argument that must come in the shape of "Religious Intelligence."

Another reason why we pillory the clerical scamps is because they so persistently lie about Freethinkers. Every orthodox minister in the country tells his congregation to shun Infidelity as they would shun the devil, because Infidels are immoral; that an Atheist nation would be another Sodom; that a disbelief in heaven and hell means destruction of the family, prostitution for our wives and sisters, and Communism, Anarchy, and the penitentiary for the men. Listen to the foremost Presbyterian preacher in the United States:

> "Take all idea of retribution and punishment out of the hearts and minds of men, and it would not be long before Brooklyn, and New York, and Boston, and Charleston, and Chicago were Sodoms—Sodoms. . . If Infidelity triumph, and Christianity be overthrown, it means the demoralization of society. The majority of those who are indignant against the Bible because of the idea of punishment are men whose lives are bad, or whose hearts are impure, and who hate the Bible because of the idea of future punishment for the same reason that criminals hate the penitentiary. Take away this idea of future punishment, and men would soon turn this world into a hell."

And this sort of twaddle is echoed all over the country by men who are not worthy to unloose the shoes of even the most humble Freethinker. Preachers big and little sing the same song. Children are taught that Infidelity is the synonym for everything bad, that that one word includes every crime in the calendar. Now, we propose to make them sick of it, and force them to quit hallooing, "Stop thief," to distract attention from their own depredations. In our observation, we hav found that the most vociferous shouters against their neighbors are the very ones who themselvs need watching. For instance, Clark Braden has been going up and down the land crying against Infidelity. Three weeks ago he was arrested for swindling a man. And of the thirty and odd clergymen whose lapses came to our knowledge and were chronicled a short time ago, probably not one but would hav told his Sunday-school scholars that "Tom" Paine was, and "Bob" Ingersoll is, evil personified.

We hav not the least respect for the remonstrances of those hypercritical and supernice gentlemen who denounce THE TRUTH SEEKER for putting these ministers in the stocks, while they extenuate the crimes and whitewash the criminals. Once upon a time a Presbyterian clergyman, named G. H. Humphrey, engaged the founder of THE TRUTH SEEKER in debate. One of the points he raised against Infidelity was the immorality of noted Infidels. According to him, the Bible was true because Byron loved many women, Voltaire and Rousseau had mistresses, Paine drank rum, Girard procured a divorce (he did not mention that it was because Girard's wife was ruined by a minister), Bolingbroke and Shelley had companions, and John Stuart Mill and Auguste Comte associated with ladies "in a manner that would hav blasted a clergyman's reputation." It mattered not to him that his charges were either false or grossly exaggerated. It was Christian logic, and we never heard any denunciation from Mr. Applebee that "all this was contemptible."

But here is the moral: April 3, 1884, Justices Ford and Smith rendered the decision that the Rev. G. H. Humphrey must giv bonds in $500 to pay Laura A. Jones $5 per week for the support of her child. Following Mr. Humphrey's line of argument, the Bible is false because of this decision.

Mr. Applebee can apply this moral in various ways.

"Carry the War Into Africa."

The "Object Lesson for Legislators" printed on the first page of THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 21st is greatly appreciated by our readers. How the legislators like it we hav not heard. A friend from the Green Mountain state writes:

WOODSTOCK, VT., March 23, 1885.

MY DEAR FRIEND MACDONALD: I see in the last TRUTH SEEKER that a gentleman gave you the sum of $5 for you to use as best you could. You hav stated what you would use it for—to put the March 21st number of THE TRUTH SEEKER into the hands of your senators and assemblymen. If you can find enough willing souls to assist, you say you will carry the war into Africa. In response to your wishes, I, an old man lacking but a few months of eighty years, and a Spiritualist of thirty-five years' standing, wishing to assist in enlightening that ignorant part of our countrymen and free them from the power of priestly rule, remit to you for that purpose $5. Also 25 cents for some numbers of the paper containing the picture, for the purpose of enlightening our people of the Green Mountain state, and causing them to look well to their interests. If they do not, the power they hav will pass to the ignorant Catholics at no far distant day.

I am yours for the common and rightful good of our country,

JOHN D. POWERS.

Another and widely-known veteran worker for Freethought writes:

ST. JOHN'S, MICH., March 23, 1885.

MY DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: Send me one TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, 25 cents, and the balance of the inclosed in the Romish Influence. Every Liberal League and every Freethinker should hav a host of that telling picture, showing what the Catholics would do if they had the power, and it is only the same spirit which possesses the Protestant churches to-day.

I hav fought the Bible in school for ten years, and last Saturday the Bible played out. The school building took fire and burnt to the ground, and I am glad of it. I hav paid more than a thousand dollars towards its support, and shall help build another, and if, like the old, it is run in the interest of sectarianism, the sooner it is struck with lightning the better it will be for the people.

I shall hav the Romish tiger framed and hung up in my house. If, Mr. Editor, you could strike off ten thousand with just the picture on one side and a few words on the back suitable to show that Protestantism is to-day trampling on the consciences and legal rights of all others who are not of their way of thinking the same as Catholics would do if they had the power, the bills would come so low that any one could keep on hand a few for gratuitous circulation. I will take 1,000. Who will take the next 1,000? Over 100,000 ought to be sold.

M. BABCOCK.

We thank Mr. Powers for his aid in the work. In addition to the papers sent to the legislature, the Manhattan Liberal Club forwarded a large petition to Albany against the passage of the "Freedom of Worship" bill. We hav circulated many of the issue of March 21st, sending a copy of that and of March 28th to the lawmakers of Wisconsin, in the legislature of which state we are informed there is a large Liberal element. We hope that, with a little stirring up, they may be induced to take from the church some of the unequal and iniquitous privileges she now enjoys.

It is THE TRUTH SEEKER'S intention also to take the Bible in the schools question into the courts of this state as soon as we are prepared to stand the legal expenses. As the state superintendent of education, Mr. Ruggles, has not the stamina to enforce his own orders, it may not be amiss for the Liberals to lend him a little dignity, out of respect for his office, if not for himself.

Mr. Babcock's suggestion is a good one, and if the ten thousand are bespoken, or half that number, THE TRUTH SEEKER will get the picture out on heavier paper, clearly printed, with the texts suggested by Mr. Babcock on the other side. They can be got up for one dollar per hundred for any number of copies. We also hav some of THE TRUTH SEEKER on hand, price seven cents a single copy; in quantities of ten and over, five cents each.

Carry the war into Africa.

THANKS are due to M. B. Lawrence of DuQuoin, Ill., F. G. Wyman, Dunkirk, N. Y.; W. H. Lindsley, Lansing, Mich.; James McKelvey, St. Paul, Minn.; S. V. Appleby, Spottswood, N. J.; J. T. Smart, Marinette, Wis.; Geo. B. Harper, chief clerk Mo. State Penitentiary, city of Jefferson, Mo., and S. P. Putnam for reports of penal institutions. Several others hav sent us documents, for which we are greatly obliged, but the courtesy cannot be personally acknowledged by reason of the forwarders neglecting to attach their names. We hope every one who can will send us these reports.

Letters from Friends.

REASONS WHY I WON'T.

LOCKPORT, ILL., March 23, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I hav a few simple reasons as to what constitutes a good Liberal paper or journal. In the first place, I do not expect that any particular one will include all phases of Liberal reform, but that each one will represent some special phase, and that in harmony with the general principles of human liberty and universal justice.

In the next place, I look for honesty, but not perfection, on the part of the editor or editors, with a practical illustration of freedom of speech, by an impartial opening of their columns to all sides in the general discussion as to which is the best method to accomplish the main object. When I speak of the freedom of speech, I do not mean that each and every contributor has the right to vent his personal spleen against those who differ. I mean that courteous, honest, and fair presentation of views that beget a disposition to listen, and which are worthy the time and patience of reproducing for the general reader.

Again, I do not expect or desire that a paper or journal should agree with me in one-half of my reasonable or unreasonable notions, for I know the absolute impossibility of unity of thought in all directions, and the necessity of diversity (to some extent) in nearly all. As the "agitation of thought is the beginning of wisdom," that uniformity that would put at rest all agitation would ere long breed mental inertia or moral pestilence.

I hav been led to these remarks by observing the unreason of those ordering a discontinuance of THE TRUTH SEEKER. THE TRUTH SEEKER, measured by my yard stick, "fills the bill." As I understand it, its object is a search for truth; its line of march through and over all shams that militate against the largest, fullest, and freest enjoyment of all the faculties of mind or body that work no injury to the single individual or general whole.

In order to ascertain what is truth, its doors (figurativly speaking) are thrown open to theology, science, and politics, and every form of sect, party, and ism these hav and still continue to generate. That it has been impartial and generous there is no question. That it has made mistakes there is no doubt. That thus far it has done more good than any other Liberal organ (to me) there is the fullest assurance. Of course there has been much that it contained that seemed ill-timed, and articles, or parts of such, that were rasping in the extreme.

What then? Should I put on the sulks, take umbrage, and order the paper stopped? I think not. What, then, should I do? Simply this: Read the objectionable matter more carefully, and see if the cause of offense was not found in some weak spot of one of my pet notions that the keen, incisiv logic had probed to its bottom, and found it sore, very sore. Such has often been the case, and many times that which at first has seemed offensiv has proved a source of help.

Keeping in view the general principle of Liberal journalism, and with a determination to exemplify in word and deed the elements of true Liberalism, I desire the fullest discussion of questions that relate to human well-being. Before any Liberal should discontinue an honest Liberal paper because there is much that it contains disagreeable to his tastes and convictions, he or she should be careful not to place themselves on the list of the Intolerants, for it is this very class that Liberals and Liberalism contend against. Then, again, we should take into consideration the universal law (of narrow selfhood) that every single individual man is smarter, clearer-seeing, and more judicious and discriminating, than all other men. This law is founded on this benevolent principle of nature, viz., that whenever and wherever there is a deficiency in the quality or quantity of brains, nature, in the plenitude of its generosity, compensates by a redundancy of conceit.

This is just why any of us could edit THE TRUTH SEEKER infinitly better than Eugene Macdonald. This is why we would hav THE TRUTH SEEKER always up to our high-water mark of moral and intellectual grandeur. This is why we would so conduct it as to harmonize all the heterogeneous and incongruous elements that make up its list of patrons. Oh, yes, the everlasting "we could do wonders were we just where we are not."

I half imagin that we get quite all we pay for, and if THE TRUTH SEEKER does as well in the future as in the past, as a Liberal, I cannot afford to weaken its influence, and, more than all, I will not sacrifice my manhood on the altar of narrowness, intolerance, and illiberality. For these reasons I will not stop THE TRUTH SEEKER. Please place the inclosed to my credit. Truly yours, GEORGE LYNN.

THE HEADS AND FACES IN THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

COLUMBUS, KAN., March 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: While you are all the time publishing the products of the human machine or organism, let me direct the attention of your readers to the machine itself. The matter in the ANNUAL is most excellent and inspiring, but, to me, who hav been studying, observing, and reading man through the outer signs for fifty years, its heads and faces are still more interesting and significant.

My only hope of the reign of truth, love, justice, and humanity on earth is through the forward and upward development of the human brain; and all the labor of Liberals with tongue and pen must tend, do tend, and will tend to that end. Every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER should hav the ANNUAL, for the lessons which its heads and faces teach are worth one hundred times its cost.

Let me say here that if you will giv me a man's history I will, to a great extent, construct the man; and show me a man and I will, more or less, tell you his history.

All human history is but the record of the products, results, activities, impressions of the brain and body. The average development of the thirty-seven men and women, whose pictures are in the ANNUAL, as to form, size, and quality, is far above and superior to the average development of men and women.

Oh, what an improved world we should hav if the average brains and bodies of human—and inhuman—society were as high and good!

As all the persons are still living but Thomas Paine and D. M. Bennett, I will first direct the attention of the reader to them and then allude to the others without naming any one. The signs of character are all in the face and forehead, whether we can locate and distinguish them or not.

For vitality, good digestion, and energy, look at the breadth and fullness of the middle face. For will-power, firmness, persistency, and conscientiousness, look at the depth and width of the lower jaw. For sexual love and force, so essential to life, action, effect, and success, look at the middle part of the lower upper-lip—the red part; the love of children at the corner of the mouth, benevolence and philanthrophy shown by the turning down and rolling out of the lower lip, while the concavity below it shows how little jealousy, hatred, and contempt he had. No true physiognomist could say that Paine hated anybody or anything but falsehood, tyranny, and slavery. Ah, if I, who, even when a boy, was taught that Tom Paine was a synonym for all that is low and base, could hav seen his face-picture, I should hav greatly doubted it. Around that mouth—that loving mouth—are clustered many of the noblest attributes of humanity. For hospitality and friendship look at the wrinkle obliquely from the nose, and the fulness of the cheek under the eye. For language, and the ability to use it, look at the width of the mouth and the projection and fullness of the eye. For general intellect, intelligence, and ability to analyze, discriminate, compare, describe, and reason, look at the general fulness of the forehead—no hollows and depressions—and the remarkable length and fulness of the nose, especially at the tower end, that indicates great power of analysis, critical acumen, etc. Look, also, at the width and size of the nostrils, which tell you power and strength of the heart, the size, shape, and capacity of the lungs and breathing power, which explains how he could endure so much brain-work, and so much physical labor, hardship, and deprivation. Look at the breadth of his middle forehead, the width between and fulness over the eyes for his inventiv, original, mechanical mind, his keen observing power, his ability to locate, to collect, and remember facts and make use of them.

What a full and versatil intellect, what a love of humanity, truth, right, and principle, what an index of love and wisdom, is shown in that forehead and face to all who can read it and be impressed by it! It seems to me that if Paine's orthodox calumniators and haters could look at that face they would soften and relent. What a happy organization—what a favorable parentage he must hav had! He was a love-child. Much more I could say, but must stop.

Now let the reader apply the same signs to the other heads and faces pictured in the ANNUAL. Observe in most of the male and female faces the vitality, energy, and good digestion indicated by breadth of face and nostrils, width and hight of shoulders, depth of chest and size of neck. A few are, more or less, lacking in these respects. Look at the high, full foreheads, and the high, long, and full noses, at, and under, and around the end, for their intellectual power, wisdom, and logic. Look at and around their mouths for love of sex, children, and humanity. In the female none are deficient, but some hav more than others. In some of the males there is, more or less, deficiency. A few have immense ideality and imagination, and revel in the esthetic and ideal, and liv in the spirit world here. A few hav thin faces, thin chests, thin necks, thin nostrils, and sloping shoulders, and should be much in the open air, and use the brain less and the muscles more. But I must stop.

Oh, when will the obstructions in the way of the upward and forward growth of the brain be removed, that we may hav the whole world filled with such—and still better—men and women as are pictured in the ANNUAL, and a correspondent life! J. H. COOK.

P.S.—I am very sorry that I forgot to make especial allusion to our departed D. M. Bennett. I will now only say that his magnificent head and face, capacity and character, are correspondent, correlated, and co-ordinate. To him I apply the words of Dr. Fossati at the grave of Dr. Gall: "What an irreparable blank do I behold in the scientific world by the loss of one man." J. H. C.

SHAWSVILLE, VA., March 21, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I hav had my mouth open for some time to giv you a little wholesome advice about the management of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and, in case you would not giv heed at once, threaten you that I would cut a dog open or do something awful. But upon reading THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 14th, I hav concluded to wait a spell—lie low, hold on for seventy-five or a hundred years, and see if you grow old and mild, or feeling so as to do as others order. It seems to me you might. Hav you not the holy example of the Religio-Philosophical Journal and the Index? Do they not please? Yes, giv perfect satisfaction to the opposit class of readers they did ten years ago. You just see if you can't get the whole Catholic church to patronize THE TRUTH SEEKER. I will not put in a threat this time in case you do not, but I tell you to be on the look-out for the future. J. M. BARNES.

BALLSTON SPA, N. Y., Feb. 3, 285.

MR. EDITOR: When I arrived home I found "The Story Hour." I think it is the finest thing I ever saw of the kind, and is just the kind of literature that should be in the family of every Freethinker. My children devour every word as a hungry man would pie. Let me say, Long liv Miss Wixon, and may her life be a beacon light to the young and rising generation, in the future as in the past. When my children hav learned the great lessons to be found in the "Story Hour," I shall send for "Apples of Gold." THE TRUTH SEEKER came to hand all right. I hav just received the "Magazine," and think Brother Wakeman's speech is sublime, and TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL will be a yearly visitor at my fireside, if I know myself, so long as I am able to get it. The Salvation army Bible expounder whom I invited to meet me in discussion did not connect, but I shall extend another invitation to him, and will make him either catch the rat or go into the hole. Kind love to all in THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

WILLIAM THORPE.

SALESVILLE, MON., Feb. 19, 1885.

"The revival at the M. E. church still continues. In something over a month of earnest exhortation we understand one new member has been gathered unto the fold, and one gentleman stood up for prayers. It is believed that the latter gentleman stood up more out of kindness of heart than anything else. He is sound and healthy mentally and physically and, perhaps, had some curiosity to ascertain if the prayers of the church would hav any effect on such a subject. We believe he is still being prayed for, but it is safe to bet that the prayers won't fetch him."—Avant Courier, Bozeman, Montana.

MR. EDITOR: For the foremost paper of the city of Bozeman to speak so of God's people must sound hard to the ears of the God-chosen few in that Infidel city. But that shows that the secular press is not afraid to speak truth "out here."

I would like to inquire of our Liberal friends what has become of our Liberal Union organized by Dr. York. Can't we hav a month of earnest exhortation? I am getting rather cold and would enjoy a revival—a genuin old debate with some good Methodist, for instance. Why can't Liberals work just a little for the cause? Why can't the large Liberal Union of more than a hundred members hav a Sunday-school? My daughters are in Bozeman attending school, and for want of something better hav to go to Christian Sunday-schools. Children naturally want to go somewhere to public entertainment. The churches hav nice Sunday-schools, nice clothes, and good music, too (even a string band). All these things allure the young into the folds of the church. Why can't we do something? The legislature of Montana is in session and contains only one Christian. Our new governor has not seen fit to ask the passage of any Sunday law this time. So we are safe for two years against any such law; but, to their shame be it said, our law-makers elected a chaplain to do the praying at two dollars a day. The Hon. Turges said if they would furnish him some old prayer-book he would do the praying for nothing. But something must be done to console the faithful, so let him pray. DR. W. J. STOVER.

COTTONWOOD, IDAHO, Feb. 11, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, "Bible Morals," etc.

Mr. Lacy's offer—what has become of it? Would it not be best for some of those people to hunt it up, before they cry "Truesdell's a fraud?" Should they not "take in" that substantial fact of his—the five hundred dollars—before "knocking the bottom out of two of his 'bottom facts?'" If their horse can run, why don't they take the premium? Truesdell seems to be still in the field. But where is Mr. Lacy?

Hav some of the stars got lost? or hav they been in a slugging match with Sullivan and got knocked out? Maybe our presidential astrologer (of some time back) can tell—I am sure I can't. Yours, in this world, ARTHUR CHAPEL.

BLAINE STATION, O., Feb. 21, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed 50 cents for the ANNUAL and Remsburg's "Bible Morals."

Mine is rather a new name on your subscription list for THE TRUTH SEEKER, but I hope it will become an old one. I also hope to be able to giv a little aid to the Freethought movement. I never had much confidence in the Bible and the whole "gang" of preachers, and since I read "Orthodoxy" the balance of that little has gone too. My admiration for all the hard workers on the field of Freethought, and my best respects to you. E. BACH.

LOOKINGGLASS, OREGON, Feb. 14, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I send $4.50—for the paper, the "Story Hour," and for the ANNUAL. Hope I shall be able to be more punctual in the future. We like the paper better as a family educator since the contributions in the "Children's Corner."

Freethought is at a stand-still in this part of the far West. No lecturers, no organizations of any kind. The best we can do is to read and circulate Liberal papers. When a lecturer comes West he generally passes us by, as was the case last fall with Colonel Ingersoll when en route to California.

While we are interested and pleased with the atricles from your very able contributors and "Letters from Friends," yet so much controversy and speculation about our future is, we think, a waste of time. It is well that we all hav a hope; but when we go beyond this we probably overreach the truth. Nature in this has left us as it should—in total ignorance; and here ignorance should be bliss, for thereby we should be better qualified to attend to the duties of this life; which, if properly attended to, will benefit ourselvs and those around us, and prepare us for another and better stage of existence, if it is in store for us. FRAZIER WARD.

OKETO, KAN., Feb. 9, 285.

TO THE PUBLISHERS OF MY BIBLE: I see by the tab on my present Bible that my subscription will soon run out, and therefore I send you $3 for the next volume.

There is one change I would like to see in THE TRUTH SEEKER; that is this: I save all my papers and get each volume bound, and I find I hav to get a great deal bound up in each volume that is taking up space. What I mean is the advertisments. If it was not too much expense to you to add one outside sheet to each paper with all the advertisments on, then we could tear it off before binding and hav a nice clean paper to bind.

Another improvement would be to make an index to each volume. Then when we want to point to a certain subject it would be easily found. The way it is at present, it is hard to find what one wants.

I wish some of the Liberal lecturers would drop into our town of Maysville, and start a League. There are plenty of Liberals in the place. Five Liberals told me last Saturday that they would each giv ten dollars to hear Robert Ingersoll lecture in Maysville. I hav no doubt he would do well in a lecture here; he is talked about by everybody.

JAMES BIGHAM.

AYER, MASS., March 23, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: It would seem that the illustration of Romish Influence in the last TRUTH SEEKER has a practical significance, judging from the doings of the school committee in Lewiston, Maine.

There is yet a chance to test this unwarranted assumption of power—this insidious serpent "more subtil than any beast of the field"—to drag religious sectarianism, "the gates of hell," into our public schools.

Has the treasurer any right to pay the people's money for purposes other than that for which it is appropriated? and that too in violation of the sacred Constitution to which a (would-be) free people hav pledged our lives to perpetuate the sacred honor of our heroic ancestors?

If the people's money, which is raised and appropriated for the sole purpose of education, is paid out to either directly or indirectly favor or maintain any sectarian religion, then our surrender is written, and shame and confusion will cover our fair fame, and it is only a question of time when the pope of any religion will take possession of the White House, and a once free people be again in chains!

Religious domination, dissension, persecution, hav ever been the "gates of hell;" yea, and passed the gates—hell itself.

Keep the source of contention—the Bible—forever out of the public schools. A book speaking with such discordant tongue, a book that no two hav inspiration enough to read alike, is not a safe book to induct true principles into young minds.

Our forefathers saw a world in chains under the feet of priests. Proud of their Infidelity to kingcraft and priestcraft, through seven long years of conflict, they broke those chains, and gave their fragments to the merry winds of freedom.

The American eagle, the brightest ensign of liberty that floats on any banner of the world, is still our witness. They can't forsake this banner bright, who love the cause of truth and right. "The lion and the lamb may lie down together," but the lamb must be outside of the lion.

The employment of chaplains, and the reading of the Bible in schools, by secular authority, is but food for this lion. Don't be deceived. Once his paw on the public purse, the emblem of sacred liberty may then fold his wings and perch upon a withered limb for another dark and gloomy night. It is easy to see that we are on the verge of possibilities which stanch vigilance only can avert. Treasurers, custodians of the people's money, beware lest you betray our savior into an enemy's hands, bearing in mind the immortal words of the patriotic Patrick Henry, "Giv me liberty, or giv me death."

E. MYRICK.

AUBURN, N. Y., Feb. 27, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Regarding Brother Reynolds's Tent Fund, I wish to say that you may write me down one dollar for it, to be paid at any time called upon.

I hav been watching the interest manifested toward the new movement in propagating Freethought by the tent crusade, as suggested by the indefatigable Reynolds. Certainly, it is a new idea in the department of Liberalism, and ought to meet with universal approval. Everybody who can should contribute toward this grand inception. The more I think of it, the grander scheme it seems to me. It is putting just the right man in the right place for accomplishing the greatest aggressiv work yet thought of. We, as Liberals, working and now stimulated and encouraged, especially since the harmony wrought at Cassadaga, as never before in the history of Liberalism, must not let this project fail. We must surely provide our dear brother with this tent, that he may go forth from Galilee over into Mesopotamia, thence through Assyria and back into Palestine, proclaiming the gospel of humanity, peace on earth and good will to man. Let this tent be pitched right into the very strongholds of orthodoxy, priestcraft, and superstition, and show to the world our aims, purposes, and determinations, that we hav better and nobler aspirations and benefactions for mankind than yet offered by the church.

Brother Reynolds is, by his wide experience as an evangelist, just the one that should be armed and equipped with all the necessary accouterments for warfare, and, if he be liberally encouraged and supported as he should be during the summer campaign, we will all be greatly surprised at the amount of good done in our noble cause, and feel rejoiced that we hav been faithful to duty in bidding him God-speed in his great work and undertaking. I hope that Brother Reynolds will giv the enemy no rest day or night, but keep up an unceasing hostility until every demand of Liberalism shall be respected and written upon the scroll of justice and right. As yet the tent fund has not increased as fast as desired, but I am pleased to see, during the last week, a great improvement in this direction. I hope this will continue until the necessary amount is raised, enabling our hero to start on his mission at the time desired. We must consider, friends, what risks and sacrifices our brother Reynolds is taking. All he asks is to be furnished with this tent, and then he afterward ventures on making his work aggressiv, and paying his way in the lecture-field by his telling onslaughts against the Christian superstitions and intolerance, which are being continually forced upon us. This procedure of spreading Freethought is something not being looked for by our Christian friends, and it will create the greatest consternation among them, and our principles will reach very many who would otherwise never learn of them. Interest in this behalf would be aroused among the young, whose thoughts would be enlisted for Liberalism, and their minds turned into new channels, which would serve finally as a motiv power against the church.

I hope this tent will be staked right here, at least one month, in this county (Cayuga) where we are suffering from the turmoils of ecclesiasticism of the worst sort. But recently Ingersoll has been among us, and we are now breathing much easier. The crustations of ignorance and superstition hav been torn asunder by this greatest of dangerous foes of Christianity. Now we are ready for Reynolds and the tent. Let us raise the money.

L. DEWITT GRISWOLD.

UTICA, N. Y., March 12, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Hav your readers ever noted the difference between the motto of the Salvation Army, "Blood and Fire," and that of the Liberals, "Justice and humanity?" Their character is sufficiently self-evident not to need comment.

Yours liberally. JOHN B. JOHNSTONE.

ORANGE, CAL., Feb. 15, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I would like to ask if there is anything left of "T. E. L." and G. N. Hill since Messrs. Bell and Walker sat down on them. In a "mental sparring exhibition" they should hereafter choose opponents of smaller caliber, for those two "heavy weights" are invincible on the question of regulating morality by force; and all who advocate such a thing are no more entitled to the name of Liberal than were our pious ancestors who enacted the Blue laws of Connecticut. While a single member of the human race remains, we can never hope to find one that is impeccable, and, as Mr. Walker says, to put an end to vice and crime, the race itself must be exterminated. Did these people, who are so anxious to regulate the morality of others by stringent laws and the deprivation of personal liberty, ever stop to think that imperfections might be discovered in themselvs? It would seem not, when they set themselvs up as arbiters of their brother-man, and declare that he shall conform to their views nolens volens. It is the same old spirit that animated the Puritans in their persecutions of those whose religious views failed to harmonize with the ones they entertained; and the enforcement of morality in any direction by law will always prove a failure, as has the propagation of religion by that means. It is not woman alone that can be coaxed easier than driven, but man also; and when persons of either sex feel they are being forced to do an act, whether moral or otherwise, there is a natural tendency to settle back in the breeching, if I may use that homely simile. Back in Vermont, that God and morality state, they hav been trying for forty years to suppress the liquor traffic and make men temperate by law. What is the result? Though a man cannot giv away a glass of cider to a friend who calls to pass a social evening, without subjecting himself to a fine of $5, there are between three and four hundred bars in the state where spirituous liquors can be obtained by those who hanker after such stimulants. It looks encouraging for the ultimate success of prohibition, doesn't it? The "truly good," however, will doubtless continue to legislate for the suppression of immorality, but when, I would ask, was reformation ever wrought in an immoral person by legal enactments? Is there a prohibitionist living who thinks the laws against adultery, fornication, and suicide hav the slightest effect in preventing the same? To me, the passage of such laws are supremely ridiculous, and could these regulators of morality by law and force only comprehend the irrefutable logic of Bell and Walker, they would immediately see the mistake they hav fallen into of thinking the millennium can be brought about just as soon as enough laws are placed on the statute book. "The world do move," but some people learn slowly.

C. SEVERANCE.

WEST UNION, O., Feb. 14, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Luna Hutchinson, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Feb. 7th, says: "From what I hav seen of spiritual phenomena, I think many of these things might be explained by the learned adepts in occultism." I fear she is founding a hope on a treacherous basis. My experience causes "adept in occultism" to sound a good deal like mystifying humbugger. Moreover, their newspaper articles seem intended to excite the inquisitivness of the unscientific, and are as nets spread for game, the object to get money without earning it. Their dark language is too much like the mummery of a priest to hold his victims in subjection, and priest-like they threaten with terror in order to intimidate and hold to secrecy their swindled victims.

Mrs. Hutchinson says: "It is time that this long-hidden light should shine out from the secret crypts of its temples." I should think so; in that sentence she strikes the keynote. I hope she will continue to insist that the light shall shine. But let her note the source to which she is looking for light, viz., "secret crypts." Is it not more likely that darkness, unhealthy, damp, poisonous vapors and venomous reptils should issue from those caverns or crypts than light? The pursuit of light in such a direction seems to threaten danger, disappointment, ruined mind and body, unhappiness, despair. To those who would the truth search out I bid beware of caverns, crypts, deception. The foregoing sentence furnishes a key by which those who hav been bitten by the same serpent can discern the snake that bit me. If Mrs. Hutchinson has been bitten by the same reptil, it is the poison of the intoxication that causes her to hope for some grand discoveries, some sublime, world-blessing light from these heartless, soulless, monstrous, voodooish victimizers. I think her hope is vain. There is enough legitimate science to be sought in a legitimate way to occupy half a dozen lifetimes, without delving into the mystifying ignorance of these inflated egotists, or perhaps worse, viz, heartless knaves and conscienceless victimizers. If Mrs. Hutchinson is a member of an occult order I will venture to say that she has been more mystified than enlightened, and that she has no voice in its polity, but that all the government it contains is in the form of an absolute, intolerant monarchy, with the so-called Grand Master the only power. Furthermore, I think investigation will show that the order to which she thinks she belongs is a myth, and the extortion of money for the so-called degrees a base, miserable, cowardly swindle—a wretched confidence game, the obtaining of money under false pretenses.

A few basic principles of truth may be contained in the so-called degrees, but they are not unknown to men of research generally; and the charge for writing them out ought not to exceed $1, or they might hav been published in THE TRUTH SEEKER for the benefit of all who desired to investigate.

In conclusion, I wish to say that if any Occultist, whether adept or neophyte, feels offended, I shall be pleased to correspond with him or her, and I think I can show good ground for this communication. I am a sincere searcher for truth, with a special desire to investigate those hidden forces and powers which constitute genuine occultism, and I don't object so much to a price for such instruction as I do to the deception which claims a secret brotherhood where none exists, and gets the money from the victim with the understanding that he is to enjoy the fraternity, friendship, and fellowship of a secret order similar to the Masons or Odd Fellows. That is where the cruel deception comes in. I should be glad to hear personally or otherwise from every true student of occultism, and every genuin adept of the science whose methods are honorable and purposes pure.

Finally, I hope any reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER who can giv any light on the subject will do so through its columns, briefly and to the point.

J. F. BECK.

ALTOONA, PA., Feb. 22, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Dr. L. U. Beach was hanged in Hollidaysburg, this county, on Thursday, Feb. 12th, for the murder of his wife in this city last summer. It was one of the most cruel murders known in the annals of crime in our county. Beach arose in the night, and taking a pair of cleavers, hacked away at his wife until her head was almost severed from her body. He was a practicing physician of Altoona, and a man of strong religious proclivities. On the day preceding the murder he had taken the sacrament of the Lord's Supper at the first Lutheran church this city. During the trial the defense endeavored to win on the old insanity plea, but this was of no avail. His case was afterward presented to the board of pardons, but they refused to grant any pardon. He was attended, during his remaining days, by the Rev. Fiery, of Altoona, and the Rev. Killinger, of Hollidaysburg, who rendered all the spiritual consolation they possibly could. Beach claims that, being unwell at the time of the murder, and having his mind affected by medicin, was the principal cause for the foul deed. He was, at the time, very anxious concerning his soul, and this, he said, also weighed heavily upon him. He met his death with great firmness, and said "he was ready to meet with Jesus."

Mr. Editor, my good Liberal friend, Mr. Jay F. Haldeman, of Thompsontown, Pa., says: "I had nothing to do with my coming into existence, but will always endeavor to make the best of it while here, borrow no trouble, and when I leave this world, should I find another, will do the same for that as I did for this."

I would say to my worthy friend that, should there be any possibility of another existence such as this, it would be my highest endeavor to improve on this present one. Were this impossible, then annihilation would be welcomed as a boon. It seems to me that the so-called spiritual phenomena and philosophy are as great a delusion as the Christian superstition. There are thousands of Spiritualists that are led by the merest sophistries, by tricks of legerdemain and feats of magic art. I do not use this as an argumentum ad hominem in any personal sense toward Mr. Haldeman, but would apply to him an argumentum ad judicum. To my mind the greatest truth is found in the words of one of Germany's greatest philosophers: "Der Stoff in seiner Gesammtheit ist die Alles gebarende und Alles wieder in sich Zurucknehmende Mutter alles Sienden."

WM. J. BURNS.

ADRIAN, Feb. 28, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 28th I notice a correspondence between yourself and the Catholic priest, Lambert, the author of "Notes on Ingersoll." I was somewhat interested in it, as I obtained a copy of the "Notes" last summer, and after reading them carefully, and being somewhat indignant at the outrageous and insulting tone of the priest, and his abuse of Colonel Ingersoll and all Freethinkers generally, I wrote him a letter in which I proposed to prove from the most reliable and authentic history that the whole fabric of the Christian religion originated in the most unmitigated fraud; that all the early fathers were self-convicted forgers and liars; that Eusebius, its greatest historian, openly and boldly advocated lying, forgery, and deception to promote the interests of the church, and that all the writers and fathers, from Justin and Irenæus down to Augustine, were no better. The cowardly priest failed, like Dr. Buckley, to respond. I sincerely hope Watts will get the opportunity to show this braggart priest that some things can be done as well as others, as Davy Crockett would say. You may send me the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885, also "Christianity a Reward for Crime."

P. B. REASONER.

CASEY, ILL., Feb. 18, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Send me the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, please. I thought that I would hav had to do without the ANNUAL this year, as money is so scarce with me, but when I saw the list of portraits I concluded I would hav to hav it, so find inclosed twenty-five cents, or postal note, and send it to me.

Good for Elmina and T. Winter! Don't let the Spiritualists crowd them out.

The church has found a new way of appropriating the school money to its own use, or at least a way that I had not heard of till a case came under my own observation. The law of this state allows teachers of public schools pay for legal holidays, unless the contract is made to the contrary. The directors do not hav to make the contract. The teacher draws pay for days when he don't teach; the school director (a leading church-member) says to the teacher, "You can afford to giv to the church what you got for not teaching," which is $5,40. The teacher subscribes five dollars which don't belong to him. The church gets the lion's share.

JOHN MCCRORY.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

When Nettie Went to School.

Nettie, four years old, near the window sat,
She and her doll and the big yellow cat,
Watching the children as they passed by,
Rose and Emma, John and sweet Bessie Bly,
On their way to school on top of the hill,
Where learning and play every hour did fill.
Nettie watched them all with a wishful sigh,
And said, "They do to 'cool, and why sooden't I?"
The old yellow cat on the floor threw a spool,
And she seemed to say, "Why not go to school?"
Then Nettie slid down from her high-backed chair,
And tied her pink bonnet over her hair.
The bluebird was singing his sweetest note,
And white, fleecy clouds in the sky were afloat;
The robins were building their nest in the tree,
And the grass was as green as grass could be,
When Nettie ran lightly adown the road,
Crept under the bars and stepped on a toad,
Filled both her hands with the buttercups' gold,
Then climbed to the steps of the schoolhouse old.
She paused a moment, then opened the door,
And let fall her flowers all over the floor.
Her sun-bonnet hung from the back of her head,
And her cheeks were flushed to rosiest red;
Her hair was straying quite down in her eyes,
As shyly she gazed in greatest surprise
At the rows of scholars on books intent,
And one who was punished for time misspent.
Then spying her sister on a back seat,
She started toward her with nimble feet;
Quick under the desks on her knees and hands
She crept till beside her she bravely stands.
At that moment there came on the door a pat,
Which was duly opened by little Mat,
And amid much laughter and cries of "Scat!"
Who should walk in but a great yellow cat!
The cat had followed Miss Nettie to school,
In defiance of any established rule,
And looking about, demure as you please,
She began to "Me-ow" and then to sneeze.
"Boy, turn out that cat!" said the teacher stern;
"'Tis children, not cats, that come here to learn."
"'At's my tat!" said Nettie, "and if se tan't tum
I san't! Tum, Pansy, let us two do home!"
The scholars all laughed and jiggled their feet,
The teacher gravely complained of the heat,
And to hide his smiles remarked on the weather,
As the cat and Nettie marched off together.

S. H. W.

Going Strawberrying.

One Friday, last summer, Julia, Madge, and I were invited by our schoolmates Rita and Nettie Pease to go home with them from school, stay over night, and "pick strawberries" in their father's lot next day. We resided in the village, while Rita and Nettie's folks lived out two miles, and their big brother, Willie, took them in every morning to school in a large carryall with two shiny, black horses, and came for them every night.

Well, all five of us girls were packed in and off in no time, for Willie was in a great hurry, as his father had other uses for the ponies after his return.

Now, we, sister Julia, Madge, and I, had never been to the Peases's, and everything on the road after a mile out was new and interesting, and we were as happy as happy could be. Julia was fourteen years old, little Madge seven, and I twelve, and the Pease girls, thirteen and nine.

Out we leaped from the carriage at the door, and Mrs. Pease came to welcome us. Rita took us upstairs into a beautiful room, where we were to sleep, and we washed off the dust and brushed our heads before tea, which was all ready for us children, as we were hungry after school. So we ate by ourselvs, with the addition of little Georgie, Rita and Nettie's "baby brother," as they called him, only three years old, and Mrs. Pease waited on us all. It was a luscious supper.

Then we went out out into the garden and the peach orchard, and swung and played until sunset, when we came in and looked over Rita's herbarium, photo-album, sketches, and pictures in the parlor, and then went to bed.

But we were up with the sun, and after breakfast ready for the berrying. I had never seen berries growing that way before in the pastures and meadows without cultivation. Why, there were "acres of them," and we only picked the largest. Then we would ramble off to find another spot equally good. The grass was not very high, and some of it was to be cut sometime; but didn't we trample it down, though? Mr. Pease didn't care, for he was going to turn in another kind of live stock in a few days, and the strawberries must be gathered then or never. We picked great pails full before dinner, and then had some veal pie, sweet bread and butter to eat, and cool milk to drink, in the veranda, spread out on purpose for ourselvs, as it was "the children's party," Mrs. Pease said.

After dinner, when we had rested and had a nice time looking at the chickens, ducks, geese, and great, red-headed turkeys, and animals that we did not hav at home, we started out again, and filled all our baskets before tea time. When we got back to the house there were large tables spread in the veranda for the whole family, for it was Saturday evening, and the work was all done for the week, both outdoors and indoors, and Mr. Pease and Willie were to eat with us, or we to eat with them, and Mr. Pease's father and mother, who lived in one wing of the large, old house where were. Everything was so clean and sparkling and good that I fancied I should hav the best meal of all, for we were to hav strawberries and cream and sugar, besides a strawberry cake, sponge cake, and a rich dessert. But it was all spoiled for me. Grandma Pease came out of her room, smiling sweetly on us girls, and grandpa wanted little Madge to sit next him, while grandma would take me "under her wing," she said, and we were soon all ready for the feast. Oh, mercy! wasn't I captured with the first mouthful grandma took! She didn't eat her strawberries as did the rest, but had a bowl that, I should think, would hold a quart, and so did grandpa; then she filled it with milk, and so did grandpa, and then "crumbed" bread into it, and poured in as much as a teacup full of strawberries, I should guess, and took a large silver spoon and began throwing back her head and opening her mouth as wide as she could, and thrusting her spoon into it with a loud noise like s-w-o-o-p, dropping her head downward every time she swallowed with a gulp, bobbing it up and down, and making that swooping noise every mouthful, and that gulping every time she swallowed, her capstrings flying backward and forward with the motion of her head. Grandpa did just so, to, and it was so comical, little Madge began to stare and smile, and had I not stepped on her toe, and caught her eye, and just shaken my head a very little, I do believe she would hav laughed outright, and I would not hav had her do that for the world. But as for me, I could not eat one mouthful; it took away all my appetite to hear that swooping every mouthful they took, and that gurgling every time they swallowed. I began to feel sick, and had to leave the table in a hurry to avoid consequences. They all thought it was the berries I had eaten while picking them. The rest did not seem to mind it at all. Julia said it was because they were used to it. I told her I never wanted to get used to such ill manners. I was very sorry, as the old lady and gentleman were dressed beautifully. She had on rings and bracelets that were a hundred years old, that I admired greatly, and she was so sweet to look at, and smiled on me so pleasantly, and so did grandpa, and I supposed that they would eat just like my grandpa and grandma (they both died last week), so I loved them dearly as soon as I set my eyes on them, but when they began to eat I wanted to put my hands over my ears and shut my eyes. And they both drank their tea in the same noisy way. Why had not some one told them how ridiculous it made them appear?

Well, we went home. Willie took us in the carryall—I, without my supper, thinking of nothing but Grandpa and Grandma Pease. Mother told me I was a silly girl, and ought not to feel so; that they were very nice, good old people, and that it was nothing but a habit they had acquired when they were young, and I must not mind it. But I said, "I cannot help it. Mercy on me! may I get in the way of some such bad habit when I am young and not know it, and when I am old appear as shockingly as did those old folks dressed in silks, jewels, and broadcloth?

Mother and Julia laughed at my terror, as they called it, so I only begged of them every time they saw me do shocking things, or say shocking words, to tell me of it, so that when I grew up and became old I should spoil no little girl's visit by taking away her appetite, as mine had been, by a bad habit that had clung to me ever since my youth. I made mother and Julia both promis me, before I could eat any supper, that they would correct me every time I said or did anything wrong. Then I thought if we school-girls would only do so, too, how it would improve our manners, and morals also. I wrote a composition on manners and morals last week, and I never mean to use any more slang phrases or ungrammatical languages, but try to be correct in all I do and say, and I wish all the girls, and boys, too, would join me in my resolution, and I will aid them in overcoming bad habits, and forming good ones, as I request them to aid me.

SILLY LIDA.

[The above story conveys an excellent moral, and we trust all the children of our Corner will at once look themselvs over and see if they are possessed of any bad or offensiv habit, similar to that related above. Nothing is so attractiv in a child or grown person as gentle manners and correct habits. They clothe one in a robe of beauty more glowing and lovely than the most costly silks and the rarest jewels.—ED. C. C.]

The Book Agent.

Come, children, be quick, and I'll tell you about a book agent. You hav all seen book agents, and you may hav noticed something funny about 'em, but I don't suppose you ever stopped to figure out the problem, why are they funny—that is, why are they so nice, and why do they make such pretty bows and smile so innocently?

I say that I don't suppose you ever stopped to think of this, simply because I didn't when I was little like you. You are all ears and eyes, pleased with everything that is nice and pretty, and it is all right, too; for you will get big by and by, and then you will hav to giv your tops and popgun, doll and little wagon, and all your playthings over to the next younger one. And you hav the best right in the world to use your eyes and ears when young, for when you get old it may be that your ears will be of little use and your eyes of no use at all.

Now, I am going to tell you about that book agent that came to your house away—long—well, I can't just think now, but it was quite a while ago. You remember how you came running into the house and told your mamma that there was a stranger coming; yes, you remember. Don't you recollect how nice he was—how innocently he smiled? You remember about his asking for a drink of water, and how your mother said, "Get the man a drink;" and you remember how nice he said "Thank you—best water I ever drank." Yes, and you remember how he took the little one on his knees, said it had such pretty eyes, and then patted its little cheeks so softly. You thought your mother seemed a little cross when you went to get the water, but you remember how pleased she was when the man began to play with the children, and said the baby was "just a picture of its mother."

You remember how the agent took out a book, called it a prospectus—and here is something for you to learn—asked your mother if she could spare a few moments, and said he had a "new and interesting work." You remember your mother saying, "I am very busy; my husband will be up from the lot in a little while; stay to dinner, and he'll look at the book." And, now, what did the book-agent do? Stay to dinner? No. Now, be honest, didn't he smile, and thank your mother very politely, and say, "Am sorry he's not here; but it nearly always happens this way; men are out to work, you know; 'twon't take only a minute." And didn't he commence and talk a little faster and more smilingly than people usually do? And didn't he say that he knew her husband would sign for it if he was at home? and say for her to put her name right down there? and hand her a pencil, at the same time pointing toward a blank locality on his book? And when it was nearly time for the old gentleman to put in his appearance, didn't the man seem to be in quite a hurry? and say that he must reach some certain place by night? And you remember how your mother put her name down, and that the agent was soon seen meandering through the front gate.

Now, children, did you ever stop to think why this smiling agent could not wait to see your father? Do you think he told the truth when he said that he must get to such a place by night? and do you suppose he told the truth when he said that he was sorry your father was not at home? Here is something for you to study into. Do you remember any of the conversation between your father and mother when he came up to dinner, and she told him what a nice book she had signed for? Well, in a few weeks the book is delivered, and it now lies on the stand as an ornament, or is thrown back to fill some vacant corner—covered with cobwebs and tinged with the decay of time.

And I wonder how many of the children that read this story ever read about the "Whistle," written by that good old man, Benjamin Franklin? You see when Ben was a boy—a very young boy—only seven, his friends filled his pockets with coppers. He started out and came to a store where they sold toys for children, and meeting a boy who was blowing on a whistle he immediately offered him all his money for it, and came home in high glee, pleased at what he thought was a good bargain. "My brothers, and sisters, and cousins," says Franklin, "understanding the bargain I had made, told me I had given four times as much for it as it was worth. This put me in mind what good things I might hav bought with the rest of the money, and they laughed at me so much for my folly, that I cried with vexation, and the reflection gave me more chagrin than the whistle gave me pleasure."

"As I grew up, came into the world, and observed the actions of men, I thought I met with many, very many, who gave too much for the whistle."

C. O. F.

Correspondence.

BROOKFIELD, MICH., March 15, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I am a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, especially the department pertaining to the "Children's Corner," and seeing the name of "Susie" so often in the interesting stories, I thought I would write a few lines to the "Corner," for my name is also Susie.

I hav read both of your story books, viz., "Story Hour" and "Apples of Gold." I think they are very beneficial to all who read them.

My father is a man of pronounced Liberal views, and encourages me to read all literature that has a tendency to promote the general welfare and elevate the character of mankind, especially such as treats upon the sciences, no matter of what nation, sect, race, or color the author may be. What father means by science is the method of proving facts.

I am sixteen years of age, and liv on a farm of 240 acres with my parents. I hav neither brother nor sister. I hav attended a country school steadily from the time I was about seven years of age, and I intend to go to some high school this summer.

Miss Wixon, could you please send me name and price-list of some Liberal book or paper of poems, filled with deep thought and moral instruction suitable for speaking in public? If you will be so kind as to inform me, I should be very much obliged to you, as I am a member of the Patrons of Husbandry and hav occasion for speaking or reading something once a week, and it is almost impossible to get pieces that I like in a common newspaper to speak so often.

I will close my letter wishing success to the "Children's Corner" and its worthy editor.

Yours truly, SUSIE FARRIS.

[The poems of Eliza Cook, James Russell Lowell, Charles Mackay, Mrs. Browning, Alice and Phebe Carey, and Lizzie Doten are characterized by Liberal thought and good sense. There are cheap editions of nearly all the leading poets, the prices of which may be ascertained from the booksellers.—ED. C. C.]

ALTOONA, PA., March 20, 285.

DEAR EDITOR CHILDREN'S CORNER: I think that you are conducting one of the most valuable departments in our TRUTH SEEKER. Although I hav grown to manhood, yet I take great interest in the young folks, and felt quite glad when a portion of the paper was set apart for them. It does not seem a great while since I was enjoying the pleasant pastimes of my boyhood's days. Born and brought up in Mifflin county, this state, when the stage coach and canal were still at their hight, and when Pennsylvania was pretty well covered with forests, I can remember well when we were in the habit of going to grandmother's and at night I could hear the child-like cry of the panther and the fierce mew of the wild cat, and how glad we felt when morning came. I can often recall how the old folks were wont to gather round the old fire-place and tell thrilling stories about Lewis the robber, who for many years lurked amid the mountains, and also of Logan, the celebrated Indian chief, who traded with the early settlers.

Where I was born there were and are yet many people known as Pennsylvania Dutch, who were very superstitious, believing greatly in signs and wonders. They believed that Logan's shadow could still be seen in the spring bearing his name, and some believe it to this day. They also believed in sowing and planting by signs of the moon, and many would not sleep near a graveyard nor go through one after dark. They also believed greatly in spooks, hobgoblins, ghosts, and tokens, and all houses that had been vacated for any length of time were supposed to be haunted. But at the present day these superstions hav pretty well vanished. But despite all this, Pennsylvania is a good state, and she will be as Liberal as any some day.

I hav lived among the mountains all my life, but expect to go and make my home on the prairies of Iowa the coming summer, and hope I may not get into as bigoted a community as where A. Laurie Sailor livs.

I hav always upheld that the proper place to begin to teach the principles of Freethought is with the young folks, for then they will not hav to "outgrow old superstions." I feel glad that so many hav taken an interest in this department of our paper. This in time will make many older persons ashamed of their Bible fables, and one by one the old doctrins will disappear, and from out of the ranks of our bright girls and boys will grow an army of grand Freethinkers. WILLIAM J. BURNS.

LEIGHTON, ALA., March 16, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and he says it is the best paper published, and I do, too. I go to the post-office every Saturday to see if THE TRUTH SEEKER has come. I like to read the Children's Corner, in particular, and like to hear father read the balance aloud. I am eleven years old. My father was acquainted with Mr. Wm. Bean. of Town Creek, Ala. He wrote several pieces for THE TRUTH SEEKER; he was a Freethinker, but not as outspoken as my father. Mr. Bean died about two months ago. Father is about the only Freethinker about here now; there are a great many leaning toward Freethought principles, however. Most everybody has religion around here—the negroes especially. They hav large "pow-wows;" that is the Indian for meeting; their meetings continue all night. The white's don't hav much success at their meetings; they hav two churches, but only one of them has a preacher; he has a very small audience, not over two dozen. I go sometimes for amusement. I wanted father to write, but he was so busy in the store he could not. I act as clerk, sometimes, when father is busy. I go to school every day, when I am not sick. I did not think I would write so much when I began to a stranger; you are not as much a stranger to me as I am to you.

Your friend, LIBBIE A. TROUTMAN.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXO . Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellen work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALL in a LIFETIME,

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay.

" ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1 50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Pure Philosophy for Physiologists.

Please send me 5 cents for Foote's Health Monthly for March, and read articles on

DIANAISM AND ALPHAISM.

Send stamps (1 cent ones) to

ELMINA D. SLENKER,

4t13 Snowville, Va.

John Swinton's Paper,

PLAIN, PRACTICAL, GENUIN, STRONG, AND FREE.

A WEEKLY PAPER OF AMERICAN IDEAS, PROGRESS, AND RIGHTS.

21 Park Row, New York.

$1 PER YER (post paid). 3 CENTS A COPY.

Specimens Free.

1—Boldly upholding the Rights of Man in the American way.

2—Battling against the Accumulated wrongs of Society and Industry.

3—Striving for the Organization and Interests of Workingmen, and giving the news of the trades and the unions.

4—Uniting the New Political Forces; searching for a common platform, and giving the news of 1) the young bodies in the field.

5—Warning the American people against the treaon able and crushing schemes of millionaires, monopolists, and plutocrats, and against the coming billionaires whose shadow is now looming up.

6—Looking toward better times of fair play and public welfare.

7—Living views of public questions and social topics.

8—Literary sketches and stories.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY

A Collection of Passages

Illustrating the

Purity and Morality of The Bible.

Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 cents.

A BOOK FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

PRICE, $1.25; TWO COPIES, $2.00.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT

IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

THE

HISTORY OF FREETHOUGHT,

Its Rise, Progress, and Triumph.

BY CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS—Sec. I.: Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II.: What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III.: Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV.: Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V.: Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

"I hav read Mr. Watts's 'History of Freethought.' It is just what every thinking man needs, and those who do not think need it to make them do so."

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, $1.25

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

A SMALL FARM WANTED.

An Appeal to the Philanthropists.

I am 71 years old, hav been a producer for at least 65 years. I wish to find some philanthropic person who has a small farm to rent—I am unable to buy—for a term of years, for a small sum. Any person who has such a place, and will communicate with me, giving full particulars, I should be happy to hear from.

SEWARD MITCHELL,

4t11 Newport, Me.

THE RIDDLE

OF THE

AMERICAN SPIRITUAL SPHINX

OR,

THE "LOST KEY" FOUND.

Sent to any address upon receipt of stamps to pay postage. Address

JAMES A. BLISS,

Developing Medium National Developing Circle,

121 W. Concord St., Boston, Mass.

4t11

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Traditon to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

"Little Lessons" for Little Folks,

Are now ready to mail to any address, at 30 cents for board cover, and 20 cents for paper. Address

Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Virginia.

"'Little Lessons' are grand. I hashed and rehashed the lesson on spiders this evening in the Sunday-school. I am running two Sunday-schools. The children are slow in learning the mystery of the God-head; in comprehending the Trinity; but their eyes brighten and they take kindly to discourses on snails, toads, spiders, and lizards, so I think I'll keep it up."—Bertie Stone.

Poetry.

An Excerpt.

Victims of artifice, dupes of arch knaves,
Wearily toiling, cupidity's slaves,
The peerage of labor, forgotten, unknown,
Though the virtues of sinew, of muscle, and bone
Work the splendors that dazzle, the glories that shine,
Going down from the sunlight to wrench from the mine
The caloric of comfort, that princes may warm—
That the few may bask sweetly at ease and from harm.
And there sit the favored, sleek, happy, and full,
With no care save to see that their lives grow not dull;
Prating bounties of nature and goodness of God.
Oh! Justice, retributiv, why dost thou nod
In some corner afar—some nook all obscure,
While some masked thing, presiding, sits mocking the poor,
The defenseless, the people, and yet the true force
That keeps the wheels moving all things in their course,
Setting right—as, by chance, they are wont to diverge—
The hands that make order from chaos emerge?

There are men in this world at once noble and true—
Did I say only men?—I meant women, too.
Love smile on such women—I would there were more—
But we know not as yet what this world has in store.
Anthropology's gaining, how this truth glorifies!
When the end is accomplished, then the world deifies
With good reason. No canonized saints,
But humanity's soul shall respond to the plaints
Of agonized beings, no matter where found,
And the peans of love altruistic resound.

Concord, Ky. VIRGINIA E. VANCE.

Our Book-Shelf Cleared.

REPLY TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S "NOTES ON INGERSOLL." By B. W. Lacy. Philadelphia: Keystone Pub. Co. Price, $1. Sold through this office.

Mr. Lambert's vainglorious challenge to the "glib little whiffets" of the Ingersoll school to try to "rehabilitate his smirched character" has long gone unanswered, for the reason that few cared to use time in refuting the oft-refuted sophistries of the Jesuit colleges. But the encomiums passed upon Mr. Lambert's book by "a very respectable part of the religious and secular press of this and other countries" hav induced Mr. Lacy to perform the task on the commercial principle that, though the maker of a note be insolvent, it is legitimate to proceed against the indorsers.

There is a dignity and philosophical coolness about Mr. Lacy's work of dissection in admirable contrast with the priest's heated and slangy "Notes." Mr. Lacy is a gentleman, and, of course, could not descend to the use of billingsgate, but the provocation to say harsh things is so great in this instance that he is entitled to no little credit for his abstention. Though not taking up every individual sentence of Mr. Lambert's "Notes," Mr. Lacy has criticised about all the ideas contained therein, straightened out the scriptural renderings, and corrected the historical errors.

In Chapter One of the "Notes," Mr. Lambert objects to Ingersoll's affirmation of the eternality of matter, and criticises:

"That which is eternal is infinit. It must be infinit because, if eternal, it can hav nothing to limit it. But that which is infinit must be infinit in every way. If limited in any way it would not be infinit. Now, matter is limited. It is composed of parts, and composition is limitation. It is subject to change, and change involves limitation. Change supposes succession, and there can be no succession without a beginning, and therefore limitation. Thus far we are borne out by reason, experience, and common sense."

The fallacy of this reasoning is in the falsity of the premises. Mr. Lacy shows this falsity by several illustrations. The first is by scripture, which does not count for much, but as the priest believes the Bible it may hav weight with him. "The human soul at death," says Mr. Lacy, "scripture being the judge [authority], starts on an eternal pilgrimage. It never dies. Its life is everlasting (Matt. xxv, 46). Yet who believes that the human soul is, in any of its attributes, equal to God?" Therefore, Mr. Lambert's proposition—infinit in one attribute, infinit in all—falls to the ground. Again: "Space, which has its center everywhere, and its circumference nowhere, is infinit expansion, but nothing more. So of time: it is infinit duration only. A line infinit in length, extending through space, may be imagined, or symbolized, as readily as we may symbolize space or eternal duration regarded as the sum total of infinit diurnal successions. Yet the supposed line would hav infinit length without appreciable breadth or thickness. Therefore, though infinit in one respect, yet finite in others."

In Mr. Lambert's sequitur to the above he repeats the same fallacy:

"Matter is limited, and therefore finite, and if finite in anything finite in everything: and if finite in everything, therefore finite in time, and therefore not eternal."

This bit of priestly logic is, like all Jesuit sophistry, built on unstable foundations. Mr. Lacy shows how this proves too much, and blows away the whole fabric of theology by disproving the resurrection of the body, an idea very dear, no doubt, to Mr. Lambert: "The matter composing our bodies, according to the 'Notes,' is finite in that it had a beginning, is a composit and is subject to change. Therefore, finite in everything, it can not be eternal, but must fade away like the shadows which flit before us and are no more. So also of the glorified body of the Lord."

But, more painful still, according to this logic: "God himself, with matter, time, and space, must cease to be. It will scarcely be denied that even he is limited by the attributes of his own being. Again, it is inconceivable that he could annihilate space, create a being equal to himself, or make the diameter of a circle equal to its circumference. Dr. Adam Clark, in his posthumous work on theology, says that God can do anything which does not involve contradiction or absurdity. How we are to determin what proposition involves contradiction or absurdity he has not informed us. How he knows that the creation of matter out of nothing—which is the old way of putting it—does not involve contradiction and absurdity we are not told. To our mind the act is inconceivable. Be that as it may, here are limitations even to divine power, and, 'if limited in any way,' he cannot be infinit; if not infinit, not eternal; and, if not eternal, he must cease to be!"

That matter is destructible, and therefore not eternal, is an absurd theological statement hardly needing in these times a serious consideration. A challenge to theologians has for years been standing, asking them to create or destroy some matter, and thus demonstrate their proposition that the matter composing the universe could hav been created by God. It is the affirmation of science that matter has always existed and always will, and this is proved by its existence to-day—its uncreatability and indestructibility. And where could the material come from? The universe is illimitable, is infinit. Beyond it there is noth ing, for it in itself is everywhere. If matter at one period did not exist, from what did God create it? He could not hav taken part of himself, for then he would be limited and incomplete, and a limited and incomplete omnipresence is unthinkable. Mr. Lacy would probably hav brought out much more on this point than he has if Mr. Lambert's paragraph had demanded it.

In his answer to Judge Black, Colonel Ingersoll remarked that a "curious thing about the Commandments is that their supposed author violated nearly every one. From Sinai, according to the account, he said, 'Thou shalt not kill,' and yet he ordered the murder of millions." To this Lambert rejoined:

"He who has the absolute right to take life cannot be guilty of murder in taking it, for murder is an unjust killing, and there is no unjust killing in the taking of life by him who has the absolute right to take it. There is no escape from this reasoning except by denying the absolute right, and you cannot deny this but by denying God's existence; for, on the hypothesis that he exists, he is Creator, and being Creator the absolute right of dominion over his creatures necessarily follows."

It is a pity that Mr. Lacy should hav answered this from a Theistic standpoint, for on the question of the attributes of God, as given in the Bible, Calvin was nearer right than Channing. The principles of justice were written by no God, but are the result of man's experience, formulated by reason. But to the book. Mr. Lacy says: "If by absolute dominion be meant the right to govern without regard to the principles of justice, written by God's own finger on the tablet of the human heart, we fail to see it. The right of dominion is not the tyrant's right. Suppose I had the power to speak into sentient life the sands of the sea, and to endue them with mental, moral, and physical being, would I be justified, because the creator of such, in inflicting suffering on them from mere caprice, or for my own pleasure? No. And to ascribe a kindred right to God is to assert that he has the right to do wrong, to violate the eternal laws of his own being, to aver that power is holiness."

"God," says Lambert, "has a right to take life." Mr. Lacy grants this (perhaps for the sake of the argument, for surely he cannot grant that a Thing whose very existence is unproved and unprovable should hav the right of life and death over sentient human beings), but asks, "Should he or would he convert the world into a slaughter-house, and depute his chosen people, as human butchers, to slay not only men, but women, children, and babes unborn?" Mr. Lambert retorts that the wickedness of the heathen amply justified God in commanding his chosen people to slay them. "But," again queries Mr. Lacy, "what of the Jewish people and their anointed rulers? From the days of Abraham the lash of the almighty was held in terrorem over their backs, and his will was made clearly manifest to them; and yet, with all, they were in a state of chronic rebellion against their divine ruler. Not content to make gods with their own hands, they borrowed them from the heathen and worshiped them." As to the killing of the heathen by the idolatrous Jews, how could it be justified when the heathen nations were ignorant of the "divine" law and its penalties? That the law was known to their ancestors hundreds of years before in nowise constituted a revelation to them. "Suppose all our acts of Assembly should be burnt and not reprinted for ten generations, would any just judge condemn a criminal for the violation of a law of which he had never heard because ages before his ancestors had read it?"

On the authority of the gospel, and the reference to Christ in Josephus, Mr. Lacy has tumbled the priest over flat. Had we space, chapter xvi would be excellent reading for truth seekers. But we hope Mr. Lacy's arguments will reach as many people as hav Mr. Lambert's, though it is vain to expect the church papers will in any way help their circulation. As truth, however, has better staying powers than error, Mr. Lacy's book may be heard of when Mr. Lambert's is worked over into circus posters.

SHADOWS. Being a Familiar Presentation of Thoughts and Experiences in Spiritual Matters. With Illustrativ Narrations. By John Wetherbee. Published by Colby & Rich. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

There is very little connection between the title and matter of this book. Mr. Wetherbee is a Spiritualist well known among the Banner of Light readers, inclined to be slightly orthodox in Spiritual matters, and not particularly scientific in his method of investigation or rigid in the consequent deductions. His book is a record of what has occurred under his observation, and he honestly believes that spirits produced the phenomena he has seen and felt. The book will please those of his own way of thinking, but will probably not convert many Materialists. The narrativs are easily and familiarly written, and carry the reader along in a soothing way that disarms his antagonism, if he hav any, but still leaves him with his original bias against ghost stories. Spiritualists will find the book very entertaining, and disbelievers in mediumship will not care to fight it much. Mr. Wetherbee himself is indifferent as to its reception. He tells the stories for his own pleasure; those who like him may read him—those who do not may let him alone. The publishers hav got it up very handsomely for the price.

THE MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM. By A. Leah Underhill, of the Fox family. Revised and arranged by a Literary Friend. Sixteen illustrations. New York: T. R. Knox & Co. Price, $2. Sold at this office,

On similar lines, but very different in its spirit from Mr. Wetherbee's "Shadows" is this alleged missing link in the history of modern Spiritualism. It purports to be a truthful account of the phenomena occurring at Hydesville in the house of Mr. Fox, and since to various members of the Underhill family, especially the author, who has had a remarkable experience. The book is a good offset to "Bottom Facts," and vouches for more supernatural marvels than Mr. Truesdell can explain in ten years. While in the relation of her experiences Mrs. Underhill is positiv that they are explainable only by the hypothesis of the return of disembodied spirits, she yet writes in a defiant tone which of itself recognizes an army of critics. Mrs. Underhill's work is essentially controversial, and will, we fancy, be used for offense and defense by believers in Spiritual manifestations. She contends that the exhibitions of an occult power, as narrated in her book, demonstrate beyond doubt the reality of the survival of man's spirit; that death is but birth into another stage of progressed and progressiv life; and proves what has heretofore been but a dogma of an unproved and unprovable faith, the immortality of the soul. The reasons for her arrival at this conclusion are altogether too numerous to summarize, and we advise interested parties to read the book.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED. Especially Intended for Self-Instruction. By A. Knoflach. No. 5. Price 10 cents. Sold at this office.

Mr. Knoflach's course of pamphlets is meeting with much favor from teachers of German, who find it perhaps the best adapted of any of the numerous books of instruction for gradually leading the student through the grammatical labyrinths of the German language. With these pamphlets one could easily learn to read German; the ability to speak it, however, we do not believe can be acquired without a teacher.

CHRIST'S CHRISTIANITY. Being the Precepts and Doctrins Recorded in Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, as Taught by Jesus Christ. By Albert H. Walker. New York: Holt & Co.

This is a biased collocation of Jesus's alleged teachings, and while it may be suitable for the use of those who see only one side of the question, is not likely to contribute more than ordinary Sunday-school books to an accurate knowledge of Christianity or the New Testament. For ministers who preach rosy sermons to please their hearers, leaving out the disagreeable portions of theology, "Christ's Christianity" will be handier than a concordance to find texts and collateral supports to prop them up. That seems to be the design of the book, and the author has succeeded well.

THE NEXT STEP OF PROGRESS. A Limitation of Wealth, with Graduated Taxation upon Accumulating and Accumulated Fortunes the only Hope of the Republic. By John H. Keyser. New York. Price, 10 cents. Sold through THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Mr. Keyser has crowded a great many facts and arguments into the fifty large pages of this pamphlet, and if his readers cannot at once accept all his conclusions, they certainly will obtain many ideas worth retaining and considering. We disagree with him in toto on his theory of a paternal government, but it is not necessary to accept this idea to appreciate his work. Mr. Keyser is a benevolent gentleman, with shrewd thinking powers, a heart overflowing with sympathy for the laborer, and his endeavor to solve the social problem is honest, and without the least smack of demagogery.

PROGRESSION; or, How a Spirit Advances in Spirit Life. The Evolution of Man. Two Papers Given in the Interest of Spiritual Science by Michael Faraday. Star Pub. Co. Price 15 cents. Sold at this office.

A great many people like the mental food furnished in the series of pamphlets issued by the Star Pub. Co., and such will be as well pleased with this as with the former books. It is a statement of the progress made by the spirit, and an empiric attempt to so explain the evolution of man as to account for the otherwise unexplained introduction of the soul. The author deals largely in dogmatic generalities which may mean anything or nothing, as the mood of the reader is. Mr. Bennett's tract, "Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind," is a much more reasonable attempt in in the same direction.

CRITICISMS ON THE BIBLE, and a reply to the Sermon Preached by Rev. F. Z. Rossiter before the Kalamazoo, Mich., Bible Society. By Lycurgus. Price, one cent.

A vigorous little tract answering a locapreacher's erroneous assertions. The Old Testament is liberally quoted, and the author has evidently read Ingersoll and Remsburg to advantage. Obtuse Christians should be provided with this tract.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED ORIGINAL CONUNDRUMS. Price 15 cents. Sold at this office.

We hav just received from the publishers, J. S. Ogilvie & Co., a handsome little book with the above title, which contains over fifteen hundred conundrums suitable for home and fireside amusement. They are said to be all original.

Our Books.

THE STORY HOUR, a book for children and youth. This book is handsomely printed and bound, and contains about 100 very fine illustrations. It is affectionately inscribed to the little niece of Susan H. Wixon, author of the book, and the frontis piece is a beautiful and life-like picture of little Susie, who was a bright and promising child, but who died May 8, 1884; aged six years. The price of the book is $1.25, two copies, $2.00.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC for 1885 contains thirty-seven portraits of prominent American Freethinkers, and numerous illustrations. It has a large number of contributions from many of our noted Freethought lecturers and editors; also much other matter that will be very valuable to Liberals. Too much praise cannot be given the Truth Seeker Company for placing such a valuable and artistic book before the public. It is worth five times the price asked for it, which is 25 cents. Every Liberal should hav it.

CHRISTIANITY A REWARD FOR CRIME; Authenticated by the Bible, by O. B. Whitford. M.D. This is a very neat pamphlet, and the subject is ably handled. Price 10 cents. These three books should find their way into every family. Send to the Truth Seeker Publishing Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York city.—Pittsburgh Truth.

LIBERAL LECTURES
IN PHILADELPHIA.

BY CHARLES WATTS,

ON SUNDAY APRIL 5th, 1885,
IN
Memorial Hall, 9th St., & Girard Ave.

Afternoon at 2.30—Subject:
Secularism; Wherein it is Superior to Christianity.
Evening at 7.30 Subject:
Christianity; What Has it Done for the World?

The clergy are especially invited to be present and reply.
ADMISSION FREE.
3t12

The Handy Pocket Account Book

Containing four parts, each important and convenient for pocket use.

Part I.—Shows plainly how to keep accounts.
Part II.—Consists of business forms as notes, orders, receipts, etc., useful rules and tables for reference.
Part III.—Shows how to write good letters.
Part IV.—Consists of 48 blank pages, ruled for Dr., and Cr., heavy paper, on which to keep accounts.

Size. 6x3 3-4 inches, 32 pages, printed; price, in cloth, 40 cents; in leather, 50 cents; both with pocket and flap. Sold by dealers, or sent post paid on receipt of price. Two-cent stamps accepted. Agents Wanted. Unsold books returnable, money refunded. Address F. O. JOHNSON,
2teow12 Sharon, Wis.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A NEW BOOK OF DIRECTIONS
FOR
CLEANSING THE BLOOD,

And Curing all forms of Disease that the Human Family is Subject to,
Without the Use of Any Medicine Whatever.
By Professor Nathaniel Pierce.
Price, 30 Cents.
6tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Five numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.
3tf

"REPUBLIC."

(Published in the rapidly growing young city, on Longfellow's "mountain of the prairie," Pipestone, Minn.)

Eight pages, weekly, $1.50 a year. Contains the news of the day, short stories, scientific miscellany, literary selections—but best of all, the REPUBLIC is unqualifiedly, uncompromisingly opposed to the LIQUOR TRAFFIC! It puts LIBERTY AGAINST LIQUOR! It opens its columns to Free Discussion. It challenges all opponents to meet it on the burning question of our time, PROHIBITION! The plea, that legal Prohibition annihilates PERSONAL LIBERTY will be met and refuted. All opponents to Prohibition will be accorded the right to reply. This is the WORKINGMAN'S REPUBLIC. And an advocate of WOMAN SUFFRAGE. When the mothers, wives, and daughters vote there will be an end to the RUM CURSE! When women vote we will hav a true Republic, and never before. The REPUBLIC is published to disseminate these principles. Shall we receive your aid?

Send all remittances to
W. F. JAMIESON, Editor and Publisher,
PIPESTONE, MINN.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
Popular Jewelry Store
Rochelle, Ill.

A FEW OF MY PRICES;

Solid silver stem-winding American Watches, hunting or open case; 2 oz. 7 jeweled, $10; 3 oz., $11; 4 oz. $12; 5 oz. $14. Same cases with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50, $16.50. Same case with full (15) jeweled movement, patent regulator, $17, $18, $19, $21. Same cases, with full jeweled adjusted patent regulator movements, $22, $23, $24, $26; key wind, $2 to $5 less; for best cases, silver caps and gold joints add $1.50, and for best filled gold cases (warranted for 20 years) add $10 to best silver cases, making a 11 jeweled hunting (filled case) stem-wind quick train watch only $28; same for ladies, $23. Ladies' solid gold stem-wind watches, latest styles, good American 11 jeweled moyements, 10 kt, $24; 14 kt, $32; same full jeweled, $32 and $40—for fancy engraving add $3 to $5.

Prices and specifications for finer ladies' and gents' watches, including all the finest, richest, and most elaboratly finished watches in the world, sent upon application.

Watches cleaned for $1; main springs, $1. Bank time-locks, chronographs, music boxes, etc., repaired at lowest rates, and all work warranted the best in the world or no pay.

Best steel spectacle made, $1; genuin pebbles, $2; good common, 25 cents. Best tripleplated teaspoons, $2; tablespoons, $4; knives, $1.75; forks, $1.75—all per set of six.

Parties desiring silverware, jewelry, diamonds, etc., for presents will do well to order sample package on selection and save money. Cash will be refunded on all goods not satisfactory.

Watches, etc., may be safely sent in unsealed packages per registered mail, and will be returned at my expense. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

P. S.—Stop over and see me when near Rochelle, Ill.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline, history the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1883, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PROSE POEMS
And Selections,
BY
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued.

It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author.

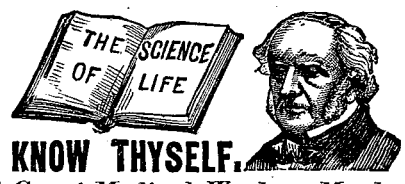
The work is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it.

In the more elegant styles of binding, this volume is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.

In workmanship the volume is a masterpiece. The type is large and beautiful; the paper heavy and richly tinted; the presswork faultless; and the binding, as perfect as the best materials and skill can produce. The book is quarto in size, and contains 248 pages. No item of expense has been spared to make the work worthy of author and public.

PRICES:

Silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side,	$2 50
Half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style,	4 50
Full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine,	7 50
Full tree calf, highest possible style and finish,	9 00



Sent to any address, postpaid, on receipt of price. THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,
WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.
BY MAIL POST-PAID.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. HEAL THYSELF
1y13

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y3

ONE MILLION COPIES will soon be sold TWENTY YEARS OF CONGRESS—By James G. Blaine. The only history of our Government from 1861 to 1881. Hon. John S. Wise, M. C. from Va., says: Whoever takes it up, no matter whether he be Mr. Blaine's friend or enemy, will never put it down until he has read the whole." $200 per month to good agents. Apply at once. The Henry Bill Pub. Co., Norwich, Ct.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

Will Cure all Forms of Disease Without Medicine.

CONSULTING ROOMS,

471 WEST MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Something for Invalids to read and study over.—Stop Drugging and try Nature's Remedy, MAGNETISM.

For years past it has been known to the profession that Magnetism and Electricity were powerful agents for imparting vital force and energy to the worn-out sufferer from disease. Many humanitarians in the profession, thinking more of the alleviation of suffering than they did of the code of ethics by which they were bound, have resorted to magnetic treatment as a last resort and found themselves astonished at the effect upon their patients. They had been taught that medicine was an absolute essential in all cases, and that that failing, the patient must die, as nothing more could be done. Here and there an advanced thinker has flung aside the tie which bound him to his dogmatic brethren and has resorted to other and more scientific methods of treatment. As a result many, having broken the bonds which bound them to a system as barbarous as it was unscientific, have used their best energies to devise means for the alleviation of human suffering. Here and there the wondrous power of MAGNETISM was established, and many diseases hitherto classed as incurable readily submitted to its mild but potent influence. This agent to the intelligent observer was found everywhere. Being, as it is, the very essential of all life, it was found that the human body when in a diseased condition was almost bereft of this vital principle. If we can supply this vital force to the worn-out body the patient will get well.

Ah! but how is it to be done, says the physician. Science, however, came to the rescue, and solved the problem. Here and there throughout the world are fields of what are known as magnetic ore. It was observed that the ore, when carried upon the person, was found to be a safeguard against disease, and to this circumstance we are largely indebted for magnetic wearing apparel, for it was an easy transition from carrying magnetic ore to covering the body with permanently charged magnets, placed in garments fitted to every part of the body. Since the first introduction of magnetic appliances as a curative, there has been a number of these so-called magnetic garments foisted upon the public by men whose sole object was gain. Unscientific in construction, and having little if any magnetism in them, their life was of short duration; it was long enough, however, to demonstrate that when constructed upon scientific principles there was scarcely an ailment that human flesh is heir to that would submit to their healing influence.

THE EUREKA MAGNETIC APPLIANCES are superior to everything of a similar character heretofore offered to the public, being the only scientifically constructed appliance in the market; it is now two and a half years since they were first offered to the public, and during that time we hav treated thousands of patients, and not a single case of failure to receive benefit reported to us, while we are in daily receipt of testimonials of cures from all parts of the country. We know that disease cannot exist where these garments are worn in quantities as advised by us.

To all who may be afflicted with any of the following complaints, we say unhesitatingly, the Eureka Magnetic Garments will cure you:—Paralysis, Rheumatism, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Bleeding at the Lungs, Spinal Disease, Gout, Asthma, Bronchitis, Congestion of the Kidneys, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Loss of Energy, Heart Disease, Constipation, Consumption, Prolapsus Uteri, Chronic Peritonitis, Cancer, Ovarian Tumors Syphilis, Epilepsy, St. Vitus' Dance, and all form of chronic invalidism.

PRICE LIST.

Lung Invigorators,	$ 6 00
Gentlemen's Body Belts,	6 00
Sciatic Appliances,	5 00
Knee Caps,	3 00
Leg Belts,	4 00
Anklets,	4 00
Shoulder Appliances,	4 00
Wristlets, each,	1 50
Hat Bands,	1 00
Head Caps,	4 00
Sleeping Caps,	4 00
Abdominal Belts (ladies),	6 00
Gents' Vests,	15 00
Ladies' Jacket and Corset (combined),	18 00
Superfine Insoles (all leather),	1 00

While these garments can be procured at the above low prices no one can afford to be ill. Our ladies' supporters are just what every lady in the land needs, as it will be found a great assistance at certain periods; all these garments are made to measure, and a fit guaranteed. To ladies whose all dragged out a combination jacket and corset will restore you to new life and energy, and pay for itself an hundred fold in a few weeks' wear. This garment is only made from actual measure, and a perfect fit assured.

All communications answered free of charge. Address, DR. L. TENNEY, 471 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill. ☞ Agents wanted for Boston, New York Brooklyn, and Philadelphia.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Gems of Thought.

INDEED, it goes so heavily with my disposition that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a steril promontory, this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave o'erhanging firmament, this majestical roof, fretted with golden fire, why, it appears no other thing to me than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapors.—Shakspere's Hamlet.

IN the spring of 1775, I was struck with a disorder in my bowels, which, at first, gave me no alarm, but it has since, as I apprehend it, become mortal and incurable. I now reckon upon a speedy dissolution. I hav suffered very little pain from my disorder; and, what is more strange, I hav, notwithstanding the great decline of my person, never suffered a moment's abatement of my spirits; insomuch that, were I to name a period of my life, which I would most choose to pass over again, I might be tempted to point to this latter period. I possess the same ardor as ever in study and the same gaiety in company. I consider, besides, that a man of sixty-five, by dying, cuts off only a few years of infirmities; and though I see many symptoms of my literary reputation's breaking out at last with additional luster, I know that I could hav but a few years to enjoy it. It is difficult to be more detached from life than I am at present.—Hume's My Own Life.

AT twelve o'clock Gibbon drank some brandy and water and desired his favorit servant to stay with him. To the last he preserved his senses; and when he could no longer speak, his servant having asked a question, he made a sign to show that he understood him. He was quite tranquil and did not stir, his eyes half shut. About a quarter before one he ceased to breathe.—Morison's Gibbon. [NOTE.—Joseph Addison, in his dying moments, sent for his stepson that he might see "how a Christian could die," and I make no doubt but he died well, as he had lived well; but no Infidel need blush for the way that Hume looked forward to his departure, or for the way that Gibbon met his fate. When next the Rev. DeWitt Talmage, or any other pulpit fury, takes occasion to enlarge on the awful death of Infidels or Atheists, perhaps he would condescend to read to his gaping audience the two foregoing extracts, and they will then be sure to hear a few words of sense, which may so far qualify the bushels of nonsense that they will hav to listen to. We hav all—every mother's son of us—"to eat a bushel of dirt" in the course of our lives; but those who "sit under" the pastor of the Brooklyn Tabernacle hav to take it at a single meal. No doubt they would hav mealed in with old Ezekiel in that delightful mess—rivaling the hell-broth so graphically described by the late Mr. W. S., of Stratford-upon-Avon—which he prepared for himself, For the exact receipt the anxious reader may consult the fourth chapter of his prophecies.—Hylax.]

I HAV often thought upon death, and I find it the least of all evils. All that which is past is as a dream; and he that hopes or depends upon time coming, dreams waking. So much of our life as we hav discovered is already dead; and all those hours which we share, even from the breasts of our mothers until we return to our grandmother, the earth, are part of our dying days, whereof even this is one, and those that succeed are of the same nature, for we die daily; and as others hav given place to us, we must in the end giv way to others.—Bacon's Essays.

FOR what we know must be, and is as common
As any the most vulgar thing to sense;
Why should we, in our peevish opposition.
Take it to heart? Fie! 'tis a fault to heaven,
A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,
To reason most absurd; whose common theme
Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried,
From the first curse till he that died to-day,
"This must be so." —Shakspere's Hamlet.

SINCE men are in a transitional condition, since nature ordains that the existence of the race can only be preserved by means of gross appetites inherited from our ancestors, the animals, it is obvious that men should refine them as far as they are able. Thus the brute business of eating and drinking is made, in civilized life, the opportunity of social intercourse; the family, divided by the duties of the day, then assemble and converse; men of talent are drawn together and interchange ideas. Many a poem, many an invention, many a great enterprise, has been born at the table; loves and friendships hav originated there. In the same manner the passions are sanctified by marriage. Blended with the pure affections their coarseness disappears, their violence is appeased and they become the ministers of conjugal and parental love.—Reade's Martyrdom of Man.

HAIL, wedded Love! mysterious law, true source
Of human offspring; sole propriety
In Paradise, of all things common else!
By thee adulterous lust was driven from men
Among the bestial herds to range; by thee
Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure
Relations dear and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known.
—Milton's Paradise Lost.

THE question with respect to the men of the past, is not where were they, but which way were they going? Were their faces set in the right or in the wrong direction? Were they in the front or in the rear of their generation? Did they exert themselvs to help on the great movement of the human race, or to stop it? This is not charity, but simple justice and common sense. It is the fundamental law of the world in which we liv that truth shall grow, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. A person who complains of the men of 1688 for not having been men of 1835, might just as well complain of a projectil for describing a parabola, or for quicksilver for being heavier than water, —Macaulay.

DR. JOHNSON'S mode of estimating the piety of his neighbors was somewhat singular. "Campbell," said he, "is a good man, a pious man. I am afraid he has not been in the inside of a church for many years; but he never passes a church without pulling off his hat. This shows he has good principles."—Macaulay's Johnson.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,

ORTHODOXY.

A Lecture by

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

"The clergy know that I know that they know that they do not know."

One of the best documents to circulate ever printed. Every man, woman, and child in the United States should read it. Every reader of the paper should send for a dozen. Price, singly, 10 cents; twelve for a dollar. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

INGERSOLL CATECHISED;

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies for a dollar. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."

Proving conclusivly that

THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST

His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth

Price, $2.00. TRUTH SEEKER Office. 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine." "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

COMPLETE WORKS, in One Volume. Half calf, 5.00

THIRD EDITION.

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

1 Vol. Royal 8vo. Cloth. About 600 pages.

Price, - - - - - - $3.00

Sent postpaid, on receipt of price, Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER,

Odds and Ends.

BE good and you will be—a curiosity.

ADAM was a roller skater. The fall he got is still well remembered.

"YES" said the Idaho man, "it's dreadful unfortunate that my gal got hugged by that ar' b'ar. She's sort o' held me in contempt since."

THE inability of George Washington to tell a lie, says the Pittsburgh Telegraph, left a gap in our national system that his fellow-countrymen hav used every exertion to fill.

THE town of Newington, N. H., has no liquor-saloons, no debt, no lawyers, and only one church. This shows how nicely a town can get along that limits itself to one church.—Drake's Magazine.

A STRANGE man was picked up in a fainting condition in the street and taken to the hospital. "How is that man they brought here?' asked a reporter of the superintendent, about an hour afterward. "Lying at the point of death." "Oh, is he? Well, I'll bet a dollar he's a lawyer."

"I TRUST the current of my discourse last Sunday was not sufficiently formidable to hopelessly engulf you." jocosely remarked a young Detroit clergyman to a lady member of his congregation the other evening. "Oh, no! It was quite shallow enough for comfortable wading, thank you."

AN exchange says that girls who wish to hav small, prettily-shaped mouths should repeat at frequent intervals during the day: "Fanny Finch fried five floundering fish for Francis Fowler's father." This looks too much like an attempt to propitiate a prospectiv father-in-law for most girls to repeat more than once.—Burlington Free Press.

"YOU hav been sick for a long time, havn't you?" sympathetically remarked a lady to one of her poor but uneducated neighbors. "Yes, I hav had a tedious time of it. I was confined to the house during August, and I really thought I had the damonia. I got a little better, but I was taken down again in November last" "Did you suffer in the interim?" asked the lady. "No; I did not suffer at all in the interim; the pains were all in my stomach."

"YES," said the honest farmer, "I know there are people what always puts the big apples at the top of the bar'l, but I don't." "That's right," exclaimed the deacon admiringly. "I hav always tried to convince folks that that sort o' thing don't pay in the long run." "If they'd go to the city once in a while they'd learn something. I always put my big apples at the bottom of the bar'l." "That's the way." "Yes; you see people has got so suspicious that they 'most always open the bar'l at the bottom nowadays."

FUNNY POETRY.

All from the Boston Courier.

A STREET ROMANCE.

Pretty girl
So sweet, so nice!
Sudden slips
Upon the ice;
Scream of terror,
Does she goes—
Visions of em-
Broidered hose.

Youth observes
The frills and laces,
Fancy hose and
Other graces.
Sudden mash—
Oh, feeling sweet!—
Helps the maid-
En to her feet.

Redly, redly
Blushes she;
Kindly sympa-
Thizes he;
Then along the
Street they go:
Married in a
Month or so.

THE COACHMAN'S DAY HAS GONE BY.

The maid was young, the maid was fair,
And many lovers sought her;
Her father was a millionaire
And she an only daughter.

No suitor that the maiden met
To dream of love had taught her,
Until in Cupid's silken net
Her father's coachman caught her.

Then anxiously she passed the days,
Elopement contemplating,
Until she caught the skating craze,
And took to roller-skating.

She threw the coachman over then—
To him it was a crusher—
And eloped one night at half-past ten
And married a polo "rusher."

HOW EASILY THINGS GO WRONG.

"Alas! how easily things go wrong!"
A sigh too much or a kiss too long,
And a father's patience is quite worn out—
There's a hurried step, and a wrathful shout,
And the dream of a youthful pair is o'er.
A youth escapes through the open door,
With terror imprinted upon his face,
And down the street at a flying pace
With hat in hand and a dog in chase.
The dog to the flying youth draws nigh;
There's a savage growl and a piercing cry,
"Alas! how easily things go wrong;"
Why did the lover stay so long?

A panting youth at his mother's door
Is vowing he'll go to court no more;
A dog is returning with visage grim,
Dragging an ulster's tails with him.
"Alas, how easily things go wrong!"
When a lover foolishly tarries too long!
"And yet how easily things go right"
When he leaves at a decent time of night.
He's wise who this in his memory logs:
Fathers are fathers, and dogs are dogs.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 15. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, April 11, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE practice of persons kissing the Bible when being sworn in as jurors and witnesses has been abolished by Judge Samuel Lumpkin of the Northern Circuit in Georgia.

MARK TWAIN (Clemens) characteristically thanks the moral icebergs of the Concord (Mass.) Library Committee for advertising his "Huckleberry Finn" by "praising it with faint damns."

A LONDON letter says that Miss Booth, the daughter of the generalissimo of the Salvation Army, has returned from France disgusted with the French. They do not believe in a God, she says.

A DAKOTA clergyman, after a long period of intense inebriety, preached a sermon of correspondingly deep contrition. Several passages of the remarkable discourse were devoted to vivid descriptions of delirium tremens.

DR. COAKLEY recently said at a meeting of the Buffalo Medical Association that during the war opium, quinine, calomel, and whisky constituted the surgeon's materia medica. "The soldiers would tolerate opium largely."

THE hymn-writer of the Louisville Courier-Journal perpetrates the following:

"In God we trust," the dollars say,
And Cleveland's got a pew;
At last to heaven we're on the way;
The pearly gates we'll view."

"ARE you denying yourself anything during Lent?" asked the rector of one of his parishioners. "Oh, yes," replied the gentleman promptly; "that is, I hav denied my wife several things, and you know when you married us you made us one."

PRAYER-BOOKS are now made with bouquet-holders on the outside, and it looks as if in a short time a Bible will not be complete unless it has a plate-glass mirror, with little compartments for hair-pins, face-powder, and cologne on the back.—Boston Post.

A DAKOTA preacher recently lectured in Silver Gulch upon "One Night With John Bright," in the course of which he reflected somewhat severely upon the irreligious. What is left of him regrets now that he didn't remain with Mr. Bright very much longer than one night.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A BURLINGTON, Iowa., paper makes the astonishing statement that there are to-day over one hundred families living together in that city and being received in society as honorable and upright people, when the facts are the heads of those families hav never had the rites of marriage performed over them.

THE Kansas City Journal rakes up an old war story. "What regiment do you belong to?" asked a Union picket of a rebel picket. "The Fourteenth North Carolina." "And yours, Yank?" "The 114th Rhode Island." "You're a liar; there aren't that many people in the state," returned the Johnny.

THE Rev. T. B. Gregory in replying to Colonel Ingersoll's lecture, "Which Way?" starts off with the proposition that "Ingersoll and Beecher are the two brightest men in America." From a perusal of the reply we are led to remark that it would hav been greatly to Mr. Gregory's credit if he had stopped here.

THE Detroit Post has this: In South Carolina recently a man named Dean was riding in a wagon with the twelve-year-old son of a neighbor named Miller. An assassin named David Belton rode up behind on horseback and deliberately shot the man Dean in the wagon. The horrified child witnessed the murder, and escaped, owing to the speed of the frightened horse attached to the wagon. On an examination in court the child was asked if he knew what it was to take an oath; if he believed in God; if he had ever heard of the devil; if he went to church or Sunday-school. To all these questions he answered, "No, sir." Thereupon the innocent child was not allowed to testify against the murderer. On the other hand, the murderer does believe in God, has attended church and Sunday-school, and was a church-member. The case is a vivid illustration of the injustice and folly of the law which makes religious belief a test of the credibility of witnesses.

THE overseers of Harvard College hav concurred with the president and the Fellows of the college in repealing the statute requiring students to attend public worship on Sunday morning. This will giv students an opportunity to go fishing Sunday morning, and to indulge in other scientific pursuits.—Norristown Herald.

THE Rev. Heber Newton's Easter sermon was on "Life after Death." He said that "below all the charlatanry of Spiritualism there remains a residuum of phenomena which cannot be pooh-poohed away." Spiritualists will probably be willing to accept this as a terse statement of the difference between Spiritualism and Christianity.

THE pope has just granted dispensation for the marriage of a Jew and a Catholic. This is the first time that the papacy has ever formally authorized such a marriage—but then this Jew, Herr Popper, is very rich, and is the patron of twenty-seven Roman Catholic benefices in Hungary. Moreover, he is said to hav paid 200,000 florins for the dispensation. —National Reformer.

THE Rev. George R. Bristor, of Baltimore, who was not long ago before the Methodist conference charged with a revolting crime, but who is still preaching, delivered a sermon in Williamsburgh last Sunday from the text, "I know that my redeemer liveth." There are probably few persons who stand in greater need of an agil and efficient redeemer than the Rev. George R. Bristor.

CAPT. FREDERICK HAMILTON, of the Paterson, N. J., column of Major Moore's Salvation Army, goes to state prison for three and one half years for abducting and seducing little Maggie Kerrigan, aged 16. Brother Charles Stone, an extraordinarily enthusiastic exhorter, also a Salvation soldier, stole a purse with $15 in it from one man, and a $25 cornet from another. He is in jail in this city.

THE Sulphur Springs Gazette says that "the old-fashioned preacher would hammer the life out of a pulpit Bible in the course of one year. He would open it and shut it, take it in his arms, put it down and pound it, and never let the congregation forget that the Bible was the book of books. The preacher of to-day has his fine lecture written out, with his title for a text, and has little or nothing to do with the Bible."

CHIEF-JUSTICE GREENE, of the Supreme Court of Washington territory, in a recent case held that an indictment found by a grand jury composed in part of women is valid, and that the provision of the Federal Constitution securing to the citizen the right of juries, grand and petit, as known to the common law, is not inconsistent with a law enacted by a territorial legislature which makes it the right and duty of women to sit as jurors, whether grand or petit, when legally summoned for this service. Such is the law in Washington territory, and no harm has hitherto resulted from its application.

A DISPATCH dated March 21st, from Des Moines, Iowa, relates that last December A. T. Rawson, of Chicago, prophesied the end of the world and the coming of Christ on Jan. 4, 1885. The Kail family, living at Creston, and consisting of an aged mother and two daughters, E. A. Kail and wife and several children, and Thomas and Jacob Kail, belonged to the Adventist Society. They began to prepare their robes for the great event. Jacob and Thomas resigned positions as clerks in a dry goods house, and the whole family abandoned all worldly pursuits. Rawson came to Creston from Chicago, and soon after his arrival various rumors began to float around about the conduct of the family, and their residence was placed under police surveillance. Last Saturday Thomas Kail appeared in the streets in a nude condition. Rawson, Jacob Kail, and several of the family encouraged Thomas's action, as he was understood to personate Adam's original appearance in the Garden of Eden. The police arrested Jacob and Thomas Kail and A. T. Rawson, and put them in the city jail. This morning the mayor fined Rawson and Thomas Kail $20 and costs each, and Jacob Kail $5 and costs. The report says Rawson was taken to the county jail by the sheriff, and went like a martyr, saying Paul and Christ were persecuted, and he could stand it.

THE Interior says: "We attended high mass in a Roman Catholic cathedral some years ago. At the close of the service the boys who swung the censers all passed before the bishop, bowed to him, and fumigated him. He was enveloped in a cloud of frankincense as we turned away. We thought of that scene when in a Protestant church not many Sabbaths since. As soon as the benediction was pronounced the minister took his position in front of the pulpit and the people came forward and said, 'Doctor, that was a splendid sermon. I enjoyed it ever so much.' The doctor seemed to enjoy it too. He smiled with intense satisfaction. Is not our Protestant way of fumigating the bishop an improvement upon that of the Romanists?"

THE old miracle of the supply of quails to feed the Israelites in the desert had its parallel in Georgia the other day, according to the Calhoun Times. The lie goes that a good dame, who was entertaining a lot of ministers who were holding a revival in the town of Resaca was sadly perplexed to find food for them one day, the crowd of people in attendance having consumed everything edible in the place. Not a solitary ham was to be had, and only one small chicken. While she was busy in the kitchen preparing the chicken and wondering how she could provide for her guests, a covey of partridges flew into the dining-room, the doors were closed, a number of the birds caught, and the ministers regaled with a feast fit for the gods.

LAST Sunday Mr. Talmage preached a sermon against all Sunday amusements, except, of course, those offered at the Tabernacle. He informed his audience that "Men hav found out that they can do more work in six days than they can in seven. Travelers hav found that they can get sooner to their destination by stopping one day in seven. Intelligent man and dumb machinery cry out for the Lord's Day." It is a pity that Mr. Talmage has not earlier brought to the attention of steamship companies the fact that machinery is conscientiously opposed to working on Sunday, and that it can only be made to work at a loss of time. Did the Cunard people fully grasp this great truth they could shorten the passage between Queenstown and New York by compelling the Oregon to stop her machinery on Sunday. That steamer now makes the passage in a little more than six days, including a Sunday, during which she runs at full speed. Were she to stop her machinery on Sunday the passage would probably be made in five days, as Mr. Talmage is doubtless ready to demonstrate should the chief engineer of the Cunard Company call upon him.—N. Y. Times.

THE Catholic Mirror quotes the following as the testimony of a witness before a committee of the Massachusetts legislature concerning the condition of Boston: "The present situation is horrible to contemplate. We are bad as Sodom and Gomorrah, and deserve their fate. The traffic in the souls of our youth is beyond conception. There are 365 charitable institutions in Boston—one for each day of the year—and there would be work for many more. These are made necessary by systematic violations of the laws against intemperance and licentiousness." And remarks: "This, then, is the final result of that stainless Puritanism which boasted of being so much better than the rest of the world. . . . The only stable basis for a true life is the creed of the Catholic church." To which the Independent replies: "There is one fact that the Catholic Mirror overlooks. Boston is not overwhelmingly Puritan or Protestant in its population. Its population is becoming foreign and Catholic. The archdiocese of Boston, which includes Essex, Middlesex, Suffolk, Norfolk, and Plymouth counties, reports a Catholic population of 320,000, the bulk of which, it will hardly be denied, is in Boston. It is not the Puritans who monopolize the liquor business."

News of the Week.

EX-SECRETARY OF STATE FRELINGHUYSEN is sick with a fatal disease at Newark, N. J.

THE revised edition of the Old Testament will be given to the public on the first day of May.

THE half-breed revolt in British America continues. Troops are on the way from Canada to suppress the rebellion.

RUSSIA is still massing troops on the Afghan frontier, although the prospect of peace with England is thought to be favorable.

THE Prince of Wales is to visit Ireland, and the Irish Nationalists hav decided to neither make nor allow any hostil demonstrations against his royal highness.

LAST Sunday was Easter, and the churches offered unusual attractions. The ministers took occasion to reaffirm their favorit absurdity of the bodily resurrection.

THE grand scherif of Mecca has issued a bull declaring El Mahdi an enemy of all true Mohammedans. The Mahdi is having trouble with rebels in his ranks.

PARIS, France, is the scene of great excitement over the conduct of the government in the war with China. The disaffected citizens claim that the administration is responsible for the French reverses at Langson.

THE Rev. Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, emeritus rector of St. George's church in this city, is to be examined to test his sanity. His family claim that in matters of business he is irresponsible, and has been so since 1883.

THE woman suffrage bill that passed the Dakota legislature was vetoed by Gov. Gilbert A. Pierce. At a meeting of woman suffragists in this city Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake introduced a resolution calling upon President Cleveland to remove Governor Pierce.

FARMERS in western New York complain of great hardships. The long winter has exhausted their hay, potatoes hav been frozen, the cold has destroyed colonies of bees, and the maple sugar season is unusually backward, and a small make is certain.

MAJOR DRAPER, chief of police of Toronto, Ont., notified the city newspaper publishers last Saturday that they were violating the Lord's Day by issuing Sunday editions, and that they would be prosecuted if they repeated the offense. Great indignation at this is felt by persons who hav relations among the troops engaged in suppressing the Riel rebellion, and who are reasonably anxious to get news from day to day.

GENERAL GRANT continues to fail, but at this writing is reported to show no increasing signs of immediate dissolution. He is resigned to the approaching event, and sends out assurances of his good wishes to everybody. He receives so-called spiritual aid from Dr. Newman, though his friend Senator Chaffee apologizes for this by saying that the general allows the parson to pray to humor the latter, and to avoid hurting his feelings.

PROF. JAMES WOODROW, Presbyterian, who was lately removed from the Perkins chair in the theological seminary in Columbia, S. C., because he refused to sacrifice his evolution theories upon the altar of Presbyterianism, has revived the issue between him and the Presbyteries in a new form. It having come to his knowledge that certain newspapers and ministers of the church hav charged him with heresy, he has demanded a trial, which will be accorded him.

GENERAL BARRIOS, president of Guatemala, Central America, and who recently proclaimed himself dictator of all the Central American republics, is reported to hav been killed in a battle at Chalchuapa. If true, this will probably put an end to hostilities in that country. The United States has sent troops to the Isthmus to protect its railway interests at Panama. The revolutionists are in possession of Aspinwall, or Colon, as it is called by the nativs of Central America, and transit across the Isthmus is interrupted.

Communications.

Joseph Cook and Atheism.

Malice is often made to do service in a cause when reason and justice refuse the price of bribery. If Joseph Cook, in his Boston lectureship, had ever thought of honor and decency, malice and slander might not hav been forced into such criminal work. But with a nature totally depraved (such men surely giv us the strongest evidence we hav of the truth of the old theology), we hardly hope for anything to come from such a source that would be honorable or decent. Hear what this defamer of history has to say: "There is a difference between Anarchists and Socialists; but the most radical of the Communistic, and Socialistic, and Nihilistic movements of our times are Atheistic in origin." Again he opens his mouth: "Now and then we are startled by explosions of Socialistic, and Nihilistic, and Anarchistic conspiracies, and think that they are local affairs. In many cases they are the outcome of the international organized activity of men possessed of little or no creed except Atheism." Hear again the expounder of the faith of Paul of Tarsus: "If through my lie glory redounds to God, why am I judged a sinner?" He says: "I suppose that scores of fairly well educated and respectably well endowed men among the Socialists, Communists, Nihilists, and Anarchists of Europe hug Atheism to their bosom as the latest deliverance of science." This dark luminary goes on to say: "Socialistic voters increase their numbers rapidly where Atheistic notions prevail. In Germany in 1871 there were only 120,000 Socialistic voters; in 1877 there were 497,000."

Again, he says: "The highest rate of suicides in Europe is found in the heart of Germany, and here the densest forms of blasphemy in the shape of Materialistic Atheism are to be found." One more quotation will answer our purpose: "In Europe, in this advanced century, you hav Atheism in the rum shops, Atheism in gambler's dens, Atheism in brothels, Atheism in secret societies, Atheism in journalism, Atheism in many a professor's chair, Atheism in politics, Atheism in plots against property and life, and Atheism demanding asylum in neutral nations for its criminals." It is a pleasure to apologize for a man who is in error through ignorance, but we cannot do this for Mr. Cook. He is not ignorant about this subject. He is no intellectual pauper, and unless we can find some other reason for his treason against facts, it must be charged up to his supernatural malice and hate of the truth of history.

Although you are reminded, when you read these statements, that suicidal intent must hav crossed the frontier of his reason, yet his ingenious cunning will hardly allow this tenderness for him. If we should be forced to concede his sanity, then he must become the victim of a severe criticism. The sayings of his which we hav quoted could not hav slipped through the lips of innocence, nor could they claim moral support on the ground of integrity. Such words as these, soiled with inward cancerous droolings, never passed the lips unaccustomed to the terms of crime. They were never spoken only as they had the support of inherited depravity well cultivated. Lessons of this kind are only learned through long-continued fasting and prayer. No doubt this Boston crank had the full advantage of this kind of training, and this accounts for the expert that he is. His Boston audience is evidently composed of many intelligent people, yet intelligence is always at a discount in the presence of venerable creeds, and a pebble in the sling of superstition—that is to say, if it is slung by Mr. Cook. So long as the end justifies the means (this has been Christianity's ethics during its history), as long as the statements of any man are in the interest of the master whom the people worship, known falsehoods are never called to an account. Many of his hearers must hav known that many of his statements were false. This is the lamentable condition in which the Christian religion has placed its devotees, where they are forced to consent to that which in reason they know to be false. This is the high Christian civilization of this age. Its historical gestures through the centuries can only claim this kind of civilization, nourished by a war against reason, science, and heresy.

But what does the great Boston lecturer mean by Atheism? Atheism is with him the synonym of all that is vile, while Christianity is the synonym of all that is good. Why did not this self-authorized teacher tell his cultured audience how it came to pass that the statistics of this and other countries disclose the startling fact that ninety-five out of every hundred in the civilized world who are criminals believe in Mr. Cook's Bible, heaven, and hell? The statistics of Christian England, formulated by Christian officials, published in the Christian Parliament by Christians, show a hundred believing criminals to one unbelieving criminal. The criminal population of the civilized world believe as Mr. Cook. They believe in his Bible, heaven, and hell. This is quite natural in the order of sequence. Mr. Cook's religion offers a premium on crime. It says to the criminal, "There is an atonement for you; Jesus has paid the debt;" "He that confesses his sins shall be forgiven;" with a promis of a mansion in the skies.

But what are the facts regarding Mr. Cook's Socialists, Communists, Nihilists, Anarchists, whom he calls Atheists? Is it possible that this man is honest in the above statement? Does he not know that no greater insult could be offered to the above classes than to call them Atheists? He knows, as he ought to know, that five out of every six, at least, are believers. They believe, as he does, in his Bible (by which they swear when they enter these societies), in his heaven and hell. He knows, or he ought to know, that in all of the secret leagues, or societies, the Bible is the foundation of each and all. There are, of course, among them those that are unbelievers, but this is the exception, and not the rule. It is a notorious fact that the countries where life and property are most insecure are those which are the most Christian, and where it is unsafe for an Atheist to speak.

What are the facts, in the next place, as to Mr. Cook's rum-shops, brothels, and gamblers' dens? Mr. Cook is anxious, like others of his sort, to throw off the legitimate outcome of his faith and creed, but statistics are his formidable foe. They testify to every one that will take the trouble to collect them that Mr. Cook's rum sellers and men everywhere in the whisky traffic believe as Mr. Cook does. They believe in his God, in his Bible, heaven, and hell. Nine, at least, out of every ten are as pure in these gospel doctrins as he is himself. And the same is true in reference to his gamblers' dens. You will find but few who are not firm believers in the creed of the Bible. The same is eminently true as to Mr. Cook's brothels. All of the unfortunate occupants of these places are very largely free from the sin of unbelief. They believe as Mr. Cook does. This is what statistics demonstrate.

Again, among whom do we find people of suicidal intent? Not at all as Mr. Cook claims. I hav known of many, and I hav never known of one justifying the statement of Mr. Cook. And the same is true of insanity.

The inmates of our institutions for the insane are almost entirely confined to the believers. Mr. Cook's statistics, taken from Germany, are very unfortunate. He, for the time, at least, must hav forgotten the master whom he is endeavoring to vindicate. An increase in Atheistic strength, from 120,000 to 497,000 in six years! Where is your master, Mr. Cook, and what is he about? At this rate, how long will it be before your religion will conquer the world? Would it not be well for you to tell your cultured audiences in Boston why your master, and all of his followers, were forced to leave the Land of Promis, the land of Gods, Christs, and Bibles? Why leave Jerusalem, so full of memories? Why Antioch, Smyrna, Alexandria, Constantinople? Why, in the land of the cross the crescent is now; Christianity and its founder forced to leave the land of its birth, driven out never to return; and now you sound the alarm and fear comes upon all, and the cry comes up: "To your tents, O Israel, the Philistines be upon thee." Why did not Mr. Cook inform his audience and the world how it happens that all of the murderers when hung go to heaven? Does he not know that ninety-nine out of every hundred who commit murder believe as he does? In his Bible, heaven, and hell could such hopes as Mr. Cook presents to the would-be murderer be destroyed, murders would be few and far between. If the would-be murderer knew that there was no atonement, Christ, or heaven for him, he would be a thousand times less liable to commit the deed, but as long as he knows that those who hav committed murder go to heaven when they are hung, the deed is half committed. And it is possible that the murderer may see that this is the surest way to gain a mansion in the skies.

But now to the question, What is Atheism? It is the opposit of Theism. One affirms the existence of an Infinit God. This affirmation is denied by the other. The affirmation of one, and the negation of the other are allied, and, in fact, they both stand upon the same foundation, and are alike fundamentally in this, that neither of them conveys to the mind an intelligent idea, and hence they are both alike valueless.

I am aware that the ever-shifting sands of ingenious conjecture hav made a wide difference, but when we force these two terms to this last analysis, we are compelled, for the sake of relief, to hide behind the terms in which we think, and must proclaim to all that our terms of thought are so limited that we only hav the power to think this, and nothing more. The God which the Theist thinks is in thought, and hence must hav, as all objects hav that are in thought, qualitativ and quantitativ value. Our highest thought must determin the nature of the object of that thought. We must, by the laws of strict limitation, think the limited. To think otherwise—to think without limitation—is to be what the Theist calls God, wherein there is the difference between the Theist and the Atheist—that is to say, when we remember that he, like the Theist, must think under the same limits before he can enter a denial as to the statement of Theism, he must think otherwise than in the terms of the limited, and hence, as before, he must commit mental suicide.

These reasons legitimate the statement that Atheism and Theism, both alike, stand upon that which is impossible to thought. To affirm or deny only the limited is criminally absurd. The great movement of to-day, one that Mr. Cook and his fellow-Theists ought to know, is not Atheism, but Agnosticism—the pleading of ignorance—when you go beyond the limited. In fact, we seldom anywhere meet an Atheist. They are as rarely seen as a true follower of the so-called founders of the Christian religion. But Mr. Cook will not allow this method of escape. No! no! We are met at this point with the full assurance that our reason is not to be trusted. "For in Adam's sin we all joined in," and hence all are fallen creatures. Though the light of reason fail to giv us God, revelation does that for us which nature and reason fail to do. God in his mercy made himself known to us in a written word through inspiration of the parties chosen to write his word or will, and the Bible is those inspired writers' word. This claim simply is to be conceded without evidence. We will suppose that it was the will of God to do just as the above claims, we are in the same trouble as we were when we were in search of the God of the Theist. Revelation does not relieve us from the limitations assigned to us. We are still forced to think in the terms of the finite. If it is true, as the Theist claims, his God could make himself known to us, only as he came within the terms in which we think, then how can we, using these terms, discriminate, seeing that our thoughts are, in both cases, in the terms of the finite? So all the authority that we can hav for a revelation is that of the finite coming from the finite. Here, then, we are forced upon the only standing-ground possible, that of Agnosticism. We are not within the province which upon this question admits of affirmation or negation. Hence we see that revelation does not help Mr. Cook. He is still within the environments common to the rest of mankind.

But suppose that this reasoning is pronounced worthless, and that the affirmations of Theism that there is an infinit God are true, and that he is made known through revelation, and only in this way. Then it is equally true that the Atheist in his denial or negation is as dependent upon revelation as is the Theist in his affirmations. If an affirmativ relating to an infinit object demands a revelation from that infinit object through which, and by which, he is only known, is it not equally true that a negation relating to an infinit object demands a revelation from that infinit object as the ground of that negation? I see no difference here; both, for their expression, demand the same conditions. An infinit No is as impossible to thought as an infinit Yes. If one comes by revelation, then it is equally certain that the other must come in the same way. And inasmuch as these revelations contradict each other, the author of the same suffers annihilation. I see no way to avoid this conclusion. Mr. Cook can take his choice. I am of the opinion that in him malice and slander are so interwoven with his moral pauperism that we hav little to hope for from any argument that might be brought to his consciousness. His utterances are so misadjusted to truth that prevarication shines through the brilliant dust of his rhetoric. If the Young Men's Christian Association or the Evangelical Association or Alliance were to appoint a continental scavenger, they would find the suitable man in Boston, I am sure.

J. H. BURNHAM.

Saginaw City, Mich.

Religion in the Capitol.

Washington Correspondence of the Chicago Tribune.

During the dedication ceremonies in the House last Saturday, the Virginia clergyman and his two assistants, who had been invited to take charge of the religious part of the program, were given seats upon the raised stand just in front of the speaker. They were Episcopal clergymen. They sat with their white surplices on, looking very superior and dignified when the Methodist chaplain of the Senate came in. The chaplain took a seat upon the floor about three seats below the line where the visiting clergymen were sitting. Huntley, the Senate chaplain, bowed very politely to the visiting clergymen. They responded very stiffly, and did not invite him to take a seat with them. Harry Smith, the journal clerk of the House, thought the Senate chaplain was not being treated with the proper respect, so he turned to Gen. Anson McCook, the secretary of the Senate, and said to him:

"I wish you would introduce me to your chaplain. Then I will introduce him in turn to those Episcopal fellows, and then they can't help inviting your man to come up and sit with them."

"All right," said McCook, "I will do it."

He took a step forward and then stopped, looking embarrassed.

"What is the matter?" said Smith.

McCook replied: "I will be hanged if I hav not forgotten the man's name. He has prayed alongside of me for two years. I know him as well as I do you, but I will be hanged if I can call his name."

Smith laughed and said: "There is Canady, the sergeant-at-arms. He will know."

"Yes," said McCook. "Call him, quick."

They beckoned to Canady. He came up. McCook leaned over and whispered to him:

"What is the name of our chaplain? I hav forgotten."

Canady looked blank, and then he said with a burst of candor: "Well, I never did know. Havn't you got a Congressional directory?"

There was none about, so as a last resort they appealed to Captain Bassett, the chief of the pages. He was able to giv the information.

I suppose it would make a great howl if the offices of chaplains in Congress were to be abolished, but they ought to be. It is worse than a farce—the opening of the proceedings of Congress with prayer. No one ever pays any attention to the chaplain. His prayers are not even printed as a part of the proceedings. I do not believe that there are a dozen members in either branch of Congress who would know their chaplains by sight if they should meet them outside of the Capitol. These men are paid $75 a month for saying a few words in front of the presiding officers before Congress opens. There is no interest of religion served by this form. The contests for these positions hav sometimes the most bitter character. There is no more reason why the business proceedings of Congress should be opened by prayer than that the boards of trade, chambers of commerce, or any of the business organizations of the country should. The majority of the members recognize the absurdity of clinging to this old form. The printing of the prayers in the Record was abolished some years ago. They are now printed on very special occasions. It was found that the practice of not having them printed materially shortened them, and that is the principal reason why they are not printed. In the old days when the prayers were reported it was a very poor kind of a chaplain who could not pray a columnful of the Record.

There are some very ridiculous incidents connected with these official prayers. When Mr. Hayes was inaugurated a little man by the name of Sunderland was chaplain of the Senate. He had charge of the prayer that was to be delivered to the audience upon that occasion. He prepared something very fine, and afterward furnished the manuscript of it to the Associated Press. He belonged to the official-worshiping class of Washington, and in his prayer put in a phrase of tribute to every high official in every one of the branches of the government, at least he intended in his prayer to cover the entire range of his official life. Through carelessness or excitement upon praying to such a distinguished audience he omitted asking protection of the higher powers for the lone fisherman of Malone, William A. Wheeler, the vice-president. Mr. Wheeler is an eminent Christian and a truly pious man. The omission to ask for religious insurance for Mr. Wheeler was noticed when this elaborate prayer was printed in the evening papers. Sunderland's attention was called to it in the evening. He became frantic at his omission. One would hav thought that he would hav instantly retired to his closet and sent up a special prayer for the vice-president. But this would not be in keeping with the spirit of modern times. He communicated with his Lord by telegraph. He hastened down to the Associated Press office and called to see a copy of his prayer. He found to his horror that it had already been telegraphed away to the papers. He then wrote an amendment to the prayer, and succeeded in getting the amiable Gobright, who was then in charge of the Associated Press office, to send the amendment with the request that it be inserted at the proper place. This was done, but it reached only a few of the papers. The majority of them printed the first version.

Politicians as a class are very irreligious, in the sense that they pay no attention to the forms of religion. They are very timid, however, upon the subject, and cannot be classed as Liberals. They are indifferent to the subject. They would be the very last, however, to publicly show this indifference or to do anything which would giv the religious people a chance to say that they were Infidels. Politicians as a class are practically Infidels. You can count upon the fingers of your two hands the prominent men of either branch of Congress who might be classed as remotely religious. The great mass of them never attend church, and would as soon think of going to an astrologer or a fortune-teller as to a clergyman for advice in a difficult or delicate matter. But if a proposition were to come up to-morrow in the house to abolish the post of chaplain there would be a perfect howl of pious indignation from the majority of the members. They class the churches as so many corporations whose influence is not to be lightly lost for any mere question of ideas. I hav heard members speak often of working what is called the "religious racket" in their districts. There was altogether too much of this "religious racket" in the last campaign. There is not a member of the Republican party who does not groan every time he thinks of the ministers who took such an activ part in the campaign. I heard a veteran politician say the other day: "I hav at various times worked the religious racket in my district, but I never permit the clergymen to deliver any public address to me until I hav teen it in writing and had an opportunity of revising is." Unless you do this and load the clerical gun yourself it is just as apt to shoot behind as in front."

Bacon and Shakspere.

A.D. 1595.

Bacon at thirty-four livs for the most part in retirement at Twickenham Park. On the 21st of January, through the influence of Essex, he receives an invitation to court. The queen will not see him, but from her counselors he learns that she is more angry with Essex than with him. But she is not ready to appoint a solicitor, and Bacon compares himself to "a child following a bird which, when it is nearest, flieth away and liteth a little before."

On the 25th of May he writes a letter to Lord Keeper Puckering, which his lordship dockets: "Mr. Fr. Bacon, his contention to leave the solicitorship."

"I thought good to step aside for nine days, which is the durance of a wonder, and not for any dislike in the world; for I think her majesty hath done me as great a favor in making an end of this matter, as if she had enlarged me from some restraint. And I humbly pray your lordship, if it so please you, to deliver to her majesty from me, that I would hav been glad to hav done her majesty service now in the best of my years, and the same mind remains in me still; and that it may be, when her majesty hath tried others, she will think of him that she had cast aside. For I will take it upon that which her majesty hath often said, that she doth reserve me and not reject me."

Compare the "nine days' wonder" in this letter with the following passages in the plays:

"Glos.—That would be ten days' wonder at the least.
Clar.—That's a day longer than a wonder lasts."
—3 Henry VI., iii, 2.

"I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder."
—As You Like It, iii, 2.

On the 7th of August Lady Bacon writes to her son Anthony as follows:

"I would I were able to help you both out of debt, but, set apart my poor Mortmain, which I certainly hav vowed for any acknowledgments to God, I am not worth one hundred pounds. Yea, and specially you hav spent me quick; nothing can therefore remain after I am dead. . .

"I am sorry your brother with inward secret grief hindereth his health. Everybody saith he looketh thin and pale. Let him look to God and confer with him in Godly exercise of hearing and reading. . . I had rather ye both, with God's blessed favor, had very good healths, and were well out of debt, than any office. Yet, though the earl [of Essex] showed great affection, he marred all with violent courses. I pray God increase his fear in his heart, and hatred of sin; indeed, halting before the Lord and backsliding are very pernicious. I am heartily sorry to hear how he [Essex] sweareth and gameth unreasonably. God cannot like it. I pray show your brother this letter, but to no creature else."

In another letter she says: "I hav been too ready for you both till nothing is left." She insinuates that Francis "hath nourished most sinful, proud villains wilfully," and breaks out furiously upon "that bloody Percy," and "that Jones," as "proud, profane, costly fellows, whose being about him," she verily believes, "the Lord God doth mislike." Bacon in his will left his manuscripts in charge of Henry Percy (Auth. of Shak., p. 91).

In another letter to Anthony, dated August 5th, she is shocked to hear of a "feast on the Sabbath at Gray's Inn," and says, "God forgiv and hav mercy upon England."

In some of these letters the transition from cant to business is ludicrous, for example:

"Grace and love from the Lord Jesus Christ. Your beer, well handled I trust, is meant to be sent to-morrow early. The brewer hath been careful. I had no brewing, I dare say, these twelve months, more diligently attended upon of my servants."

On the 3d of November the queen shows Essex a copy of a book recently published in Holland, on the forbidden subject of the succession. It purports to hav been written by one Doleman, but is really the work of a Jesuit priest named Parsons, and is dedicated to Essex. The earl is greatly disturbed and becomes ill, but the queen is soon satisfied of his loyalty.

On the 5th of November Sergeant Fleming is appointed solicitor. Bacon's subsidy speech in 1593 is really the great obstacle to his promotion. The attorney generalship had been kept open a year, and the solicitorship a year and a half, with frequent intimations to him that his conduct in Parliament was what stood in his way. But he had made all the explanation he had to giv, and refused to make any further personal effort for promotion. Nevertheless Essex was hopeful and persistent, and the keenness of his disappointmennt is thus expressed as he breaks the news to Bacon at Twickenham:

"Master Bacon, the queen hath denied me yon place for you and hath placed another. I know you are the least part of your own matter, but you fare ill because you hav chosen me for your mean and dependence. You hav spent your time and thoughts in my matters. I die if I do not somewhat towards your fortune. You shall not deny to accept a piece of land which I shall bestow upon you."

Bacon is loath to accept the gift, but after some parleying and further pressure to receive it, says:

"My lord, I see I must be your homager, and hold land of your gift, but do you know the manner of doing homage in law? Always it is with a saving of his faith to the king and his other lords; and therefore, my lord, I can no more be yours than I was, and it must be with the ancient savings: and if I grow to be a rich man you will giv me leave to giv it back to some of your unrewarded followers."

The land is afterward sold by Bacon for £1,800.

Essex is now preparing a magnificent display at his house for the queen's entertainment on the anniversary of her accession, November 17th. Bacon writes a masque for the occasion. We select as a specimen the speech of the Hermit, and ask the reader to note whether there is nothing "Shaksperian" in it:

"I wish him to leave turning over the book of fortune, which is but a play for children, when there be so many books of truth and knowledge better worthy the revolving, and not fix his view only upon a picture in a little table, where there be so many tables of histories, yea, to the life, excellent to behold and admire. Whether he believe me or no, there is no prison to the thoughts, which are free under the greatest of tyrants. Shall any man make his conceit as an anchor, mured up within the compass of one beauty or person, that may hav the liberty of all contemplation? Shall he exchange the sweet traveling through the universal variety for one wearisome and endless round or labyrinth? Let thy master, Squire, offer his service to the muses. It is long since they received any into their court. They giv alms continually at their gate, that many come to liv upon: but few they hav ever admitted into their palace. There shall he find secrets not dangerous to know, sides and parties not factious to hold, precepts and commandments not penal to disobey. The gardens of love wherein he now playeth himself are fresh to-day and fading to-morrow, as the sun comforts them or is turned from them. But the gardens of the muses keep the privilege of the Golden Age; they ever flourish and are in league with time. The monuments of wit survive the monuments of power; the verses of the poet endure without a syllable lost, while states and empires pass many periods. Let him not think he shall descend, for he is now upon a hill as a ship is mounted upon the ridge of a wave; but that hill of the muses is above tempests, always clear and calm; a hill of the goodliest discovery that a man can hav, being a prospect upon all the errors and wanderings of the present and former times. Yea, in some cliff it leadeth the eye beyond the horizon of time, and giveth no obscure divination of times to come. So that if he will indeed lead vitam vitalem, a life that unites safety and dignity, pleasure and merit; if he will win admiration without envy; if he will be in the feast and not in the throng, in the light and not in the heat; let him embrace the life of study and contemplation. And if he will accept of no other reason, yet because the gift of the muses will enworthy him in his love, and where he now looks on his mistress's outside with the eyes of sense, which are dazzled and amazed, he shall then behold her high perfections and heavenly mind with the eyes of judgment, which grow stronger by more nearly and more directly viewing such an object."

A part of this speech parallels well with passages in "Timon of Athens," one of the latest of the plays, first printed in 1623, and never known to hav been produced on the stage:

"Poet.—Sir, I hav upon a high and pleasant hill
Feigned Fortune to be throned: the base o' the mount
Is ranked with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That labor on the bosom of this sphere
To propagate thin states. . . .
"Painter. . . . This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,
With one man beckoned from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepy mount
To climb his happiness, would be well expressed
In our condition." —Act i, Sc. 1.

On this occasion, November 17th, the queen grants to Bacon the reversion of a lease of Twickenham Park for twenty-one years, dating from 1624. The value of the lease is said to be twelve guineas a year. This he mortgages, and is unable to redeem it until 1602.

Soon after the celebration of coronation-day Bacon writes to Essex:

"I am purposed not to follow the practice of the law: (If her majesty command me in any particular, I shall be ready to do her willing service:) and my reason is only because it drinketh too much time, which I hav dedicated to better purposes. But even for that point of estate and means I partly lean to Thales's opinion—that a philosopher may be rich if he will. . . . For your lordship, I do think myself more beholden to you than to any man."

Shakespere at thirty-one is part owner of the Globe and Blackfriars theaters. The third part of "Henry VI.," under a different title, is printed, but without the name of the author (see 1588). "King John" has appeared, and probably "Romeo and Juliet."

The play of "Locrine," by "W. S.," is printed, and in the possession of his company; but critics think it was written by William Smith. The name of Shakspere as a playwriter is not yet revealed to the public. First Bacon is to be known as an author of essays, then Shakspere as a writer of plays.

ANTIQUARY.

P.S.—It is unnecessary to reply to any of the arguments of "Holt" except as they are answered at the proper place in this series of articles. It is not our intention to publish in THE TRUTH SEEKER the entire series, but we would like to go as far as the execution of Essex in 1601, reserving all the remainder for a book. And in that book we intend to prove, among other things, that Shakspere could not write.

GOD having in the beginning created man in his own image, man has ever since been returning the compliment.—Bon Mot.

WHEN in transacting business thou art in doubt, make choice of that side from which the least injury will result.—The Persian.

The Liberal Club.

The 3d inst. was Good Friday, so-called with reference to the passion and death of our Lord. It would hav been an event more worthy of commemoration if the devil had died that day. However, we must learn to be thankful for such favors as are vouchsafed to us, and celebrate accordingly. Probably one of the most appropriate observances of the day was held in the evening, at the 373d regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club. Mr. Freeman O. Willey, of Wisconsin, lectured upon "The Financial Remedies which will Prevent Revolution." The hall was full, and numerous diverse beliefs and views were represented by the individuals in the audience. Dr. Eccles, of Brooklyn, was there. He is a conservativ upon all subjects, and a good Christian, although he does not work much at it. Mr. Jones, leader of the Spiritual meetings at Arcanum Hall, but who is nevertheless a good Liberal, came also. Caleb Pink, of Williamsburg, a well-known Son of God, lent the effulgence of his countenance to the occasion. Mr. John P. Guild, from Jersey City, an enthusiastic reformer, left upon the secretary's table a little tract called "Psalms of the People and Poetry of the Incisiv Philosophy," in which the following distich occurs:

"Tyrants who feel the dynamite
Deprecate their servant's right."

Mr. James Redpath, a Henry George Land Reformer, was modestly and inconspicuously present. Mr. Langerfeld, Social Democrat, sat near the treasurer and scoffed. Mr. Huhn, Greenbacker, listened patiently and appreciativly. Robert Blissert, dynamiter, kept a critical eye upon the proceedings. Madam Delescluze, Christian Socialist, procured a copy of last week's TRUTH SEEKER and read the report of her lecture with approval. Mr. Sutherland, who swears by the golden dollar, absorbed the lecture and gathered thoughts for a reply. Over at the northwest corner Mr. Eckhart leaned back in his chair and took everything in.

Mr. Wakeman introduced the speaker with some complimentary remarks. Mr. Willey had four propositions as the basis of his lecture. These were (1) that a Congressional Record should be kept on file in every post-office, so that members of the rural districts could know what our law-makers are doing. (2) The veto power should be taken from the president, and the question referred to the people to be voted upon. (3) The government should issue all money, and (4) loan it to the people. It was the shrinkage of money, Mr. Willey said, that caused panics. The speaker won the credit for great eloquence, the only criticism made being that, as with Dr. Eccles, the matter of his lecture was to some extent lost sight of by the audience in their admiration for his method of presenting it.

Mr. Langerfeld gained the floor first at the close of Mr. Willey's discourse. He did not regard the lecture as of especial value. It was very naïve and childlike, but failed to cover the whole ground of reform. Putting the power of issuing money solely in the hands of the government would, he said, be plucking but a single feather from the capitalistic cormorant. Mr. Langerfeld would hav the state attend to everything of public interest.

Dr. Eccles criticised the Socialists. They were eminently logical but not practical. In the doctor's view the government is all right, but the people must be pure in heart if they would see God.

Mr. Sutherland stood up to defend the gold dollar and a protectiv tariff. All our financial panics, he held, had been caused by reducing the tariff and fooling with rag money.

Mr. Huhn made a great greenback speech, and was catechized by the previous speaker. Mr. Sutherland, for instance, inquired sarcastically how much Confederate notes were worth. Mr. Huhn replied that they were worth as much as the Confederate government. If the Confederacy had been a success its money would hav been at par. The money of a stable government could always be relied upon.

Mr. Blissert wrestled briefly with the subject, and came off an easy winner. He announced that a greenback dollar was worth more in London than a gold one, at which statement Mr. Redpath shook his head.

Mr. Willey, who had been made the recipient of a satisfactory collection, which Deacons Dean and Kinget elicited from the audience through the medium of the hat, listened to the criticisms with composure, and then wiped them out like chalkmarks upon a blackboard. The chairman, who during the exercises had tried, with indifferent success, to get a little sleep, thereupon closed the meeting, and, to borrow a phrase from the secretary, "at the usual hour the club adjourned." The reporter was not present, but acquired the foregoing facts in conversation with various intelligent persons who were there.

Next Friday evening Mr. J. K. Ingalls will discuss the "Factors in Production, and the Ratios in Compensation and Exchange."

IN the Tent and Bruno Statue funds Mr. J. D. Kruschke was by error credited with moneys contributed by Mr. J. W. Kruschke.

Religious Tests.

The General Statutes of Massachusetts provide that "every person not a believer in any religion shall be required to testify truly under the pains and penalties of perjury, and the evidence of such person's disbelief in the existence of God may be received to affect his credibility as a witness." This statute does not contain a religious test as to the question whether a non-believer in the existence of God shall be permitted to testify in a court of justice; but it does imply such a test as to the credibility of such a witness. It permits the Atheism of a witness to be shown by evidence, as the means of affecting his credibility.

There was recently quite a lively debate in the Massachusetts Senate on a bill which proposed to modify the law, so that it should contain no religious test whatever in respect to witnesses. The bill was rejected by a vote of twenty-four to ten. One senator was of the opinion that he who "denied under the genial sunlight his belief in the authorship of that radiance" ought in some way to suffer for it. Another senator did not like the idea of putting a non-believer in the existence of God "on an equality with the man who devoutly acknowledged it."

This is rather singular logic to fall from senatorial lips, especially in these United States and in this age of the world. There are a few other states in the union in which one's opinion as to religious matters is made a test either as to his competency to testify before a court, or as to his credibility. But most of the American states hav taken the ground, either in their respectiv constitutions, or in legislativ statutes, or in both, that no religious tests of any kind or to any extent shall be applied to the people under the authority of civil government. The constitution of Oregon, for example, provides as follows: "No law shall, in any case whatever, control the free exercise and enjoyment of religious opinions, or interfere with the rights of conscience. No religious test shall be required as a qualification for any office of trust or profit. No person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness or juror in consequence of his opinions on matters of religion, nor be questioned in any court of justice touching his religious belief to affect the weight of his testimony." The constitution of New York declares that "no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief."

This we think to be the true ground for every civil government, and we are quite sure that it is the only one consistent for a republican government to assume. The civil law should hav nothing to do with one's faith or want of faith in matters of religion, and should confer upon him no advantages, nor impose upon him any disabilities or disadvantages, on account of any particular kind of faith, or any particular kind of disbelief. We hav no doubt that the Bible is right when it declares that "the fool hath said in his heart, there is no God." But it is not the business of civil government in this world to deal with such fools; and it never made the attempt without working vastly more harm than good.

We are opposed to all religious tests, of every name and nature, in civil government, that hav any relation to the rights, privileges, or duties of the citizen under such a government. All citizenship should stand on a common level, without any reference whatever to the religious opinions of the citizen. His religious opinions should hav nothing to do with his eligibility to civil office, or his competency to testify, or his credibility when he does testify. Civil society passes out of its sphere, and into a realm that does not belong to it, the moment it adopts and applies any religious test for any civil purpose. It interferes with the religious liberty of the people by an unjust discrimination. Indeed, religious tests are simply a part of the exploded systems of church and state, and, so far as they exist in any of the American states, they are the relics of that system. The sooner the states that still retain them in any form get rid of them the better.—Independent.

Tent Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$105.10
Alex. Cochran,	1.00
Sol Benson,	.20
Leonard Walters,	1.50
Frederick Koezly,	5.00
J. M. Hanson,	.50
Noah Coler,	1.00
Total,	$114.30

Charles Watts in Philadelphia.

Last Sunday will not soon be forgotten by the Secularists of Philadelphia. It was then that Mr. Charles Watts delivered two lectures under the auspices of the local branch of the League. In the afternoon the large hall was filled in every part, and in the evening hundreds were unable to gain admission. Mr. Watts received a most enthusiastic reception, and many of his personal friends marked their appreciation of his services in a practical manner. During the delivery of the lectures the applause was frequent and hearty, and many were the solicitations for him to make a speedy return visit.

Previous to the evening lecture Mrs. Watts favored the audience with two dramatic selections, which were received most enthusiastically. At the conclusion Mrs. Watts was presented by the ladies of the society with an exquisit bouquet.

Too much praise cannot be accorded to Mr. Longford for his indefatigable services in making the lectures so successful.

The National Liberal League.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

CHARLES WATTS, First Vice-President. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Secretary, 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$3,743.91
Louisville,	22.25
J. E. Towle,	5.00
League No. 275 (Louisville, Ky.),	5.00
G. Z. Flagler,	1.00
Wm. Walker,	1.00
S. L. Hogan,	1.00
John A. Webber (annual member),	1.75
Leonard Walters,	2.50
Marcus Klein (annual member),	1.00
Louis H. Freligh, "	1.00
Total,	$3,785.41

News and Notes from the Field.

I lectured to a "good sized audience," as the papers reported it, on Sunday evening, March 29th, at Louisville. The Louisville Courier Journal, which is very loth to say anything favorable of our heterodox movement, admitted that "the address was very entertaining to those who held the views of the League." As I do not intend to please the Christians, this is quite satisfactory. Mr. Reuben Dailey made an eloquent extemporaneous address, in which he pointed out what should be the constructiv aims of Liberalism, and that on the line of a higher and better development of humanity it was sure to win the victory. The old ideas cannot now improve mankind. They are dead. The intelligence of to-day does not accept them. Hereafter science must improve the world, and it is the privilege of Liberals to furnish the noblest motivs by which this can be accomplished, so that the wealth of life may be justly distributed and happiness made universal.

After the meeting an auxiliary League was formed, and arrangements made for a lecture to be given by Mr. Watts and myself on May 24th, when a full house will, no doubt, greet us, and the Liberal ranks be ready for work.

There are thousands of Liberals in Louisville. Many are indifferent, and some still fear the influence of ecclesiastical tyranny, but there is the nucleus here of a powerful organization. The Germans hav, for many years, furnished a noble advance element, and if all will do the same a brilliant success will be achieved.

I hav enjoyed my visit with Reuben Dailey very much indeed. He is editor of the Jeffersonville Democrat, the leading county paper, and has, for many years, been a power in the community for pushing things. He is one of the most talented journalists in Indiana, and has won an influential position in his profession. Mrs. Dailey is also a woman of rare energy, and literary taste and ability. They liv outside the city on a four-acre farm, and so, for a few days, I enjoyed the delights of country life, which was quite agreeable, although spring did not, by any means, shower upon us its warmth and glory. Winter, like an old dame, seemed still determined to hav the last word, though now and then the bright, soft skies would peep forth.

Mr. Dailey, while realizing all the difficulties in the way, is in thorough sympathy with the progress of Liberalism. He believes that only through the rejection of the old can the world come to greater hights; but rejection is not all—the thought must become a life, and there must be a building up, and the cultivation of nobler virtues.

I had a rare good hour's call with that sturdy reformer, Col. Thomas G. Morrison, of New Albany. I found him after much climbing on the hill of Zion, as it might be called, for certainly it is a lovely spot, and from it stretches out a magnificent landscape that the eye can never tire of looking upon, the bright waters, the soft green fields, the beautiful ranks of trees, the rolling, winding hills, over which the spring skies were flashing their daintiest colors. Here is a most inviting place for the reader and the thinker, where he can contemplate the turmoil of life and hold the balance of justice. Colonel Morrison is by no means a rose-water reformer. He believes in a few hard blows now and then. He is a thoroughly equipped warrior. He was in the army and his right arm was shattered by a rifle ball. By a delicate and difficult surgical operation the broken bone was removed, and so, to a certain extent, the use of the hand was preserved. He kept the extracted bone, and now has the rare experience of gazing upon a part of his own skeleton. Having been through the furies of war he has something of the gallant and impatient spirit of the soldier, and desires to see the great wrongs that now exist righted if need be by the strong arm.

The colonel is in thorough sympathy with humanity. He is not merely a contemplativ philosopher. He is a keen thinker and a vigorous writer, and can pour forth also the melody of the poet's song. He realizes the sufferings that are in the world to-day, the injustice, the slavery, the torture, and that there must be a remedy for these things; and this is the earnest cry of every genuin man who is not satisfied simply with his own comfort, but would hav happiness universal, and the curse of poverty removed.

There are many Liberals at New Albany, and I hope that arrangements will be made for Mr. Watts and myself to lecture there on our return from the West.

I am now in the busy city of St. Louis, an emporium, indeed, where great tides of business meet. There are plenty of Liberals here. The place is full of them, in spite of the prestige of the churches. The preachers hav just been making a desperate effort to defend Christianity. All the leading denominations hav joined together in giving a series of Lenten sermons in support of the Bible, and especially of the Christ. Half a dozen of the leading clergymen of the city gave these sermons, under the auspices of the Episcopalian church. They hav been challenged to meet Mr. Watts in public debate, and whether they accept or not Mr. Watts will review those sermons in his lecture here on April 12th. Quite an interest is excited in regard to Mr. Watts's reply.

I hav met many leading citizens of the place, and they are eager to see a fair discussion of these great issues.

Helen H. Gardener is ready with all a woman's will to make St. Louis a grand battle-ground for freedom, and I think, with such a keen and brilliant coadjutor, something will be done. I am glad that one woman has the courage to declare the wrong which Christianity has ever put upon her sex, and that the old religion must be destroyed in order to vindicate the mental and moral freedom of woman. In this fundamental struggle for essential rights Helen H. Gardener is indeed a pioneer. She has the clear intellect and the undaunted heart.

Mr. Watts and myself lecture at Liberal, Mo., April 13th; at Fort Dodge, Kansas, April 19th, and at Chicago May 3d. Other places and dates are not yet definitly settled, but we shall be busy at work.

It is now decided that the New York State Freethinkers' Convention will be held at Albany, N. Y. The Opera House has been engaged for September 11th, 12th, and 13th. No doubt we shall hav one of the grandest Liberal meetings ever held in the state of New York, and a most brilliant array of talent will be present. Let the Liberals of New York and New England, as well as elsewhere, begin to make preparation to attend this magnificent convention. Our secretary, H. L. Green, as usual, will set the colors a-flying, and there must be a unanimous rally. Fraternally yours,

April 2, 1885. SAMUEL. P. PUTNAM.

The Sexton–Watts Debates in Montreal.

When the Rev. Dr. Sexton lectured in Montreal last October, under the auspices of the churches, he was announced as "one of the greatest living apologists for Christianity," and as "one who had not feared to meet and confute the most potent leaders of Atheistic thought." His presence in Canada was understood to be for the express purpose of checkmating the progress of the Freethought movement in general and the efforts of Mr. Watts in particular, and he was immediately invited to engage in a public debate with that gentleman. He expressed his willingness to do so, but the clergy would not hear of such a thing. Not that they were afraid of their champion's ability (oh dear, no!), but they would not gratify the so-called Freethinkers by giving them an opportunity of advertising their small wares. Recently, however, an arrangement was come to, independent of the ministers, and when the announcement was made public they first denied the accuracy of it, and when that was no longer tenable they then began to hedge a little on their champion, so as to let themselvs down easy in case he was defeated. They argued in the public press that the only point which these debates could establish would be whether Dr. Sexton or Mr. Watts possessed the most debating skill, and as that was a matter of indifference to the citizens of Montreal, it was not worth while to pay any serious attention to them. The editorial columns of the religious organ also told its readers that "the church holds controversy to be a very small part of its business. As the weapons of its warfare are not carnal, so, to a large extent, they are not intellectual, and it is therefore incapable of bringing itself with its best forces upon the same platform with the spirit that merely denies, and that appeals to the tribunal of reason alone." What a surprise they must hav got when they read that and the following: "The Christian minister's work is to draw from living fountains for men the comfort and rest which their hearts crave, and he is generally little inclined, and worse equipped, to bandy words with those who hav no stomach for what he offers, but who are armed to the teeth for the fight." If no other result accrues from the holding of these debates, something has been gained in the candid admissions of this writer that the church is unable to successfully cope with the common-sense arguments of Freethinkers.

Relativ to the debate, the Montreal Herald contained the following:

The public debates on Christianity vs. Freethought, announced to take place in the Queen's Hall, between Rev. G. Sexton and Mr. Charles Watts, are, by the very novelty of the thing, attracting considerable public attention. The advisability of holding discussions on such subjects is being questioned and warmly debated in certain circles, many who favor the fullest and freest discussion of all secular matters being averse to having religious subjects treated by the same methods. The chief objection seems to be the possibility of the disputants failing to conduct the discussion in a proper spirit, with due reverence for the momentous questions with which they are dealing, and so unnecessarily wound the feelings of those who are unfamiliar with the methods and results of modern Biblical criticism. On the present occasion, however, such fears are entirely groundless, the reputations of both gentlemen being a sufficient guarantee against the expression of anything which might hurt the feelings of the most sensitiv. We subjoin brief personal sketches of Dr. Sexton and Mr. Watts, which will be of interest to our readers:

The Rev. George Sexton, M.A., LL.D., who is to champion the Christian side in these debates, is one of the most widely known religious and scientific controversialists. He is a Fellow of the Royal Italian Society of Science, honorary member of L'Academie dei Quinti, Rome; member of the Victoria Institute, Philosophical Society of Great Britain, and also a prominent member of the British Association. He is therefore a scientist as well as a theologian, and is competent to speak on the subjects which he discusses with the authority of a gentleman of recognized scholarship and ability. He has devoted a considerable part of his life to the study of science in its relations to theology and religion, a subject upon which he is deeply read and accurately informed, and to the discussion of which he has been a large contributor, both on the platform and through the press. Dr. Sexton has the happy faculty of making the most abstruse question of science or metaphysics attractiv, the reason of this probably being his thorough familiarity with both the scientific and theological aspects of his theme, and the power of lucid explanation which he possesses. He has for many years made a special study of the various phases of modern Infidelity and has taken part in numerous debates with many of the most noted advocates, including his present opponent.

Mr. Charles Watts, the well-known advocate and exponent of Secularism or Freethought, is not altogether unknown to the citizens of Montreal. His brilliant oratory has on several occasions drawn large audiences, notwithstanding the unpopularity of the views which he advocates. Mr. Watts has been on the lecture platform since his sixteenth year (his first attempt being a teetotal address in his nativ town, Bristol, England), and is as well known in the controversial world as Dr. Sexton. In early life he came in contact with Mr. George Jacob Holyoake and soon identified himself with the Secular party of which Mr. Holyoake is still the honored leader. Next to him Mr. Watts may be considered the authority upon Secularism, his work, "Secularism in its Various Relations," being considered the best enunciation and defense of the principles of that system of philosophy. He is the author of various other works, the best known of which, perhaps, is his "History of Freethought," a most comprehensiv historical review of the early struggles and subsequent progress of the Freethought movement. Probably no other living man has engaged in so many public debates with representativ Christians as Mr. Watts, and he has gained the reputation of being a perfect master of controversy, a keen analytical reasoner, a fluent and persuasiv rhetorician, and an opponent who never forgets the laws of courtesy. As a debater he is probably without an equal in his own school, and as an orator he has few superiors. Mr. Watts was president of the British Secular Union, of which Ernest Renan and Victor Hugo were vice-presidents. Mr. Watts is also vice-president of the American Secular Union, of which Colonel Ingersoll is at present president.

With two such able disputants it is evident that there is an intellectual treat in store for those who attend their debates, and the presentment of both sides of such important questions by the recognized champions of opposing schools of thought is certainly a novelty in Montreal that will doubtless attract large audiences.

The subject of debate on the first night, Tuesday, 31st, will be "Does Christianity Commend Itself to the Intellect of Man?" Rev. Dr. Sexton will open the debate, speaking for half an hour on the affirmativ side, Mr. Charles Watts will reply, taking up the same space of time, after which both gentlemen will speak twice for fifteen minutes each occasion. From this it will be seen that the actual speaking time of the debate will extend over two hours.

The subject of debate on the second evening (Wednesday) is "Is Secularism Superior to Christianity as a Rule of Life?" The routine will be the same as on the previous evening, with the exception that Mr. Watts will open speaking on the affirmativ side.

On Thursday evening the question of "Christian and Secular Teaching—Which is Better?" will be debated, Dr. Sexton making the leading speech, the order of the two first meetings being observed.

The above was written before the debate, and but for one circumstance, no doubt, the anticipation that large audiences would assemble would hav been realized; as it was, however, the gatherings were not large. This is accounted for by the war-fever now raging throughout Canada on account of the disturbance in the Northwest. In Montreal the theater was closed and the amusement of the skating rink was entirely suspended. The one thing in public attention was leave-taking of the soldiers going to the war. Remembering these were all volunteers, the local excitement may be imagined. Referring to the debate the Montreal Herald of Wednesday, April 1st, says:

The audience that assembled in the Queen's Hall last night to hear the debate between the Rev. Dr. Sexton and Mr. Watts on the question, "Does Christianity commend itself to the intellect of mankind?" was composed of thoughtful men and women. Dr. Sexton did not seem to be kept in countenance by any brother clergymen. The gentlemen formed much the larger part of the audience, and the greater number of them were well advanced toward middle age. Colonel Patton occupied the chair.

The two opening speeches occupied a half an hour each. For each subsequent speech each disputant was allowed a quarter of an hour, but the opener was allowed a half hour for his closing speech.

The chairman notified the speaker that his time was nearly up by touching a bell that stood before him. The audience exhibited great interest in all that was said and signified their approval of what the speaker said by hearty applause. The plaudits were given with a discrimination which showed that the hearers were more than usually intelligent and that they were following the speakers with the closest attention. As nearly as one could judge by the clapping, the audience was pretty evenly divided between Freethinkers and believers in Christianity.

The Rev. Dr. Sexton opened the debate. He is a gentleman well up in years, of portly form and good presence. His style of speaking is pleasant. He is animated without being boisterous, and he possesses a quiet humor which, while it does not detract from the fire of his reasoning, contributes considerably to the effectivness of his speaking. He is a keen and skilful debater. He knows how to make the most of the strong points of his own argument, and is quick in taking advantage of any slip which his opponent may make. In arguing that Christianity does recommend itself to the intelligence of mankind, he said little that any church-goer has not heard over and over again. In fact, it would be very hard indeed for the most profound of scholars or the most original of thinkers to say anything new on such a subject. But he used the old material with much skill and, judging by the applause, quite to the satisfaction of those of the audience who were of his way of thinking.

Mr. Watts is a younger and larger man than his opponent. His appearance suggests aggression, and he looks like a man who possesses much more than the average share of brain power. He is more excitable, and speaks both louder and faster than the doctor. His loud tones and his rapid utterance prevent the hearer from giving that attention to his arguments which their weight and importance demand. A teacher's tones and his style of speaking should help his hearer to think, and not hinder him. Old debater as Mr. Watts is, he has yet to learn that violence is not force.

It must not be thought that there is anything unseemly in Mr. Watts's way of carrying on the debate, or that he is wanting in courtesy to his opponent. On the contrary, he is never betrayed into saying anything that is rude or coarse, and he observes the amenities of discussion more strictly than most disputants.

It is needless to say that Mr. Watts is master of the subject with which he deals, or that he is an accomplished dialectician. He knows how to state his own views clearly and cogently, and he is quick to discover and effectiv in pointing and exposing the imperfection or weakness of his opponent's argument. The skill of fence of both disputants is beyond question, and aside from the great importance of the questions discussed, to listen to this debate is a strong mental stimulant and a rare mental treat.

CAPTAIN ADAMS'S VERSION.

Rev. George Sexton, M.A., LL.D., of London, England, was for some time a leading Freethinker and Secularist, but he returned to Christianity, and after acting as pastor of a chapel in London, he started out to proclaim the falsity of "modern thought," during a tour in America. He was well received by the Methodists, and secured many engagements to expose "Infidelity." When in Montreal, last winter, he was invited to hold a public discussion with Mr. Charles Watts, and defend the statements he was making without opposition while in the safe precincts of the pulpit. A leading Methodist minister, under whose auspices he was then preaching, deterred him from accepting this challenge, assuring him that the Freethinkers of Montreal were too insignificant in number to be noticed. Dr. Sexton is now about returning to London, having about completed his Christian engagements, and in consideration of a liberal sum he consented to engage in debate with Mr. Charles Watts at Montreal. The largest hall in the city was secured, and three debates were extensivly advertised. Great was the consternation of the clergy, for they believe, with Moody, "there is only one side to God's truth," and it grieved them that Freethought should be noticed. Ministers visited editors, and assuring them that the whole thing was a hoax, and that Dr. Sexton would not stoop to such practices, they endeavored to prevent the publication of comments on the announcement.

However, Dr. Sexton came, and debates were held on the evenings of March 31st and April 1st and 2d. Although complimentary tickets were sent to the leading ministers of the city, only one appeared, and no Christian could be found to act as chairman. The influence of the church, added to the war excitement and most unfavorable weather, prevented a large attendance; but very intelligent and appreciativ audiences assembled, composed apparently, at first, equally of Christians and Freethinkers, but subsequently chiefly of Freethinkers. The subjects were, "Does Christianity Commend Itself to the Intellect of Mankind?" "Is Secularism Superior to Christianity as a Rule of Life?" "Christian and Secular Teachings as to a Future Life—Which is the Better?"

To the disappointment of the Freethinkers, orthodox Christianity received no defense. Dr. Sexton artfully avoided every allusion to evangelical doctrins, and discoursed upon the basis of morals and the philosophy of mind. The second night, when Mr. Watts had the opening speech, he made a strong attack upon Christianity, and gave a good vindication of Secular views, but the wily doctor dodged the doctrinal questions, and on the evenings when he led raised so many side issues that Mr. Watts had his efforts occupied considerably with unimportant matters, though he put in many good shots at Christian dogmas.

Dr. Sexton is a very keen debater and was generally considered by the Christians to be more than a match for Mr. Watts in argumentativ combat, though some admitted he evaded the real questions at issue. He comes back to this country next summer to lecture at Chautauqua and will doubtless be popular through his adroit avoidance of hard questions, and his faculty of spreading a veneer of science and philosophy over a solid mass of humbug and nonsense.

The Freethinkers are grateful to Mr. Watts for doing so well under circumstances of so much difficulty, and wish he could hav been pitted against a man who would hav attempted a genuin defense of Christianity. The debaters hav done good in establishing the fact that Freethought is becoming a matter for respectful discussion, and is no longer to be spurned aside by contemptuous sneers or the arrogance of silence.

Montreal, April 3, 1885. ROBT. C. ADAMS.

THE clergy are fond of sneering at the Positivistic "worship" of humanity, as they translate the French word culte, holding that as humanity in the individual is apt to be mean and unlovable, humanity in the aggregate is unworthy of the adoration Comte claimed for it. In the Fortnightly Review Frederic Harrison thus explains what the Positivists mean by "cult:" "You will see," he says, "that I avoid the word worship, because worship is so often misunderstood; and because it wholly fails to convey the meaning of the Positivist cultus, or stimulus of the noblest emotions of man. Worship is in no way a translation of Comte's word culte. In French we can talk of the culte des meres, or the culte des mortes, or the culte des enfants, or the culte de l'art. We cannot in English talk of worshiping our mothers, or worshiping our dead friends, or worshiping children, or worshiping art; or, if we use the words, we do not mean the same thing. Comte has suffered deeply by being crudely translated into English phrases, by people who did not see that the same phrase in English means something different. Now his culte de l'humanite does not mean what Englishmen understand by the worship of humanity, i.e., they are apt to fancy, kneeling down and praying to humanity, or singing a hymn to humanity. By culte de l'humanite is meant deepening our sense of gratitude and regard for the human race and its living or dead organs. And everything which does this is cult, though it may not be what we call in English worship. So service is a word I avoid; because the service of humanity consists in the thousand ways in which we fulfil our social duties, and not in uttering exclamations which may or may not lead to anything in conduct, and which we hav no reason to suppose are heard by anyone, or affect anyone, outside the room where they are uttered. The commemoration of a great man such as William the Silent or Corneille is cult, though we do not worship him; the solemn delight in a piece of music in such a spirit is cult, though it is not worship or service, in the modern English sense of these words. The ceremony of interring a dead friend, or naming a child, is cult, though we do not worship our dead friend, nor do we worship the baby when brought for presentation. Cult, as we understand it, is a process that concerns the person or persons who worship, not the being worshiped. Whatever stimulates the sense of social duty, and kindles the noblest emotions, whether by a mere historical lecture, or a grand piece of music, or by a solemn act, or by some expression of emotion—this is cult."

Communications.

Miraculous Phenomena.

Some time ago I received a letter from a Spiritualist friend, and, although the letter was a strictly business one, the writer could not let pass the opportunity to stir me up a little on the future-life question. He said, "I know immortality to be a fact." Then he went on with the stock argument of Spiritualists, that it is inconsistent for people to reject the testimony of Spiritualists on the subject of immortality while accepting the testimony of the same persons in courts of justice. He says that if testimony cannot be accepted, "why do not they [unbelievers] put themselvs in the way of knowing?" And a little farther on: "It does not matter if the facts are outside of laws we comprehend." Right here is the grand error. It matters a great deal whether alleged facts are capable of demonstration or not. We accept a man's testimony in a court when he tells that which is known to be possible and within the common experience of mankind, and his views in regard to another life do not concern us, but when he gets into the realm of the mythical, we do not (wisely) accept his testimony, whether it is in a court, a pulpit, on a public platform, or anywhere else, unless he can bring proof that is proof to all alike.

In the course of an article published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 24th, I stated, in substance, that a spirit is either something or nothing. If it is something, and is immortal, it takes something from the sum total of matter but returns nothing, and this operation manifestly could not go on forever. Now, if my friend, aided by all of his persuasion in the union, can find a person anywhere on this globe who can demonstrate that any source of supply can stand a constant drain forever, without receiving a corresponding amount, I will agree to "put myself in the way of knowing" all about the ghosts. I will submit to every sort of jugglery, and as much of it as anyone may wish to propose. As people of my views receive so much advice on this subject, let me giv a little counter advice. Drop the whole fraternity of mediums, slate-writers, clairvoyants, etc., and cease putting yourselvs in the "way of knowing" or troubling anything about the departed, even though you still believe that life will probably continue after death. As the sibyl said to Æneas,

> "Facilis descensus averno;
> Noctes atque dies patet atri janua Ditis;
> Sed revocare gradum superasque evadere ad auras,
> Hoc opus, hic labor est."

Easy, indeed, is the descent to the hades of delusion, humbug, disease, and incipient, if not confirmed, insanity, but to return to the clear atmosphere of a sound, healthy, reasoning mind, unvexed with concern for dead people—here lies the difficulty. Giv your attention to unexplored fields of study that lie within the limits of man's comprehension and attainment. You do not know all about your physical body yet. There are organs within your own skull whose uses are not known. Possibly faculties will yet be developed in man far superior to any now known to him, and the problem of final destiny may yet become known to the living, but up to this date it is as mysterious as it was a million years ago.

I am sorry to be compelled to say it, but it is, nevertheless, a fact that no person ever saw or heard a spirit, or saw any so-called materialized thing, whose nervous system was not more or less deranged. There is known to be positiv danger incurred in pursuing these so-called investigations, but if any positiv good has ever come from them, I hav yet to learn the fact. Like my friend, there are thousands of Spiritualists who think it strange that we hesitate to believe when they tell us so positivly of what they hav seen and heard, and, as a sort of reply to all at once, I will say that if they knew considerably more about physiology and hygiene, and much less about swindling mediums, the mystery would be solved. But without continuing the subject further myself, I will introduce some quotations from a treatis on the nervous system, written by a thoroughly educated physician who has made this subject a specialty, and I earnestly invite all readers to giv the following a careful perusal. In the chapter on "The Eye and Optic Nerve," the author says: "So vivid, in fact, may be the false impressions that they may overpower real ones made at the same time; and a man may honestly testify to having seen sights and heard sounds that never existed. There hav been many instances of this kind, in which persons hav seen false images of people so distinctly, from a morbid state of the eye, that they could not tell the false appearances from real ones. One gentleman, afflicted in this way, used to hav his room, at all times, crowded with people, and could tell them from real beings only by speaking to them or trying to touch them. When he met a friend in the street he was never sure, without accosting him, whether it was really his friend or his image. Being a scientific man, he was neither terrified at this nor superstitious about it, but put himself at once under a course of medical treatment, which soon banished all the ghosts. An uninformed and superstitious person would hav regarded such an occurrence as a supernatural visitation, intended as a warning; and, instead of the physician, would hav gone to the priest. The early history of all religions abounds in instances of visions and of mysterious voices, all of which, when not invented, arose from a morbid condition of the nervous system, and of the eye and ear. Indeed, such things occur even now at love-feasts and prayer-meetings, and are believed to be real, just as they were thousands of years ago. Nothing can banish such superstitions and cause such occurrences to be regarded in their true light but the universal dissemination of real scientific knowledge—not the mere scholastic and dogmatic word-learning which is now called knowledge." In the chapter on "Subjectiv and Objectiv Mental Perceptions," he says: "The thought, or mental impression, may be so powerful as to affect the organ of sense as strongly as the real object itself could do, so that the subjectiv or ideal impression may be as vivid as the objectiv or real one. Thus, there are some persons, as before stated, who habitually see people before them who are not there, and so distinctly that the false appearances cannot be distinguished from the real. A person, whom I knew very well, was affected in this way, and very often when meeting an acquaintance he would astonish him by saying, 'Are you really there or not, for I cannot tell?' Many times no reply would be given, and then he would perceive that the person was really not present, but that it was a subjectiv instead of an objectiv impression. Such occurrences are more common than is supposed, and hav often given rise to tales of supernatural visitations, warnings, etc. In like manner sound may be heard when there really is no sound. In all these cases, however, there is a certain morbid state of the nervous system, and consequently of the mind. . . . Thus, a short time ago, I saw a statement from several well-known and estimable people, to the effect that a celebrated Spiritualist medium had, in their presence, laid his face down upon a brightly-burning fire, and then put some of the red-hot coals upon his head, and yet was not in the least burnt nor even inconvenienced. This, it was said, he did repeatedly, and even brought the burning coals in his hand to show them. Now that these persons saw this wonderful thing I can readily believe, but that it really took place I must regard as impossible. Human flesh will burn, with a certain heat, and anything which does not burn at that heat is not human flesh, because it lacks one of its qualities. But, as I said before, the people who so testified might easily hav seen the phenomenon, though it did not take place. With them it was a subjectiv impression caused by their peculiar mental condition at the time, and was, to all intents and purposes, as real, to them, as if it had really taken place.

"It must be borne in mind that all such wondrous phenomena as these occur in peculiar circumstances; there are usually few but believers present; the room is closed and probably darkened, while all are kept on the tenter-hooks of anxious expectation for the wonders which are to come. It is seldom that anything of this kind is attempted in the light of open day, with no mystery or previous preparation, and before a promiscuous audience. In the case above referred to, the impossibility of the thing strikes every one who is unprejudiced; but still they can account for really honest and worthy people testifying to its truth, and saying that they saw it! The explanation here given, however, will show how this might easily occur, and will further show also that though seeing may be believing, as is commonly said, still it may not be at all a conclusiv proof! In fact, there are few things less to be relied upon, in certain circumstances, than what people see or hear. And further, there are but few people who can describe truthfully and intelligently what really passes before their eyes, as may be readily tested by getting a number of eye-witnesses to testify independently to some event witnessed by all alike. In all probability, if the medium above referred to were to say, before a promiscuous audience, 'I am now going to put my hand in the fire,' and make any pretense of doing so, there would, if believers were present, be many who would see him do just what he said he would do, and who would honestly testify to the fact afterwards. The fact that others did not see it, and testified afterwards just the opposit, would not shake their belief in the least, because they really saw the thing done. In fact, I remember just such an occurrence, when a medium announced that he would lift himself up in the air without any support, and many present saw him do it, though myself and several others also present could not see anything of the kind!

"The believers saw him subjectivly in the air, where he told them he would be, while the unbelievers saw him objectivly on the ground, where he really was. Now, this is real honest misconception, which is more common than many suspect; and when to this is added all the trickery and deception practiced in such matters—and there is plenty of it—we need not be surprised at the wonderful tales we hear about Spiritual, mesmeric, and other phenomena, in which all the known laws of nature seem set at defiance. Let a man appear before a large promiscuous audience, in some public hall, with a pan of red-hot coals, and then and there, without any trickery, place his hand upon it a sufficient time, and afterwards go around among the audience and show he is not burnt. This would be a fair test, and it is such a one as unbelievers hav a right to expect. Or, as some one suggested, if a man can make himself specifically light, so as to float in the air, let him, before such an audience, fasten a rope round his neck, tie it to a beam, and float off. If he can really float in the air, as many hav asserted they can, there will be no danger of his hanging. Both these things might be done in the usual manner before believers, or be said to be done, and many would really see them and believe them to be real. In fact, there is no limit to what may be seen, subjectivly, when once a certain frame of mind is attained. Nothing is impossible, for all the known laws of nature are set aside without any difficulty. Fire will not burn, heavy bodies will not fall to the ground when unsupported, and the most ponderous objects can be moved by merely pointing at them. Indeed, improbability, or even impossibility, only increases wonder with true believers, and never raises a doubt, as I once saw well exemplified myself. A very powerful medium, as he was called, professed to lift from a table up into the air a large pail full of water, and keep it suspended there for two or three minutes, by merely touching it with his finger. Being curious to see this, I managed to be present at one of the seances where this feat was to be performed, and watched the proceedings as closely as circumstances allowed. In the first place, however, the room was darkened, so that the outlines of objects were but dimly visible, and in the next place, no one was allowed to approach too near or to ask too many questions, as the medium was absorbed communing with the spirits. After waiting some time, it was announced that the performance was going to take place; the medium touched the pail; some one called out, 'There, there! see, see! Oh, how wonderful!' Well, I could see nothing move; nor could a friend who was with me, though we watched till the medium, with a heavy sigh, took his finger away, as if weary with the labor, and sank back in a seat. Many of these present, however, asserted that they distinctly saw the pail move up into the air and hang there, and I hav no donbt they did see it, though at the same time I am certain it never stirred from the table. Without expressing any dissent, however, another seance was arranged for, in which the same thing was to be done, but on this occasion one of the unbelievers, who had access to the room, prepared matters by screwing the pail fast to the table. Well, the performance passed off just as successfully as before, and the same believers saw the pail lifted up and poised in the air, clear away from the table! Nothing was said at the time about what had been done, but when the medium and his friends were gone, the master of the house, a very stanch believer, was shown how the pail had been all the time screwed fast! But did this undeceive him or shake his belief? Not a bit of it. 'Why,' said he, 'that makes it more wonderful still!' So far from any doubt being excited, his faith was made all the stronger, for he had seen the thing done, and seeing was believing!

"Now, that he did see it I hav no doubt—in the way before explained—but his belief and testimony, or that of any number of eye-witnesses, can never establish it as a fact. It is the same with hearing. A person may hear a voice distinctly when there is really nothing of the kind, but merely a peculiar condition of the auditory nerve and brain which givs the same impression subjectivly as if a voice were really sounding objectivly. . . . The same phenomenon figures in many visions and ghost stories, in which things are often both seen and heard beyond doubt, though there is really nothing to see or hear, except subjectivly, from the peculiar condition of the individual's nervous system. The other senses may also be similarly affected, and people may taste, smell, and feel what has really no existence, instances of which hav already been. Many of those who honestly believe they hav spiritual communications really take their own subjectiv impressions of sights and sound for real objectiv impressions caused by external agency. They make communications to themselvs without being aware of it. In a state of complete subjectiv existence a person is, in fact, out of contact, as it were, with the external world. Their subjectiv impressions are so strong that they overpower all objectiv impressions, so that what is really going on around is not seen or heard at all. A person in this state, in fact, can see and hear only what is reflected from his own mind, and may be perfectly unconscious of things about him, which other people see readily enough. Thus, he may hav the impression that a person is floating in the air who is nevertheless all the time standing on the floor, as all those can see who are in a normal state of mind. It is therefore no proof in all cases that a thing is really present because a person sees it, no matter how real it may appear to be. And there are people who are peculiarly disposed to see what is not really present, or what they are merely told to see."

Now, lovers of the ghostly tribe, do not expend all your criticism on this article, for I shall probably hav something more to say about wonderful things before long. There is no harm in expressing an honest belief, no matter how absurd it may appear to others, but my purpose is to urge people to do more reasoning and less believing, because every intelligent person knows that the tendency to believe upon insufficient evidence has brought untold wrongs and sorrows upon the world through all the past, and will do so for many years to come. N. G. W.

Canadian Notes.

Last evening a crowded audience assembled in Albert Hall to hear Charles Watts lecture on "The Nightmare of Theology." For two or three centuries after Christ his religion made but little progress, and that only among the most ignorant and degraded of mankind, people almost devoid of intelligence, with but few exceptions. It was only when the corrupt and decaying Roman civilization had sunk to the level of the degraded Christian superstition that it succeeded in enslaving the minds of the ruling classes. Then commenced the reign of the horrid "Nightmare of Theology." Christian advocates hav the impudence, the unblushing effrontery, to claim civilization as the work of followers of the Bible. If so, how is it that during the thousand years of the dark ages, when the church wielded supreme and absolute power, it met all discoveries in science with the thumb-screw, the rack, and the fagot. Christ's followers do the same thing to-day as far as they dare; from Bruno and Galileo down to Darwin they hav tried to stifle all scientific investigations and improvements.

Hence, loathed Christianity,
Of Cerberus and blackest midnight born
In Stygian cave forlorn,
'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy!
Find out some uncouth cell
Where brooding darkness spreads his jealous wings,
And the night raven sings;
There, under ebon shades and low-brow'd rocks
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell.

Shouts of applause and laughter greeted the numerous points made by Mr. Watts, and at the closing peroration he received a perfect ovation.

Protestants are worshiping a book made up of extracts from pagan writers. They tell us it is God's book, inspired by God, written by God; that except God had revealed this to us we should never hav known anything about it. Instead of which, we find it to be merely a rehash of previous legends, myths, stories, and traditions, which had already been rehashed over and over again ten thousand times before they were again rehashed into the Christian Bible and system. In Philo the Just is the representation of God, the benediction of all, and the redemption of the wicked. It is divine grace that in us sows the seeds of virtue. Faith is not only superior to hope and charity, as well as to the four cardinal virtues. It is the most acceptable offering to God, since it is the worship—the acceptance of the word. Works hav not the acceptance of grace. Knowledge, worship itself, are secondary to faith. Life is an apprenticeship for death. Hence we must prepare for it by suppressing the passions. Marriage, perpetuating life, is a degrading necessity, from which the elect must emancipate themselvs. Our duty is to humble the flesh, to torture it by every means, and incessantly, in order to purchase redemption from bodily thraldom, complete severance from the world, ineffable union with God—such is the supreme God. Still the world, being a commonwealth, ruled by eternal right. To actions and to beings must be applied the divine law. We must hav before our eyes Equality, mother of justice, raise ourselvs by charity above the idle distinctions of caste, of classes, of nations, and admit aliens to the benefit of the common faith. Philo foresees the day when the religion of the true God, attracting to itself whatever good there is in other beliefs, will gather all peoples at the foot of the same altars—the day when a universal pontiff—while every priest prays for his his community—will pray for all mankind, and will become in presence of the creator the organ of creation on its knees—hallowed function, placing above all kings the man called to exercise it. And Philo proudly exclaims, We are everywhere, and everywhere Greek and barbarian, Eastern and Western, become converts to us. To us belongs all the earth, and in the days to come the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Assuredly the Phariseans might justly maintain that the foundation of Christianity was the work of dissenting Jews and Neo-Platonicians. Far superior to Jesus and to Paul, from the philosophic point of view, Philo is the true creator of Christianity, of which his doctrin is the emphatic epitome—the three leading mysteries, trinity, incarnation, redemption; grace, faith; salvation; Catholic unity, sovereignty of the church and pope. The complete edifice destined to be entirely built up from the fourth to the eleventh centuries was already designed by Philo on the lines of Plato some fifty years, at least, before the name of Christian was uttered in the world.

A Montreal clergyman publishes an article full of lies concerning Agnostics. He says that they are immoral, and encourage and spread immorality. But Appleton's "American Cyclopædia," under the heading "Actors," says that the Christian clergy commit more crimes than actors, out of an equal number of each—that statistics prove this to be the case. Other authorities say that there are more Christian clergy apprehended, tried, and convicted of crime than an equal number of any other class of the community. Statistics prove this beyond a doubt. The bishop of Peterborough, in England, in a pastoral to the clergy of his diocese says that they will find, if they inquire diligently and truthfully, that Atheists, Freethinkers, Secularists, are good, moral citizens, fully equal in the matter of good deeds, high moral aspirations, teachings, and actions, and general integrity of conduct—in all these Secularists are fully equal to any other class of the community. At least, so says the good bishop of Peterborough.

"For modes of faith let graceless zealots fight;
His can't be wrong whose life is in the right."

Toronto, April, 4, 1885. R. B. Butland.

Socialism and Co-operation.

Socialism embraces the idea of co-operation. When this point is made, its opponents ask, "Can you not now co-operate as much as you please?" or "Hav not all efforts at co-operation proved a failure?" Numerous instances are cited where co-operation has proved a failure, and it is generally charged to the cussedness of mankind. They do not inquire by reasoning what has produced or what will abolish this cussedness; they merely contend it is there. Co-operation on a small scale, such as people can now go into, has several disadvantages which must be apparent. 1. A rich man, doing well, will not go into co-operation, therefore as a rule it must be those who are not doing well. They are when incorporated left to compete with the rich man, who has the means of destroying them in various ways. 2. Co-operations established now are amenable to existing laws, which are favorable to certain classes and are therefore often used by incorporators to destroy or defraud the co-operation. 3. All existing laws are pretended to be based upon the purpose of making mankind do right. If the people will not do what is right out of their own free will, then the only alternativ is to make them do so, for, whether they are willing to do so or not, they are willing to agree upon some standard of what is right, if a proper opportunity for expression is submitted to them from time to time. Socialism therefore advocates co-operation on part of the state (subdivided as much as necessary and practicable), first, in order to destroy any opposition to co-operation; secondly, to compel the people by and under a perfect system to do right. As Mrs. Leonard puts it, co-operation, to be successful, should be built up like an orchestra, everyone to be assigned to the part in which he is the most capable and most agreeable, thus making a perfect and harmonious whole. A co-operation of a few under our present system can become a monopoly, but under a general co-operativ system it cannot. Co-operation on part of the state means simply that all the people furnish the means and opportunities for each and every individual, and while all the people will hold each and every individual responsible for the discharge of his duties, they will in return giv him the fruits of his labor. That this is right and proper will not be disputed by the bitterest opponent of Socialism; they only deny that it can practically be carried out by a whole nation. That it can be done must be demonstrated by the advocates of Socialism. That to some extent and in an imperfect way it has been and is being now done in this country can be seen by its government. The people hav established a government to be supported by all the people and in certain directions to attend to the business of either all or some of the people, as the case may be. This government has now the power to attend to all matters of destruction; could it not also be used to attend to all matters of construction? For instance, instead of having penal institutions which cost millions of dollars and make men worse than what they were, suppose the governments had farms and factories, ships and railroads, and persons committing misdemeanors or being idle were put, as a penalty of law, to work upon them with full pay—what would be the difference? Now they are an expense to the thrifty, and become confirmed criminals, while then they would be producers, a benefit both to the tax-payers and themselvs. To imagin a government carrying on all the principal functions of society under its present form and modus operandum is of course an absurdity, but when a government becomes in practice as well as in theory a government of, for, and by the people, then this proposition becomes self-evident. Different theories as to the details how this can be done might be advanced and disputed, but if the grand fundamental idea is correct could not the intelligence of men and the wisdom of experience establish a state of society better than what it has been in the past? Such, it seems to me, ought to be the highest aim of mankind. Isaac Cohen.

As to the Value of Money.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I want to reply briefly to J. H. Wood in The Truth Seeker of Febuary 7th. He thinks I made a mistake in saying that money (meaning, of course, as money) has no value, but represents value much as x represents the unknown quantity in an algebraic problem. Mr. Wood thinks money has value just as much as a rule has length, etc. Now, I can measure the size of a load of wood with a rule; can Mr. Wood measure its value with money? Value is an ideal thing; it is not a quality of anything, as length or weight is. It, therefore, cannot be measured with anything.

But, to show that money has no value, let us suppose that we only had the one-hundredth part of the money we now hav in the country, but had the same quantity of wheat, pork, iron, etc., etc., which we now hav. Does not Mr. Wood see that we would hav just as much to eat, to wear, and to shelter us as we hav now? In other words, we would be just as rich as we are now, and one cent would then buy just as much as one dollar does now. So, if we should, as he thinks we should, increase the amount of money in circulation, without increasing the quantity of food, clothing, and shelter, we would be no better off. The price of these things would simply rise in proportion as we raised the amount of money per capita in circulation. But to increase or diminish the volume of money per capita in circulation has a very decided effect upon those who hav money in their possession, and it matters not how this is done, whether by the issue of paper money, as was done during the war, or by the discovery of rich mines, as when gold was discovered in California. To double the amount of money in circulation, in any way, is equivalent to taking half of every man's money from him, and paying half of every man's debts, and to reduce the amount of money per capita in circulation to one-half is equivalent to doubling the amount of money in every man's possession, and to doubling every man's debts. Therefore, to giv rich men and corporations the power to increase or diminish the amount of money per capita in circulation is like giving a merchant an India rubber string to buy and sell goods with. He could stretch it out when he wanted to buy, and shrink up when he wanted to sell. This is just what money-men do, and this is what causes financial crises. The only cure for this is to hav a national banking system, and fix upon a certain sum per capita as that desired to hav in circulation. Make all borrowers pay the same interest, and make the rate of interest control the volume of the currency per capita, charging high interest when the volume is too great, and low when it is too small. At present, when money is scarce, as it is called—that is, when there is too much in the vaults of the banks, and too little circulating among the people—interest is high, and when the opposit condition exists it is low. The national system suggested above would reverse this state of things, and make interest low when too much remained in the banks, and too little circulated among the people. This would put a stop to financial crises, and giv to money a constant and uniform value.

Again, to show Mr. Wood that money has not value, I wish him to notice that things having value are intended to be consumed by some person; but money is not intended to be consumed by any person, but to pass and continue to pass from one to another to represent value. A bushel of wheat may be sold fifty times, but it finally reaches the consumer, and then it goes no farther. I do not dispute that gold or silver coin has value, but I maintain that it has no value as money. It has value as gold or silver. As money, a five-dollar bank-bill, whose intrinsic value may not be even one cent, is as valuable as a five-dollar gold-piece; for the owner can get just as much food or clothing for the one as for the other. Practically speaking, he takes none of the value out of either in using it as money, and is as rich after passing the one as the other.

Hutchinson, Kan. J. G. Malcolm.

At the recent festival of the Xavier Union, a Jesuitical society, Mgr. Capel replied to the toast, "The Catholic Scholar." In the course of his remarks he said: "You, my Catholic friends, may feel offended at what I am about to say; but I hav made up my mind that I will speak frankly, for I came here to speak the truth, however disagreeable it may be. But I must say that Catholic education in this country is inferior to that of the Protestants. The young lady," continued the Monsignor, referring to Miss Caldwell, who donated $300,000 toward a fund for the endowment of a Catholic university, "is entitled to much praise; but I must say, with as much frankness as in my previous remark, I do not think you are fit just now for a university." "Father" Dealy, founder of the organization, followed. His remarks were equally unpalatable. Among his sentences were the following: "We are the most numerous body of Christians in the United States. In this city we outnumber all the other Christian denominations combined. But, my friends, it is to be deplored that you are not thinkers. The morning papers and the evening journals, it seems, fill the measure of your information. You are building railroads, and you are wrecking them. Talk to Catholic editors, and they will tell you they receive no encouragement, No man to-day can make a living as a man of letters if he proclaims himself a Catholic. I am sorry to hav to say so, my friends, but it is simply a proof of the Infidel tendencies of the age."

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - APRIL 11, 1885.

Passed the Senate.

The "Freedom of Worship" bill has passed our senate, and according to a canvass made by a Herald reporter stands an exceedingly good chance of passing the assembly. The accepted bill is the one known as the Gibbs bill, which Senator Esty claims, and as most people believe, is the product of the Jesuits of this city. The result of this measure will be to open the doors of public institutions to the different sects, and carry into them all kinds of religious worship and sectarian teaching. It will thus force the trustees of the House of Refuge to hav mass said in its chapel. The following is the full text of the bill:

SECTION 1. All persons, including those who may hav been or may hereafter be committed to or taken charge of by any of the institutions mentioned in this act, are hereby declared to be and are entitled to the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference.

SEC. 2. This act shall be deemed to apply to every incorporated or unincorporated society for the reformation of its inmates, houses of refuge, protectory or other reformatory or penal institution continuing to receive for its use either public moneys or a per capita sum from any municipality for the support of inmates.

SEC. 3. The rules and regulations established for the government of the institutions mentioned in this act shall recognize the right of the inmates to the free exercise of their religious belief and to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences, in accordance with the provision of the Constitution, and shall allow and provide for holding religious services on Sunday, and for private ministration to the inmates in such manner as may best carry into effect the spirit and intent of this act, and be consistent with the proper disciplin and management of the institution; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize any additional expenditure on the part of the state; and the inmates of such institutions shall be allowed spiritual advice and spiritual ministrations from some recognized clergyman of the denomination or church which said inmates may respectivly prefer, or to which they may hav belonged prior to their being confined in such institutions, such advice and ministration to be given within the buildings where the inmates are required by law to be confined, in such manner and at such hours as will be in harmony, as aforesaid, with the disciplin of the institution, and secure to such inmates free exercise of their religious beliefs, in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. The wilful violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed a misdemeanor.

SEC. 5. This act shall take effect immediately.

The vote was eighteen to ten. Six Republican senators voted for it. They were senators Davidson, of Otsego; Fassett, of Elmira; Gibbs, of New York; Lansing, of Jefferson; McCarthy, of Syracuse; and Otis, of Suffolk. The Democratic senators all voted for it with a single exception. They were senators Campbell, Cullen, Daly, Murphy, and Plunkitt, of New York; Jacobs and Kiernan, of Brooklyn; Nelson, of Sing Sing; Newbold, of Dutchess; Thacher, of Albany; Titus, of Buffalo, and Van Schaick, of Schoharie. The negativ votes were cast by the following Republicans: Comstock, of Troy; Daggett, of Brooklyn; Ellsworth, of Niagara; Esty, of Ithaca; Low, of Orange; Robinson, of Wayne; Thomas, of Chenango; Vedder, of Catteraugus; and Robb (Democrat), of New York. Four Republicans dodged the vote entirely. Two of them—Arkell, of Montgomery, and Coggeshall, of Utica—absented themselvs for the purpose, while Baker, of Rochester, and Bowen, of Plattsburg, mounted the fence and declined to vote at all.

If this bill passes the assembly it will be signed by Governor Hill with alacrity. He is already committed in its favor. In such an event we hope the Chinamen, the Jews, the Mohammedans, and the Greek Catholics will all apply to hav needed ecclesiastical furniture set up at once in all the hospitals and refuges in the state, and hours set apart for them to perform their various religious rites. We do not suppose there are any Positivists in these institutions, but the Society of Humanity might also apply on general principles of equity and fair play.

Superstition.

It is generally supposed that this is not a superstitious age. The church, it is thought, has outgrown those ideas of supernaturalism with which she once accounted for all occult manifestations of nature. The witches of New England hav gone to join the devil with whom Luther was so familiar. Only in the most benighted sections of the country, it is supposed, among the blacks of the South, or in some Dunkard settlement of wild western Pennsylvania, exist those gross superstitions which marred the mental development of our ancestors. This is the common thought and claim. But is it true?

Picking up the American Catholic Quarterly Review for January 1885—not 1685—we find a story of "The Holy Face of Lucca," by Bryan J. Clinche. If this magazine were some inferior production of the Catholic press, designed for the perusal of the uneducated rank and file of the church, the story would not be worth noticing. It might go with the Louvre and Lorretto and Knock tales. But this Quarterly is the ablest print of the Catholic church in the country. Among its contributors are archbishops and men ranking high in the scholastic circles of Catholicism. And this fiction of the face of Lucca is interestingly told, the alleged facts given in a straightforward way, and the reasons for believing it well calculated to make an impression upon the believers in miracles.

"Among the many shrines of Catholic devotion in Italy," begins Mr. Clinche, "few are more honored than that which is known as the Holy Face of Lucca." Twice in the year this face is exposed to the public gaze, and each time receives fresh demonstrations of the popular devotion. The rest of the time it is closely veiled, and the chapel is locked and guarded. On the approach of danger, however, the chapel is sought by individuals and the public, who ask of the Holy Face divine protection. "A massiv gold lamp, hanging before the door of its shrine, testifies to the faith of the city which, in our own times, offered it as a public expiation to avert the visitation of cholera with which Lucca was threatened." The story of this "Holy Face" is as gross a superstition as one ever reads of:

"According to the general belief, the holy face is no merely artistic conception, however grand, but a faithful representation of the lineaments of our Lord as he hung on the cross on Calvary. The hand which carved it was guided by actual recollections of the most familiar kind, and was, indeed, that of one who actually aided in taking down our Lord's body, and laying it in the tomb from which he was to rise triumphant on the third day. Its reputed artist is no other than that Nicodemus, who, with Joseph of Arimathea, obtained the privilege of giving burial to our Lord's body from Pilate, and whose interview by night with our savior, at an early time of his mission, is recorded by St. John. After the resurrection, Nicodemus, having incurred the hostility of his fellow-countrymen on account of his adherence to our Lord, retired to the village of Ramleh, in Palestine, and, during his residence there, he was inspired to preserve in wood the features of his master as they had been indelibly stamped on his memory on Calvary. The hostility of the Jewish population, alike to Christianity and to art, naturally suggested a considerable degree of secrecy both in the execution and subsequent preservation of such a work. Accordingly, though the belief in its existence was widely spread among the Christians of Syria, its place of concealment, during many ages, was known only to a very few guardians. The custody of the sacred relic was handed down from generation to generation without enlarging the circle of those in the secret. The long continued persecutions of the Roman emperors, and the subsequent Arian hostility to the Catholic Christians, as well as the invasions of the Persians and the Saracen conquest of Palestine, in the seventh century, all contributed to maintain the concealment of this earliest work of Christian art down to the close of the eighth century."

The history of the removal of the crucifix from Palestine to Lucca is told by a writer of the eighth century who accompanied bishop Gualfrid to the Holy Land in 782. Bishop Gualfrid was directed by an angel to go to the house of a Christian of Jerusalem and obtain the image long concealed in a grotto beneath. Having induced this Christian to giv it up, the bishop cast about for means of transporting it safely. After "long and anxious consultation," it was finally carried down to Jaffa, and put into a covered boat, "in the confident hope that the same power which had made its existence known to them would guide it to the place chosen by Providence for its reception." When the crucifix was safely in the boat, amid numerous lights and ornaments, the craft was covered with pitch, in imitation of the ark of Noah, and set adrift with many prayers. The historian continues:

"Unguided by human means, the boat with its freight passed in safety from Jaffa to the shores of Tuscany, where it appeared before the port of Luni, a now ruined town. There it halted as strangely as it had arrived, and made no approach to the port, though both wind and tide combined to carry it in. The fishermen of Luni put off to board the strange craft, but during two days it baffled their approach as if by instinct. The Lombard governor of the town was soon informed of the extraordinary vessel on which no person appeared, and which yet seemed to move self-guided in utter indifference to the force of wind or waves; but neither he nor the municipality could form any idea of its meaning. They were suddenly surprised by the arrival of the bishop of Lucca, accompanied by a large number of the clergy and citizens of that place. The bishop had received a supernatural warning of the arrival of the hitherto unknown image, and a description of its character and origin similar to that previously given to the pilgrims in Palestine. The Lunese were still engaged in their fruitless efforts to seize the vessel, but, either in despair of success, or out of respect for the words of the bishop of Lucca, they gave up the attempt, and allowed the bishop and his companions to advance in procession to the edge of the sea. The vessel, which had hitherto kept off in spite of the power of the elements, now immediately approached the shore. The deck, when opened, showed the sacred crucifix and some other relics, such as the bishop of Lucca had been informed of them by his previous vision. One of these relics, a vase, containing the sacred blood of our Lord, was presented to the bishop of Luni. The crucifix itself was borne in solemn procession to Lucca, and there installed in the church of St. Martin, on the northern side of the basilica, in the year 782."

That this story is true Mr. Clinche believes—or pretends to believe—for several reasons, among the most important of which are "the publicity attendant on the arrival of the crucifix itself in Luni, and the rivalry for its possession between the people of that town and Lucca;" the undoubted existence of legal documents attesting the veneration in which the crucifix was anciently held; the donations of lands and monasteries made to the church in which it was placed; and the visits paid to it by German emperors, and other imperial personages. Another evidence is the miracles with which the crucifix is credited, one of which is well worth relating: "Attached to an iron grating hangs an executioner's ax, whose history is given by an inscription attached to it. In 1334 a citizen of a neighboring town, unjustly condemned to die, was miraculously preserved on the scaffold itself. The headman's axe refused to perform its deadly office, and fell with all its force on his neck three times in vain. It rebounded from the flesh without leaving even a mark. The execution thus suspended was afterward followed by a pardon, and the escaped victim attributed the miracle to having vowed a pilgrimage to the shrine of the Holy Face in case of his deliverance. The ax which had failed to do its work was presented to the shrine and has remained there since."

Such is the story and evidence of this "Holy Face of Lucca," seriously told in good faith in the most scholarly of the current church publications! That the tale will be credited by Catholics we hav no doubt, after reading a report of a lecture by Archbishop Alemany, of San Francisco. Until we had read this, we had doubts whether credulity with a swallowing capacity of such enormous dimensions could be found. Now we hav none.

March 15th "the Most Reverend Archbishop" Alemany spoke on the subject of "Earthquakes, Their Chief Causes, and the Best Means to Prevent Them." Mr. Alemany began with biblical times and reviewed the history of earthquakes down to the present. He told how one earthquake was stopped—that of Constantinople in 447. This earthquake, according to the historians Theophanes, Cedrenus, Nicephorus, "and others," lasted several days, and the Emperor Theodosius with his Senate and court fled the city and continued in prayer. "At last a boy of tender age was raised on high by some invisible hand and after a while came down, declaring that he had heard the angels adoring God and constantly saying: "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts;' whereupon the archbishop directed the people to repeat the same in their prayers for mercy, and soon the earthquake ceased. In consequence of which the emperor commanded that the doxology be sung in all the cities of the empire, and the bishops in the Council of Chalcedon added the same to their synodical acclamations."

Going on, the lecturer enumerated all the shocks of historic note, and then asked:

"What is the cause of earthquakes? From Seneca to the latest philosophers," he said, "various solutions hav been advanced, but none has fully satisfied the human mind. My humble opinion is that the chief causes of such disturbances are man's forgetfulness of God and his laws, and his too great love of this world. The deity is the ruler of the entire universe, and all who listen to the voice of God may understand that his wisdom 'reacheth from end to end mightily and worketh all things according to the counsel of his will.' When, therefore, the omnipotent hand of God shakes the foundations of the earth, and causes the mountains and valleys to tremble, he wishes us to feel his omnipotence and sovereign majesty, and reflect on our own littleness and impotence." After a long review of the wickedness to which he attributed the earthquakes occurring at various times, the speaker continued: "Therefore, although earthquakes may be traced to some imperfectly known natural disturbances, as their immediate cause, yet it is obvious that their principal cause is the power of God directing us to bear in mind our dependence upon him and our duty to adore and serve him, and also, frequently, his divine justice provoked by the sins of men. Spain is a good Catholic country, but for some time past Infidel books hav been introduced into it, and religious indifference commences to seize the hearts of many. Besides, Spain has not fully atoned for having banished, in our own days, thousands of religious priests from their homes."

On the prevention of earthquakes the world obtained these valuable ideas:

"If the main cause is sin, the preventiv is to avoid sin, for the removal of the cause removes its effect And here we may be allowed to make a suggestion or two to California. This country is not a stranger to earthquakes, and should not be practically ignorant of one indicated preventiv. In 1868 the clergy of San Francisco adopted the resolution that every year mass should be offered up in every church on the 9th of August, the feast of St. Emigdius, imploring the divine mercy to deliver us from the scourge of earthquakes. Yet we should not depend upon St. Emigdius, but try to remedy the evils existing in our midst, particularly those of Sabbath-breaking and intemperance. Finally, in order to secure the protection of heaven, we should not only avoid evil but do good, both in word and deed. But in a particular manner we should extend our charity to the afflicted. A fair opportunity is now offered us in the desolation now existing in southern Spain, by reason of the recent violent earthquakes. It is to be hoped that the citizens of San Francisco will send abundant alms to our brethren in Spain. This, I may say in conclusion, is one of the means best calculated to prevent similar visitations at home, and to secure to us the ever steady and rich land of promis in heaven."

Who shall say, with the article on the "Holy Face of Lucca" and this speech of the archbishop before them, that the nineteenth century is free from superstition, or that the Christian religion in its most important division is in any great measure superior to the barbaric faith of the early and middle centuries?

Editorial Notes.

THE writer of the "Mid-Week Echoes" in the Sun says he knows a man who says he considers O'Donovan Rossa to be a coward and a knave, but that England will rue the day when she imprisoned Herr Most for preaching murder, as he is a really first-class dynamiter.

THE following dispatch is from Lincoln, Ill., not from South America:

"The Rev. Mr. White condemned the Roman Catholic clergy in a lecture here last night [March 30th] whereupon forty or fifty coal-miners present engaged in a riot, using the hall chairs. Mr. White was cut on the head and face, Mr. Johnson, the hall manager, was severely injured, and Mr. Henderson, a college student, was badly beaten. Two or three others were slightly hurt."

THE Keene, N. H., Congregationalists are hard to satisfy. "Within the past eighteen months," says the Cheshire Republican, "more than fifty ministers hav climbed the pulpit stairs of the First church, but still it is not supplied." Unless that congregation has changed since the time a young man of our acquaintance used to wait on the steps for his best girl to come out, it will never be suited till Gabriel blows his trump and resurrects some old Puritan preacher who never cuts his sermon short of "twenty-seventhly."

THE TRUTH SEEKER agrees with the Churchman in this: "The American people are utterly unprepared for the conflict with Romanism which the Jesuits in America are rapidly forcing on. They 'hav eyes but see not,' and aggressions which Joseph II. would not hav tolerated for a moment in Austria are now pushed forward in America with fanatical disregard of the resentment sure to flame out when once the alarm touches the nerves of Americans. The audacity of the move upon 'the House of Refuge,' now going on at Albany, is part of the scheme, with more behind. This was lately foreshadowed by one of their talkativ ecclesiastics, who said, 'The politicians dare not refuse us; we are going to ask more and more, and we shall get what we demand.'"

"THE most remarkable change in opinion and sentiment that has ever been known in Christendom has occurred within the last one hundred and fifty years in regard to missionary endeavor," says the Advocate, and continues: "The weird vision of Ezekiel in the valley of dry bones fairly prefigures this changing attitude of the Christian church. . . In the ancient Orient the bodies of the slain soldiers were permitted to remain where they fell. The prey of prowling beasts and carrion birds, of the pitiless wind and the pelting rain, these corpses had become skeletons. Years had passed, and the skeletons were now dismembered, and the bones lay in apparently inextricable confusion. When God asked, 'Can these bones liv?' the prophet replied in doubt, 'O Lord God, thou knowest.' When in obedience to the divine command Ezekiel's voice broke the silence of that deserted battle-field, 'bone came to his bone,' the skeletons were again clothed with sinews and skin, and presently they stood before him, radiant with life, 'an exceeding great army.'" Is the editor of the Advocate going crazy that he tells this as fact?

A LITTLE white boy and a colored companion went up to the Young Men's Christian Association rooms at Richmond, Ind., a few weeks ago, but the colored youth was denied admission because he was black. Mr. T. G. Thompson explained his expulsion on the ground that one colored boy would drive away fifty white boys. Mr. John McSimpson, the father of the youth, writes to the Evening Item of that city upon the occurrence. "In hell," he thinks, "the fiends would not refuse entrance on account of color, but in Richmond, Ind., the home of the Christian gods, a city of the mighty, boasting of its many churches, its great and noble Christian work, stands a Christian edifice that denies a negro entrance on account of color. The negro can visit the circus, the bar-room, the Democratic conventions, the schools of educations, and all other places but the Young Men's Christian Association—there he cannot enter!"

WHEN Mr. Reynolds lectured in Turner's Falls, Mass., he challenged the Rev. D. K. Nesbit, of Greenfield, to debate. Mr. Reynolds left Turner's Falls March 19th, having been there four days—ample time for Mr. Nesbit to hav responded. Under date of March 26th, Mr. Nesbit writes to the Turner's Falls Reporter declining Mr. Reynolds's proposition. The declination is a weak attempt at wit, descending in the following sentences to maliciousness and untruthfulness:

"If by some awkward thrust of my lance I should pierce your triple armor, and pin you to the ground, and proudly stalk away and leave you weltering in your gore, would your cause be lost? Nay, 'Truth crushed to earth' would proceed to get up. Your cause would not know the captain had been killed. Obscene literature would be printed. The chaste effusions of the late D. M. Bennett and modest Victoria Woodhull would be published, and Mr. Bradlaugh would advocate the killing of sick babes by fond mothers. All this would go on without inconsistency with the Liberal creed, and your destruction would not injure the 'caws of Liberal thawt.' So looking the matter over I hav concluded not to discuss."

Greenfield ought certainly to be proud of this specimen of a Christian. We doubt, however, if she is.

A SUBSCRIBER to the Methodist organ asks if a cyclone is a visitation of God, or a mere phenomenon of natural law. The parson-editor answers:

"You appear to think that if one is true the other is necessarily not. We hav no such trouble as that in our thinking. We can believe a cyclone to be a phenomenon of natural law and an act of God. We hav no trouble in our creed with reproving a boy for throwing a piece of orange skin upon the pavement, by means of which a man falls down and breaks his leg, accounting for the fall and the breaking of the leg by natural law, and then exhorting the man to be resigned to the providence of God; assuring him that the breaking of his leg, with all of its consequences, occurred to him in the providence of God, and will work, together with other things, if he loves God, for his good; sympathizing with his wife and children in view of the pain it gives them and the inconvenience it puts them to; summoning the surgeon to cure the leg as soon as possible, and, if it is unaccountably delayed, assuring the man that the delay is all right; and if the surgeon is proved to be guilty of malpractice, sitting on a jury, finding him guilty, and mulcting him in heavy damages; and if the man be a Christian, and finally dies from the result of malpractice, preaching a sermon from the text, 'Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.'"

Methodism has a mighty accommodating creed if this be so, and a reasoning person can only stand aside and admire its marvelous flexibility. He can never hope to comprehend the mental process by which the creed was formulated.

IN the Bangor, Me., Daily Whig and Courier of April 1st is this bit of expressed intolerance:

"We are requested to state that a man well advanced in years is betraying the confidence of our citizens by acting as traveling agent for some concern in selling a vile collection of newspapers, poems, and songs. He is liable to arrest and punishment for the circulation of blasphemous and obscene literature, and if he continues in the infamous traffic he will be interviewed by some of our officers."

The gentleman meant is Seward Mitchell, who sends us a copy of his reply:

"April 1, 285.

"EDITORS WHIG AND COURIER: My attention has been called to an item in your issue of this date, that some one has been selling poems and getting subscribers for papers, with the threat of arrest if continued. As the person alluded to must mean myself, let me say that I hav sold poems and received subscriptions for papers, and shall continue to do so for the next two weeks, and if anyone wishes to 'interview' me I can be found at No. 11 Jefferson st., Bangor, Me.

"SEWARD MITCHELL."

Mr. Mitchell does not say what books and papers he is selling, but as he has obtained from this office Remsburg's "Bible Morals," the "Crimes of Preachers," the poem "Our Father in Heaven," and sample copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER, we imagin the threat may be aimed at them. If so, we advise the municipal authorities of Bangor to come to headquarters to persecute. We do not wish any vicarious sacrifices for our acts.

THE Episcopal church of the city announces that at next Advent—immediately after Thanksgiving—it will inaugurate a series of "missions," to "strengthen the bonds of brotherhood between the rich and the poor." The object is to reconcile the people to their condition, and "peacefully solve the social problem with which Socialists and Communists are now wrestling in a spirit of hostility to the church." Of this endeavor the Sun says: "Nor can it be denied that what these secular agitators are working for [Socialism and Communism] will be fully accomplished whenever the commands of Christ are obeyed by the world. The brotherhood of man will be established and Christian Communism will prevail. But before that day comes the whole constitution of society and its whole machinery must be changed, for civilization cannot now be said to be established on a Christian basis. The laws of trade violate the Christian rule, and instead of working for each other as for themselvs, men are engaged in a contest in which the strong succeed and the weak go to the wall. Even the duties to the vassal which feudalism imposed on the lord do not bind the modern capitalist in his relations to the laborer. Each side gets the most and givs the least it can." We beg leave to remind the Sun that the Communism of Christ was a very primitiv institution compared to the elaborate system worked out by the Communists and Socialists of to-day—bearing about the same relation to it that a partnership between two ancient Hebrew shepherds does to the complicated machinery of a modern state.

HENRY VARLEY, revivalist, tried to revive St. Louis, but that city would hav none of him. Then he revenged himself by communicating his opinion of St. Louis to the London Christian:

"This great city is one of Satan's seats. Containing nearly 500,000 souls, I should say it is one of the most godless upon the face of the earth. . . . There is a vast German element in the population, mainly either Infidel or Materialistic; where any religion exists it is cold Lutheranism. . . . The churches are substantial, and some of them very costly, but the spiritual life is dwarfed and poor. The externalism of Christianity abounds, but the condition of things spiritually is simply appalling. The world has come into the church to such a degree that conversion to God is no longer the real test in regard to membership. Respectability in the eyes of men is the password now. The word of God has little or no study; the preaching is showy and superficial; prayer-meetings are barren of fervency and communion; church fairs, shows, and concerts hav taken the place of that joy in God which was ever designed to be the attraction in the assemblies of his saints. There is very little testimony against sin, scarcely any rebuke of iniquity. The mass of the people are utterly indifferent to the claims of God, and the gospel of Christ is despised."

"THE authority of the written word," says the Observer, "is the sheet-anchor of the church. If that be taken away, wreck and ruin are not far off." From the activity of the revising committees, the numerousness of disbelievers in plenary inspiration, and the scholastic weight of the gentlemen who deny the authorship of Moses and assert the anonymousness of most of the books of the Bible and the uncanonicity of portions of the rest, it looks as though wreck and ruin were not very distant specters.

ARCHBISHOP GIBBONS, of Baltimore, recently lectured in that city on "Civil and Religious Liberty." He said:

"The Roman Catholic Church has always been a defender and upholder of the religious and civil rights of others, and wherever and whenever a servant of the church has been a party to the perpetration of such an injustice, it has been in direct violation of her precepts and her authority. It is one of the cardinal maxims of the church that as man fell from grace of his own free will he must rise again to grace by the same volition. The history of the church offers no example of an attempt to compel anyone to embrace the Catholic faith."

A person who can make such a statement as that is either very ignorant of history or a wilful liar. We do not imagin for a moment that the archbishop is an unread man. We hope he will forgiv us for saying this, as also for calling his attention to an act of a churchman high in Romanism, performed, not in the Dark Ages, but less than ten years ago. It was in 1876 that Cardinal Simeoni succeeded Cardinal Antonelli as papal nuncio to Spain. The London Daily News editorially drew attention to the fact that he signalized his arrival in that country by issuing a protest against the law of religious liberty, which the revolution had established in Spain, and demanded the restoration of the Concordat of 1851, whose fundamental principle required "the exclusion of every other creed." He was especially apprehensiv of the results of a system of education which was not absolutely under priestly control. Simeoni's circular was so violent that the liberal journals at the time advised that his passport should be given him at once, and a mob burnt the obnoxious Concordat of 1851 before his residence in Madrid.

THE Liberal Association of New South Wales has been in existence about four years, during which time it has established a newspaper at Sydney, and maintained a reading-room and library. It was through the influence of this association that the Sydney Art Gallery was opened to the people on Sundays. The society now proposes to complete the work of secularizing the state. In a circular issued at the first of the year the program is thus given: "Religious teaching in public schools must be stopped; church property must bear ad valorem taxation; judicial oaths require to be abolished; and governmental interference with Sunday recreation must be peacefully but firmly resisted. Toleration to all religions, and indorsement of none, by the state, should be the demand of all Freethinkers. Sunday is the only day in the week on which the great mass of the people can obtain a respit from business, and with the view of affording increased facilities for those in search of pleasure and health the association is taking steps to induce the government to run excursion trains every Sunday." The Freethinkers of Christchurch, New Zealand, hav an association numbering one hundred and fifty paying members. They meet regularly in a German church belonging to a Lutheran congregation, who found the building too large and expensiv for them to maintain, and, therefore, leased it to the Infidels, who are quite numerous and activ in New Zealand. Summer is now the prevailing season in that country, and Paine's birthday was celebrated by some of the associations with a picnic. The Auckland association held their festival on Mount Eden. Dr. J. L. York was one of the orators. The doctor seems to be winning "golden laurels" around there, judging by the unanimous expressions which appear in the papers of "the audience was well pleased," and, "the lecture sparkled with genuin Yankee humor, and was highly appreciated by a large audience who listened attentivly, interrupted only by frequent laughter and applause." A tribute to the effectivness of American Freethought literature appears in the reports of nearly all the associations in New Zealand in acknowledging receipts of parcels from "Blue Pencil," who procures his supplies from this office. We wish our brethren of the pleasant isles a merry time and the most abundant success.

Letters from Friends.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., March 27, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav, for some time past, been taking THE TRUTH SEEKER, but hav never seen anything from the "wild West," although there are some of the stanchest Freethinkers out here that can be met anywhere. I myself hav subscribed for several papers advocating the just cause, but I believe that yours is the one. The great mistake made in secular journalism is, in my humble opinion, that too much space is used in scoffing at religion, and too little news given of the advancement made. Now, in THE TRUTH SEEKER there is enough news to satisfy any just critic.

Hoping that, at no distant date, I shall be able to tell of still further advancement in this territory (as I always distribute my papers after reading), and that I shall be able to get a few subscribers to your admirable paper, I am,

Yours truly, JAMES HAZLEDINE.

HELENA, NEB., Feb. 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: All Christians are not so bigoted but that they can decide against their feelings, as the following will show. A few years ago, at our literary society, we debated:

"Resolved, That Thomas Paine did more to secure our national independence than George Washington."

My wife and myself affirmed, and two teachers denied. The three judges were all churchgoers, yet, strange as it may seem, when they handed in their decision for the secretary to read, they were all for the affirmativ. There is truly ground to hope that justice will yet be done the author-hero.

W. T. BROOKS, M.D.

THREE RIVERS, CAL., Feb. 18, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The following, from the Tulare Co. Times of Feb 5, 1885, published at Visalia, requires no comment from me, for truth must prevail:

"We are led to observe that the Rev. Mr. Thompson is in error regarding his statement at the Methodist Episcopal church last Sunday evening, to the effect that the Paine Memorial Society had but one building, and that was recently sold by the sheriff. The Paine Memorial Society at present own the building in Boston in which is printed the Investigator by one of the largest publishing houses in that city."

The Holiness Band, after making converts of a few nervous or emotional women and some children (mostly young girls) last summer and fall, are now sending around their little bills—very modest to be sure, only one-tenth of what each possesses—as tithes to the Lord. Alas! for poor suffering humanity. When shall we be freed from this strain on the credulity by which the many are plundered to enrich the clergy, who are, as it were, an eating canker on our institutions?

T. J. CONLEY.

MINNEAPOLIS, KAN., Feb. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find fifty cents for two copies of the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885. I will send you several names for THE TRUTH SEEKER soon. I would like to see some good lecturer come here, and shake up some of my orthodox friends. We have five churches here, and two skating rinks. The rinks hav larger attendance than the churches. If there is any God out here he is very quiet. I hav it up-and-down with some of my friends, and I finally tell them that if God is harboring the soul of old King David, I do not want to be there. I hav lots of fun. J. H. FREEMAN.

WALLOWA, OR., Feb. 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Please credit inclosed two dollars on my subscription. I am well satisfied with THE TRUTH SEEKER, and if every Freethinker would subscribe for it you would hav more strength to fight old orthodoxy. What a great disappointment it would be if Mr. T. Winter, and some others, should find out by some crook or turn that man is immortal! It would, no doubt, be a severe blow to them, and make them very uncomfortable during this life. I had an argument lately with one of my neighbors on the land question. I claimed that if no one in the United States could own at any one time over one hundred and sixty acres of land it would be a great benefit in time if not right now.

Respectfully, EDMUND NICHOLS.

WELLAND, ONT., March 24, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Last Sunday evening, in the West Methodist church of this town, the minister, the Rev. Mr. Brown, essayed to preach a sensational sermon, which was duly advertised, "On Freethought, and the History of Secularism."

Since the debate between Mr. Watts and Elder Walker, discussion has been the order of the day; and anything in connection with this question has commanded more than ordinary attention. It is rather amusing to learn the reverend gentleman's line of procedure, and the stock of reference he carried in hand. The authority produced was H. L. Green's Freethought Directory, which was made to serve all the gentleman's requirements for statistics and history. The number of Freethinkers and Secularists throughout the United States and Canada was given as being eleven hundred and some odd, which must be a correct statement as it was the number given by this directory, and hence must be right, it being the Freethinkers' return of their own numbers. The reverend speaker generously offered to supply anyone with this book of authority (as he had it by him) that they might satisfy themselvs that his position was perfectly correct; and the fact that he had the "book" was a clincher.

The reverend gentleman got off a huge witticism by terming your grand total of numbers "a barefooted army," at which he got up a laugh which was duly taken up and extended around by his intelligent and appreciativ audience. His discourse throughout, was a tissue of scurrilous reflections and personal abuse, which had to do duty for truthful description, common sense, and sound argument. We can now see that this would-be historian knows nothing about Secularism, and to cover up his ignorance, he kept to the safe old theological rut of abuse, which, to many minds, is a more effectual way of disposing of an opponent than to confute him by argument, and it is a very much more common stock in trade amongst the orthodox ministry. This is the reverend gentleman of whom it was whispered around town since the debate that he would hav made a better opponent to Mr. Watts than did Elder Walker. I think that, in regard to Secularism, we might safely put them at par, each one of them having no ability to discuss it, and each one of them, comparativly speaking, knowing nothing of it, either Elder Walker, with his deistical creed of the eighteenth century, and the reverend Brown, with an advertising directory for the sum total of authority, on this vast question. Yes, we can well afford to let them go together.

We Secularists here in Welland hav no objections to the reverend Brown going on in this course. We hav no thanks to render him for his information simply because it is of no value. When he can assume the role of teacher, and render value, we will receipt him in full for value received. Already exists the strong probability that, through his zeal to scandalize Secularism, has come a reaction of feeling on the part of some of the most thoughtful and intelligent of his congregation, and Secularism never presented itself to their minds in such fair guise as at present.

Let us congratulate ourselvs upon our large numerical standing as laid down by the reverend Brown, and hope that, with the indirect aid of this gentleman and his order, supplemented by the direct efforts of ourselvs, we shall increase our numbers, and extend the circle of our influence for good.

ONE OF BROWN'S "BAREFOOTED ARMY."

P.S.—It has just struck me that, as an individual, I would rather go "barefooted," than to be taking boots from the widow and the fatherless in general church contribution.

EAGLE CREEK, OR., Feb. 14, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I see Mr. Thomas Winter makes complaint that you reject his articles, which I am very sorry for. To me one of his letters is worth more than all the ghost stories I hav ever seen in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I hav read it from the beginning.

"Hale be his heart, hale be his fiddle;
Lang may his elbuck jink and diddle
To cheer him through the weary widdle
O war'ly cares;
Till bairns' bairns kindly cuddle
His auld gray hairs."

The ghost-makers all hav a pick at him because they can't answer him. I will send you this clipping from the Oregonian. I would like the mediums to see it:

SPIRITUALISM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN: I hav noticed in your paper the articles written in defense of Spiritualism by John S. Hawkins, of Salem, and Thomas Buckman, of New Era. The former gentleman I am well acquainted with; the latter I am not personally acquainted with, but hav seen him on several occasions. I hav myself investigated Spiritualism for thirty years; am well acquainted with nearly all of their celebrated mediums from the Fox girls down to the present day, and I hav yet to find that medium that has ever accomplished any good for himself or anyone else. Everyone of these celebrated mediums has been caught in his trickery, as Foster, Slade, Davenports, Fox girls, Eddy brothers, and many more that I could mention if necessary. And why is it these men are trying to defend such mountebanks as this Pearson who committed such a dastardly crime at Chehalis a short time ago under the guise of an evil spirit? I know Pearson, and know him to be a crank of the first water. And if there is any justice he should be punished to the full extent of the law, "Indian spirit, or no Indian spirit," "evil spirit, or no evil spirit." I find that all the articles written in defense of these mediums are the same old story, and amount to nothing whatever. Now, if these mediums can do all they claim to do, why do they not do some good, in finding Charlie Ross, for instance, for a large reward, or point out the robber or murderer to our detectivs, that they may meet with the justice they so richly deserve; or tell us at once who will be the gentlemen Cleveland will select for his cabinet? Why is it that our friends who are in the next world do not come directly to us and giv us the information we are seeking for, instead of our being obliged to consult one of these poor, miserable beings called "mediums," who will tamper with the good feelings of good people for the paltry sum of a couple of dollars, and would destroy your domestic peace, if they were permitted, for two dollars more.

I should like very much to be convinced of the truth of Spiritualism, so much so that I will giv to any medium $1,000 who will answer me three questions correctly; or I will giv $500 to any medium who will move a table one inch or produce a rap upon the table without contact, either public or private, before a committee of six persons, three to be selected by myself, and three by the medium, money payable before the medium leaves the room. Who takes the offer? Now, mediums, prove to us what you profess, or forever hold your peace. I mean business. HENRY CHARLES,
Third house from Jefferson street Ferry, east side.

I will add to the above reward $100. You will find in this $5—$3 for the paper; $1 for Bruno statue at Rome; 75 cents for Campaign Fund; and 25 cents for the ANNUAL. If I allow THE TRUTH SEEKER to run more than one week over the time paid for stop it. HENRY MCELSANDER.

CECIL, KAN., Feb. 15, 284.

MR. EDITOR: It seems to be a contest between Boreas and the devil as to which shall rule this boasted land of sunbeams. It is evidently the focus of all the winds in God's creation. The jayhawker comes honestly by his blowing proclivities. In fact, after being devastated by blizzards, cyclones, drouths, chintz-bugs, grasshoppers, preachers, and pill-peddlers, and enfeebled with malaria, there is no other resource left him. He can write letters to his Northern friends, brag of his great expectations, and, perhaps, inveigle more unwary victims into leaving fair prospects at home, and hieing to this mild Italian clime, where Eolus reigns supreme, and ague holds high carnival; where money loans are three per cent per month, and the picturesque mortgage vies with the ten-cent chromo in decorating the walls of the rural domicil. However, "it's an ill wind that blows nobody any good." In the absence of material comforts, the people flock to the district schoolhouses, and cram to the muzzle with spiritual sustenance. During the long blustering nights they warm up with heavenly caloric. The heavenly shepherds are ladling out free grace with lavish munificence. "Oodles and scads of it, lashin's and leavin's. All gratis. The divil a cint to pay! Roll up, tumble up! any way to get up, my beloved brethring!" is the mighty cry. The midnight scene at many of these rural seminaries would rival pandemonium, and afford a not inapt caricature of Dante's "Inferno." The varied and discordant howls, yelps, and screeches vividly recall the din of an African jungle at the close of day.

"To many a mingled sound at once
The awakened building givs response."

They sweep through the whole course of the gamut, from "the low wail of unrequited love to the fierce battle-cry of freedom, and the yell of despair." The piping treble of feeble woman alternates with stentorian shouts,

"That tear hell's concave and beyond
Frighten the reign of Chaos and old Night.

Superstition is rampant, and the yellow-legged chicken seeks the highest perch. At least half the rustic population of Hackbury, Kan., can read their title clear (of mortgage) to mansions above, and all is lovely, although their starving and unsheltered hogs and cattle "steal their whole dominion from the waste" and on the bleak prairie hump their backs to the rude northern blast. The beast has no soul, you know. The Christian fellow who has the stupendous conceit to believe that his God must, of necessity, hav been the "dead image" of him is apt to regard the beast with contempt.

It has been my lot to be eternally environed with superstition. I was reared in the midst of it thirty years ago. In old Grenville Co., Canada, bigotry held sway, and the sky-pilot reigned as the moral autocrat. A schoolteacher couldn't hav access to the board of education without a certificate of morality from one of those arrogant scamps. They claimed the legal right to visit schools, lecture, and suggest modes of instruction. As a consequence a belief in wizards, spooks, and hobgoblins pervaded the public mind. A country house occupied by a family named Ward was said to be haunted, and marvelous were the tales of nocturnal and devilish orgies enacted there. People came from long distances to witness the manifestations, and direful and hideous were the scenes and sounds said to be enacted. Some claimed to hav received blows from invisible hands. Finally one night an old lady, who happened to be skeptical on the ghost question, seized a candle, and running down the cellar in the midst of the hubbub, discovered the cause of all this mighty hell-scare to be some playful rats that were trailing corn-stalks around on the sills of the house, the leaves of which, sweeping against the walls and siding, caused all this mighty uproar. A Dutchman named Hans Tillebaugh was thought to hav supernatural power. The neighbors feared to offend him, lest he might bring some calamity upon them. The vivid imagination of children was stimulated to the utmost by tales of warnings and spooks. In the delirium of sickness they fancied themselvs beset by all the phantoms of hell. Many a time upon returning home alone from a nocturnal serenade I hav been afraid to look to the right or left, much less behind me, and even had it been daylight you couldn't hav seen my coattail for dust. I hav passed the old graveyard as much quicker than chain-lightning as chain-lightening is quicker than a yoke of oxen, while imagination converted every rock, stump, and bush into a hideous phantom. Such is the effect of superstitious teachings.

I hope Infidels will do their utmost to banish the unmitigated curse from free, enlightened America. Despite the assurance of millions of the most respected and intelligent classes of the world that they hav certain knowledge of the supernatural; despite the testimony of many of the most illustrious men and women that earth has known as to spiritual influences, I take the liberty to to say (in the most humble and deferential manner, lest I giv offense,) that I don't believe a damned word of it. The spirits hav never deigned to reveal themselvs to me, however much they may hav done for others, and as a pure Agnostic, I remain, JAS. TOWSLEY.

KENT, O., March 25, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: So far as Mr. E. H. Heywood's note in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 21st is an expression of admiration for the character and acts of Wendell Phillips it has my unreserved indorsement. I cannot say as much for the doctrin, of which Mr. Heywood is a distinguished and faithful champion, that "a so-called debt, paid once in the form of interest, is thereby justly canceled, and that there is no equity, no property claim defensible in law or morals afterward."

I am glad of all reformatory effort. I welcome all inconsistencies, all half-truths, all yoking of oxen and asses together, all patching of old garments. Everything helps the great onward progress, and I indulge in criticism only because criticism is also a helper.

I am, as much as Mr. Heywood can possibly be, opposed to the system and the condition of things that make it possible to get interest on money. I would hav a full legal tender government note, and continue to expand the volume of them till they could be borrowed at a nominal rate of interest. That would be vastly better than the present semi-barbarous robber system. But I would not be content with this. I would hav a system of free money that would do away with interest altogether. Any person with a moderate degree of integrity and intelligence will say that it is grossly absurd and unjust to require one class to pay interest on their debts and to allow another class to draw interest on their debts, as under the present banking system.

But while I am radical on the finance question, as on most other questions, I would go level—I would act on the square. I would not seek the advantages of one system while professing to carry out another. If I agreed to pay interest I would pay it. If I agreed to be "true" to one woman I would be as good as my word. If I professed anything I would honor my professions. The laboring people of this country are in the large majority. If they were fairly developed in the direction of intelligence and manliness they would wipe out, in a prompt and orderly manner, the present system of things. Until they do this, they deserve to suffer just as they are now suffering. He who voted for Cleveland or Blaine has no business with dynamite. He who professes to believe in marriage must keep out of clandestin relations, or be branded as a sneak, a hypocrit, a villain. He who by his vote upholds the old parties cannot justly complain that the products of his toil go to swell the ill-gotten gains of the lordly monopolist He who has to pay rent on land, or by his vote upholds land monopoly, deserves to hav to pay rent on land, and he has no business to try to sneak out of it; and E. H. Heywood is an accomplice of sneaks when he echoes the cry, "Pay no rent!"

Interest on money is a legitimate thing so long as money will command interest. Rent for land is proper so long as it it will command rent. Obedience to government—prompt, implicit, faithful—is called for so long as government, by the suffrages or tacit consent of the people, is held in position. Let us hav order. Let us hav free money, and the interest question is settled. Let us abolish land monopoly, and the rent question is settled. Let us abolish marriage, and there will be no marital infidelity. Let us abolish God and religion, and people will hav nothing to do but to go to work and promote the well-being and happiness of mankind.

FRANCIS BARRY.

UDINA, ILL., March 1, 1885.

MR EDITOR: Webster defines truth as a "verified fact," an "established principle," a "fixed law," and the thought came flitting through our mental arrangement, if your columns are telling "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God," what sort of lies (we now hav reference to the theological part) are the thousand and one orthodox and monthly periodicals telling week after week and month after month, and what can be the influence they exert through the vast domain of this land of liberty? Truly it is appalling when we think of the millions of readers those papers hav weekly, and of what an influence they must exert.

Then another thought takes possession of us, and we are carried on wings of flight way down in New York (we are 1,200 miles from you), and there we find "two or three gathered together in my name" (TRUTH SEEKER), standing alone in this great world of over a billion people, battling for justice, Freethought, and reform in theological absurdities. Truly you hav a herculean task before you, but with truth as your sword, justice your shield, and reform your battlement, you hav nought to fear. We cannot offer you any suggestions that will be beneficial to you, but we can't refrain from expressing our admiration for your boldness in speech, your "ask no favor" principle, and wish you Godspeed—not simply the ordinary success that always attends the truth when spoken, but speed in geometrical progression. When this is attained, we think the underpins of old, decaying orthodoxy will soon be wiped out. Then how happiness will be depicted upon us all "when the mists hav cleared away!" In this commnnication I do not design to discuss any particular theme or hobby, yet, as is said by Dryden, "thoughts come crowding in so fast upon me that my only difficulty is to choose or reject," we might tell you how prolific orthodoxy is in this region, and how terribly wicked a person is who don't believe that Jonah swallowed the whale, or that Ahaziah was older than his mother (pardon me, I meant his father—equally as absurd). Yet you know how petrified the masses of humanity are in these old dogmas. But THE TRUTH SEEKER is like a homeopathic dose of medicin, small (in comparison to number of readers), but powerful and convincing in its effect. But you hav one consolation—few read it without being convinced. God speed you in your good work. Yours in the cause, C. W. BRITTON.

PORT CLINTON, O., March 2, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3. Please send me twelve copies of the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. The four copies I ordered sometime ago hav been received, and I am well pleased with them. If I could afford it I would put a thousand copies in circulation, as they are well calculated to advance the cause of humanity. I will try and send you another order soon.

"Yours till the dying yelp of orthodoxy greets the ears of humanity," W. S. FLAUGHER.

CENTRAL CITY, COL., Feb. 28, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: If the following anecdote has never been published it ought to be. A very worthy gentleman from this place, a personal friend of Colonel Ingersoll, has recently returned from a visit to his old home in Illinois; he relates this anecdote and can vouch for its truth.

A wealthy, pious, old gentleman residing in this same state, had a son whose choice for a wife displeased the father; he declared if the said son married his chosen one he would disinherit him.

The son preferred, like a true man, to giv up his inheritance rather than the lady of his love.

After the marriage the father gave to his boy $1,000 in cash, saying, "This is all of my estate you will ever receive, and I henceforth disown you."

Time passed on; this Christian, white-haired man often felt a burden resting upon his spirits. Being in Chicago on business, just before leaving for home he stepped into a bookstore and requested some reading-matter to be put up to while away the hours during his travels. As the selection was left to the clerk this one put up a variety package.

The old gentleman, after being comfortably on his way, opened his bundle; the first thing he drew therefrom was one of Colonel Ingersoll's lectures; this he threw down in a disdainful manner; after a little time he picked it up, looked over it carelessly, then cast it from him with a dissatisfied air, yet, a third time, he reached for it, turned the leaves in an idle, listless way, when these words of the noble author riveted his attention, "I will tell you what I say to my children: 'Go where you will; commit what crime you may; fall to what depth of degradation you may—you can never commit any crime that will shut my door, my arms, or my heart to you.'"

Reading the sentence over and over, it deeply affected his heart; his own disinherited son seeming to sadly rise before him. He inwardly vowed, if he lived to reach home, he would undo the wrong in relation to this son. He arrived safely at his journey's end, entered his house, greeted wife and children, passed on to his library, there added a codicil to his will fully reinstating the disinherited child, and became himself, in a short time, a happy "Ingersoll man."

Now, suppose the colonel had picked up one of Talmage's, Moody's, or the "Boy Preacher's" sermons, and by reading it had been converted to Christianity—to the belief in that father who, according to the Bible, disinherits most of his children—while the "four and twenty elders," all the angels, all the saints of all ages, all the victims who hav swung from gibbet and gallows into the arms of Jesus, rejoice and sing hallelujahs and amens—I repeat, suppose the genial colonel had been converted from all his unchristian, humanitarian ways, electricity would hav flashed the news north and south, east and west, across continents and over seas. Many thousand printing-presses would hav published it to the world ere twenty-four hours had passed, while all the orthodox preachers would, day after day, giv thanks to the father, son, and holy ghost that Robert Ingersoll had relapsed from his grand, natural, humane religion, and gone into the disinheriting business!

MRS. BUCKNER-JOHNSON, M.D.

ST. CATHERINES, ONT., March 1, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $4 to apply on my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I do not know how our cause is progressing with you, but I am fully prepared to say that if any evil thing ever got a shaking-up orthodoxy is getting it now in Canada. We in this country ought to be ashamed of our preachers. In spite of all the lectures that Mr. Watts has given here, and the kind invitations given to the clergy to defend their cause, with the exception of one or two they hav all taken a back seat, and now they are going to bring one from Indiana to debate with him in the town of Welland, the debate to begin March 3d and last three days. The meanness of Canadian clergymen does not consist altogether in their evading Mr. Watts while here. It is their abuse of him and all Freethinkers, dead and living, in his absence. Of course it is always from their "cowards' castles" that they make those attacks, as it would not be safe for them to do otherwise, because there are many men not half as well informed as Mr. Watts who could show them up to good advantage. Just after Mr. Watts's last lecture at Welland one Rev. Mr. Atkins, preaching near that place, undertook to show up Infidelity in its worst form. Among other things, he made use of these words: "You all know that some men liv to use what little influence they hav in polluting and blasting the lives and hopes of all they may come in contact with. For an instance, we will take Tom Paine. And it is surprising, considering the death that this slimy wretch died, that his influence would amount to anything. With his last breath he wished that all his books should be burnt; and so this fearful man died, exclaiming, 'I'm lost! I'm lost!'"

We will giv the Rev. Atkins the honor of getting out a new version of this stale falsehood. I suppose this story, like all the rest of their big stories, needs changing to keep even with the times. Atkins finished up by stating that Thomas Hobbes said the blood of Jesus Christ was no better than that of a hog (another lie).

It is surprising what a little good seed will bring forth when sown in good soil. I lent some of Mr. Remsburg's "False Claims," together with "The Apostle of Liberty," by the same author, and two copies of Paine's "Age of Reason," around amongst the neighbors of the above-mentioned divine, and the result is that some of them are wishing that he would come out and prove his assertions, while others hav since dropped Christianity altogether. As another divine remarked, "People seem to be getting Infidelity on the brain." And is it to be wondered at when we think of this class of gentry sponging on their dupes for hundreds of years? And what hav they given in return? Scarcely anything but falsehood and deceit. I am now letting a very influential gentleman who is a strong supporter of the church read Vale's "Life of Paine" and the "Humphrey-Bennett Discussion."

There has been a great depression in business here this winter. Hundreds of men are out of work in our cities, and in some places they hav had to establish soup kitchens; but our clergy inform these poor men and their starving families that they should be very thankful to their loving father (which art in heaven looking after the sparrows, etc.) that their lives are spared, and that his will will be done. I do not wonder that sensible people get tired of his will and try to get up one of their own, which I hav no doubt will work to better satisfaction. J. LOVELL.

KANSAS CITY, MO., March 12, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The following is a specimen of public education sent out from Chicago and published in most of the daily papers throughout the country without comment:

"CHICAGO, March 9th.—At the weekly conference of the Methodist ministers to-day, by a unanimous rising vote, a resolution was passed to the effect that the church make next Sunday a special day of prayer for the spiritual and physical welfare of General Grant."

The result of prayer in the case of President Garfield, by the combined effort of all denominations from the pope down, one would naturally suppose would put a stop to all such foolishness. It will, however, be noticed that both spiritual and physical welfare are mentioned, so if they fail on the physical they will hav the spiritual to fall back on. If there is a Jehovah having the power attributed to him by Christians, he ought to hav sense enough to use it understandingly in General Grant's case without having instruction from a few pigmy-minded Methodist preachers from Chicago who hav learned a little about the physical condition of the general through the public press. But what do they know about his spiritual welfare? Where did they get their information justifying the imputation that his spiritual exchequer was in a dilapidated condition? In the Catholic church spiritual embarrassment for all means, "We hav masses for sale," but what explanation can be offered for Methodist popery? Will they file a bill with the general government and demand an appropriation to pay them for services rendered? Or will they present an account against the estate? Whatever may be their designs, we ask all sensible men and women to join in a protest against this clerical attack on the spiritual character or condition of a man—who, in all probability, is their peer in morality, mentality, and spirituality. Their offered services are simply superfluous egotism, which self-reliant men like General Grant pay no more attention to than an elephant would to a mouse. It is bad enough for this enlightened country to be saddled with the support of several thousand priests, without being obliged to bear their impudent assumptions that this or that man or woman is a spiritual pauper, and their advertising the same by publicly sending out a petition to some supernatural power asking it to intercede in some supernatural way and patch up said dilapidated spiritual condition. W. W. JUDSON.

GARDEN HOME, OR., March 1, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been thinking of writing to THE TRUTH SEEKER for some time, in order to let your readers know what progress superstition is making in this part of the world. The Methodist Conference makes use of this section of country by sending their boys and greenhorns here to preach to us backwoodsmen.

I suppose they think we can't tell what good preaching is; and I don't know that we can, for it has been a long time since we heard any that could be called good. I, for one, don't think any preaching is good that leads children and others to believe that I am wicked just because my belief differs from the belief of some one else. I heard a preacher say, while preaching in our schoolhouse last year, that a man who was an unbeliever was worse than a murderer, or a thief, or any other criminal. Such teaching as that has a tendency to make children depise an unbeliever, but I think the children pay very little attention to the sermon. I know I used to be glad when it was over. I did not know what it was about, and I think now that the preacher knew just as much about it as I did when I was five years old.

I must tell you something in regard to the youngster who has been quartered on this neighborhood by the Methodist Conference. He is a short, thickset Englishman, and preaches in long-legged gum boots. As his legs are short, and the boot legs are long, you can imagin what he looks like when he gets up before his congregation with the legs of the boots outside of his pants. One Sunday in last autumn he told us the awful story of Thomas Paine's death-bed. He spoke of Paine as the man who had written a book that had caused the ruin of thousands of souls, but he says when the writer of that pernicious book came to die, he asked the Lord to hav mercy on him; but our reverend gentleman tells us that the Lord would not listen to him, but turned away from him with a smile of derision on his face. I don't think that fact is generally known among the preachers, but our preacher knows that God smiled when Thomas Paine died. He also told us that a smile of derision on the face of an angry God was an awful thing to contemplate, and I suppose he knows. After he had given us his "racket" about Paine, and had pronounced the benediction, I went up to his desk and asked him if he had ever read the theological works of Thomas Paine. He thought for a moment, then said he had not. "Then," said I, "how do you know it is a pernicious book?" Said he: "I know it is a pernicious book because it contradicts the Bible." I then told him I wanted to make him an offer. I said, "If you will take that book and show me a single falsehood in it, I will pay you your own price for it." He said, "You will, will you?" Said I, "Of course I will." He then took hold of my hand, and he said, "But, my friend, what will you do when you come to die?" I said I did not know what I would do, but I supposed I should die, as it was something that came to all of us, and could not be helped. The next time I went to hear him I took the theological works of Thomas Paine with me, and asked him to take it home with him and read it. At first he seemed inclined to read it, but he said he wanted me to take the Bible and read it. I told him it was no trouble for me to read the Bible, for I carried it with me, and read it almost every night. Then he said he would not read Paine's book, because it would not do him any good, and he said he did not want to read anything that would take away his hope of eternal happiness. I told him it need not take away such hope, for the writer of it hoped for happiness after death, and believed in future punishment of some kind. Then he commenced to cry, and asked me if I wanted him to think that his mother's spirit was not watching over him from above. I told him I did not care what he thought about spirits, but that he had made an attack on that book, and I thought his sense of justice ought to compel him to read it. But it was no use; he would not open the covers of it.

He gave us a powerful sermon that day; he told us what a belief in the Bible would do for us, and at the last, he said, it will enable us to "gather our feet up beneath us, and spread our wings, and take our flight to realms of endless day." I think that expression was sublime. Now I know what we will do with our feet when we get our wings—we will gather them up beneath us. If he had said we should put our feet on our shoulders, or carry them in our hands, that would hav sounded ridiculous. It will be the proper thing to gather them up beneath us. I wish I had known sooner what we would do with our feet after our wings grew.

I asked our preacher once if he was a citizen of the United States. He said he was not. "Then," said I, "if I hav a sheep to die, the Bible tells me to sell the meat to an alien." He said that was not in the Bible, and that he wanted me to show it to him if it was, and I promised to do it the next time I meet him. SAMUEL KELSO.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Tyrant Punished;

OR, "DISCRETION THE BETTER PART OF VALOR."

Young "Tyke" was a dog of a goodly degree,
But yet ill-conditioned as dog could well be;
In snapping and snarling his only delight,
And putting the fowls and the sheep in a fright.

No matter how little, no matter how big—
Or duckling or donkey, or pullet or pig—
If he could but alarm them, then Tyke was in glee,
And the more they were frightened, the braver was he.

(I know a few men, and a great many boys,
Who are very like Tyke in their worry and noise;
They think themselvs heroes; but all people say
The weaker their foes are, the bolder are they.)

It happened one day that poor Tyke came to grief
In a way you will scarcely think worthy belief,
And the manner of which I'll endeavor to show,
To save other "Tykes" from a similar woe:

He had worried the poultry, had harried the sheep,
Had awakened the innocent sow from her sleep,
When three geese he espied on the pond near the gate,
All sitting in silence, content and sedate.

Tyke rushed in a passion to spoil their repose,
And quick from the ground the three grave ones arose—
But not to flee from him! oh, no! strange to say,
They rose in a fury, and ripe for the fray.

With wings wide extended, and beaks all agape,
They thought but of battle, and not of escape;
And Tyke, all astounded by courage so rare,
Stopped short, and no further the combat would dare.

But not so the bipeds! They marched on the foe.
Loud hissing the fury their gestures would show,
The hero, his valor fast changing to dread,
Gazed a moment, whined feebly, then turned him, and fled.

What a cry of derision arose all around!
Why, even the puniest joined in the sound,
Rejoiced that a tyrant so spiteful as he
Was proved but a coward as rank as could be.

—Selected.

Peppercorn Stories.

ALL ABOUT A SKELETON.

"O Polly Peppercorn, will you please tell us more about our skellingtons?"

"Johnny Gotobed," said Polly, sternly, "don't you know any better than to say 'skellington?' You shall never hear me tell another story if you say 'skellington' again—do you hear?"

"Yes, Polly; but my gran'ther says skellington," said Johnny defiantly.

"Your gran'ther! It does not take much more time to say grandfather than it does to say gran'ther. I suppose he never went to spelling-school in his young days, which accounts for such a pronunciation," remarked Polly.

One by one the children had gathered about her, and joined Johnny Gotobed in teasing for more about the skeleton.

"Well, there are eight bones in that skull of yours, Frankie Muttonchops."

"In mine, too?" asked Molly Mulleinleaf.

"Yes, in all skulls. The names of them are too hard for you to remember, but you can recollect the number—eight. They are held together by sutures, little jig-jag edges that fit as nicely as carpenter work. The shape of each is like an arch, and all together they represent a very pretty dome, in which, as I told you before, is kept that priceless diamond, the brain. How many bones do you think are in your face, Peggy Primrose?"

"I geth there ith two boneth."

"How many do you guess, Sammy Stripedgrass?"

"Four."

"Add teen to that—fourteen; and you just hav it. Fourteen bones in the face. Now, how many hav a chest? Raise your hands," and Polly looked from one to the other, but not a hand started.

"What? Not one of you with a chest? I'm astonished! Deary me, children, how do you liv?"

"I hath got a lithle blue trunk, ventured Peggy Primrose; and, "I hav a little Japanese box," said Daisy Dewdrop.

"Well, you everyone hav a chest," said Polly, dryly. "Yes, and that is another lovely jewel-case. It keeps the heart—do any of you know what the heart is?"

"I do!" exclaimed Tommy Clovertop; "'tis that thing that goes thumpity-thump, whackety-whack, all the time, days and nights, too."

They all laughed, and Polly Peppercorn said they would talk about that hereafter. Then she continued, "The chest keeps not only the heart but the lungs and all the big blood-vessels. The front of it is called the sternum, or, more commonly, breastbone, and now, with you all, it is in eight pieces. When you grow older, it will change to three pieces, and when you get to be old folks it will only be one piece. Below the chest is a basin of bone, and that is called the pelvis, and that is made of four bones only, and it is used to keep and protect portions of your beautiful bodies in place. Your limbs branch out from what we hav described—the arms from the chest and the legs from the pelvis. There's the stomach and liver that we hav not mentioned, but in course of these stories we shall tell you about them."

Harry Coalskuttle here came in with a bird that Pussy Whitefoot had killed.

"Has the bird a skellington?" asked Johnny Gotobed.

"Didn't I tell you not to say 'skellington' again? I said you should not hear another story if you said it again. And now you will hav to go home," and Polly Peppercorn was grieved to say it.

"Oh, please, please forgiv him," said little Daisy Dewdrop. "He forgot," and her blue eyes filled with tears.

"I'll forgiv him this time, for your sake, but not again," and Polly looked very grave. She continued, "Yes, birds hav skeletons, but not 'skellingtons.' Birds are animals, and can fly."

"Am I an animal?" inquired Frankie Muttonchops.

"You are all animals; I am one, too," declared Polly. "You are animals in all your physical organs and faculties, but superior to all other animals in powers of reasoning and reflection, and in ability to contrive and construct labor-saving machinery; to invent, or rather to discover, many of the forces of nature, and to apply them to daily life. Now," she continued, "how many of you hav a backbone? Don't all speak together."

They all began to run their fingers up and down their backs, and presently declared that they had each a backbone, except Frankie Muttonchops, who said he could not feel any bone in his back.

"That's because he is so fat!" and Tommy Clovertop stuffed his fist in his mouth to keep from laughing.

"It is one single bone, isn't it—the backbone?" questioned Polly, at the same time pinching the middle of Frankie Muttonchops's back to find if there was any bone about it.

"Yeth, it ith," screamed Peggy Primrose.

"No, it is not," said Sammy Stripedgrass.

"I'll tell you," said Polly. "The backbone, so called, is made up of twenty-six bones, little ones, and the whole thing is very wonderful indeed, and you must all try and study it up some day. Inside of the backbone or spinal column is a fine nervous cord, running the whole length of the body, and the brain is at the top of it."

"Will you tell what bones are made of, Polly Peppercorn?" asked Harry Coalskuttle.

"Yes, indeed," responded Polly. "You've seen lime, of course. Well, now, your bones are a kind of lime; that is, they are two-thirds lime and the other third is an animal substance. If you put a bone in the fire the animal part will burn out, and you can break it all to pieces. Put a bone in acid and the lime will dissolve, and you will find the same shape, but it can then be bent and not broken. Hence the lime makes it hard and firm, and the animal part givs it strength and flexibility—understand? The bones are affected by what you eat," she continued. "If you eat madder, a red-colored root, your bones will turn red, and if you eat it alternately with something else, your bones will be streaked red and white."

"I guess we should be careful what we eat," remarked Johnny Gotobed.

"I fell from the top of a high wall once, head over heels," said Tommy Clovertop, "and didn't break any of my bones."

"That's because you are a young animal, and your bones hav not so much lime in them as they will hav when you grow older. Now your bones will bend before they break, but when you are old they will become more limey and more brittle."

"Don't she know a lot?" said Molly Mulleinleaf to Daisy Dewdrop, eyeing Polly with wonder and awe. "It is funny, though, how bones grow together when they are broken. When I broke my dolly's leg it didn't grow on again; I wonder why it didn't."

Polly overheard her last remark, and proceeded to say, "Wooden legs cannot unite when broken, so you must be careful of your dolly's limbs as well as your own. The composition of the bones is all taken from the blood, of course, so when one is broken Nature goes to work and pours some blood around the ends, and then it gently draws it back into the system, and leaves some of its water to thicken up and make a kind of jelly, which grows harder and harder by drawing bone matter from the blood, until in about five or six weeks the broken bone has grown together, and in a few more weeks it is as good as new."

Polly shut her eyes and yawned, which was a signal for the little folks to take their departure, so they kissed her, one by one, and went away.

How Bruin Caught the Thief.

"I don't see for the life of me where the pigs go," and old Mr. Dickerman leaned his face thoughtfully on his right hand. "I can't think who would be so mean as to steal such pretty little creatures."

"It is no use lamenting," said Mrs. Dickerman; "the pigs are gone, the white goose, and every now and then off goes a good, fat hen, too. It can't be that rats take them off, for there is not a rat in the world big enough to do it. All those pretty pigs—thirteen of 'em, and only two left! It's a shame!"

Mr. Dickerman had watched night after night, with his gun loaded to shoot the miscreant, man or animal, who carried off the pigs and hens and the goose, but he never saw anybody or any animal prowling around; so the matter of the thievery remained a great mystery.

One day there came a man with a performing bear into the village, and passing Mr. Dickerman's house toward evening, the man stopped and told the bear to dance, which he did very creditably, indeed, for a bear.

It was so funny to see a bear going through with a waltz movement, while his master played the violin!

It tickled Mr. Dickerman and his little son Teddy very much, and when the man asked to remain over night with his bear they readily gave their consent. Mrs. Dickerman, however, did not fancy the idea and remonstrated, but Teddy and his papa carried the day. They were two to one, and finally the man, who seemed a kind-hearted fellow, was given a place to sleep in the back chamber, and the bear was put in the barn.

In the middle of the night there was a terrible howling and screaming, mingled with profanity, heard under the windows of the house.

"There!" said Mrs. Dickerman; "that man said the bear was tame and wouldn't hurt anything. He's out of the barn, I guess, and is eating up the last of the pigs—bears will eat pigs. Get up, quick, and see! So much for entertaining bears! I never thought we should come to keep a hotel for bears—the idea! Get up!"

"Bears don't swear, Mrs. Dickerman," said the husband; "and they don't groan and yell like that;" and he slowly proceeded to dress himself; "Besides, the barn door was fastened."

The groans and profanity grew louder and more vehement, and soon Mr. Dickerman, the bear's master, and little Teddy were upon the scene. The bear was there, also, and the two little pigs, and another. That other was a notorious rogue, and the bear had, not the pigs, but the rogue hugged closely in his arms. He held him so tightly that the man was half dead with pain and fright. The pigs were squealing on the ground, and their mother crying in the sty.

"Oh, let me go! let me go!" said the thief. I never'll do so again—I never will!"

"So you are the thief, are you?" said Mr. Dickerman.

"Oh yes! I got the pigs, and the chickens, and the goose, too!—Oh, dear! let me go! I can't breathe! I'm dying! I'm in a vice! Oh! oh! oh!"

After a hard struggle the man was liberated, and on promis to make good restitution for his evil deeds, he was set at liberty, Mr. Dickerman, who was a kind-hearted man, thinking he had been punished enough for his bad conduct.

His face was terribly scratched by the bear, and he was thoroughly frightened.

The bear heard him stealthily approaching, unfastened the barn door, and caught the man in his arms just as he was making off with the two pigs.

"Three cheers for Bruin!" said Mr. Dickerman. "And three cheers for my dancing bear!" said Bruin's master.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—CHARADE.

Before my face good people bowed
Far back in olden time;
And yet I sail the heavenly hights,
Mid splendors all sublime.

A daughter fair I hav always been
Amid the realms of space;
And yet a million men hav died
Who never saw my face.

I hav a form that's fair and round,
A color near sky-blue;
And now to guess my pretty name
Is all that you can do.

Altoona, Pa. WILLIAM J. BURNS.

2.—AN INFERNAL CHARADE.

My first or second, I don't care which,
If you boil either down will make good pitch;
Or both together, strange to tell,
Is an obsolete word for an obsolete Hell.
My third, not obsolete, but rare,
Means "to giv birth," or "fourth to bear;"
And third-ling is my fourth, you see,
In its most infantil degree.
While my one, two, three—not to embellish—
In good plain English just means "hellish;"
My fourth is the type of innocence mild,
For a very good woman, or man, or child,
Gods rebussed agnomen stamped in wax
On the Agnus dei if priests tell faets;
But our "Agnus In-fern-al," you must learn,
Is a woolly mass prepared from the fern.

REKAB SEMAJ.

3.—ENIGMA.

1. One fourth of the earth's surface.
2. A South American plant.
3. A part of a person.
4. A name sometimes applied to the ocean.

OLLIE BAKER.

4.—ENIGMA.

My 1, 8, 3, 6, 7, 9 is a relativ;
My 2, 6, 7, 5 is a continent;
My 4, 5, 9 denotes a possibility;
My whole is a race of people.

A. L. SAILOR.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, MARCH 21, 1885.

1. Judaist.
Eucharist.
Reverberate.
Exterminate.
Minister.
Sinister.
Binocular.
Unpopular.
Regeneration.
Graduation.

Initials: J. E. Remsburg.
3. On the cover of "The Story Hour."
Enigma No. 2 is imperfectly stated.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, MARCH 28, 1885.

1. T-it-mouse.—T-it-b-it. 2. D. M. Bennett. 3. A-nem-on-e. English in reverse, No men; Latin—nemo. 4. Hiawatha.

Solvers, Benny Diction, R. A. Larkin.

ANSWER TO CORRECTION OF "HARD NUT" IN THE TRUTH SEEKER OF MARCH 28TH.

I notice a solution (?) signed by Brother Isaac Pool;
He says, Nine hundred rods were left, or else he is a fool,
And with quadratic hammer tries to show his knack;
Says further that the "Nut" is an easy one to crack,
The shell, in fact, so very thin, to draw it rather mild,
That Isaac had to simply hand the hammer to his child.
Now let us see: Can figures lie? If so, I want to show it;
When algebra goes back on us, we surely want to know it.
According to arithmetic, vide Brother Isaac Pool,
Baker, "Solver," and myself hav each played the fool.
But hold! Let's look a little—nine hundred rods would take,
When in a square, one hundred and twenty rods to make
A fence clear around it, both pig and cattle tight;
But four x minus forty would take, if I am right,
Just one hundred and sixty to fence it, any day.
Waitah! a dozen on the shell. Brother Pool will pay.

ESPRIT FORT.

Grand Rapids, March 27th.

REPORT ON PRIZE PUZZLE.

I hav received nine answers to the puzzle. Only one was correct.

3 called it polar bear.
2 " " a big polar bear.
1 " " Mount Sneffels.
1 " " a northern bear.
1 " " a white she-bear.

One, Mr. J. K. P. Baker, saw the whole point—the acrostic part and the thirteen hidden words, the "ice sea," and all. It is the neatest solution I ever saw to any puzzle. Inclosed herewith, I mail the prize to him today.

CHEMIST.

ANSWER TO "CHEMIST'S" PRIZE PUZZLE.

Capless and hatless, with nothing to wear,
Surely a bare head belongs to a bear;
And by that same token,
This truth must be spoken,
That, regardless of stockings or hose,
A bear surely barefooted goes.

A polar she-bear now clearly is seen,
Bear-ing of letters this mystic "thirteen"—
Such was the seeming
Of "Chemist's" dreaming—
Till, weary and chilblained, she ventures to stop,

And asks him to furnish some drugs from his shop.

"Here's a prescription from good Dr. Kane,"
"'Botanical O I C,' very plain;
Yes, by each initial,
Oh, I see—its official;
Oh, ice sea! Oh, I see! Oh, icy, indeed!
I'll fill this prescription with clerical speed.

"Bergamot, motherwort, stillingia, three;
Anise, ash, hemlock, and capsicum, see;
Then ergot and ginger
Bears cannot injure;
Cardamon, veratrum, cubeb, I ween,
And arnica last make another thirteen."

Irwin, Iowa. J. K. P. BAKER.

Correspondence.

RICHFIELD, MICH., March 25, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My mother takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I like the Children's Corner, and I like to read it. The Christians hav had meetings here. Some of their new converts hav backslid before they closed. I would like to hav some of the children write to me. I am fourteen years of age. This is all for this time.

Yours truly, GEORGE H. HALL.

MOUND CITY, MINN., March 20, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write you a letter because there are so many other girls that write to you. My sister Birdie has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for nearly six years, and I always read it, but I like it ever so much better since the Children's Corner has begun. I liv on Lake Minnetonka, the greatest watering-place in the Northwest. We would all like to hav you come out here some time in the summer when every thing is pretty. I am eleven years of age. I hope there will be room for this letter in the Children's Corner. You must excuse my poor writing because I hav to write with my left hand. AUDREY SHUCK.

HAGERSTOWN, IND, March 28, 1885.

MY DEAR MISS WIXON: I am so well pleased with the Children's Corner that I shall hav to write you a letter to express my appreciation. It is just the thing for the children, and I am often sorry that they had not a Corner in THE TRUTH SEEKER before I grew up. But I read it now with as much interest as any child can do. We are all delighted with the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. I think it is a perfect treasure to any Freethinker. What a pleasure it is to see face to face (if only on paper) those noble brothers and sisters whose words and thoughts hav grown familiar to us! It contains both inspiration and information; it has many things to delight the eye as well as to enchant the understanding. When I feel downhearted I can peruse this handsome ANNUAL and realize what a glorious company there is, and through these decorated pages I can wander with a spirit that can scorn misfortune.

I must also tell you of the grand lectures we had here at Hagerstown, Feb. 23d and 24th, delivered by the Messrs. Samuel P. Putnam and Charles Watts. They were just splendid. We never had anything of that kind here before, so it was something new to all. They had quite a large audience for this place, and were listened to with very close attention. I wish we could hav such good lectures here every week. I would go if we lived ten miles away. The Liberals around here all say we must hear them again. My parents are both Freethinkers and hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER ever since it was first published. But I must close for this time, or I shall take more time than this letter is worth. Wishing you great success in the cause of Freethought and to the Corner, I remain, Yours very truly, ALMIRA PIPHER.

Pure Philosophy for Physiologists.

Please send me 5 cents for Foote's Health Monthly for March, and read articles on

DIANAISM AND ALPHAISM.

Send stamps (1 cent ones) to

ELMINA D. SLENKER,
4t13 Snowville, Va.

John Swinton's Paper,

PLAIN, PRACTICAL, GENUIN, STRONG, AND FREE.

A WEEKLY PAPER OF AMERICAN IDEAS, PROGRESS, AND RIGHTS.

21 Park Row, New York.

$1 PER YER (post paid). 3 CENTS A COPY.
Specimens Free.

1—Boldly upholding the Rights of Man in the American way.
2—Battling against the Accumulated wrongs of Society and Industry.
3—Striving for the Organization and Interests of Workingmen, and giving the news of the trades and the unions.
4—Uniting the New Political Forces; searching for a common platform, and giving the news of li the young bodies in the field.
5—Warning the American people against the treason able and crushing schemes of millionaires, monopolists, and plutocrats, and against the coming billionaires whose shadow is now looming up.
6—Looking toward better times of fair play and public welfare.
7—Living views of public questions and social topics.
8—Literary sketches and stories.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

A BOOK FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

PRICE, $1.25; TWO COPIES, $2.00.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT
IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

THE
HISTORY OF FREETHOUGHT,

Its Rise, Progress, and Triumph.

BY CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS—Sec. I.: Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II.: What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III.: Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV.: Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V.: Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

"I hav read Mr. Watts's 'History of Freethought.' It is just what every thinking man needs, and those who do not think need it to make them do so."
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, $1 25

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.

The Greatest of all Anti-theological Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

"Little Lessons" for Little Folks,

Are now ready to mail to any address, at 30 cents for board cover, and 20 cents for paper. Address

Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Virginia.

"'Little Lessons' are grand. I hashed and rehashed the lesson on spiders this evening in the Sunday-school. I am running two Sunday-schools. The children are slow in learning the mystery of the God-head; in comprehending the Trinity; but their eyes brighten and they take kindly to discourses on snails, toads, spiders, and lizards, so I think I'll keep it up."—Bertie Stone.

Poetry.

Freethought.

We know not where Freethought will lead
The dauntless human soul,
We only know that it will be
Some grand, some glorious goal.

On loftiest peak of truth's great range
Is set her standard fair,
Its radiant stars 'pon azure field
Float in translucent air.

False, priestly creeds hav ruled mankind
Through all the centuries past;
Now Freethought comes, strikes off the chains
That long hav held us fast.

Upon each brow she sets her seal,
'Tis reason, calm, sublime;
Bids us no longer bend the knee
To Error black with crime.

Though high of place, in church or state,
It matters not at all,
She strips the mask from Error's face.
Behold it totter, fall!

She bids each toil-worn, servile slave
To manhood's stature rise.
Upon the shrine of womanhood
She lays full many a prize.

She guides unto the highest plane
Of human thought and deed,
Inspires the soul with love for truth,
Rebukes all selfish greed.

Her motto is, Forever on,
Nor falter by the way,
Seek ever for new founts of truth,
Drink from them day by day.

Draws nearer thus, through changing years,
That glorious time to be,
When superstition shall be slain,
Humanity be free.

Freethought, free press, free, happy lives—
Grandly the anthems roll
From distant Indies' sea-girt isles,
Echo from pole to pole.

And ever on Truth's mountain-top
That standard waves on high,
An emblem to inspire mankind
For Truth to liv, to die,

Jackson, Mich. MATTIE C. MITCHELL.

Gods.

About six months since a ministerial friend of mine called my attention to God. I thought for a time that the name sounded familiar, and when he asked me if I had not heard of the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, I remembered that I had. My brother Isaac had often given me considerable information about him at times when he was sitting around the house with a corn on his toe and had nothing else to do. From the manner in which Ike connected his name with dams and such things I had been led to suppose that Isaac's God was a miller. I never heard Abraham and Jacob say very much about their gods, as they belonged to church and never had much to do with them except on Sunday. I thought about the subject until I began to feel a friendly interest in it, and last week I read up on gods to an extent that seems to me to qualify me for a learned thesis or something on this subject.

I find that gods were quite common as far back as the days of Adam, from which I am led to infer that the Yankees are not entitled to the honor of inventing them. The Chinese hav gods three or four thousand years old, and there is not a gray hair or a wrinkle in their heads. One would naturally think that a god three thousand years old would be pretty well worn and a little bit out of style, but the Chinese claim that warmed-over gods, originally made of fire-clay, and freshly varnished, are just as good as new. People who hav always had a god of their own—a sort of private god laid away where it will always be handy in case of an emergency—say they would not be without one for four dollars. They maintain that a private god is much more attentiv and punctual in attending to business than a public god, which is very much overworked in the busy seasons, particularly during political campaigns and the chilblain season.

There is considerable difference of opinion as to the merits of the various kinds of gods. The Chinese are peculiarly fond of a little two-by-seven wooden god that can be carried around in the overcoat pocket, where it can be reached in an instant in case anything serious should happen. In case of a flood or earthquake, the owner of such a god whips him out of his pocket like a self-cocking revolver, and sets it between himself and all danger. It is said that a fellow can find gods enough to start a Chinese heaven with along some of the river banks in China. They hav been washed ashore after their proprietors were drowned in a freshet. It must be very humiliating to a man to see his god impotently floating around him and leaving him to drown, in spite of all his supplications. It must look as if a man had got hold of an ungrateful and selfish one-horse god that is careless and slovenly in looking after his business.

The Aztecs, or mound-builders' gods, were plain clay. By making their heads hollow and attaching stems to their stomachs, they could be readily utilized as tobacco pipes, and those who hav smoked them say they are just as good as any other plain, barn-yard style of pipe. An Aztec god was never an ordinary kind of a fellow. He was not considered first-class unless he had seven fingers or toes, or a pretty good-sized tail, and he would not stand the climate unless he was well baked. There are ruins of several god-bakeries in various parts of Mexico and Central America.

The Persians, Greeks, and Romans of the olden time would not fool with common gods. They made their deities in a brass foundry, and claimed that no god was genuin unless he would turn green under an acid test and bore the government stamp. I hav a god myself. He was given me by a Japanese lecturer who came this way last fall; but he is evidently a very poor god. All I hav ever been able to get him to do is to hold down papers on my desk.—F. E. Huddle.

Complimentary.

With great pleasure we welcome THE TRUTH SEEKER to our book-table It is a stanch advocate of mental and religious freedom, and certainly must be dreaded by all theological bigots. Among its contributors may be found the names of the ablest men and women in the ranks of Liberalism; and its editorials are all finely written and filled with matter for the deepest thought. We hav been deeply interested in the perusal of "Letters from Friends," containing thoughts from the people in all sections of the country. From a perusal of these letters we may pick up many new thoughts, and also ascertain the kind of work needed in different localities to make Liberalism a success. We hav also carefully read the "Children's Corner," edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, of Fall River, Mass., and would recommend this department to all liberal-minded parents as suitable, entertaining, and instructiv reading for the young. Published by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

J. F. Green, of Scranton, Pa., writes to Mrs. Slenker: "'John's Way' is the best missionary document for my field of labor that ever was written and printed. When I hav a delicate and educated lady that I want to operate on or convert, I just tear off the title page, and all advertisments, leaving it entirely bare as to author and publisher, and mail it to her or them, as the case may be, and I tell you they never know what it is that strikes them. I hav lately got two high-toned Presbyterian ladies in trouble in their minds by reading 'John's Way.' And I expect to find more of the same kind. There is considerable fun, as well as pleasure, in going for this kind of people strategetically through the mail. One of the parties was the wife of my superior in the employ of this company as general coal agent, and he let the cat out by telling the clerk in his office how nice the Infidels were getting up stories to disturb the minds of Christian women. I knew at once his wife had read 'John's Way.' I also know that she is a conscientious woman, and, as such, could not help but read the story.

"THE TRUTH SEEKER is so well known in this city that such women would not touch anything with this name on it."

The London Freethinker is of the opinion that the ANNUAL "is excellently gotten up. It is neatly and well illustrated. In addition to the usual features of an almanac, it givs names and dates of the birth and death of celebrated Freethinkers. It contains a number of articles by American Freethinkers; but perhaps the most interesting feature or features are the well-executed portraits of thirty-seven prominent American advocates of Freethought."

The National Reformer has "just received the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC for 1885, specially interesting as giving thirty-seven portraits of prominent American Freethinkers. It givs an interesting account of Freethought in America in 1884."

Kedarnath Basu, editor of the Berhampur, India, Universe, writes to us:

I hav just finished reading my friend Remsburg's "Bible Morals." Remsburg is, I think, the Thomas Paine of our time. His style is pleasing and arguments incontrovertible. His "Bible Morals" is a terrible arraignment of Bible morals. The whole catalog of crimes in the calendar sanctioned by the "inspired" work of "God," the "(un) Holy Bible," has been completely unveiled. I do not think any honest man or woman, whether Christian or Infidel, will ever believe the Bible to be the conservator of morals after perusing the pages of this brochure. This is a splendid book for propagandist work, and every well-wisher of humanity should own one for the benefit of their Christian neighbors I wish it sown broadcast all over the world, wherever Christianity has gained a foothold, as it is sure to cool down the overheated, hysterical brains of the Christian sky-pilots. Remsburg's "Bible Morals" and "False Claims" will do immense good wherever introduced. These two works will explode Christianity, as well as the imperious assumptions of the Christian zealots. I will do all I can to bring the works of friend Remsburg to the notice of my countrymen, and will advertise them in my journal free of cost, and will publish an Indian edition of them, if Remsburg will not take any objection to my so doing.

Lucifer, which after this time is to be a weekly at a slightly advanced price, has not room "to giv even a brief outline of the many attractiv features of the THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL." Which proves, as we hav always contended, that the ANNUAL is an exceedingly valuable publication, for Lucifer is quite a good-sized paper.

Ella E. Gibson has read the many reviews of Miss Wixon's "All in a Lifetime," and "wishes to add her feeble testimony in praise of the book." It givs us pleasure to convey this information to the public. Our happiness can be deepened by receiving orders for the book at $1.50 each.

Of Miss Wixon and "The Story Hour" the Banner of Light says: "The author is well known as a Liberalist and a writer of some very excellent articles for the Liberal press. The stories and sketches in this volume originally appeared in the youth's department of the New York TRUTH SEEKER, and are published in this form to meet a demand for a book adapted to the young that, while pleasing, will awaken healthy thought, and stimulate to right endeavor. Nothing objectionable to our readers, or to any free, progressiv mind, mars its handsome pages; the hundred engravings are large and beautiful, and its typography is of the best. Those in search of a book for the young will be pleased with this." In our ALMANAC for 1885 the Banner finds much to commend: "Liberalism finds earnest advocacy in this by such writers as Colonel Ingersoll, T. B. Wakeman, Courtlandt Palmer, George Macdonal, Elizur Wright, Susan H. Wixon, and Horace Seaver. Among its many engravings is one covering two pages, of the monument at Greenwood in memory of D. M. Bennett, with a description and the sentences upon it, one of which is this from Mr. Bennett's writings:

"'I can hardly yield my consent that this is the last of our individuality; and I fondly think that Father and Mother Nature are able to accomplish the best, greatest, and most desirable of all problems—a continued individual existence. But I am borrowing no trouble from it.'",

NOW READY!

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED

LITHOGRAPHS

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, 22½ x 28½.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it: "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of th Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 169 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents: cloth, 75 cents.

The Legends of the Patriarchs. By S. BARING-GOULD. $1.50. The Congregationalist, in speaking of it, says: "There are few Bible readers who hav not at some time wished for just such a volume. It is a thoroughly interesting book, and will be seized with avidity by all students of the Bible.

The Martyrdom of Man. Embracing the four divisions of War, Religion, Liberty, and Intellect A work of rare merit, and written in a superior style. By WINWOOD READE. New edition. 544 pages. Price reduced from $3 to $1.75.

The Old Faith and the New. A Confession. By DAVID FRIEDERICH STRAUSS, author of the "New Life of Jesus," etc. Authorized translation from the sixth German edition. By MATHILDE BLIND. Two volumes in one. The translation revised and partly rewritten, and preceded by an American version of the authors "Prefatory Postscript." Strauss is too well known by the readers of America to require a single word to be said in his praise. Price, $1.50.

The Outcast. A deep, finely-written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of "Martyrdom of Man." 30 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. Both sides fairly and ably presented. By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Radical Pulpit. Comprising discourses of advanced thought. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER, two of America's clearest thinkers. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM: The New Song of Christmas, The Departed Years, Life as a Test of Creed, Apocryphal Books of the New Testament, The Sectarian Spirit, The American Gentleman, The Language of the Old Testament, The Dogma of Hell, The Value of the Higher Sentiments, The American Lady, The Consolations of Rationalism. By FELIX ADLER: The Ethics of the Social Question, Emancipation, Lecture at the Second Anniversary of the Society for Ethical Culture, Our Leaders, Hav We Still a Religion? Conscience. Price, in cloth, $1.

The Real Blasphemers. By Col. J. R. KELSO, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Containing forms for organizing societies, marriage, funeral services, naming of infants, obituary notices, epitaphs, etc. Also 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic hymns for public meetings, funerals, social gatherings, etc. To which are added beautiful recitations for various public occasions. 550 pp. Cloth, 75 cents.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

MONKS, POPES,

AND

THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A NEW BOOK OF DIRECTIONS

FOR

CLEANSING THE BLOOD,

And Curing all forms of Disease that the Human Family is Subject to,
Without the Use of Any Medicine Whatever.

By Professor Nathaniel Pierce.

Price, 30 Cents.

6tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Five numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

"REPUBLIC."

[Published in the rapidly growing young city, on Longfellow's "mountain of the prairie," Pipestone, Minn.]

Eight pages, weekly, $1.50 a year. Contains the news of the day, short stories, scientific miscellany, literary selections—but best of all, the REPUBLIC is unqualifiedly, uncompromisingly opposed to the LIQUOR TRAFFIC! It puts LIBERTY AGAINST LIQUOR! It opens its columns to Free Discussion. It challenges all opponents to meet it on the burning question of our time, PROHIBITION! The plea, that legal Prohibition annihilates PERSONAL LIBERTY will be met and refuted. All opponents to Prohibition will be accorded the right to reply. This is the WORKINGMAN'S REPUBLIC. And an advocate of WOMAN SUFFRAGE. When the mothers, wives, and daughters vote there will be an end to the RUM CURSE! When women vote we will hav a true Republic, and never before. The REPUBLIC is published to disseminate these principles. Shall we receive your aid?

Send all remittances to

W. F. JAMIESON, Editor and Publisher,
PIPESTONE, MINN.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. McDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By WILLIAM McDONNELL, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.

The Darwins. A Domestic Radical story. By Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office

FACTS.

A Magazine Devoted to the Statements of Mental and Spiritual Phenomena.

Single Copies 10 cents.

39tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S

Popular Jewelry Store

Rochelle, Ill.

A FEW OF MY PRICES;

Solid silver stem-winding American Watches, hunting or open case; 2 oz. 7 jeweled, $10; 3 oz., $11; 4 oz. $12; 5 oz. $14. Same cases with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13.50, $14.50, $16.50. Same case with full (15) jeweled movement, patent regulator, $17, $18, $19, $21. Same cases, with full jeweled adjusted patent regulator movements, $22, $23, $24, $26; key wind, $2 to $5 less; for best cases, silver caps and gold joints add $1.50, and for best filled gold cases (warranted for 20 years) add $10 to best silver cases, making a 11 jeweled hunting (filled case) stem-wind quick train watch only $28; same for ladies, $23. Ladies' solid gold stem-wind watches, latest styles, good American 11 jeweled moyements, 10 kt, $24; 14 kt, $32; same full jeweled, $32 and $40—for fancy engraving add $3 to $5.

Prices and specifications for finer ladies' and gents' watches, including all the finest, richest, and most elaboratly finished watches in the world, sent upon application.

Watches cleaned for $1; main springs, $1. Bank time-locks, chronographs, music boxes, etc., repaired at lowest rates, and all work warranted the best in the world or no pay.

Best steel spectacle made, $1; genuin pebbles, $2; good common, 25 cents. Best tripleplated teaspoons, $2; tablespoons, $4; knives, $1.75; forks, $1.75—all per set of six.

Parties desiring silverware, jewelry, diamonds, etc., for presents will do well to order sample package on selection and save money. Cash will be refunded on all goods not satisfactory.

Watches, etc., may be safely sent in unsealed packages per registered mail, and will be returned at my expense. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

P. S.—Stop over and see me when near Rochelle, Ill.

ELEMENTS

OF

UNIVERSAL HISTORY

FOR

HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline, history the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1883, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PROSE POEMS

And Selections,

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued.

It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author.

The work is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it.

In the more elegant styles of binding, this volume is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.

In workmanship the volume is a masterpiece. The type is large and beautiful; the paper heavy and richly tinted; the presswork faultless; and the binding, as perfect as the best materials and skill can produce. The book is quarto in size, and contains 248 pages. No item of expense has been spared to make the work worthy of author and public.

PRICES:

Silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side,	$2 50
Half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style,	4 50
Full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine,	7 50
Full tree calf, highest possible style and finish,	9 00

Sent to any address, postpaid, on receipt of price. THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

CHRISTIANITY

A REWARD FOR CRIME.

Substantiated by the Bible.

BY

O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.

Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

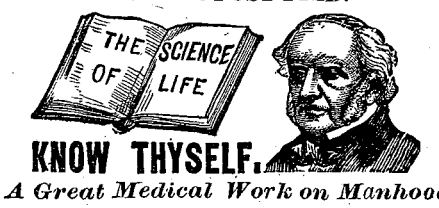
PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,

WITH AUTOGRAPH,

Price, 20 cents.



CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,

Price, 40 Cents.

Address this Office.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.

BY MAIL POST-PAID.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14

HEAL THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humoug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y8

ONE MILLION COPIES will soon be sold TWENTY YEARS

OF CONGRESS—By James G. Blaine. The only history of our Government from 1861 to 1881. Hon. John S. Wise, M. C. from Va., says: Whoever takes it up, no matter whether he be Mr. Blaine's friend or enemy, will never put it down until he has read the whole." $200 per month to good agents. Apply at once, The Henry Bill Pub. Co., Norwich, Ct.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

Will Cure all Forms of Disease Without Medicine.

CONSULTING ROOMS,

471 WEST MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Something for Invalids to read and study over.—Stop Drugging and try Nature's Remedy, MAGNETISM.

For years past it has been known to the profession that Magnetism and Electricity were powerful agents for imparting vital force and energy to the worn-out sufferer from disease. Many humanitarians in the profession, thinking more of the alleviation of suffering than they did of the code of ethics by which they were bound, have resorted to magnetic treatment as a last resort and found themselves astonished at the effect upon their patients. They had been taught that medicine was an absolute essential in all cases, and that that failing, the patient must die, as nothing more could be done. Here and there an advanced thinker has flung aside the tie which bound him to his dogmatic brethren and has resorted to other and more scientific methods of treatment. As a result many, having broken the bonds which bound them to a system as barbarous as it was unscientific, have used their best energies to devise means for the alleviation of human suffering. Here and there the wondrous power of MAGNETISM was established, and many diseases hitherto classed as incurable readily submitted to its mild but potent influence. This agent to the intelligent observer was found everywhere. Being, as it is, the very essential of all life, it was found that the human body when in a diseased condition was almost bereft of this vital principle. If we can supply this vital force to the worn-out body the patient will get well.

Ah! but how is it to be done, says the physician. Science, however, came to the rescue, and solved the problem. Here and there throughout the world are fields of what are known as magnetic ore. It was observed that the ore, when carried upon the person, was found to be a safeguard against disease, and to this circumstance we are largely indebted for magnetic wearing apparel, for it was an easy transition from carrying magnetic ore to covering the body with permanently charged magnets, placed in garments fitted to every part of the body. Since the first introduction of magnetic appliances as a curative, there has been a number of these so-called magnetic garments foisted upon the public by men whose sole object was gain. Unscientific in construction, and having little if any magnetism in them, their life was of short duration; it was long enough, however, to demonstrate that when constructed upon scientific principles there was scarcely an ailment that human flesh is heir to that would submit to their healing influence.

THE EUREKA MAGNETIC APPLIANCES are superior to everything of a similar character heretofore offered to the public, being the only scientifically constructed appliance in the market; it is now two and a half years since they were first offered to the public, and during that time we hav treated thousands of patients, and not a single case of failure to receive benefit reported to us, while we are in daily receipt of testimonials of cures from all parts of the country. We know that disease cannot exist where these garments are worn in quantities as advised by us.

To all who may be afflicted with any of the following complaints, we say unhesitatingly, the Eureka Magnetic Garments will cure you:—Paralysis, Rheumatism, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Bleeding at the Lungs, Spinal Disease, Gout, Asthma, Bronchitis, Congestion of the Kidneys, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Loss of Energy, Heart Disease, Constipation, Consumption, Prolapsus Uteri, Chronic Peritonitis, Cancer, Ovarian Tumors Syphilis, Epilepsy, St. Vitus' Dance, and all form of chronic invalidism.

PRICE LIST.

Lung Invigorators,	$ 6 00
Gentlemen's Body Belts,	6 00
Sciatic Appliances,	5 00
Knee Caps,	3 00
Leg Belts,	4 00
Anklets,	4 00
Shoulder Appliances,	4 00
Wristlets, each,	1 50
Hat Bands,	1 00
Head Caps,	4 00
Sleeping Caps,	4 00
Abdominal Belts (ladies),	6 00
Gents' Vests,	15 00
Ladies' Jacket and Corset (combined),	18 00
Superfine Insoles (all leather),	1 00

While these garments can be procured at the above low prices no one can afford to be ill. Our ladies' supporters are just what every lady in the land needs, as it will be found a great assistance at certain periods; all these garments are made to measure, and a fit guaranteed. To ladies who have all dragged out a combination jacket and corset will restore you to new life and energy, and pay for itself an hundred fold in a few weeks' wear. This garment is only made from actual measure, and a perfect fit assured.

All communications answered free of charge. Address, DR. L. TENNEY, 471 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill. ☞ Agents wanted for Boston, New York Brooklyn, and Philadelphia.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Gems of Thought.

IF each will make a little change in the direction of reform and improvement, the aggregate of the gain will be great indeed. If each person adds but one good deed to the monument of excellence, its magnitude will be greatly augmented. Knowledge, the right disposition, and effort are the necessary agencies to lead to this result. Without knowledge, without the right disposition and the proper effort, little progress can be made. This effort and this proper disposition should be widespread, and not confined to a few. If everyone will do a little it will be easy for all, and great good will be accomplished. If all pull in one direction a great body can be moved along. Everyone who shows a disposition to help in any good work encourages every other person who is disposed in the same direction; it also has its effect upon the indifferents and brings them to hav a similar disposition.—D. M. Bennett.

THE world is full of good advice,
Of prayer and praise and preaching nice;
But generous souls who aid mankind
Are like to diamonds, hard to find.

Giv like a man, and speak in deeds;
A noble life's the best of creeds;
And he shall wear a royal crown
Who givs a lift when men are down.

BIBLICAL scholars are generally agreed that there is no indisputable evidence in the entire books of the Old Testament that the doctrin of the immortality of the soul and a future life was known to the early Jews. It is an idea which gradually gained currency among philosophers and was emphasized by Jesus and his apostles. It was not revealed by them, for it was believed before their day. If, when it was made known, it was received by way of direct revelation from God, it may rightly be asked why God, who talked with men, kept such useful knowledge carefully concealed for many ages, and let his friends, the men after his own heart, liv and die in ignorance of so important a truth, virtually deceiving them as to the facts of their existence. But the late attainment of the idea is explained if we accept the theory that it is a higher intellectual conception than the earlier races of men were capable of exercising, and has been developed from the advancing mind of man. As to the proof of its truth, there is none beyond the fact of its belief; there is no evidence of a future life that will bear the test of examination; but there are strong analogies of nature and an intense yearning in man [Is this natural or artificial?] which stimulate the hope that death does not end all.—R. G. Adams (Index, Sept. 21, 1882).

IN the living subject change is wont to be gradual; thus, while the serpent sheds its old skin, the new is already formed beneath. Little knowest thou of the burning of a World-Phœnix, who fanciest that she must first burn out, and lie as a dead cinerous heap; and therefrom the young one start up by miracle, and fly heavenward. Far otherwise! In that Fire-Whirlwind, creation and destruction proceed together; ever as the ashes of the old are blown about do organic filaments of the new mysteriously spin themselvs; and amid the rushing and the waving of the Whirlwind element come tones of a melodious death-song which end not but in tones of a more melodious birth-song.—Sartor Resartus.

WHAT stuff is this!
Old writers pushed the happy season back—
The more fools they—we, forward; dreamers, both;
You most, that in an age when every hour
Must sweat her sixty minutes to the death,
Liv on (God love us!) as if the seedsman, rapt
Upon the teeming harvest, should not plunge
His hand into the bag; but well I know
That unto him who works, and feels he works,
The same grand year is ever at the door.
—Tennyson's Golden Year.

WHEN it is a matter of fact that you are investigating, emotion should utterly be set aside. And yet is it not true that, concerning some of the grandest matters of fact that now divide the thinking world, it is not evidence that decides, it is not brain; it is only feeling, passion, love, hate? Take the matter, for example, of the character and real facts of the life of Jesus. Either Jesus was born of a virgin by miraculous conception or he was not; it is a matter of simple fact. He rose from the dead and ascended bodily into heaven, or he did not—it is a matter of simple fact. He wrought a miracle, on a certain occasion, raising the dead and multiplying the quantity of food for those that were hungry, or he did not—it is a matter of fact. And yet how many people are there that hav taken sides, one way or the other, without having ever made the slightest attempt to settle it as a matter of fact! It is a question of feeling, of love or hate; it is a matter of desire or of prejudice. And yet feeling has no right in this court. It is a matter of historic verity or falsehood, to be decided by the evidence.—M. J. Savage.

How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Fie on it! ah, fie! 'tis an unweeded garden,
That grows to seed; things rank and gross in nature
Possess it merely. —Shakspere's Hamlet.

I QUESTION whether the whole system of professing Christians is not based in a mistake; whether it be not an error to strive after "spirituality"—after a frame of mind, that is, which is attainable only by incessant conflict with the instincts of our unsophisticated nature; by macerating the body into weakness and disorder; by disparaging what we see to be beautiful, know to be wonderful, feel to be unspeakably dear and fascinating; by, in a word, putting down the nature which God has given us, to struggle after one which he has not bestowed. Man is sent into the world, not a spiritual but a composit being, a being made up of body and mind—the body having, as is fit and needful in a material world, its full, rightful, and allotted share. Life should be guided by a full recognition of this fact; not denying it, as we do, in bold words, and admitting it in weaknesses and in inevitable failings.—Greg's Creed of Christendom.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P. Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,

ORTHODOXY.

A Lecture by

Col Robert G. Ingersoll.

"The clergy know that I know that they know that they do not know."

One of the best documents to circulate ever printed. Every man, woman, and child in the United States should read it. Every reader of the paper should send for a dozen.

Price, singly, 10 cents; twelve for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

INGERSOLL CATECHISED;

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies for a dollar. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."

Proving conclusivly that

THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST

His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth

TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

COMPLETE WORKS, in One Volume. Half calf, 5.00

THIRD EDITION.

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

1 Vol. Royal 8vo. Cloth. About 600 pages.

Price, - - - - - - $3.00

Sent postpaid, on receipt of price, Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Odds and Ends.

LANGUAGE, you know, was given to man to conceal his thoughts, and you never realize it so intensely as you do when you see the minister sit down violently just after his heel has found a square inch or so of ice under the snow, and hear him mildly ejaculate, "Dear me!"

HE was a senior, and was giving a young lady a sleigh-ride in the vacation. He mentioned that he was connected with a paper at college. She thought that seemed absurd, and when he looked surprised, added that he "hadn't shown much familiarity with the press." He took the hint.

PATRICK (a good church-member): "Oi hear, Moike, that yez ate mate lasht Friday." Moike: "Oi did, Patrick, but oi was dhrunk an' did not know phat oi wuz doin'." Patrick: "Shure an' that's no excuse. If whisky has that effect on yez, Moike, yez ought niver to get dhrunk on Friday."

SAID little Arthur, a little four-year-older, "Mamma, why do people wear spectacles?" "Because their eyes are not good." "Why are they not good?" "Because they are born so." "What is born?" "Why, God makes them so they cannot see well." "Well, why don't God make them with spectacles, then?"

SHOULD SKATING-RINKS BE ABOLISHED?

There is a great diversity of opinion abroad in the land in regard to the morality of the skating-rink. Among its strongest opponents are clergymen, theatrical managers, and saloon and pool-room keepers. One preacher goes so far as to assert that "the rink is more deadly than the gambling-hell." But that, of course, depends upon how hard the skater falls. It is seldom that a fall in the rink proves fatal, while it not infrequently happens that the man who loses his money in a gambling-hell blows out his brains, and nothing could be more "deadly" than that.

The advocates of the rink are legion, and many arguments are advanced in its behalf. The knowledge that their sons are reveling in the ups and downs of the new craze would not deprive some parents of ten minutes' sleep, while the fear that their boys are enjoying the fascinations of the gambling-hell would drive sleep from their eyes for hours.

It is not our intention to either denounce or praise the rink. We merely present herewith a few facts, pro and con, which hav been gleaned from the news of the day, and let our readers draw their own inference. The rink is responsible for the annexed paragraphs:

A married woman who was an invalid for years, and was given up by the doctors, became a frequenter of the rink, and in two months gained seventy-five pounds. She is now strong enough to grab her husband by the collar and bump his head against the door-jamb when he opposes her wishes. Her husband says the rink is an institution for evil and should be squelched.

After an acquaintance of six weeks, a poor but respectable young woman married a man to whom she was introduced at a roller-skating rink. Instead of proving to be a worthless adventurer, he turned out to be a man of good sense, worth $150,000. Her parents think the rink is a greater blessing than the church.

A man took his wife's mother to the rink, because, he said, it was a shame to leave her at home while he and his wife were enjoying themselvs. Then he encouraged her to put on the skates, assuring her that there was not a particle of danger. She is now laid up with a broken leg, and her son-in-law, who goes to the rink alone and skates with his young lady friends, says that if preachers were to put themselvs in his place, they would not denounce the rink.

One night recently a young lady went to the rink, and on the same evening her more pious sister attended a prayer-meeting. About half-past eight o'clock a cold rain set in and continued all night. A young man with an umbrella escorted the rink-loving sister home. The prayer-meeting girl was obliged to return alone through the rain. She caught a heavy cold, and died two days later of pneumonia. All the young men and their umbrellas were at the rink; hence the new craze was the indirect cause of her death. The rink should go.

The proprietor of a pool-room returned home the other evening with a rueful countenance, and gloomily said:

"Well, wife, we must economize. I can't let you hav the twenty-five dollars I promised to giv you to purchase a new spring bonnet, and you will hav to make your last summer's silk do another season."

"Why, William, what's the matter?" asked his startled wife: "Hav you been robbed?"

"No—yes—that is, I hav been robbed by this new craze which is jeopardizing the souls of the youth of our land. Since the skating-rink opened my pool-tables are deserted, and I might as well close up. I agree with the preachers that the rink is more deadly than the gambling-hell."

A married woman in Dashville became infatuated with roller-skating; also with a roller-skating "professor." She eloped with the latter, and her deserted husband mourns because the skating craze did not strike that town four years earlier.

A clergyman preached a powerful sermon against the skating-rink, declaring that it was more harmful than the gambling-den. On the following night the clergyman's son, who had intended to visit the rink, concluded, as a dutiful son should hav done, to obey his father, and of the two evils choose the lesser. He therefore went to the gambling-den, and lost eight hundred dollars which his father had recently received from a donation-party.

The daughter of a New Jersey millionaire made arrangements to elope with her father's coachman. A few nights before the time named for the flight she accompanied a friend to a skating-rink, where she was introduced to a professional trick-skater, with whom she eloped on the night she had arranged to light out with the coachman. She was discarded by her parents. Her husband went to a Western city, and opened a skating-rink. He is now richer than his father-in-law, and his wife is so haughty and uppish in consequence that she refuses to recognize her parents.—Puck.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 16. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, April 18, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Roman Catholic churches of the diocese of Massachusetts, under the direction of the bishop, will hereafter sell seats at every mass.

IN the "keys" south of Dayton, Florida, there are trees called machineels, which are said to be poisonous to any one standing beneath them when the dew is falling.

LUMINOUS trees are reported to be growing in a valley near Tuscarora, Nevada. At certain seasons the foliage givs out sufficient light to enable anyone near at hand to read small print, while the luminous general effect may be perceived some miles distant. The phenomenon is attributed to parasites.

A LOWELL man whipped out his memorandum book in church the other Sunday, and took down this remarkable thanksgiving from the lips of his scientific clergyman: "We thank thee, O Lord, that we are permitted to unwind the mighty coil of material circumstances, and gaze into the everlasting abysses where flaming comets roll."

THERE is no financial nonsense about the Presbyterian pastor at Palmyra, Mo. On the first day of each month he draws his check upon the bank for his monthly salary in advance, and the bank regularly honors the check and charges it up to the deacons, who are personally responsible for the salary. Thus no delay or default in paying the subscriptions can affect him.

"BELOVED brethren," remarked a country minister at the close of his sermon, "among the pennies and two-cent pieces of last Sabbath's collection I was surprised to find a gold coin of considerable value. As there were no strangers in the congregation, it was evidently put there by mistake. By applying to the treasurer and proving property the owner can recover his money. Let us unite in prayer."

LIKE many non-professors of religion, President Cleveland has an almost ideal reverence for certain of its forms and appliances. For instance, he thinks a great deal of being prayed for in churches. When he was governor at Albany and his sister had chanced to attend church some Sunday when he did not, his question to her on her return would be, "Did the minister pray for me to-day, Lizzie?" Not even the superserviceable pliancy to the Blaine Juggernaut manifested by those eight Buffalo ministers, who originated the most infamous attack upon him ever made upon a presidential candidate, has seared his heart against this reverent liking to be prayed for, as I chance to know.—Boston Post.

SPAIN has, like some other Catholic powers, two embassadors in Rome—one accredited to the Quirinal, the other to the Vatican; and as they both liv in the same building, the Spanish embassy is, from the official point of view, a house divided against itself. The king was invited the other day to visit the exhibition of pictures opened in the embassy for the benefit of the Granada sufferers, and it was at first arranged that he should pass through the antechamber of the suite of rooms occupied by the embassador accredited to the pope. As soon, however, as the contemplated profanation came to the knowledge of the Vatican, it provoked such a vehement protest that the arrangement was abandoned, and a new door was specially opened in the building for the king and queen.

A LONDON paper says: "The bishop of Liverpool, by refusing to forbid the consecration of St. Agnes's Church, in which it is expected that Ritualistic services will be held, has drawn down upon himself a perfect frenzy of abuse from the Low Church party, which has hitherto looked upon him as its leading champion. No language is too strong for these fanatics. One journal heads a black-bordered article with the legend, 'Mournful death of Bishop Ryle's Evangelical and Protestant principle, which expired at the consecration of St. Agnes's amid demoniacal shouts of joy from the priestly pit and wails of woe from the angels of God.' Elsewhere he is spoken of as worthy of 'only contempt and disdain,' being guilty of 'blasphemous impiety,' and of offering up 'lying prayers.' The consecration is also alluded to as a 'traitorous and godless ceremony,' from which 'he who hates and abhors the temples of idolatry withheld his blessing.'"

SOME interesting discoveries hav been made in Florida by Prof. Lawrence Johnson, of the United States Geological Survey. Just South of Alachua county line he found several specimens and skeletons of animals which relativly belong to a not far distant period. In piles, and somewhat mixed, there were the remains of a mastodon, two or three specimens of the rhinoceros, a large stag; a camel, fully as large as the Arabian camel, but in structure more allied to the llama; also a tapir very much like the South American tapir, which livs in swampy places; two teeth of some carnivorous animal allied to the tiger and panther; one set of teeth and bones of a hippopotamus; several crocodiles or alligators, and innumerable other bones not identified. Apparently the territory south of Alachua was at one time a large fresh-water lake.

A PROMINENT railroad freight agent in this state is an activ Episcopalian and vestryman in the church in the little town where he livs. One day, when business was crowding, a man came in who purposed starting a mill at a small town along the road which had to pay much more for freight than towns further along the route paid—in other words, it suffered the usual short-haul discrimination. The visitor pleaded and argued, but of course in vain. Still he held on, and with his persistency he pretty well wore out the limited patience of the agent, besides keeping other people waiting who had also called on business. Finally he left, and the next man stepped up. "Well, sir," said the irritated agent, "whereabouts is your d——d grist-mill?" "I, sir," was the meek reply, "am the rector to whom you wrote about conducting service next Sunday."—Hartford Courant.

"THE prayer," says London Justice, "recently issued by the archbishop of Canterbury for use in the English churches is a very extraordinary document. The assurance with which the petitioner assumes that our Egyptian policy is a just one is really astounding, and the whole petition is worthy to be classed with the archbishop of York's immortal sentiment, 'Teach us to see that thy hand hath done it,' which was written in reference to a similar affair of national brigandage. In the mean time it is instructiv to note the other side of the question. While the archbishop is adjuring God to 'take into thine own hand both them [our soldiers] and the cause wherein their queen and country send them,' the Mahdi is equally confident that the blessing of providence is on his cause. 'God has made him glorious,' wrote one of the Mahdi's governors, in reference to the fall of Khartoum—'Be grateful, and thank God and praise God for his unspeakable mercy.' This conflict of religious sentiment is a little embarrassing. Which are we to believe? The prelate of Canterbury or the prophet of the Soudan?"

A. P. KELLY writes in the last Liberty: "During a short term of residence in Lowell, I noticed that a large proportion of the inhabitants were regular attendants at church. The religiosity of the community struck me as somewhat phenomenal. It was apparently a priest-ridden city, and therefore not a very promising field for Anarchistic labors. But I made a discovery which indicated that the people were more completely under the control of the corporations than I had supposed. In the Boott Cotton Mills are posted printed regulations, from which I quote two significant paragraphs: 'The company recommend regular attendance on public worship on the Sabbath, as they consider it necessary for the preservation of good order and morals.' 'These regulations are considered part of the contract with all persons entering into the employment of the Boott Cotton Mills.' Nothing less than an order to slaves from masters to attend church. It is part of the contract, all the terms of which are fixed by one party. The gentlemen who build mills and kindly permit skilled workers to toil for them are much concerned for the welfare of the drudges. They recommend frugality and cut down wages to compel the workers to practice the virtue, and then they send the poor devils to church that they may learn humility and obedience. The capitalists consider it necessary for the preservation of morals that the workingmen and women should hav no day of recreation, no time to think and study for themselvs. When their bellies are empty and clamorous, the drudges may seek the consolations of religion, which teaches them that poverty is a virtue and their reward will come in the heavenly hereafter. But for the beneficent influence of the church and the teachings of priests, the poor, swindled workers might demand the reward of their labor in this life and greatly embarrass the pious proprietors of the Boott Mills."

ONE of Philadelphia's leading physicians, a specialist in diseases of the lungs, says that imperfect respiration is at the bottom of much trouble. In such a case he shows the patient how to swell out the whole chest full and round by a deep inspiration, elevating and throwing back the shoulders; and then, when he has gotten into his lungs the last atom of air possible, to hold it in tightly for a little time, and then to let it off slowly, blowing out every atom of it if he possibly can by forcible expiration, drawing the shoulders forward and pressing in the chest to the smallest possible compass, thus throwing out almost all of the residual air, and all this through the nose, with mouth tightly closed. "Let him take a half-dozen or more such forced respirations a dozen times a day," says the doctor, "and he will soon double his vital capacity and relieve himself of most of his supposed chest trouble. Such forced respiration will compel every air cell possible to freely admit wholesome air into the little spaces, and to expel it also, and some air cells that do not often perform their functions healthily will be compelled to do so."

THE Sun of this city last Sunday published this dispatch from Toronto. We hope our Canadian correspondent will giv us the true inwardness of it: "Much excitement was caused in Masonic circles here to-day when it was known that a member of King Solomon Lodge had been expelled on account of his lack of faith in the divinity. For some months past a special committee of the lodge, which is about the oldest and best lodge of the order in Canada, has been working up a case against J. Harrison, a prominent business man here, against whom a charge of Atheism was preferred in the beginning of the year by a fellow-member. The accusation against Mr. Harrison was that he did not believe in the existence of a God. Harrison did not know that members of the committee were watching him. Although a strong Agnostic, he had never openly declared his views, and some trouble was experienced in substantiating the charge against him. Several members, however, obtained good evidence that he had expressed his views to certain friends, and last evening, at the regular meeting of the lodge, a charge against him was formally made, and he was expelled from the lodge room, and his name was struck off the roll of membership. This is the first case of the kind that ever happened here, and the action of the lodge has caused much speculation among the craft in the city. Harrison, it is understood, alleges that he is not an acknowledged Atheist. He says that he is willing to follow as far as proof will lead him, and that he is willing to admit the existence of a God if the evidence of the existence of such a being can be given to him. This belief, he contends, constitutes the creed of an Agnostic. He does not deny the existence of a God, and therefore is not an Atheist. Harrison threatens to bring action against the lodge to compel them to acknowledge his eligibility for membership. He says that Bradlaugh is a member of the Masonic lodge in England, and that he holds the same views as Bradlaugh. Officers of the lodge contend that their action in expelling Harrison was perfectly in accord with the rite or constitution of the order, and that it was sanctioned by Grand Master Spry. The fundamental principle of Masonry, they say, is absolute belief in the existence of a deity, and failing in that belief, no one can be admitted into their fellowship."

News of the Week.

IMMIGRANTS to the number of 2,386 landed at this port last Saturday.

DEATHS in this city last week numbered 740; births, 525; marriages, 194.

JUDGE MORGAN, at Albion, Idaho, has ruled that Mormons are not eligible as jurors.

THE Mayor of Philadelphia has decided that there must be no more boxing matches in that city.

JAMES D. FISH, ex-president of the Marine Bank, of this city, has been sent to jail as a swindler.

THE war troubles in the East are expected to raise the price of American products, especially wheat.

MR. FRELINGHUYSEN, ex-secretary of state, was at latest accounts in a stupor from which he was not likely to recover.

THE grand jury of the third disr ict of Salt Lake City has found indictments against twenty-seven polygamists.

THE overseers of Harvard College hav just come to the decision that attendance at prayers is compulsory on the students of that institution.

RICHARD GRANT WHITE, the distinguished literary critic, is dead. He was the author of many valuable treatises on the use of the English language.

THE Prince of Wales is in Ireland. The Irish people meet him at some places with riot and at others with hospitality and demonstrations of great joy.

KATE SMULSEY, of Fort Plain, N. Y,. died on the 9th, after a fast, it is claimed, of nine months Death was caused, the doctors say, by consumption, and not by starvation.

PRAYER-MEETINGS were held in Princeton, N. J., in behalf of a candidate for mayor. The other man was elected. The defeated candidate now believes that religion and politics should be kept forever separate.

RUGG, the negro murderer, who strangled two women on Long Island and is in jail sentenced to be hanged, has embraced the Roman Catholic faith. Who shall say now that Christianity no longer claims the attention of the wise and good?

GENERAL GRANT continues without apparent change in his condition except that he is troubled in his sleep, and dreams of fighting again the great battles of the war. He is kept alive mainly by the administering of morphine in increasing quantities.

GEORGE MILLS, of Brooklyn, killed his wife in October, 1883, by stabbing her in the breast. He was hanged on the 10th inst. An hour previous to the execution religious services were held in his cell, in which he joined heartily, singing and praying.

MANY of the Methodist churches of New York had new pastors last Sunday, the late conference having just redistributed its ministerial geniuses according to the custom of itineracy. A church over in Brooklyn got the Rev. George R. Bristor at $600 per year.

A MEMBER of the family of the sister of the late Charles O'Conor denies that the distinguished lawyer was ever Anarchistic in his views, or that he declined the proffered services of a priest at his deathbed. At the time of his death the statement was published in Liberty that Mr. O'Conor sympathized with the aims of that paper, and substantiated by a letter supposed to hav been written by him.

RUSSIA and England are still growling at each other, with war apparently inevitable; the dominion of Canada is fighting the rebels in the northwest; China and France are not yet assured of peace; and there is war at the Isthmus of Panama. This all being regular and according to Christian civilization, no particular condemnation is expressed. The comparativly harmless individuals known as dynamiters, however, continue to attract attention on account of the atrocities which they wish others to think them willing to commit.

Communications.

Belief in God.

If there is anything at all certain in the advancement and progress of modern science, it is evinced in the fact of its upsetting all old or new theories regarding the government of the universe by a personal deity. There is naught more certain than this, that our hitherto preconceived opinions on this point fail to satisfy the mind, and that the nightmare of this superstition will be relegated to the past, and looked upon only as one of the guideposts that indicate by what road most of the race traveled in their process of evolution from lower to higher conditions. While we do not affirm that the universe is or is not controled by an all-embracing intelligence, we do affirm that all our old conceptions about an omniscient, omnipotent, omnipresent God exist only as a relic of barbarism, and will not bear the light of justice or reason.

As long as the human mind accepted without question the ipse dixit of the priest, it was an easy thing to mix in equal doses the love and vengeance of God, and administer it to the plastic souls of their devotees. It was an easy thing to assure the people that storms, earthquakes, famins, and plagues were visitations of God's wrath for their sins and disobedience. It was any easy thing to assure the poor slave and the oppressed millions that God had ordained them as "hewers of wood and drawers of water," and had appointed kings and priests to rule over them. If a beloved child died, or a father and mother passed away and left the world a legacy of orphans, it was easy to say that it was "God's will," and "his will be done." It was no wonder that priests imbued with such conceptions of a presiding deity could affirm that he, in accordance with his divine will and pleasure, did before the foundation of the world foreordain a certain portion of the human race to be heirs of light and immortality, to enjoy with him and his angels eternal life and happiness; that, in accordance with the same divine will and pleasure, he did predestin a certain number as reprobates, for immortal existence that should ultimate in an endless hell; and that the number of each class was so certain and definit that it could be neither increased nor diminished! Perhaps no single work has done more to undermine this great superstition than George Combe's "Constitution of Man." This work proved conclusivly that God could not violate the natural and organic laws of the universe; that all good or bad effects in any department of human existence were the results of obedience to, or violation of, organic or physical laws. Mr. Combe, like many others, builded better than he knew; for if all was irrevocable law, there was no need at all for a God in harmony with any taught conception. What preposterous folly to talk about the love of God, as related to human love, of divine compassion as compared to that of the human, of kind consideration for his offspring as compared to our love for ours, or the brute creation for theirs! Human love will suffer and endure to aid and protect its kind; human compassion will go so far as to bind up the wounds of an enemy, and human heroism will risk death in its worst form to rescue those whose lives are endangered. Brutes will defend their own with their lives, and under many circumstances put humanity to shame by their devotion and tenderness. Look where we will for the goodness of God, his care for suffering humanity, his answer to the prayers of the oppressed, down-trodden, and almost heart-broken millions, and we see nothing to inspire hope, nothing that justifies a belief in his existence. We are told that he hates oppression, that he will bring to naught the work of the wrong-doers. We are told that he numbers the very hairs of our heads, and takes note of every sparrow that falls; and while we raise no particular objection to this, we presume it accounts for his inability to attend to anything else.

What particular reason hav the toiling millions to waste time or spend any of their hard-earned means to keep up his earthly establishments? For it is certain he turns a deaf ear to their entreaties. He allows the robbers of the poor to revel in the pleasures and luxuries they hav extorted from the producers. He allows crime to go unpunished where wealth holds "high carnival," and allows the imprisonment of innumerable poor and destitute that were forced to steal or starve. With an attributed omnipotence and omniscience, he allows whole cities and districts to be destroyed by earthquakes, cyclones, and volcanoes, when a word, a breath, or a wave of the hand would stay the course and cause of the destruction. He suffers the great nations to destroy or oppress the weaker, and allows the creation of famins by robbers who take from the famishing bodies of the people the very food their own industry had produced. Talk about heathen superstition! talk about the poor benighted savages! Christianity can discount any form of superstition for the inhuman and monstrous. We understand that the laws and principles of nature will suffer no infringement without resultant consequences. We understand that in the physical department of nature there is neither love nor hate. Earthquakes, cyclones, siroccos, volcanoes, and every variety of storms are in harmony with the causes that produce them, and the most delicious airs, the most fertil sections, and the most lavish productions of forest, mountain, stream, river, and ocean are no more so. What we need is to utilize these blind forces that are favorable, and seek the means of avoiding those that we cannot control. We must welcome every source of assistance, and strive to map out a course free from the incubus of Christian superstition. We hav laid aside the Christian God; we hav laid aside those shackles, and it will be well for us if we do not adopt others that are almost as fatally deceptiv.

GEORGE LYNN.

Lockport, Ill., March 9, 1885.

The Oath.

Mr. Allen Pringle, of Selby, Ont., is an able and stanch supporter of Secularism, and the Canadian Liberals are fortunate in having the benefit of his assistance and advice, but on one point I cannot indorse his position, as set forth in his letter to the Toronto convention. He thinks we hav no right to demand that the judicial oath shall be abolished. He says: "This would very clearly (to my mind) be an encroachment upon the rights of Christians. Those people who conscientiously want to swear and take an oath to assist them to tell the truth ought by all means to be allowed to do so. And we hav no right, had we the power, to take so sweet a privilege from them." Mr. Pringle is a little too tender here. If the taking of the oath were simply a harmless privilege that in no way, directly or indirectly, concerned anybody but the Christians themselvs, we might properly pay no more attention to it than we do to the style of hats they may choose to wear. But we hav the right to demand the abolition of the oath because of the wrongs and injustice that one class of citizens are sure to endure as long as the oath is permitted. Even if Infidels shall be allowed to testify in all the states without any oath, the impression will still be fostered and intensified that such testimony is not so reliable and worthy of the same respect and confidence as the testimony of the man who calls "Gawd" to witness his acts; and it will be declared that the non-imposition of the oath upon unbelievers is a great favor to them and shows the abundant kindness of the Gawdites, unless the oath is wholly abolished. Sweep away the whole useless, idiotic, barbarous custom, transmitted from a barbarous age; then every man will stand on an exact equality when accepting an office or testifying in a court. The brazen, damnable injustice of rejecting a man's testimony solely because he does not believe in a God cannot be tolerated in this age. Whenever a man's testimony shall be rejected or weakened for this cause, I would bring the whole power of the American Secular Union to bear at that point and demand that that man's testimony shall be accepted before the case proceeds any further. Giv them to understand that the case must rest eternally right at that point unless the unbeliever's testimony shall be taken, and taken without any oath formality.

So much for the Infidels. Now, in regard to Christians, I believe that from the whole number I hav seen in my life, the number who "conscientiously want to swear" could be counted on the fingers of one hand. My observation has utterly failed to convince me that being sworn is regarded as a sweet privilege by the Christian man and brother. I hav noticed that he is vastly more eager to hav the other fellow sworn than to be sworn himself, if he thinks the other fellow's testimony is likely to be in any way damaging to him. "Swear him," they say when they want to frighten or confuse an ignorant individual. Much time is wasted—and very costly time, when we consider what courts are—in this oath formality, and that is an object to Christian and Infidel alike. Many Christians are now as willing as Liberals to hav the oath abolished.

Seeing men uniformly entering on official duties and testifying in courts without any recognition of any power higher than the people would hav great influence in Liberalizing the minds of the masses. What sane man, Christian or otherwise, believes that Cleveland will make any better president, or will perform one single official act in a better way or more honestly, during his whole term, because he "reverently" kissed the "small morocco-covered, gilt-edged volume, pretty well worn," that his mother gave him? What sane man believes that any officer ever performed his duty more honestly or efficiently, since this government was founded, by reason of the oath formality, or that any chronic liar was ever cured by the oath pill? Let us retain the Sixth Demand. There are a few cheering indications in the world of thought. The papers state that out of the seventy-six United States senators thirty-two are professors of religion, and sixteen of these are Presbyterians. If only thirty-two out of seventy-six are professors, and the House is "worldly" in like measure, certainly the secularization of the government ought not to be far off. It is also reported that the Congregational church in Central City, Col., has been rented for a roller-skating rink. Grace did not "abound" sufficiently to make it worth while to feed and clothe a shepherd longer. No doubt the assessor will be able to see that church now.

N. G. W.

Social Problems.—No. III.

I think it was Thomas Paine who said all religions consisted of two parts—a code of morals and the story of the universe. I shall leave the discussion of the latter part to you and your numerous and able contributors, and confine my remarks to the code of morals.

It is believed by scientists that each human being is composed of about three billions of cells, and that each cell may be considered as an independent being; that a human being may be considered, in a sense, as a vast community of cells, all originating from a single living cell derived from the parents; that the human body is developed by the division of this original cell, and by the continued division of the cells resulting from such division, and by the union of such cells into one grand community. Thousands of these cells die with every respiration, and thousands are brought into life in the same instant. In the blood these cells liv, in a sense, isolated and independent lives, as do fish in the waters of the earth, until called upon to take part in forming the solid portions of the body. Some are called upon to take proud positions in the brain, or eye, or ear, some to assist in forming the exquisit tints and features of the face, and others are called upon to take more humble positions in the feet. But upon the health and welfare of the cells in any one of all the parts of the body depend the comfort, health, and life of those in all the other parts and of the entire body.

Theologians hav generally taught the total depravity of man, but, as a rule, they hav been very reticent about the depravity of the social body. Indeed, the church has, in all ages, been inclined to teach the perfection of the social body, and even in the United States, near the close of the nineteenth century, they would hav us believe that God is the supreme ruler of the universe, and that the powers that be are ordained of God.

But to the thoughtful it is evident that the social body is not perfect, that it is not in a healthy condition. To prove this statement I will mention a few facts: 1. A great majority of the people in this country hav no land, no place on which to build a home, and are, consequently, in a homeless condition. 2. It is estimated that about 1,500,000 people are out of employment, hav nothing to do, and in a helpless and nearly starving condition with their families. 3. Our prisons, penitentiaries, poorhouses, insane asylums, are full to the overflowing, and the constant cry is for more room. 4. There is a great increase of crime. 5. We hav a country large enough to support and to giv employment to ten times our present population. 6. There is, probably, not a state in the Union where one-half of the land is occupied. In most states more than three-fourths of the land is bought up by speculators and held at a high price, so that the poor, who hav nothing to do, cannot find a place on which to raise their own food or erect their own shelter. 7. All around us we see land lying idle, besides thousands of people who can find nothing to do. 8. On the one hand we see many rising to wealth and great luxury whilst doing nothing, and on the other we see thousands toiling hard for long hours every day and hardly able to get enough to eat. Some are getting wealth without earning it, and others are earning it but not getting it.

The above are surely sufficient to prove that the social body is depraved and diseased, that very much of the individual depravity seen among men is due to constitutional or general causes, and that the treatment should be mainly directed to the social body. To try to giv a people employment whilst they are kept off of the land, is as foolish as to try to keep a cow from starving whilst a dog is keeping her from eating her food. The cow will starve whilst the dog keeps her from her food, and the dog will starve keeping the cow from eating. Similarly, idle land impoverishes the owner and starves those who should be improving it.

The great crime of society, the disease which threatens the very life of the social body, is the method of distributing the natural opportunities, the lands, the mines, etc. Whatever is the cause of the land lying idle is the cause of the people not finding anything to do. Whatever will cause those who own land to either put it to the highest use it can be put to, or else get off it and allow others to do so, will cure the evil of want of employment; and whatever will cure this evil will cure, or greatly lessen, all the other ills of the social body.

Having diagnosed the disease of the social body, and prescribed the remedy, it remains to giv directions as to how the medicin should be taken.

The remedy to help must compel all those who hav lands lying in either town or country, to either put them to their best possible use, or get off them and allow others to do it. I believe there is only one remedy that will do this, and that is high taxation of land. The tax should be whatever it would rent for. No taxes should be levied on any of the products of labor—as houses, barns, clothing, food. It is a fact that people do not rent land except when they want to use it, but they buy it when they do not want to use it. This is simply because we do not tax it high enough. Let us stop selling land, and do as they are now doing in New Zealand, rent the land to those who want to use it; and let us raise the rent on land values so high that it will not pay any one, as it now does, to keep it out of use.

This would do more to prevent crime than hundreds of judges and thousands of lawyers. Yes, it would do more than prisons and penitentiaries and scaffolds, and justices of the peace and policemen all combined. J. G. MALCOLM.

The Orthodox Symposium.

From that symposium of festiv church fathers spread by the dexterous hand of the Rev. W. G. T. Shedd, D.D., we wish to gather a few scattering crumbs. We should like also to shed forth some of the reflected and refracted rays which originate around this board of the ecclesiastical gods. The work is standard upon orthodox Christian doctrin. Therefore, in the estimation of the fraternity of the faithful, it must be perfectly reliable. We here find that, when the Christian craft first weighs anchor, Platonism is the gleaming figurehead beneath the bowsprit. This was afterward superseded by one robed in Aristotelian dress. We hav here two of the most prominent heathens figuring as beams to the great hog-chain of thought in the gospel ship. So that when one reads a record of the voyage as set forth in the introduction to the fourth synoptist, he is really at a loss to know whether he reads Plato or John. It reminds one of the Scotchman to whom a friend had recommended Plato. When they next met, the puzzled reader said: "What about this man Plato? It seems to me as though I hav read this in Emerson!" When we approach the other three, we are likely to experience a similar bewilderment as to whether we read Aristotle or Jesus.

At another time we hav, by way of variety, a Platonico-Aristotelian-synthesis banner floating from the masthead of this ship of many theological climes and complexions. In the very next tack is unfurled what is termed an Aristoteleo-Platonism. We presume that the flag was simply turned "t'other end to." This reversal placed the Platonic stars just in a diagonal position—that is, in the lower rear corner of the flag. Somewhere in the further voyage of the vessel she harbors in a port called the apologetic period. If, as is claimed for her, she was immaculate, perfectly seaworthy, well painted—not whitewashed—why should she not need to take aboard a whole cargo of full-fledged apologists? We apologize only for what is defectiv—questionable.

Her next coaling port is the polemic period. If she followed the orders of the ship's master, the prince of peace, so called, why did she convert herself into an omnipresent man-of-war, armed with howitzers and needle-guns to sink every other craft which carried different colors?

The seventh port, where she casts anchor to take on water (fresh, of course) is the scholastic period. If the ship's rigging is that simple system claimed for it, and its theological machinery so uncomplicated, why does it require a crew of schoolmen to explain the relation of part to part, and the chart by which she sailed? Or why need experts to manipulate the patent-right compass by which we must get at her bearings? The eighth stoppage is the systematizing period. We presume that in her previous voyagings she had encountered pretty heavy squalls, and so, in spite of her infallibility, needed readjustment—a sort of overhauling upon the dry dock of metaphysics.

The next point of arrival and departure is the mystic period. The probability is that the officers, in systematizing the craft, had made her, from bow to poop, too lucidly luminous with the light of mystery! As they did not experience any fog in the broad, open sea of humanity, they sought to manufacture some from the ship—anything to make plain sailing something like an effort. In those times there were any number of modern marine lights on the ecclesiastical waters which made darkness visible; but by creating a little too much fog they were compelled to shut down the valve called orthodox mysticism. They opened the other on the larboard, termed heterodox mysticism. But the sea began to clear away so rapidly that the passengers could see about as well or better than crew or captain. So it seems that they must hav hit upon a compromise by shutting down half-way the heterodox-mystic valve and opening up half-way the orthodox-mystic on the starboard. When they had rigged her upon the "'alf-and-'alf" principle, the officers thought they had it fine on the passengers and the roustabouts.

Thus might we continue ad infinitum. This mythological mess of ecclesiastical speculation is all the more grotesque, ludicrous, and astounding, because these medieval church-pundits were so very grave in discussing these "airy nothings." It never once occured to them that they ought to hav laughed in each other's faces when they met on the streets.

In the fourteenth century it seems as though these churchly savants were seized with a mania to cut up the ship not only into splinters, but also to reduce these splinters to atoms. With them analysis was a mammoth hobby on which could be seen riding a greater number of the church's children than that of young Arabs on the backs of a score of camels. The rage was for hair splitting. It should hav been copiously interspersed with rail-splitting! Duns Scotus, Occum, Gabriel Biel & Co., constituted one huge Sir Hudibras:

> "He could distinguish and divide
> A hair 'twixt south and southwest side."

In the most reverential manner possible, these meditators on the celestial would sit for days in solemn conclave, discussing whether it were possible for God to transform himself into a devil? We are persuaded that if they could get a glimpse of the character attributed to deity by some of the orthodox pulpits of to-day, they would concede the possibility without discussion. Another very fruitful problem was, whether God could assume the form of a gourd, and if so, how could this gourd preach? Had Brother Talmage lived in their day, they never would hav sprung two such questions. As to the style of the preaching gourd, it is constructed and manipulated upon the strictest acoustic principles, namely, the emptier the gourd the louder the rattle.

The third and yet most important question was whether God could experience transmigration into an ass? Well, if they themselves had been experiencing so long this process of evolution reversed, and yet had not come to a knowledge of their deific antecedent, they might to-day, could they but hear the Monday noon lecture at Tremont Temple, Boston, arrive at an affirmativ decision. Judging from the ponderous avoirdupois, contrasted with the light weight thought, Joseph could solve for the schoolmen not only this query, but another of equal importance, which, in the minds of these children of the early church, naturally grows out of it—namely, How long and loud that ass could bray? If Gabriel Biel, of four hundred years ago, were living to-day he would know that "Chief Joseph" can blow his own trumpet much more lustily than his angelic namesake, who came from God to Mary; that Gabriel could touch Daniel the prophet, but in the direction of the viva voce he can never touch Joseph the preacher.

Were we called upon for an opinion upon this subtle scholastic conundrum—but we cannot hope to be so honored—we should simply resort to the anecdotal argument. As this may be warmly applicable to many other pulpiteers than Boston's shining light, we reproduce it. You remember the memoir of that noisy but pious ass that, while the preacher one hot day was vociferously thundering away like a veritable Boanerges, poked his head through the open window, and brayed the very brains (ideas!) out of the speaker. A scholastic wag—he must hav been thoroughly saturated with heretical mysticism—rising to a point of order, thus addressed Mr. Donkey, "Stop, old boy; one at a time."

We are just getting ready to subside. However, the testimony of at least one orthodox father respecting these his venerable predecessors is that in their theological vision they became so lynx-eyed, even in the blackest midnight, that they could see things which never had any existence! Hence our sphinx riddle: Why is this orthodox church like its theory of the world's creation? Ans. Because out of nothing something came! ZOATOPSIS.

Our London Letter.

The little venture in the faith-healing line put forth by one of Booth's lieutenants has not turned out quite so pronounced a success as was anticicipated. The Salvation army of mountebanks has had its way with the credulous for so long a time that the promoters appeared to think there was no limit to human credulity, and it was a sad blow when the latest little dodge was so ably exposed by an eminent medical man, who made it his business to visit the district and satisfy himself that the whole affair was nothing more nor less than a fraud. Although those who are unconnected with the swindle were quite satisfied in their minds as to its true nature, a statement from so qualified an authority would be conclusiv, and it appears highly probable that the exposure will be a heavy blow to the already staggering imposition, for which let us be duly thankful. Notwithstanding the exposure, the religious papers are extremely reticent about the matter, fearing, probably, that the Christian sects are much in the position of a row of bricks, and if you knock one down, the remainder will share the same fate. The most that is said is that perhaps the originator of the game slightly exaggerated the number of cases, and that although all the reports may not be strictly correct, still faith-healing is an established fact, and the genuin article can be procured in limited quantities at the Bethlehem Hospital.

The whole affair is very amusing, and shows to what desperate shifts the religious community has to resort to meet current expenses. If the Church of England were disestablished the entire concern would rapidly drift into hopeless insolvency, which, though a bad thing for the dealers in the extremely valuable commodity, would be rather a good one for the general community. It is bound to come, and is merely a question of time. The spread of Secular education, and consequent eradication of superstition from the minds of the rising generation, will hasten its dissolution, though, like all evil things that are deeply-rooted, it will die hard, and take as long as possible about it.

After all, priestcraft is no more than a corpse powerfully galvanized, which may be easily seen by its grotesque contortions. To-day it advocates war and bloodshed, because there is a strong Jingo element existing; but when the peace party are in the majority, we shall find it advocating that side with equal force; and so it always is, siding ever with the most powerful for the sake of the loaves and fishes.

There was an amusing incident in the House of Commons a few days back, well illustrating the humility of the followers of the crucified carpenter. The friends of the Roman Catholic cardinal in Ireland think he should take precedence of the Protestant archbishop at the levees held at Dublin Castle, and this all-momentous question was brought forward, as if the mass of the people cared in the least who should march through a door first. But as the Irish members must be bribed to vote with the government it was promised that the new cardinal should be given what was required. It is truly marvelous how meek and lowly these high church dignitaries are.

There seems but slight chance of the suit in which Charles Bradlaugh is engaged being settled yet, and no doubt it will be allowed to drag on till the expiration of the present parliament, and then I suppose the whole matter will hav to be gone through again. It is a wearisome business, and most men would hav thrown it up in disgust long ago, but Bradlaugh seems typical of the British bulldog, and will hang on to the death. Independent of any other consideration, he certainly deserves to succeed on account of his unwearied pertinacity.

London, March 25, 1885. J. D.

Fiddle-de-Dee.

The preachers all over the country are now pounding away at the "labor question" in their pulpits. We hav been picking up their sermons for the past three months, but now the pile has grown so high that we are unable to handle them.

These preachers hav somehow heard that this "labor question" is up; but we regret to say that so few of them appear to know anything about it.

Some of them, we notice, take the sentimental view of it. They talk lackadaisically of the "poor and humble children of toil," and perhaps tell a story or two about visiting a "garret" or taking a walk "through the slums." They would be happy in distributing bread-and-molasses wherever they saw the wan face of a "worthy" creature, clad in rags and decorated with humility.

Some of them mount their stilts, and swell their cheeks with the windbags of po-lit-ical e-con-omy, hammering out such phrases as "supply and demand," "the laws of competition," and the "operations of modern commerce."

Some of them fall into a frenzy against "Socialists," "Communists," "Nihilists," "Anarchists," "Black Hands," "Bluebeards," Knights of Labor, and so forth, warning their hearers to beware of such monstrosities, which ought to be "crushed out by the strong arm of an enlightened community."

Very many of them take up the cudgels for capitalism and all its abominations, proving that moneylords are the true patrons of the working classes, without whom they would all starve to death, under the most horrid circumstances. This sort of thing is sure to be greatly relished by the upper crust who lay rich gifts upon the altar.

Some of them are full of "good advice," which they dole out to the working classes, telling them how to practice thrift and sobriety, how to win the favor of their master by devotion to his interests, and how to use soft-soap in washing their unclean palms.

Some of them hav little gilded pills for mortal woes, which they are ready to hand out at a moment's notice.

Nearly all of them are forever holding up the "gospel" panacea, reminding their brethren, high and low, young and old, that if they would all faithfully practice the Golden Rule, roses would bloom in the desert—and this is true.

Heigh-ho! and it is wearisome to wade through the rubbish of these sermons in this pile. We vainly search among them for any understanding of the meaning of this "labor question," or any knowledge of its elements. Yet we are glad to see that they are taking it up, thinking of it, preaching about it.

To any one of these hundred preachers who really desires light upon that great question, we say: Let him get rid of sham and cant; turn his eyes away from the bag of which Judas is the bearer; cease from catering to the mercenary lust of the "pillars of the church;" and throw to the dogs the false teachings of the books of capitalism. Then, with bared head and unshod feet, he may prepare, through vigils and clouds, to approach the mighty question in whose womb is the life of the world.—John Swinton's Paper.

The Liberal Club.

'Tis eve, but scarce yon setting sun
His course from morn to night has run,
When humorous, frank, and fiery Huhn
Shouts in his mild hilarity.

The combat deepens. On, ye brave!
Demosthenes, wake from thy grave!
Wave, Cohen, thy bandanna wave
In all its red luridity.

Ah! one shall strive where hundreds yield,
Yet Truth shall pierce through Error's shield,
And many a hard-fought Langerfield
Shall fire the heart to victory.

This rhyme jingled through a visitor's head as he followed the shining brass rods up along the steps into the hall where, on the 10th inst., the Manhattan Liberal Club held its 374th regular meeting. The hall was comfortably filled without being overcrowded. Mr. Wakeman was reading out some notices of meetings to be held, at which he, among others, was to speak. Librarian King, whose heavy thinking is beginning to tell against the luxuriousness of his hair, passed about in a sprightly manner, and was observed to be very attentiv to the ladies. Mr. Eckhart, having deposited his high hat in a safe and convenient place, tipped back his chair, and prepared to receive such amusing or instructiv information as might emanate from the platform.

The lecturer of the evening was Mr. J. K. Ingalls, of Glenora, N. Y. He is a venerable old gentleman, and seems possessed of a large amount of valuable knowledge on the question of land reform. His subject was "The Factors in Production and the Ratios in Compensation and Exchange." He said that as we had the poor always with us, and as this was a scientific age, it seemed strange that, while the very ooze at the bottom of the ocean is brought up and examined, the great economic questions receive hardly any notice at all. The lecture was devoted to finding out the measure of value of things. It went deep into the subject from the Land Reformer's point of view. This discourse constitutes one chapter out of thirty of a book which the author will shortly issue, and is more an exposition of the principles of social science than an attempt to prescribe specifically for existing ills.

Mr. Huhn was the first to respond to the chairman's announcement that this very able and interesting lecture was now open to discussion in speeches of ten minutes each. Mr. Huhn said: "The good this lecturer has done will liv after him. Our business is to discover the bad and giv it burial." The speaker, continuing, proposed a graduated income tax to deplete the superfluous wealth of capitalists. He then gave a short dissertation on the etymology of the word "demagog," and offered this definition of value: "Value is that benefit which accrues from or grows out of the use of a thing." For instance, a pound of steak had no value until it was eaten; a dollar bill was no good until spent; and a college education was worthless unless properly applied. This condensed wisdom was followed by some remarks provocativ of mirth.

Dr. Kinget next ensconced himself behind the stand on the platform and aimed some shafts of intellect at the audience. Referring to the previous speaker, he deprecated the fact that a serious subject like this should be treated with levity. The doctor succeeded in so far neutralizing the effect of Mr. Huhn's speech that Lawyer Searing, sitting by the secretary's table, dropped into that quiet sort of slumber which comes only from a clear conscience and an absence of anything of interest to keep the sleeper awake.

Mr. Langerfeld opened a ten minutes' speech with the graceful remark, "There is usually so much blatherskite bluster about the subject under discussion, that it is with a feeling of joy and pleasure that I hav listened to the bubbling fountain of intellect here this evening." He then went on to say that the best criticism he could offer upon the lecture was to repeat it. When the people were sufficiently intelligent to adopt Mr. Huhn's system of graduated income tax they would hav become enlightened enough to abolish private property altogether.

Mr. Cohen was the next speaker. Before he had time to get under way a man in the audience arose and wanted to know where he could buy a co-operativ hat. Mr. King, Mr. Huhn, and several others volunteered the information that one could be obtained at 352 Bowery. Proceedings were then resumed. Mr. Cohen objected that the lecture was too profound for the audience, with due respect for the intelligence which he saw represented before him. A graduated income tax would drive men of wealth out of the country. Mrs. Leonard arose to inquire if they would take their land and railroads and coal mines with them. Mr. Cohen apparently had not thought of that.

Mr. William Rowe, one of the veteran Land Reformers who date from the days of George Evans, was invited to the platform by the chair. Mr. Rowe said he was astonished that this intelligent audience which meets week after week to consider how to elevate mankind should show so little appreciation of this great and overshadowing question, and of the speaker who had presented it. He then recited with great effect the first stanza of Mackay's "Eternal Justice," as follows:

"The man is thought a knave or fool, or bigot plotting crime,
Who for the advancement of his kind is wiser than his time.
For him the hemlock shall distil, for him the ax be bared,
For him the gibbet shall be built, for him the stake prepared.
Him shall the scorn and wrath of men pursue with deadly aim;
And malice, envy, spite, and lies shall desecrate his name.
But truth shall conquer at the last, for round and round we run,
And ever the right comes uppermost, and ever is justice done."

Mr. Ingalls in his closing remarks said he did not think anything the critics had said called for a reply from him. He was not seeking remedies. He would remove the causes of economic troubles so that things might rectify themselvs.

Mr. Craig, the stenographer, speaking to the reporter, expressed the thought that a man had the same right to take interest on money, or rent for a house, that he had to extract milk from a cow if he chose to so invest his capital. The idea was not combated.

As the writer of these lines approached the door to leave the hall he heard an athletic-looking man inquire where the calumnious person could be found who reported the Liberal Club meetings in this journal. The athletic man desired to wring the neck of the writer. The guilty person being pointed out, the athletic man, who is one of the orators of the club, thereupon congratulated him on his success in rendering veracious and entertaining reports, and the scribe expressed a hope that no offense had been been given. International peace therefore remains unbroken.

Next Friday evening Mr. John Swinton will talk upon "Social Organization." Mr. Swinton is a man of large and fertil brain, and an interesting lecture is assured.

Information Wanted.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I had despaired of ever being able to get an answer to my blunt and practical question concerning the rum-beverage traffic, but as Brother Severance, of Orange, Cal., seems to think it can be answered if somebody with sufficient "caliber" can be found, and as I wish to show how thoroughly Liberal it is possible for me to be, I will now giv to him an equal interest with Brother Walker in the answering business, and earnestly hope that from his pen something more than the comical mumble that attended Brother Walker's efforts will result.

The question is this: If the drunken stabbing of three innocent people upon the public street—as recently happened in this city—does not giv me a right to vote against the further sale of alcoholic liquor as a beverage, what would?

Would three times three, or three hundred times three, of such dastardly assaults?

Please state what number of these outrages would suffice, for that is the Information Wanted of Brothers Walker and Severance. Hopefully yours,

Boston, Mass., April 7, 285. Geo. N. Hill.

Two Opinions.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Is it your purpose to allow the dynamiters to voice their infamy through your columns, and to place their stench under the noses of decent people? If it is desired to damn Freethought or Liberalism and make it thoroughly odious, then I would recommend that you open your paper freely to them. In no other way could you so effectually do it. As a subscriber, I would beg of you to save Freethought and vindicate the purity of your pages by excluding all discussion on that exploding topic. It requires no discussion. It is not fit to be discussed. As well might you admit discussion in favor of theft and murder. Yours truly, C. Garwood.

Baltimore, Md., April 1, 1885.

From the Liberal, of Liberal, Mo.

It is with no slight degree of pleasure that we note the fact that Anarchy, the land and labor questions, are being agitated in The Truth Seeker and other leading Freethought papers. To the surprise of many, unlike the old political parties on the tariff question, Freethinkers do not find their whole duty performed when they hav produced the self-evident facts against the existence of a mythical God and devil, but, true to their reasoning proclivity, they ferret out the injustices of men in the more tangible things in life, in industry, and state.

J. E. Remsburg has filled his engagements in Northern Illinois. He lectured at Lacon, Milledgeville, Huntley Grove, Nunda, Elgin, and Polo. He speaks in Morrill, April 17th; Irving, 20th; Belleville, 22d, 23d, and 24th; Republic, 25th and 26th; Lincoln Center, 28th, 29th, and 30th; Delphos, May 2d and 3d.

The nineteeth annual meeting of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists and Liberalists will be held by adjournment at Newton's Hall in the village of St. Johns, on Saturday and Sunday, May 2 and 3, 1885. W. R. Alger, secretary.

The National Liberal League.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Charles Watts, First Vice-President. Samuel P. Putnam, Secretary, 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

Courtlandt Palmer, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York

Annual and Life Memberships.

Every Freethinker should become an Annual or Life Member of the National Liberal League. Life-membership certificates are issued at $25 each; annual membership, $1. These certificates are adapted to framing, and bear the signatures of the secretary of the League, Samuel P. Putnam, and of its president, Robert G. Ingersoll; they are therefore an ornament to any place and a memorial of great value. They should adorn the walls of ten thousand homes before the close of the year. The support thus given to the League would make its success certain. A. C. Macdonald,
Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Address applications for membership to S. P. Putnam 33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged, $3,785.41. Geo. Wilson, $1.00; Philadelphia, $50.00; Mrs. Harkey, $20.00; Thomas Carey, $1.00; William Lewis, $1.00. Total, $3,876.41.

News and Notes from the Field.

The clergymen of St. Louis hav been having a grand jubilee all by themselvs this winter, and hav so built up the walls of Zion with rhetorical flourish that their admiring congregations expect the citadel of Christianity to stand for ever and aye against all the attacks of the skeptic. Six elaborate Lenten lectures were prepared under the auspices of the Episcopalian church, and delivered amid the plaudits of all those who were exceedingly desirous of being convinced of the truth of every word that was uttered. No doubt these brave Christian leaders did felicitate themselvs on the wonderful success of their arguments in behalf of the divine origin of their faith. The enemy were put to rout, and the bulwarks of the church were established. Thus they congratulated one another as they sat in their capacious easy-chairs and daintily handled their gold-bound Bibles, and stroked the sleek rotundity of their flesh, which had been so heroically sacrificed at the shrine of beefsteak and plum pudding in behalf of the gospel of hell-fire. But alas for these calmly sleeping ministers! As they opened their Sunday paper of April 5th the challenge in behalf of Mr. Charles Watts stared them in the face. What should they do? No doubt they thought long and deep on this difficult question—that is, as far as clergymen are capable of thinking. They concluded that silence was their salvation, and only one of these rhetorical warriors has lisped that he is even in existence, and declined—there being matters of far more importance to him than the public defense of Christianity, where logic must take the place of words.

If these clergymen had been content to keep still, we would say nothing. If they had wisely said this is a matter of faith, and not of reason, and pursued the even tenor of their way by simply preaching sentiment, we would not disturb their Christian serenity. But they hav flung the gauntlet down. They hav said, "We can defend Christianity at the bar of human reason," and hav undertaken to do so. Then it becomes them not to avoid debate, but to meet it gladly. If they hav the whole armory of God with them, why are they afraid of the unbeliever? They boast of their ability to fight, and yet the very moment a real enemy appears, armed and equipped for a thorough encounter, they ignominiously hide away, and their voice is no longer heard. What shall we think of these defenders of the faith? Helen H. Gardener, with her incisiv pen, has endeavored to provoke these defenders of the faith to do their duty, and yet

"A silence settles wide and still."

They are waiting evidently for Mr. Watts to come and go—and then what a noise, and how easily the Infidel will be overcome!

I simply ask these men to be honest. They are not honest. They palter with the truth, and they dishonor the master they profess to serve.

If one accepts Christianity as a matter of faith, and frankly admits it, I hav no quarrel with him, any more than I quarrel with a man who likes cabbage. No man can giv a reason for liking cabbage—he simply likes it. So one likes Christianity—because it is according to his temperament.

But the very moment a man takes the position that Christianity is founded in reason, then he subjects himself to intellectual attack, and if he refuses to meet that attack, he is a coward. If Christianity cannot be defended on a free platform, before an intelligent audience, what are its claims worth? If these gentlemen think that they can demonstrate the truth of Christianity by an appeal to the intellect, let them hav the courage of their convictions. If they refuse, what can be the reason but a judicious fear of the consequences? These clerical Falstaffs are mighty valiant till the foe really makes his appearance, and then "what a falling off there is, my countrymen!"

But the skeptic will not retire, and these clerical defaulters shall be put to the sword. They shall know what logic is. Mr. Watts will lecture next Sunday evening in the Pickwick Theater, and will thoroughly review all these arguments in favor of Christianity, and show how utterly unreliable they all are. I shall report progress next week.

Mr. Watts and myself lecture at Belleville, Ill., Saturday, April 11th, and at Frei Gemeunde, St. Louis, on Sunday afternoon. Tuesday, April 14th, we lecture at Liberal, Mo.; at Dodge City, Kan., April 19th; at Chicago, May 3d; at Grand Rapids, May 10th; at Louisville, May 24th; at Canton, Ohio, June 14th; at Pittsburgh, June 21st; and at Salamanca, N. Y., June 28th. Other places will be announced as soon as definit arrangements are made. Let friends in the vicinity of these several places already mentioned make preparations for lectures and keep the world on the path of progress. In spite of all obstacles we will keep our colors flying.

Fraternally yours, SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

St. Louis, Mo., April 9, 285.

From Mr. Reynolds.

BUTLER, BUTLER CO., PA.

We lectured at the Opera House, Butler, Pa., on Thursday, April 2d, on "Why I Left the Pulpit," and, for such a hot-bed of bigotry and Puritanism, had a very fair attendance, fully one-half ladies. This was the first Liberal lecture ever delivered in this county, and has started considerable discussion. After the lecture we sold over a dozen copies of "Age of Reason," which we regard as indication of the interest awakened, and insures large additions to the Liberal ranks.

Mr. John Glass, of Bald Ridge, a stanch veteran in the cause of Freethought, was the projector of this effort, ably backed by the Liberals of Bald Ridge, and seconded by that fearless prince of landlords, Simeon Mixon, of Butler.

The Opera House was, for this occasion, rented at reduced rate—$40 for one night. We did our best, but one lecture could only awaken thought, not settle conviction, and the good seed sown will be liable to be plucked up by the ministerial crows.

Could we hav remained there—visited among the people—held five or six meetings, the Liberally inclined would hav gained courage and avowed their conviction; many would hav been induced to investigate and think for themselvs. We could hav judiciously circulated a large amount of Liberal literature, which would hav found its way to the homes and started activ thought in the minds of the people. But $40 per night rendered this impossible and no other hall of any kind was procurable. How sad to be thus compelled to abandon so excellent and promising a field of labor!

If the Tent could only be pitched there for two weeks, and lectures delivered every afternoon and evening, there would be no rent to pay. Once the Tent is purchased that will end expense, and the Tent will last for ten years with proper care, and we should hav a better and more attractiv place of meeting for summer time than the best hall ever built; then, too, we could locate it just when and where it was most needed.

BALD RIDGE, PA.

Bald Ridge is little over seven miles from Butler; the roads were absolutely impassable for mud, and a special train to Butler could be chartered only on exorbitant terms, or ten times as many as did would hav attended the lecture at Butler. Those who did attend had to remain in Butler overnight.

Aided by the friends, we carefully looked Bald Ridge over in search of any place where it was possible to hold just one meeting—giv one free lecture. But neither hall, barn, empty store, or any available place existed. The people are eager for the truth, ready and anxious to hear, but cannot. They would do all they can; paid liberally toward expenses of lecture at Butler. If only a few meetings could be held, they would speedily organize, and could and would contribute liberally to a propagandist fund that the gospel of humanity might be proclaimed in other places. Alas! nothing can be done; even if a hall were to be built there now, summer heat would be here ere it could be ready, and people will not swelter in close halls during the heated term. Oh, if they could only hav the Tent!

Shall we hav it this year? Will the friends who hav always, when Christians, paid their hundred dollars a year to the church to advance bigotry and superstition, pay only just half as much to advance the gospel of humanity? Many hav subscribed hundreds of dollars to erect costly Joss-houses for idolatry, used only a few hours one day in seven. How much will they giv for a meeting-house in which to proclaim the truth of Secularism, reason, right, and truth, twice every day and three times on Sunday? Many claim a desire to do some great work for universal mental liberty—here is the opportunity. We are waiting—hoping.

TURNER'S FALLS, MASS.

Mr. George S. Hartley, president of the Turner's Falls Secular Society, writes a very encouraging report of the results of our lectures there. An excellent synopsis of our lecture on "Salvation" was published in the Greenfield Reformer, the best and most influential paper in the county, giving chapter and verse of all the proof texts used. Its publication has caused intense excitement, and fearful rattling of the dry bones of orthodoxy throughout the whole county.

A self-elected champion of orthodoxy, Rev. D. Nesbit, author of a circular of glowing encomiums on himself as an annihilator of Infidelity, was depended on to defend the vicarious atonement and prove the superiority of Christianity over orthodoxy. But the delightful anticipations of the orthodox hav turned to vexation and disgust, for the Rev. Nesbit published about half a column of would-be witticisms—in the style of circus side-show men, and with equal disregard to truth or consistency—admitting he had read the synopsis of the lecture on "Salvation," but declined discussion of the subject to which we had challenged him.

Many are awakening to the advisability of thinking for themselvs, and are losing faith alike in creeds and preachers. The effusion of the great Nesbit is doing good work for Secularism. It forces even the most bigoted to admit that instead of refutation of arguments, rebuttal of evidence, or explanation of damaging texts, the one only defense of the ministers is smut and blacking.

If the Tent could only be located at Greenfield, what a grand work could be accomplished!

ALTOONA, PA.

We spent several days with the friends at Altoona. Leetured at the League hall on Sunday, March 22d, and induced the League to establish an extempore speaking class on Wednesday evenings. We held the initial classes with them on Sunday night, and all seemed much pleased and interested. If rightly conducted, it cannot fail to prove alike amusing and instructiv.

We urged the formation of a science school on Sundays, more especially for the benefit of the women and children. Seven members purchased copies of "Wonders of the Heavens," Humboldt series (for sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office), and it is proposed to start the school with classes in astronomy. Altoona much needs a suitable hall, easy of access, suitable for the ladies and children. When this is secured the Altoona League will make rapid growth. They hav the very best of material.

LANCASTER, PA.

We spent March 24th and 25th at Lancaster. There are a large number of the most influential leading merchants and lawyers who are avowed Secularists; but alas! seven out of every eleven are mollusks. Even with the aid of the noble trio of faithful, zealous workers, who not alone possess the courage of their convictions, but the energy, zeal, and earnestness of purpose born of love of reason, right, and truth, a corporal's guard could not be mustered on either evening of our stay to consult as to the best means of advancing the cause they all profess to love. Strange hallucination! People claim to be Liberals and are utterly oblivious of the solemn responsibility such profession entails. They rejoice that they hav been plucked from the horrible fears of burning hell and the dark bogs of superstition, bigotry, and fanaticism, but they seem to think they are under no obligation to make real effort to help others. The idea that they should in their turn make any sacrifice of time, means, or personal ease to help others to the same happy condition of freedom and peace never occurs to them, and, if presented, only causes them to wonder. They prate of being admirers of Mr. Thomas Paine; will glibly quote his words, declare his sentiments their own—that they believe in doing justice, loving mercy, and promoting the welfare of their fellow-creatures—but they make no more effort to practice what they profess than the average minister, whom they are so ready to condemn for not living up to his own preaching.

The very first lesson, the one main principle and foundation of Secularism, is justice. Is it just to leave the zealous, self-sacrificing ones to bear all the burden while mollusks go free? Is there any mercy in permitting the willing workers to be crushed beneath the burdens they bear, while others, equally interested, will not put forth one finger to lighten the load?

Is it to promote the welfare of our fellow-creatures to leave them in ignorance, the bound slaves and victims of priest and priestcraft?

Some make the excuse, "By and by, when there is greater interest; when we hav a larger number of more influential persons on our side—then we can do something." How shall we ever gain any on our side without effort on our part to circulate Liberal publications and periodicals, to provide Liberal lectures, and so encourage the growth of Freethought and Secularism?

Unfortunately, Lancaster is not alone in this cruel apathy in regard to the necessity of prompt, energetic action. A dozen other places in this state are equally inconsistent. They say they desire organization, that the cause may advance, but make no effort, no self-sacrifice, to giv it an impetus. Thus the willing workers grow weary and discouraged, while if all would do their fair share—each do all he could, if but little—none would be overburdened, and the cause would make wonderful advancement that should delight and surprise every true friend of universal mental liberty.

Let us, one and all, see to it that we are doing our fair share of the work, and thus exert all our influence to induce others to do likewise.

FUNERAL OF JAMES BEVERIDGE, THIRTY YEARS A DEVOUT PRESBYTERIAN, AND HABITUAL USER OF INTOXICANTS—FORTY-ONE YEARS A CONSISTENT INFIDEL AND STRICT TEMPERANCE MAN.

Despite the somber hues and repeated outpouring of the rain-clouds, and almost impassable muddy roads, a very large number of friends and neighbors assembled at 10 A.M., April 7th, at the late residence of Mr. James Beveridge, at Little Pine Creek, McCandless Township, Allegheny county, Pa., to pay the last tribute of respect at the funeral services of Brother James Beveridge.

The deceased was born in Scotland and educated a strict and rigid Presbyterian. Until the age of thirty, he, as did all around him—alike ministers and people—indulged in spirituous liquors, but becoming interested in temperance, he sought to induce the ministers of his church to join him and sign the pledge. He met indignant refusal, the minister calling attention to the fact that the Bible taught the use alike of wine and strong drink (Prov. xxxi, 6, 7), and that Christ and the apostles would all drink wine together in heaven: "But I say unto you I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in my father's kingdom" (Mat. xxvi, 29).

This set him to thinking and to making careful examination of the Bible, and he soon became fully satisfied that the minister was right, the Bible did sanction the use of strong drink, and many other evils. His studies resulted, at the expiration of one year, in his severing all connection with the church, and for forty years he was an earnest, outspoken Infidel. His efforts, backed by his example, induced all of brothers to become earnest temperance workers. His creed was to do justice, love mercy, and to promote the happiness of his fellow-creatures. Loyally and consistently did he liv out his convictions. With the fearless persistency of a Wallace or a Bruce he attacked error, while he had a heart like Robbie Burns—tender and gentle as a true woman's for all who were in sorrow or misfortune. He was loved and esteemed by all who knew him.

Ex-Rev. C. B. Reynolds delivered the funeral oration, and while showing the superiority of the gospel of Humanity over that of Christianity, as illustrated in the life of Brother Beveridge, delivered a well-deserved eulogy upon the memory of a true, brave heart, an honest man—a devotee alike of personal and mental liberty. He said:

"Becoming a Secularist at a time when effort in behalf of mental freedom was regarded as the worst of crimes, he dared to think for himself, and giv utterance to his honest convictions. For forty years he worshiped at the shrine of Truth. His god was Nature; his church, all humanity. His life proved the sincerity of his convictions, which during his sickness afforded him perfect peace and consolation. James Beveridge was convinced that the practice of love, mercy, and benevolence here and now will best qualify us for ministrations of love in another sphere. He was a constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and revered the memory of the lamented old hero, D. M. Bennett, and heartily indorsed the declaration: 'Those lead the happiest, most peaceful lives, who seek most to benefit those around them; our highest duty lies, not above the clouds over our heads, nor in the depth of the earth beneath our feet. Neither can we do aught to benefit or affect any being supposed to exist in either locality. Our duty and field of action is here, among the sons and daughters of men. In no case can we so well prepare for another life as by doing all in our power to make those around us happy.' James Beveridge realized we must combat ignorance and superstition, not with dungeon, torture, and the stake, not by ostracism, misrepresentation, and abuse, but by imparting knowledge and instruction. Hence he was ever zealous in behalf of education. He believed it was our duty to endeavor to lead the erring from vice to the practice of virtue by loving admonition and good example."

Brother James Beveridge proved that a man can liv a good and useful life, be a sincere, practical temperance man, and an earnest worker and outspoken advocate of Infidelity, and yet secure the highest esteem and love of friends, neighbors, and townsmen.

His funeral services, conducted without hymn, prayer, or any religious ceremonies, evidently made deep impression on all present. Thus his death, as his life, tended to upbuild the cause of reason, right, and truth, to which he was so much devoted.

C. B. REYNOLDS.

Who Will Accept?

From the St. Louis Republican.

The course of Lenten lectures to which the Republican has given such wide circulation has reached Canada, and called out the letter given below, a copy of which was sent to each and every one of the clergymen who took part in the lectures. The letter will explain itself. Mr. Watts is now holding free debates in Toronto with Dr. Sexton, "the Wendling of Canada." It is to be hoped that the clergymen of this city will not allow so good an opportunity to pass without showing their readiness and ability to sustain their own positions in free, open debate.

Up to the present time the only reply received is from Dr. Merrill, and is given below:

ST. LOUIS, April 2, 1885.

REV. DR. BOYD, Dear Sir: Charles Watts, of England, is at this time traveling in this country and Canada. He is, as you doubtless know, a man of high standing and superior dignity of character, and was recently editor of the London Secular Review. He is now first vice-president of the American Secular Union (of which Robert G. Ingersoll is president).

Mr. Watts is the great English champion of Secularism, and is now engaged in lecturing and debating in Canada upon that subject. He is soon to be in St. Louis, and since his attention has been called to the recent course of remarkable Lenten lectures given by various distinguished clergymen of this city upon the divine testimony in support of the claims of Revelation, he intends to review the sermons in a lecture to be given by himself on or about April 13th. He takes issue with you upon a part of your lecture, and will be happy to hav you present at his reply, and will offer you an opportunity to debate the points with him, offering you the same amount of time he takes himself (notwithstanding he will take your well-known lecture as the basis of argument, and not a basis formulated by himself, thus meeting you upon your own grounds, and not you upon his). He will assure you of the most courteous and gentlemanly treatment in debate, and will be happy to know that the audience, in a large part, is composed of your congregation, your friends, and your supporters; and if Mr. Watts is in error in his position, he will be most happy to hav you point out to him this fact.

In thus offering you every advantage in first position, equal time, and an audience sure to be full of your friends and admirers, a stranger is, of course, at a disadvantage; but since Mr. Watts, like yourself, is working for what he believes to be the highest interest of humanity, he takes pleasure in waiving personal advantage, and will depend entirely upon argumentativ position and historical fact—which he believes to be upon his side.

Mr. Watts has debated with many of the clergymen of England, not one of whom has ever felt dissatisfied with his courtesy, nor disappointed in his dignity of bearing. However you may differ from him in opinion, you will be pleased, I am sure, with his manly and courteous presentation of his view of the subject discussed in your lecture, and will be happy to sustain your own view, however opposed to his.

Since you are spending your life and energy in an effort to convince the unbelieving of the truth and importance of your position upon this great subject, and since your only aim is to arrive at, and lead your followers to, the highest light, this is a rare and favorable opportunity to take a long stride in this direction, and to show your own firm grounding and brave championship in aid of your cause.

Hoping to receive a favorable reply to this challenge on behalf of Mr. Watts, and believing that you will "take up the glove" without hesitation in the cause of revelation, I remain, very respectfully, SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Of New York, Secretary of the American Secular Society.

REPLY OF DR. MERRILL.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Your favor of the 2d is at hand. I shall hav to ask you to excuse me from participating in the proposed debate. I am exceedingly busy in arranging matters for the dedication of my church, and shall hav no time to attend to it. Yours, J. G. MERRILL.

W. F. JAMIESON had larger houses at his second course of lectures in Delavan, Minn., than at his first. On Sunday forenoon, March 29th, on the occasion of the funeral services over the remains of Mr. A. J. Hill, the pleasant hall was crowded, over one hundred persons standing. Some of the Christians were shocked because Christ, the Bible, and Christianity were left out, and no higher power recognized than nature. But we learn that Freethinkers were fully satisfied.

MRS. H. S. LAKE, who, with her husband, W. F. Peck, has been speaking for the Liberal Society of Ottumwa, Iowa, since September 12th, will shortly make a trip East. Societies and individuals wishing to arrange for lectures will write at once. Address Ottumwa, Iowa.

Communications.

The Diakkas Still Busy.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Over the signature of John W. Truesdell in your issue of April 14, 1885, the caption of "Those Who Liv in Glass Houses Should Not Throw Stones," is conspicuous. I emphatically state that I do not liv in a glass house, or that I am at all concerned at the missils aimed at me by Mr. Truesdell. In fact, I should not notice them at all if it were not for another purpose.

He calls me untruthful, zealous, and intemperate in my article because I gave a statement of some things which members of the Seibert Committee are daily talking about, in confidence; and to prove it he quotes the R.-P. Journal's statement, which is no proof at all, for while the committee, as a body, hav made no statement over its signature, the individual members are at liberty to converse about the spirit tests and phenomena, and about the tricks of those sharp ones who think they will be able to deceive them into shutting their eyes to the light of facts unaccountable on any other theory. In fact, the independent slate writing of Dr. Slade, his accordion playing in the hands of the different members of the committee, the invisible power that pulls the bellows and manipulates the keys, changing the tunes to suit the holder, making them long or short, lively or solemn, at the mental request of the party, is so far ahead of any merely mechanical contrivance, which must operate automatically, that there is no comparison between them and the similar things done by the jugglers. The result is that now, and for some weeks, the committee has advertised for all slate-writing mediums to continue that class of investigations. These facts come to me in a more direct manner, from those who know, and I need not "bite" at any reports being circulated by the papers. I will state, however, that they hav been generally true, and are no more wonderful than what hav occurred to thousands in Dr. Slade's presence in broad daylight, with every possible chance to detect fraud if there had been any.

That wonderful offer of Truesdell's is what just now engages my attention, and to which I wish to pay my respects—his $500 bid for "any medium in the world who will cause the dead to write, in his presence, three words upon a slate;" "for particulars see 'Bottom Facts.'"

I hav, occasionally, read extracts in the newspapers, taken from "Bottom Facts" and sent to them for the purpose of catching Spiritualists and inducing them to purchase the book; and from reading them I found they were so full of duplicity and that low cunning peculiar to persons who carry water on both shoulders, that I hav had no inclination to read it, and shall not be able to refer to it for particulars, as the general statement is ample to show up its true character.

The offer, in political parlance, is a "bulldozer." The writing must be done in his presence, the influence of which probably few mediums could endure, as he would be interested in making it as disagreeable to their nerves as possible; and as the nerves require to be calm for a medium to succeed, this would be one great point in his favor. Then the writing must be from the dead. Here is his loophole of escape. If a dozen spirits should write as many words upon a slate, he could easily insist that they were not written by "the dead," and what amount of evidence would he then require from the medium that the words came from the dead? The question would be as open after the writing as before. If John W. had offered $500 for any writing upon a closed slate of his own selection without the contact of any part of the medium's body in the manipulation of the slate, that would be a fair proposition. But he knows better than that. He bets on his own game and is sure to win. As it stands above quoted, I consider it a browbeating parade, amounting to nothing. I hav had it quoted to me time and again as a wonderful challenge, while to me it seems to smack of the professional juggler. If Mr. Truesdell is anxious to get rid of his $500, and is willing to appoint one person as a committee against one that I shall appoint, the twain to appoint a third person, this committee not to inform the medium that a $500 reward is in store for three words to be written on closed and locked slates, leaving the inference at rest as to whether the words came from the dead, I think I should be willing to risk something that his $500 would disappear very quickly. But Mr. Truesdell will not dare to let such an important offer to his most trusty friend. How is it? Can you not be coaxed into a better and more candid offer? Will you wager me $500 that I cannot produce evidence of hundreds—sworn evidence, too—that independent slate-writing is a fact?

To expect a medium to go into a proper bodily or mental condition for slate-writing in his presence would be about as likely a thing as to allow him (you) to handle a straw and tickle his friend, who was to receive $500 if he could go to sleep while he was permitted to use it. It won't do, John; giv us a fair chance. If you are a "diak," as we hear, you hold the winning card.

If the writing is produced on the slates without the contact of the medium, and without the use of uric acid or any other chemical preparation, or any double bottom, we ought to win. Dare you put your offer on such a basis? Do not, please, ask us to take a photograph, and just as we are ready to expose the sitter to the lens, insist on holding your hand before the camera to obstruct the light from acting on our plate. Are you willing to put your offer on scientific and fair terms, and for the good of scientific truth? If so, I might be induced to invest something more than $10, as you seem to snicker at the "munificent" sum I offered for some of your mediumship for my private use. Your $500 offer reminds me much of Hobbs and the two hundred guinea offer for picking the Piccadilly Bank lock. After he picked it, they objected because he used more than one instrument to do it.

J. R. Perry.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., April 6, 1885.

DR. CHESEBROUGH'S OPINION OF MR. KIDDLE.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hav just read Prof. Henry Kiddle's very unkind letter published in your paper of the 4th inst. This effusion adds but one more to the many unmistakable evidences that evil spirits, or Diakkas, are in constant attendance upon the president of the American Spiritual Alliance. I am not surprised that the learned professor is ashamed of his letter, in which he cowardly falls before the first blast of Diakkas in "Bottom Facts," ready to "giv up the ghost." I published his foolish letter in full for the express purpose of exonerating him as its author.

If Mr. Kiddle desires to take upon himself the odium of writing it in a normal condition—thus acknowledging the tricks of Diakkas an exposure of Spiritualism—there is no law against his pursuing this unwise course. But knowing, as I do, that Mr. Kiddle was influenced by spirit-devils to write his weak letter, in charity to him, and in defense of the cause which he claims to espouse, I published his letter in full. In return for this he publishes certain portions only of my private letter, which places me before the public in a wrong position. Had Mr. Kiddle possessed the manhood to publish my entire letter, or enough of it to justify the balance, he would hav made a better appearance of himself and those whom he misrepresents.

It is true I said some hard things of Mr. Truesdell, but that was while partly under influence myself and in the heat of excitement caused by the appearance of "Bottom Facts," which, at the time, I mistook for an intended exposure of Spiritualism.

I hav since written Mr. Kiddle several letters in which I fully explained my former error, and Mr. Kiddle has, in writing, accepted and approved of my theory.

Now he casts a slur upon my belief, and upon the sacred cause, as follows: "I hope Spiritualism will not be held responsible for the odious monstrosities that are hatched out in Syracuse." Now there are better judges of spirit phenomena than Professor Kiddle who pronounce our Syracuse phenomena among the most advanced in the world.

Mr. Kiddle has himself, by letter and lecture in the most public manner, repeatedly referred to these manifestations, and fully indorsed them as genuin.

In Light for Thinkers, Feb. 2, 1884, he quotes from from Facts magazine references to these circles approvingly, and closes by saying: "The person, Mr. Whitlock, who narrates these facts, is of unimpeachable veracity." In his lecture, July 4th last, at Brooklyn, Mr. Kiddle fully indorsed the theory of personation by Diakkas exhibited here and elsewhere.

Yet, when applied to himself in the kindest charity, like the snake warmed to life in the bosom of the husbandman, he turns upon his friend and strikes his venomous fangs into the very one who would save him.

Mr. Kiddle claims to be a champion of our cause. To be qualified for this position he ought to be thoroughly posted in every phase of spirit phenomena; but from his own letters—if he is responsible for them—I am led to the painful conclusion that he is either playing the hypocrit for a purpose, or he does not yet know the A B C of Spiritualism.

Yours for truth, Silas J. Chesebrough, M.D.

1 1-2 Otisco street, Syracuse, N. Y.

SPIRITUALISM IS NOT A RELIGION.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: There is no doubt that many Freethinkers and some other timid Liberals hav a repugnance to attempting investigation into the philosophy of Spiritism, under this name, wisely thinking it would be making a dangerous concession in behalf of bigotry, superstition, or orthodoxy, with all its modern improvements.

In like manner the terrorized creedal religionist—he too is deterred from its examination, fearful from exaggerated reports it is direct evidence that the devil and his myrmidons hav actually been unchained, and that diabolism is at the bottom of the whole movement.

Now, as belonging to a coterie of Liberals and Spiritual investigators for the last thirty-four years in this place, we can seriously aver from our examinations that Spiritism is in no sense a religious faith, but rather a correctiv of all religious errors. It is to be regarded purely as the outgrowth of philosophic observation, and like every other element in nature, viz., air, oxygen, light, heat, and electricity, strictly under the crucial investigation of science; and as such, no creedal religion, superstition, or fanatical faith should stand in the way of its examination.

To us, after years of patient observation, this invisible spirit domain can only be regarded, like the starry expanse above and around us, as a boundless, infinit realm, and the various individual intelligences we receive—haply pure or impure, trifling, or mischievous, ancient or modern, elevated or vulgar—distinctly indicate the elevation of mind giving them expression.

And further, they conclusivly show that they are, as they assume to be, the reflex of minds of persons once inhabitants of this tumultuous sphere. Thus, while many sorrowfully regret the waste of their earthly existence in the observance of mere theological creeds and useless formulas and the practice of sensuous immoralities, cruelties, and vice, very many urge our aspiration to a higher and broader conception and practice of esthetics. There is no mistaking their distinct individualities, elevation of mind, and purity of promptings. We were early made sensible of the fact that there are many, very many, mischievous, ignorant, and misleading spirits, that only need an open channel through which to giv expression to their thoughts and actions—call them diakkas or what we may.

Outliving every attempt to prove the whole philosophy a fraud from its inception at Hydesdale, and its various phenomena shameful deceptions; now, the only thing acting as an obstacle to its more rapid extension is vile, fraudulent imitations of its startling physical and mental phenomena. But why should philosophers be surprised at this? There is nothing so pure, so sacred, so beneficent to humanity but will stale with familiarity, and the faculty of wonder, of marvelousness, must be gratified. Hence the city teems with materializations, transfigurations, and bogus slate-writings.

But while we regret the prevalence of fraudulent spirit imitations, let us be merciful to our genuin mediums, which these impudent, brazen frauds hav shamed into obscurity and poverty.

Imitation! Alas! let us look at the present condition of society. The very food on which we subsist doubtless is adulterated. The clothing on our backs too often is mere shoddy. Our quinine ague pills are too often mere white oak bark. Our pure Orange county butter is too often refined wagon grease—or worse, oleomargarine. And so we go on; but when we go into man's metaphysical condition, the domain of morality and religion, the imitation is too serious in its consequences to pass without a shudder. The solemn, impudent mockery of the priesthood is appalling, and we at once cease to wonder at the condition of our jails and prisons, swollen with pious, mercenary hypocrits and hardened criminals.

Now, sir, this thing has got to be stopped—these vile forgeries on truth! And when I think of the befogging of our venerable Aunt Elmina with her book of "Bottom Facts," it lashes me to frenzy, and so long as I take The Truth Seeker and urge its circulation, I shall make open war with all counterfeits—counterfeits of the priesthood, counterfeits in life's staples, and counterfeits of Spiritual mediumship.

Williamsburgh, L. I. D. Bruce

Canadian Notes.

The Toronto Daily World, in reviewing a lecture by Ex-Rev. J. H. Burnham, says:

"Last evening a lecture was delivered at Albert Hall under the auspices of the Toronto Secular Society, by ex-Rev. J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw, Mich., on the subject of the evolutionary hypothesis as applied to theological opinions and beliefs. He pointed out that man's physical and mental structure were modified by his environments. Climate in particular was a great factor in determining the characteristics of different nations. He asserted that the religion of the Hebrews had been very largely modified by the captivity in Babylon, where they first acquired the idea of a devil who was previously unknown, Eve's tempter not being the devil according to more recent conceptions, but a serpent. Speaking of evolution, he declared that he would reach back through the centuries and claim kinship with the worm and the reptil, and say to the monkey swinging by his tail in the forests of South America, 'Thou art my brother,' rather than trace his decent from a man who, like Adam, was mean enough to lay the blame of his fall upon a woman. Christianity, he asserted, could never flourish in the East, because the climatic conditions were unfavorable to it. It was being greatly modified by its environments on this continent. The lecturer gave numerous illustrations showing the changes of temperament and character resulting from migration in support of his arguments."

The applause from the crowded audience was loud and frequent during the lecture, interspersed with bursts of laughter at the many comic effects produced, which were inimitably funny. The Ex-Rev. Mr. Burnham has studied the orator's art to some purpose. He never uses a scrap of writing. His address is entirely extempore, and his style is strikingly interesting. He takes the stage with powerful effect when declaiming exciting passages, and at other times he is irresistibly quaint and droll.

According to Taylor, despite the fact that what is called Christianity consists mainly of assertions either destitute of proof or falsified by the most ordinary experience; with senseless theories, lacking even the element of plausibility; with precepts opposed to human nature and to social life; a capricious God, who takes pleasure in creating man in order to try him; the very caprice of this God, his grace, enthroned in the place of justice; the cult of this God comprising all virtue; the goodness of this God leaving to man the option of evil; the vengeance of this God, overwhelming man, from whom he has withdrawn his grace; guiltless man, stricken by an original fall, from which he is unable to recover even by his very merits; God sending a redeemer, his own son, who takes flesh in an embryo conceived without sin in an immaculate mother; this God the son dying although immortal; endowed with a perishable human nature, and yet co-eternal with the father; the father and son united by another god named the Holy Ghost, who has been the father of the son of the father, and who, partaking of both, is co-eternal with both, these three chimerical persons perfectly distinct and separately worshiped, yet forming collectively one and the self-same God; at once father son and intermediary. What does all this rubbish amount to? Is it not mere idiocy or the ravings of a diseased brain? As to the immortality of the soul, rewards and punishments after death, the first and most persistent delusion of desire, born, perhaps, before all religion and all philosophy, and which man preserves like the plaything with which he amused himself as a child, this conception, so far from being a mark of superiority, is found among the low and little advanced races, such as the Indians of the prairie, the Greeks of Homer, or our Keltic forefathers; and in the rationalistic or mystic doctrins of civilized peoples, represents nothing but the traces of a remote past. It was no invention of Christianity, but it, like Brahmanism and Buddhism, drew from this doctrin the most disastrous consequences to humanity, and had not the inherent force of organization struggled against and triumphed over these consequences, it is easy to imagin what would hav become of the industries and of the arts and sciences. As it was, Christianity almost annihilated them, but for the Saracens. Life being merely a preparation for death; labor a punishment; sexual union a sin; private property a vulgar error; governments a scourge of God, to be endured with resignation; social order and the national sentiment prejudices unworthy of recognition; humanity itself, as was indeed the most ardent prayer of the first Christians, would hav perished in ignorance, in an ecstatic indolence, in an anarchy of a communism at the mercy of some arbitary despot or deified antichrist.

The debate between Mr. Watts and Dr. Sexton came off on three successiv days last week at Montreal. The Christian clergy are much exasperated at Mr. Watts's triumph. He succeeded, as usual, in utterly smashing up and demolishing the orthodox theology. A little bit of comic business occurred at one of Watts's debates, illustrating the old story of "Before and After." The Christian clergy were so sure of victory "before" that they requested a list of towns Mr. Watts was engaged to lecture at, as they intended to oppose him in every place. "After" the debate nothing more was heard about the list of towns. Moral: Beware you go not forth for wool, coming home shorn; "Let not him that putteth on his armor boast himself against him that putteth it off." R. B. BUTLAND.

Toronto, April 6, 1885.

Catholics vs. Public Schools.

Everywhere we find the Catholics trying to get, or keep, the Bible out of the public schools. As Liberals we can see no reason why it should be used in the schools, except as a specimen of ancient literature, and for the historical facts and moral precepts it contains. For these purposes we esteem it just as we do any other ancient book, and in proportion to its usefulness for these purposes. To make a fetich of it—to worship it as Protestants do—we are as much opposed to as the Catholics themselvs.

It would be well for us, as Liberals, to study the action of the Catholics, that we may form a just estimate of their purpose in opposing the Bible in the public schools. It needs no proof that they are opposing the use of the Bible in the schools, for it is so much a matter of common fame and of newspaper report that we may safely assume it to be established for all purposes where neither life nor property is at stake.

In the speeches of Mgr. Capel, the emissary of Rome, we find an expression something like this: "We object to the public schools because they are secular." It is also to be remembered that in the book issued to instruct Catholics to keep their children out of the public schools they are termed "Godless schools," and are condemned as such and on no other grounds.

The fact seems thus to be revealed that the Catholics hav more hope of the conversion of Protestants back to the narrow bigotry of Catholicism than they hav of ever capturing the phalanx of Secularism.

In this double management we can see the hand of the Jesuit. First, we, as Catholics, they say, cannot consent that the Bible shall be used in the schools to which we send our children. Then, when the Bible is practically abolished from the schools, they raise the cry that the schools are "Godless," and that Catholic children in their angelic purity resulting from the sweet moral teaching of Mother Church, cannot associate with anything that is "Godless."

When the little Catholic boys "go in swimming" with the little Protestant boys, the Catholic priest complains that the little Protestant boys are so ill-mannered that they guy the little Catholic boys about their ridiculous scapulars which, greasy and nasty from long wear by divers persons, dangle from their necks. This sad and terrible state of things could not exist if all little boys were Catholics on their way to Ward's Island, or if the little Catholics were kept in a coop by themselvs.

The difficulty, you see, is just this. When a little Catholic has been laughed at for his stupid superstition concerning the scapular; when by argument and observation he discovers that he is in the same danger of being drowned with or without this bogus blessed relic of the pope, he becomes indifferent toward the institution and the priests who teach such palpable nonsense. Here is the doorway into which the hoary-headed monster, Infidelity, come stalking in, and through which he can never be thrust out again.

To teach another religion, or to teach no religion in the schools, is equally fatal to the growth and the glory, and the political ambitions, of old Mother Church. Here we hav an institution that has so far outgrown its usefulness, and is so incompatible with civilization, that its birthright members adhere to it only when kept in profound ignorance of the intelligent thought of the world. To maintain this condition of ignorance requires the most zealous activity of the Catholic priesthood. With all their deep cunning, they do not fully succeed. Every now and then the warped and benighted intellects of the children of Mother Church catch a glimpse of the splendid civilization in the midst of which they hav been kept in enforced blindness.

To the support of the public schools the best efforts of the Liberals should be devoted. Without free and unbiased teaching there can be very little development of thinking minds. To giv up the schools to the senseless, bigoted demands of the Catholic priests is to giv up everything, and to giv everything up to Rome.

Think of what these men, with an ambition and a patriotism which includes nothing but the see of Rome, are endeavoring to do! They would take our splendid public schools into their own hands, if they could, for the purpose of more thoroughly effecting their destruction. They would teach the "Lord's Prayer" in Latin, not even teaching the poor children the meanings of the Latin words. That is education. Any more is dangerous. Any less is impossible. Such is the scheme of Catholic education for all except those designed for the priesthood.

For the priesthood there is to be everything that will arm them to fight the dreaded Infidel, to distort history, to commit those distortions to memory, and to lay them about the ears of the wicked Infidel—that is learning for the promising priest. The principal education of the priest is how to work upon the fears and the credulousness of ignorant people. When death appears, not how to soothe and comfort the dying and the afflicted living, but how best to make it appear that the resolute perseverance of Mother Church—which resolute perseverance can only be had for cash—barely saved a soul from eternal perdition. The mummeries, the ceremonies, these are the great matters of education. To prevent our schools from sinking into the hands of those who believe that no sacrifice, even of life and intelligence, is too great to promote the political aspirations of the bishop of Rome, must henceforth tax the best energies of the Freethinker.

The inability of Protestantism to answer the questions of modern science, or to disprove scientific hypotheses, has had the effect to cause the more bigoted Protestants to seek a nearer relationship with Catholicism, and the more liberal Protestants to less warmly and less efficiently support their church. Thus Protestantism meets with serious loss from two antagonistic sources.

Comparativly, the strength of the Catholics and the Protestants is thus made very much more equal, and the Catholics in their blind zeal do not observe that the equalization thus produced is mainly the result of the loss of Protestantism on the Liberal side. Few hav gone over to Rome, many hav gone over to science. When the Liberals, developed by scientific education, shall become organized and aware of their power, then these Catholic victories, in relation to our educational institutions, will not be revenged, but simply neutralized. LIBERTA.

CATALOG of our books free on application.

Shakspere—Bacon.

If Bacon was the author of Shakspere, he certainly took extreme pains to disguise his great poetical and dramatic genius when he wrote poetry or dramatic pieces over his own signature.

Take his efforts to poetize the Psalms and compare them with similar compositions by men warmed by true poetic genius. Here are a few specimens. Psalm iv:

"Father and King of powers both high and low,
Whose sounding praise all creatures serve to blow.
. . . . . .
Upon thy head thou wearest a glorious crown,
All set with virtues, polished by renown."

Psalm xii:

"Help, Lord! for godly men hav took their flight."

Ending as follows:

"For why? The Lord hath special eye
To be the godly's stay at call,
And hath given over, righteously,
The wicked man to take his fall."

Psalm cxxxvii:

"When, as we sat, all sad and desolate,
By Babylon, upon the river's side,
Eased from the tasks which, in our captiv state,
We were compelled daily to abide.

Contrast these with the glorious efforts of Byron in the two melodies on the same Psalm. We may not conceive what the full-orbed, myriad-minded one must hav made of similar efforts. Psalm cxlix:

"Oh, sing a new song to our God above;
Avoid profane ones—'tis for holy choir;
Let Israel sing songs of holy love
To him that made them, with their hearts on fire."

And so on, and so on, with innumerable "all for to's," and "for to's," and "all to," to fill out the measures poetically.

But we hav a dramatized conversation by Bacon entitled, "Of a Holy War." The characters are named, one being for a "witty, lively politic," another a blustering soldier, a third a lively courtier, a fourth, fifth, and sixth, a moderate divine, a zealot Protestant, and a ditto Catholic. Here now was the opportunity, if ever one happened, for Bacon to exhibit his dramatic talents. But every character stalks along dully, platitudinously, Baconly. The thing could not possibly hav been worse done. The little effort at liveliness and sport cannot but suggest the idea of an elephantine dance. Evidently far out of his element was Bacon, great as were his abilities in their proper field. There is a learned laboriousness, an elaborate dulness, in much of Bacon's performances. It was a fault common to the age. One of the most remarkable points in Shakspere is the patness, the perfection of sound and sense that make expressions become proverbs. Once heard, they become the common property of the universe and are never forgotten. They spring before us on all occasions in bewildering abundance. "In the Ornamenta Rationalia" of Bacon and one or two other papers there is an attempt to furnish like sayings in such a style that they may become proverbial. Just let anyone read a page of Shakspere's best expressions and one of these of Bacon's. There can be no greater contrast. Of all that Bacon has written of that kind not one single line has become proverbial. Even in cases that occur wherein the idea tried to be expressed is similar to one of Shakspere's the matchless happiness of Shakspere is entirely wanting. It would be too long to illustrate this by quotations. But just let any reader take Bacon's works and compare with Shakspere on the points suggested.

Ben Jonson knew both men intimately, and admired each. We hav his record. We also hav those of others. The excellencies of each in their peculiar callings are delineated. Yet these contemporaries were deluded. Bacon was both himself and Shakspere, while Shakspere, whom they knew so well in public and private life, was a mere nobody, a kind of baser Jack Falstaff. Why, the theory outrages the common sense of mankind.

It is possible that the edition of 1623 that differs so much from former editions in so many respects was used by Bacon himself to weave through some of the plays a short cipher history. The author of the cipher theory admits that the plays were written first. It is altogether probable that Bacon, as well as several other learned wits of the day, was intimate with Shakspere during the development of many of his greatest plays, and added many improvements, made ten thousand suggestions. Shakspere was a framer as well as an author and creator. There can be no doubt that the hundreds of learned and polished youths who flocked to the stage during all the days of Marlow, Beaumont, Fletcher, and Shakspere were forever altering, adding to, taking from, and improving all the plays that they had to do with. No doubt the plays of Shakspere, as we now hav them, are the work, in many respects, of many splendid minds; but still the core and vast conception of all that we understand by Shakspere is the sole due and meed of one whom those who knew him best, both as daily companion and fellow-workman, described as:

"Dear son of Memory! Great heir of Fame,
Shakspere, with whom quick nature died.
Be sure, our Shakspere, thou canst never die."

HOLT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - APRIL 18, 1885.

Second Edition.

The first edition of the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC having been exhausted, a second edition has been prepared and is now ready. Those of our friends who hav ordered copies which they hav not received will be immediately supplied.

We hav added to this edition two portraits—received too late to be engraved for the first issue—Elizabeth Cady Stanton, and J. D. Shaw, the editor of the Waco, Texas, Independent Pulpit. We are sure Freethinkers will be glad to see the features of the greatest of woman's friends, and of the gentleman who has done so much for Liberalism in Texas. We advise the purchasers of the first edition to giv their copies to some Christian friend and send for another.

The Criminality of Christianity.

The constant cry of the Christians that their system of religion is the one great mainspring of morality; that "it restrains from murder, robbery, dishonesty, adultery, cruelty, and all the crimes and vices which afflict society;" that without Christianity society would go to wrack and ruin, led us some few weeks since to ask for prison reports from all over the country, that we might investigate this claim. Faith is all right for some folks, but facts and figures are what count in the long run, and Freethinkers are noticeable for their eagerness to obtain facts. The churchman believes what his preacher or his religious paper tells him without ever inquiring for the source of their information. But we cannot do this. We want to see the figures. We want the facts. We hav now obtained a few in relation to the influence of Christianity in preventing crime, and we recommend them to the respectful and prayerful consideration of the religious press.

IOWA.

The first statistical evidence that we present is a small straw from Clinton county, Iowa. It is a report of the religious condition of the inhabitants of the jail of that county, prepared at the solicitation of a friend of ours by the jailor. The date is February 27, 1885. There were at that date 37 prisoners in the jail:

Baptist,	8
Methodist,	7
Catholic,	13
Lutheran,	5
Presbyterian,	2
Congregationalist,	2

The statistics of the Anamosa Prison, Iowa, we obtain from a note in the Cedar Rapids Republican. There are in the prison 239 persons, of which only two are what the Republican terms Infidels.

MICHIGAN.

Of the 1773 prisoners received at the House of Correction in Detroit, Mich., during 1882 the religious condition was:

Catholic,	885
Protestant,	791
Jews,	3
Without religious training,	94
	1773

In 1884 the same institution held 2,407 prisoners. Their religious training is given:

Catholic,	1239
Protestant,	1022
Israelite,	6
Mormon,	3
Without religious training,	137
	2407

At the beginning of 1883 the warden of the Michigan State Penitentiary reported that he had received 177 new boarders. Their antecedents were:

Of pious parentage,	100
Parents not pious,	49
Mother pious but father not,	28

These 177 persons had attended church as follows:

Regularly,	28
Irregularly,	79
Never,	70

At Sunday-school their attendance was

Regularly,	23
Irregularly,	79
Never,	70

There were also held in this prison during the year 349 religious meetings, but the chaplain is unable to giv the exact number of conversions. No mention is made of any Infidelity among the flock, and the chaplain is generally hopeful that all his hearers will ultimately come to Jesus.

TENNESSEE.

The report of the Tennessee Penitentiary for 1884 is one of those which does not giv the religious status of the prisoners, and its chaplain's report is noticeable chiefly for the cool way in which he offers to giv the Tennessee legislature the benefit of his views upon prisons and reformatories "if it may be found to be important for the General Assembly to consider them in making laws to govern our state prison."

NEW YORK.

The report of Isaac V. Baker, Jr., superintendent of New York's state prisons, does not tabulate the religious convictions of the state's wards, but from his remarks upon religious worship in prisons we glean some instructiv facts. At the conclusion of the year ending Sept. 30, 1884, there were confined in Auburn, Clinton, and Sing Sing prisons 2,876 persons. Of these the

Catholics approximated,	1,400
Other denominations,	1,476

Touching religious worship in prisons Mr. Baker says:

"In behalf of prisoners who are Catholics, application was made to the superintendent to authorize, in the prisons, religious worship after the rites and ordinances of their faith and by Catholic clergy. The right of free religious belief and worship is expressly declared in the Constitution, and the superintendent does not understand that this personal Constitutional right is suspended or abrogated by sentence to imprisonment for crime. The docrin that such right continues was very ably maintained by Henry R. Selden, who was eminent alike for his purity and patriotism as a citizen, and his attainments as a jurist. Besides, the superintendent, upon investigation, found that as early as 1873, Dr. Wines, than whom our country has furnished no more eminent and trustworthy authority in all matters of prison administration and reform, touched this very subject in a report which he made to the national government, which he officially represented in the International Penitentiary Congress. Dr. Wines reported that in nearly every leading European nation, chaplains for all prisons and for all religions are provided. He names Austria, Belgium, France, Baden, Prussia, Saxony, Wurtemberg, Netherlands, Russia, England, and Ireland; and this freedom and religious instruction hav been found to be salutary. In this state, the plan has worked well in penal institutions where it has been adopted. As there was a considerable number of Catholic convicts in the prisons, the superintendent had the confident hope and expectation that Catholic worship by Catholic clergy, for the convicts of that faith, would be helpful in the disciplin of the prison, and in augmenting the moral forces for the reformation of the prisoners. The superintendent, therefore, made an order for holding Catholic services in the prisons on Sundays. At present, Protestant and Catholic service is held in the morning regularly."

Mr. Baker's "confident hope," however, was disappointed, for the prison physician of Sing Sing, in his report, discussing the reformation of prisoners, says that if the means employed are only of a moral and religious character, the efforts will prove a failure. We note in Clinton Prison one preacher, and in the Auburn Asylum one Lutheran clergyman.

The Albany Penitentiary was on November 1, 1883, generously supplied with Moody and Sankey hymn-books, and we may infer that the inmates are comfortably pious, but just how pious we are left to conjecture, except from the general reports of the Catholic and Protestant chaplains. November 1st, Mr. McEwen, the warden, reported on hand 837 lodgers. Rev. W. H. Walker, Protestant chaplain, reports that "the services of the past year hav been regularly maintained, well attended, and marked by more than usual interest in the word preached." The Catholic chaplain, Fr. Maurice Bierl, O.M.C., reports that "on fourteen Sundays and on Christmas Day, mass was sung and a sermon delivered to the Catholic prisoners, who assisted, nearly all with great devotion. About Christmas 140 men and 37 women received the sacraments of penance and holy eucharist." The books most sought by the prisoners of this penitentiary were the "Prodigal's Return," "The Faith of Our Fathers," and Bible histories.

At the Western House of Refuge at Rochester, this state, there were received during the year ending September 30, 1883, 263 boys, of ages running from seven to eighteen years. Their parents' religious proclivities were:

Advent,	1
Baptist,	28
Catholic,	92
Congregational,	4
Dutch Reform,	1
Episcopal,	18
German Evangelical,	1
German Lutheran,	7
German Jews,	2
Jews,	4
Methodist,	38
Presbyterians,	24
Protestant (denomination unknown)	39
United Presbyterian,	1
Universalist,	3

During the same period 38 girls were received, of the ages of 8 to 15. The religion of their parents was as follows:

Protestants (no particular denomination),	6
Presbyterian	1
Methodists,	8
Catholics,	11
Baptist,	1
Adventist,	1
Lutheran,	1
Episcopalian,	10
Unknown,	6

In this institution Bible classes are held in both boys' and girls' departments every Sunday by the Protestant chaplain, and chapel services for the Catholics with the same frequency. This House of Refuge costs per year about $130,000, of which the legislature appropriates the larger part; the balance is earned by the inmates.

The report of the Elmira Reformatory givs the number sentenced to that institution during eight years on indefinit sentences as 1,759. Their religious training had been:

Protestant	698 or 39.7 per cent.
Catholic,	772 or 43.9 "
Hebrew,	78 or 4.4 "
None,	211 or 12 "

There are two "moral instructors" in this reformatory, both reverends, but their duties appear to be very light, the reformation of the young scamps being due to the very thorough secular schooling they obtain from the lecturers and teachers.

PENNSYLVANIA.

By the 54th annual report of the Inspectors of the State Penitentiary of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania for the year 1883 we glean some instructiv facts as to the efficacy of Christianity to prevent crime. There were received at that institution during that year 402 white males, 12 white females, 69 negro males, 7 negro females—a total of 490. One hundred and fifteen of these were under 21 years of age, and all but 9 were Sunday-school scholars. Of the whole 490 only 44 had not been attendants upon the Sunday-school. Many of them had been educated in Catholic and other institutional schools. The prisoners hav the benefit of the services of a Protestant preacher, "the Catholic priests of St. Francis parish are unremitting in their attention to the prisoners of their faith," the Sisters of Mercy "visit the female prisoners every Monday; also the lady missionary of the Episcopal church," and the local preachers' association furnish preachers and singers for the Sunday service, the warden acknowledges the Divine Power which has directed him through the year, 469 Sunday services were held, 78,500 pages of religious tracts and 8,130 religious papers were circulated, yet after all this 82 of these fellows enjoying so much Christianity were serving their second, third, or fourth sentences in the institution. In 1884 this same penitentiary received an accession of 479, only 45 of whom had not been Sunday-school scholars. Their religious advantages in 1883, as has been seen, were very great, yet 93 of them persisted in coming back to the cells, in every one of which they found a Bible.

With the exception of the Blair County jail, the foregoing is the only report we hav from Pennsylvania so far. The Blair County jail report was furnished us by a friend from Altoona, who inquired of the warden for the religious standing of his charges. The reply was:

Total number in jail,	19
Catholics,	8
Protestants,	11

Comment is unnecessary.

CONNECTICUT.

The chapel edifice of the state reform school at

Meriden, Conn., "is a beautiful structure, with a seating capacity for five hundred boys. It contains a large platform, with convenient side rooms. A grand piano stands upon the platform. The chapel was erected at a cost of about $15,000." Freedom of worship is allowed to all inmates, and attendance is compulsory; the ministers of the city take turns at the boys, and the Sisters of Mercy visit the institution every Sunday. Devotional exercises are held morning and evening each day of the week, and "grace" is said before each meal. The religious training of the inmates previous to their incarceration is not stated, but the religious training in the institution did not last year obviate the necessity of returning 59 of the discharged boys.

INDIANA.

In the Indiana State Prison South, located at Jeffersonville, the daily average number of convicts was, in 1884, 570. Among these, the chaplain reports, "the interest in the Sunday-school was so intense that its fame spread to the outside world, and attracted large numbers from Louisville, New Albany, and Jeffersonville, to witness its sessions and hear the reviews." We infer from the chaplain's further remarks that his parishioners are all pious, but he does not giv the denominational statistics.

ILLINOIS.

In the biennial report of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet, the number of prisoners having received religious instruction or having attended denominational Sunday-schools is given as follows for the two years ending September, 30, 1884:

	1883.	1884
Roman Catholic,	208	246
Methodist,	111	106
Lutheran,	38	37
Episcopal,	20	7
Baptists,	39	35
Presbyterian,	28	41
Christian,	10	7
Reform,	3	3
Dunkard,	1	...
Protestant,	12	...
Quaker,	1	...
United Brethren,	1	...
Congregational,	1	2
Universalist,	1	...
Carmelite,	3	...
Joss, China,	1	...
Jewish,	10	5
None,	146	257

In the first year the convictions of this prison reached the number of 630, of which only 146 were not attendants upon some church. The second year out of 746 convictions, only 257 were without denominational leanings. The different sects of Protestantism can divide them between themselvs. The chaplain reports that the visitors to this prison "are highly impressed with the spirituality manifest, and speak of it as a rare opportunity for doing good to those who not only need it, but who seem to highly appreciate it."

In the Southern Illinois Penitentiary, at Chester, the religious condition is about the same. The chaplain reports that out of 629 convicts only one avowed positiv unbelief in Christianity. The table is as follows, and shows even a larger proportion of plain Protestants than the penitentiary at Joliet:

DENOMINATION.	Oct. 1, 1882, to Sept. 30, 1883.	Oct. 1, 1883, to Sept. 30, 1884.	On hand.
Baptist,	6	38	49
Baptist Free-will,	3	1	3
Baptist Missionary,	2	2	6
Catholic,	41	51	77
Christian,	3	4	6
Church of England,	...	1	2
Congregational,	1	1	2
Episcopal,	2	3	5
Lutheran,	5	5	12
Evangelical,	1	3	3
Methodist,	16	33	55
Presbyterian,	6	9	18
Protestant,	1	...	1
Reform Church	...	1	1
Swedish,	1	1	1
United Brethren,	1	1	3
Universalist,	...	1	1
No Church,	214	204	440
	203	359	685

The chaplain's remarks upon this condition are: "Of the non-Catholic or Protestant portion of the convicts [by far the larger number—the no church being respectivly 214, 204, 440] not more than 12 or 15 ever made a formal profession of Christianity by uniting with some branch of the church. . . . It seems very strange at first glance, that out of 629 convicts personally interviewed, only one avowed blank Infidelity. Some are agnostic, some hav no settled religious belief, but only one professed positiv disbelief. This, however, only proves two things: (1) the general diffusion of Christian sentiments; (2) that mere Christian sentiment will not help a man in the least, for all true religion has reference to life, and the life of religion is to do good."

We are afraid the Rev. Mr. Houts is not very familiar with the word "Agnostic," for did he understand its meaning he would not hav used it in that connection.

CANADA.

Going over to Canada, we find more strongly instanced by the report of 1884 of the common jails, prisons, and reformatories of the province of Ontario what cannot hav escaped the reader's notice, that the closer the denominations are to orthodoxy the more fully they are represented in the penal institutions of the country. In 1883 there were confined in Ontario's jails some 9,880 individuals. Of these the different churches contributed as follows:

Roman Catholic,	3,759
Church of England,	3,154
Presbyterian,	1,280
Methodist,	1,130
Other denominations,	557
	9,880

In 1884 the number in jail at different times was 12,081. Of these the different towns in the province and the different churches in the towns contributed as follows:

NAME OF JAIL.	Roman Catholic.	Church of England.	Presbyterians.	Methodists.	Other denominations.
Barrie,	90	109	69	46	34
Berlin,	16	15	8	6	18
Belleville,	49	42	4	68	15
Brantford,	37	79	6	33	20
Brampton,	38	59	36	12	6
Brockville,	111	82	23	18	11
Cayuga,	15	9	2	33	9
Cornwall,	36	15	10	7	..
Cobourg,	39	43	15	26	4
Chatham,	37	39	21	50	6
Goderich,	20	27	29	9	5
Guelph,	49	38	31	28	1
Hamilton,	375	303	133	106	37
Kingston,	75	74	12	17	..
London,	346	349	99	152	58
Lindsay,	28	24	9	12	2
L'Orignal,	15	3	4	..	1
Milton	20	82	28	4	6
Napanee,	13	23	3	26	7
Ottawa,	465	153	56	29	10
Owen Sound,	45	50	45	28	32
Orangeville,	5	21	11	7	12
Perth,	28	14	22	5	1
Picton,	14	20	8	17	6
Pembroke,	67	20	13	3	10
Peterborough,	69	35	20	22	2
Port Arthur,	438	193	92	33	78
Rat Portage,	83	73	41	9	30
Simcoe,	20	26	5	15	15
St. Catharines,	41	25	9	18	4
Sarnia,	143	82	39	25	6
Stratford,	32	35	44	26	18
Sandwich,	114	40	12	62	30
St. Thomas.	89	54	38	54	32
Sault Ste. Marie,	13	8	8	7	1
Toronto,	1313	1247	329	250	112
Walkerton,	7	10	25	8	8
Woodstock,	103	116	52	52	18
Welland,	126	101	32	35	6
Whitby,	29	30	16	15	11
Lock-ups—
Bracebridge,	9	10	2	2	..
Gore Bay,	1	..	..	..	..
Little Current,	..	..	..	1	1
Manitowaning,	12	3	1	2	..
Mattawa,	26	10	3	1	3
Parry Sound,	4	4	3	10	1
Haliburton,	1	..	..	..	..
Sudbury,	16	6	2	1	11

The totals are:

Catholic,	4,722
Church of England,	3,801
Presbyterian,	1,470
Methodist,	1,390
Other denominations,	698
	12,081

In the Central Prison at Toronto the returns for the year are as follows:

Baptists,	14
Church of England,	233
Catholics,	889
Presbyterians,	78
Lutherans,	6
Congregationalists,	4
Methodists,	92
Hebrews,	2
No religion,	5
	723

The total number of Christians committed to this prison foots up 6,763, of which the sects furnished severally as follows:

Church of England,	2537
Catholics,	2352
Presbyterians,	705
Methodists,	808
Other denominations,	361

To the Andrew Mercer Ontario Reformatory for Females at Toronto we find that there were 156 young Christians committed. Their denominational status is:

Episcopalians,	55
Catholics,	58
Presbyterians,	4
Baptists,	10
Methodists,	26
Lutherans,	1
Unknown,	2

Of the 16 girls received at the Refuge for Girls during the year ending September 30, 1884, the religious training had been:

Episcopalians,	11
Catholic,	2
Methodist,	2
Baptist,	1

The Ontario Reformatory for Boys, at Penetanguishene, makes this statistical exhibit of piety:

	Commitments of the Year	Total Commitments
English Church,	19	482
Catholic Church,	38	494
Presbyterian,	6	132
Methodist,	16	256
Baptist,	1	66
Other denominations,	1	20
Total,	81	1450

These tables comprise all the definit information furnished by the documents received. We shall be pleased to continue the comparisons of depravity between the different sects if our friends will help by forwarding Reports.

In these sixty-six different prisons, jails, reformatories, refuges, penitentiaries, and "lock-ups," there hav been for the years given 44,034 men and boys, women and girls. The different religions and sects of religions hav been represented as follows:

Catholics,	16,431
Church of England,	9,975
Protestants (denomination unknown),	6,650
Methodist,	3,931
Presbyterian,	3,703
Baptist,	240
Jews,	106
Lutheran,	92
Christian,	24
Universalist,	5
Evangelical,	4
Swedish church,	2
Dunkard,	1
Quaker,	1
Congregationalist,	11
German Lutheran,	7
" Evangelical,	1
" Jews,	2
United Brethren,	3
Advent,	2
Dutch Reform,	8
Mormon,	3
Episcopal,	126
Carmelite,	3
Joss (China),	1
Infidel (2 so-called; 1 avowed),	3
	41,337

The balance of the 44,034 inmates of the prisons here named, are reported to be "regular attendants at Sunday-schools," and irregular attendants on the same, and regular and irregular attendants at church. The condition of most of those not cataloged is undoubtedly that of the 629 personally interviewed by the chaplain of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary, all Christian in sentiment, but not connected with any church. In all the reports, only 3 are in any way called Infidels, and it is probable that two of these were so-called through laxity of expression of the editor of the Cedar Rapids Republican.

We cannot too strongly urge upon the religious editors a consideration of Chaplain Hout's remark that Christian sentiment merely is not sufficient to deter from crime, and of Physician Barber that reformatory efforts of a merely religious character will prove a failure. This is a virtual confession that Christianity is a failure for this world—for all of any religion's worth is measured by its moral performance—and as the next world is so clouded by doubt, we cannot see how the churches can longer claim the surpassing importance of a faith in Christ.

THROUGH the National Reformer we learn that the Giordano Bruno monument committee in Rome is now regularly established, and communications may be addressed to the secretary, Signor G. Amici, Via della Lupa, No. 8, p.p. 1, Rome. The amount deposited by Signor Commandini in the Banca de Caesna, the produce of the previous subscription, is bearing interest, and will be added to the amount now raised. A new journal has just been started at Naples, entitled Giordano Bruno. A special number, price one lira (tenpence), is published this week for the benefit of the fund, with autographs:

"Del Bruno, autografii e scritti importantissimi di Victor Hugo, Spencer, Renan, Haeckel, Buchner, Moleschott, Saffi, Ardigo, Rosa, Massarani, Graf, D'Ercole, Chiarini, Zanardelli, Lessona, Mariano, Lombroso, Ferri, Barzellotti, Maineri."

It can be obtained by writing to Signor Giovanni Amici, secretary, Comitato Universitario Centrale per il Monumento a Giordano Bruno, Nia della Lupa, 8 p.p. 1, Roma. Among the new subscribers to the fund the Reformer reports Herbert Spencer, P. A. Taylor, Professor Angelo de Gubernatis, and other prominent gentlemen.

T. B. WAKEMAN will speak for the People's Spiritual Meeting, Arcanum Hall, 57 West Twenty-fifth street, cor. Sixth ave., Sunday evening, April 19th, upon "The Latest Phases of the Religion of Humanity."

Letters from Friends.

EATON RAPIDS, MICH., Feb. 25, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $6.28 for books and papers.

This clipping is from our county paper, Eaton Rapids Journal:

"About fifty got ready to go to Jackson Monday afternoon to attend the 'Bob' Ingersoll lecture in the evening, but were disappointed on account of the train from the West being behind time."

I was one of the many that the snow blockade hindered from hearing Colonel Ingersoll on that occasion, Feb. 16th. Our town may yet be lucky enough to secure such men as Watts, Remsburg, or an Ingersoll, to address us. We think a Liberal League will be organized here soon.

I received that copy of "Story Hour" for my brother. He is much pleased with it. I sent for and distributed six copies of "Bible Morals," which is one of the best articles ever published. RACHEL ATWOOD.

GREENVILLE, OR., March 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find postal order for a renewal of THE TRUTH SEEKER; also a list of other reading matter.

I was very forcibly struck by a communication from J. Petty in THE TRUTH SEEKER. He showed how the great masses of humanity had always been oppressed by both political and religious rulers, that we might cry out against the oppressions, but cry in vain, unless we took matters into our own hands and passed laws suitable to the progressiv spirit of the age in which we liv. In this northwestern corner of our country, favored by nature as it is with as fertil soil and salubrious clime as ever the sun warmed, we are oppressed by laws and customs behind the present age; we are compelled to sell all our surplus to foreign lands, and compelled to buy by existing laws from the manufactories of the Atlantic states that are commercially further removed from us than the foreign lands where we find a market. The greatest good to the greatest number demands a change more in keeping with the spirit of the present age. HENRY BENNETT.

KANKAKEE CITY, ILL., March 21, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 to pay one year on THE TRUTH SEEKER. Your paper, since I hav been taking it, has given me the best of satisfaction. I am persecuted on account of my Liberal views. My business has gone down and I am compelled to quit it, losing all the money I put in by trusting. I believed that those I trusted would pay me. They called themselvs Christians. But, according to my views, there are more rogues, more dishonesty, inside of churches than there are outside. Our best men are men of honor, of integrity, of principles, and of morality. My principle is this, to be honest and practice morality. I was raised by parents who were strong Catholics. I hav thrown aside their belief and stand on the platform of the Liberal party of this county. I hope to see the day that we will be the victorious party.

Our brave and noble Ingersoll is shaking the foundations of all the churches of the United States, and we must stand firmly by him, and if we perish in fighting for justice and freedom of thought, let it be like brave men.

Yours fraternally, CHAS. A. BROSSEAU.

NEW YORK, April 4, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: For truth's sake you will please giv this room in your paper. In THE TRUTH SEEKER, March 14th, the editor of the Investigator wants to correct a "complaining person," Fred Koezly, for misrepresentation. I deny that I, in any way, misrepresented the case; if Mr. Seaver can and will show and prove me guilty of it, I hereby offer and promis to submit to any reasonable punishment he himself may see fit to inflict on me; is not this fair? but please do not accuse falsely in future. He had shut down on me against the calendar, but three more articles appeared afterward, and the last one from Mr. Hill as another puff thus (Investigator, Nov. 25, 1883): "The term of year 0, or time previous to the era having achieved a year, to count as No. 1" (see article on Chronology Encyclopedia Brittanica). Why does he not quote? Simply because he falsifies it, and that wilfully, as I cannot help to believe now, and, of course, all respect for a falsifier is lost forever. I saw the article "Chronology," in Encyclopedia Brittanica, and quote also: "Each small community and king and priest had his own era. But, by a natural process, the mischief was gradually and partially remedied; the extension of intercourse between the various small groups of societies of men, and still more the union of larger groups, made a common epoch necessary." Now, if Mr. Hill were that so-called "sensible" young man, would he hav started his, or any other, new calendar or era, in the face of such an arraignment for mischief? After I saw and read this, my former indifference to a new era turned into decided enemity against any new calendar —sectional only. I quote further: "Astronomers denote the year which preceded the first year of our era by 0, and the year previous to that by 1 B.C. But the chronologers, in conformity with common notions, call the year preceding the era 1 B.C., and the previous 2 B.C., and so on. By reckoning in this manner, there is an interruption in the regular succession of the numbers and in the years preceding the era." Here astronomers and chronologers both commence the era with the year 1, and not as Mr. Hill says and does with 0 as a year, for the first year. This is evidence enough that Mr. Hill does not understand what he reads, or wilfully falsifies because wilfully blind, and unwilling to part from his hobby—a borrowed idea, anyhow—on which he imagined he would ride to fame and notoriety. To settle the matter, all that is necessary for a person to do is to substract 1600 from to-day's date, and the result is 285. Can he not see that the years 285 are deducted from and are exclusiv of the year 1885, of which we hav passed so far only three months, while he has his 285 years already made and behind him?

In THE TRUTH SEEKER, Feb. 21st last, Mr. Hill explains how his new calendar was adopted by the Boston society; how, in 1882, he brought in his resolution—or sprung it (?)—on an unwary society. To date then 282 from a calendar beginning at the first day of January, 1600, Mr. George Hill killed Christianity with one blow—and common sense too. If the Boston society has this blot and blunder on its record, the sooner it rescinds and erases the resolution, the better for its honor. This age has been and will be called the age of science without a new calendar and without a Hill, the same as the middle centuries are called the dark era.

Yours respectfully, FREDERICK KOEZLY.

MR. MYRICK TO MISS WIXON.

AYER, MASS, March 15, 1885.

MUCH ESTEEMED (and if you allow me to say) SISTER WIXON: I just wish to tell you how I like your methods of interesting and instructing children. I hav long waited for some one to furnish food and instruction to young minds; some education simple and attractiv that would not put them to the ofttimes painful trouble to unlearn. Well, the "Story Hour" answers my wish. Much the same the "Bible from the chapters of the ages" fills my order for scripture, something sensible that all can understand, beating inspired (?) interpreters.

I think that you and Brother Stebbings furnish the best of scripture reading. It is far better than the Santa Claus religion of myth and mystery dealt out in Sunday-schools and Bible classes to bewilder the senses and make religion odious.

I hav been for forty years unlearning—separating the false from the true—what was forced upon my young mind for twenty-two years, though never without doubts which were my helps—the beginning of my wisdom. Now I am in sympathy with those who lose time and temper to unlearn. Go on in your good work, and many will call you blessed.

Fraternally yours, E. MYRICK.

KIRKSVILLE, Mo., March 16, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: A few lines in answer to the two questions by Ella E. Gibson in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 14th. First, she says Mr. Truesdell is accused of being a fraud (which I was not aware of), and asks for proof. If practicing tricks for years, and passing them off as genuin phenomena, which I believe he admits having done, does not constitute him a fraud, what would? Practicing tricks to-day, and giving them as genuin phenomena, or intending to convey that impression, and declaring them to be tricks to-morrow, will not relieve him from the guilt as embodied in such a charge, neither would it under such circumstances were he to declare them to be tricks immediately after the performance. In her second she says he is called a liar, and demands proof. Fraud, or conveying false impressions, is equivalent to falsehood, and he who is guilty of falsehood is commonly called a liar. I am aware that there are many frauds and a great deal of deception in the world, yet I know that genuin phenomena take place, the best explanation of which to me is through the Spiritualistic view. WM. HART.

SPRINGPORT, MICH., Feb. 7, 285.

MR. EDITOR: If you hav room in your paper I would offer a few comments on Dr. Talmage's sermon in Brooklyn on February 8th:

"But see the white bundle on the rivers in the morning in China. Infanticide after infanticide. Female children are cast off because they are females. See the women harnessed to plows like oxen, hidden from the sight of men [Talmage is a preacher] by barricades and by veils, and by all styles of cruel seclusion; their birth a disaster, their life a torture, their death a horror."

Yet Mr. Talmage loves a being that he believes to hav predetermined all of this, then holds up his hands in horror at such a state of things. What does he mean, anyway?

Again: "Christianity found woman in the last point of degradation, and raised her almost to the skies." "As the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their husbands in everything" (Eph. v, 24). "For it is a shame for a woman to speak in church." Paul, the founder of Christianity, said that.

Once more: "I had rather see a railroad train with five hundred Christians on board go down through a drawbridge into a watery grave, than to see one Infidel or one Atheist die, though it were on a pillow of eider-down and under a canopy of vermilion." Just so. He would not see an honest man die, even to save five hundred people from being drowned. Of course, he "would not want to see the first catastrophe," but if he had his choice——surely he is the John Calvin of America. Will history repeat itself?

Finally: "In the farce the Infidels laugh and mock, but in the tragedy God will laugh and mock. He says so. 'I will laugh at their calamity and mock when their fear cometh.'"

No theological interpretation, no "poem" or "picture," for him. He admits the brutality of the Jewish Jehovah.

Respectfully, EUGENE HIGGINS.

LISTOWEL, ONT. CAN., March 24, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Listowel is a town of about 3,000 inhabitants, seven churches, each of a different denomination; public and high schools; three flouring mills; one of the largest furniture factories in the dominion; besides other industries which are required to make a thriving inland town. There are quite a number here who are Liberal in their religious views, but not many who are outspoken, or who openly profess Secularism. But the few Liberals hav, for some time, desired to hav a Liberal lecture delivered here, but were somewhat timid as to how a Liberal lecturer would be received. However, we received a letter on the 14th of February from Mr. J. A. Risser, corresponding secretary of Canadian Secular Union, Toronto, that on Thursday evening, February 19th, Mr. Charles Watts would be here and deliver a lecture on "Christianity and Secularism."

The notice was very short, and as no papers would be published before the lecture was to come off, we did the best we could; got bills printed inviting the public, and the local clergymen in particular, to a free lecture, and then waited developments. Mr. Watts arrived in due time, and was met at the Town Hall by between two and three hundred of an audience, quite a number being ladies.

I do not consider myself at all qualified to do Mr. Watts justice in trying to report his style, language, eloquence, or his mode of treating his subject. I would simply say that among his friends here, he more than sustained his reputation as champion advocate of mental liberty. Even those who do not hold opinions in harmony with Mr. Watts were lavish in their praises of the manner in which they had been entertained.

Notwithstanding the local clergy had been kindly invited to attend the lecture, none put in an appearance, thinking, no doubt, that absence was the "better part of valor." At the conclusion of the lecture Mr. Watts expressed the hope that there was some one present who would criticise his position, and would answer any questions or objections that might be raised.

Dr. Philip, of this place, rose in his place in the audience and said he regretted that there was not a clergyman present to answer the gentleman, and that he thought the clergy were derelict in their duty by allowing the lecturer to go without challenge, and were he a clergyman he would most certainly be on that platform defending his principles. Mr. Watts replied that he thought that the fact of his not being a clergyman accounted for his being present, and had he been one, he would hav been like the rest, conspicuous for his absence. This nettled the doctor to such a degree that he immediately mounted the platform and delivered a short address, taking the position that Christianity had always acted in harmony with the science of medicin, that the two went hand in hand, and that medical science owed a great deal to the Christian church for its perfection and success.

Mr. Watts in reply said that, instead of the church being in harmony with the science of medicin or any other science, the exact reverse was the fact, and proved it conclusivly, quoting authors, books, and pages which the doctor dare not question.

Now, the doctor is really a good speaker on almost any subject, and in wit and repartee seldom meets with his equal, takes great delight in toasting his opponent, and was never known to spare one. Under these circumstances the audience enjoyed eminently to see Mr. Watts wind him up like a clock. I understand that several of the clergy had something to say from their pulpits on Sunday last about the lecture, but what the nature of their remarks were I do not know, but presume it was something bold, seeing that Mr. Watts was a hundred miles away. We expect Mr. Watts here again in July next, when we expect to be able to organize a brauch society. AUDITOR.

PARKHILL, ONT., CAN., April 1, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The 24th and 25th of March mark an epoch in the history of Parkhill. On these evenings we had our first lectures on Secularism. Mr. Charles Watts, vice-president of the American Secular Union, lectured the first evening on "Secularism and Christianity," and the second evening on "Freethought—its Nature and its Struggles." There are few avowed Secularists here, but, as elsewhere, Freethought has a strong foothold, and is fast gaining ground. One of the surest indications of this is shown by the agitation the churches are thrown into on this question. The Methodist ministers here let no opportunities pass to slander and misrepresent Secularism and Freethinkers, but when they were kindly and courteously invited to attend Mr. Watts's lectures, and there to confute his arguments and prove their fallacy, they wisely chose discretion as the better part of their valor and remained away. They can best thunder forth their anathemas from the pulpit, where none are allowed to dispute them, for the wisest among them hav found that the Bible cannot stand against science; yet they cling with remarkable tenacity to their old exploded dogmas, and persecute those who dare investigate the subject for themselvs. At the first lecture the Hall, capable of holding about six hundred, was comfortably filled, and the second night the audience was somewhat smaller, but contained a larger sprinkling of intelligence. Of Mr. Watts's subjects and discourses it is perhaps not necessary to speak, as much has already been said concerning them in THE TRUTH SEEKER and elsewhere. That Mr. Watts understands his subjects thoroughly is very evident; his arguments are forcible, and his wit is of the keenest; he is well informed in science, theology, and all subjects which hav a bearing on the doctrin he teaches. He is an earnest, dignified, scholarly gentleman and an eloquent speaker. We hope at no distant date to see that advancement in the mental and moral condition of Parkhill people that such doctrins as Mr. Watts advocates would bring about. SECULARIST.

BUFFALO, N. Y., April 5, 1885.

MR EDITOR: I am gratified to learn that Messrs. Watts and Putnam are to visit Buffalo in the near future. Buffalo is a city of Liberals and Liberal Christians, and no better field for propagandism can be found in the state. We hav a large German population which is always Liberal, and the adjacent towns will probably greatly swell the attendance provided plenty of time is given to advertise the meeting. The press is not unfriendly, and our strength in professional circles, I believe, is as great as our Christian friends can boast of. Music Hall, which accommodates three thousand, is generally filled to hear Ingersoll, and it is a fact recognized by the press that his advent here is sure to call out the largest and most intelligent audience of the season.

The proposition of THE TRUTH SEEKER to secure the presence of Father Lambert is not received with favor here. We hav an idea that such a meeting would prove unprofitable for the reason that it would be unsatisfactory. There is no hope of securing the attendance of Catholics, and those Protestants who attend will feel that the side of Christianity is in poor hands, while the Liberals would be disappointed, as in the Wakeman-Mitchell discussion, by the failure of the Christian representativ to draw the heavy fire of the Liberal battery, and the meeting would be regarded as a skirmish of every-day occurrence. Lambert would be of little use. The egotism, cheek, and braggadocio for which he is remarkable, and his willingness to resort to the methods of the pettifogger, incapacitate him for the position. What we want here is a man who can defend his creed by an appeal to the reason of his auditors. I think that if the proper effort is made, one of our Protestant ministers could be prevailed upon to accept the challenge of Mr. Watts. Cannot Mr. Watts inform us of the best course to pursue in the matter of advertising and other arrangements? Yours truly, C. W. F.

NEWARK, N. J., March 17, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I was somewhat shocked to read in THE TRUTH SEEKER's report of the debate of the Manhattan Liberal Club on the Soudan and its people the gentle remarks of Robert Blissert. How kind he is! I should think the Manhattan Club would be proud of such a valiant, heroic, whole-souled soldier of the cross. How humane, and oh, how philanthropic! How much like a fervent Christian of ye good olde time! "He wished to God [which God does he mean?] the Mahdi had a thousand tons of dynamite to blow every Englishman to hell." What an expression of love for the poor soldiers who must either fight or hang; and how much like his favorit God!

See the dire misery there is in Ireland through the perversity of man—a country that has been blessed with so many saints, including the thrice-blessed St. Patrick who banished the snakes; and as all the evils arose in the world through the machinations of a snake in Eden, it is easy to see the grand work St. Pat accomplished. His anniversary has been celebrated to-day in Newark with great pomp and ceremony Had it not been for this apple-eating business there would not hav been such wickedness on the oarth. It can be traced to this cause, that England was invaded in the year 534 previous to the era of science 1600, by an organized band of cutthroats, known to history as the noble Christian Normans, who were so pious they brought with them one priest for every twelve soldiers, and by the blessing of the then representativ of the invisible God they succeeded, and as holy writ has it, they gathered the people roundabout and took them unto themselvs as servants and did unto them as they would. So devotedly did they carry out the Lord's commands that when his visible representativ on earth commanded them to take Ireland they did so, and they hold it unto this day. They divided up the lands in accordance with the commands of the Lord. To show their devotion to the lord of hosts, they nicknamed themselvs lords, after the manner of the dukes of Edom. They enacted laws, known to men as laws of primogeniture and entail, to protect them in their sacred rights, which should seem right and proper to all persons who are sincere believers in holy writ. Once upon a time a number of men determined to contest these rights, and actually went to Ireland to induce the people to rebel against them. Among these men were two named Bradlaugh and Charles Watts, but the people would not listen to them. One of their organs declared they would kneel at the feet of Mr. Bradlaugh if he would only keep still. Volumes could be written to show the steadfastness of these children of Erin to their ancient and glorious faith. Even their present representativs in Parliament are insincere reformers, who must eventually giv way to better men with more brains and less piety. J. PICKFORD.

ANOKA, MINN., March 2, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Please set the figures as far ahead as this order will pay for, and send me one ALMANAC. I see some say that you may count on them for life-subscribers. I would be glad to say so, but being young, only eighty-four, and as the old ship of Zion sails into this port for new recruits, I might be persuaded to enlist and go on board, and be found with THE TRUTH SEEKER in my pocket. It makes me think of Jonah's hours in confinement. I think best not to promis, but to pay up in full. May THE TRUTH SEEKER liv until there is another savior born. W. S. KING.

CINCINNATI, O., April 1, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Kindly permit me to reply through THE TRUTH SEEKER to a party whose name is M. E. Rose, of East Rodman, N. Y., a reader and perhaps a correspondent of your valuable paper. Be that as it may, such individual, by and through a most kind and friendly letter to me addressed, hath stated that the strongest conviction hath settled on his mind that the solid truth exists and is condensed in the scientific and philosophical fact of Materialism. Sir, it is perfectly clear that this party hath long been seeking truth and satisfaction in the ranks of Spiritualism, but never finding what he sought, and being totally discouraged, he resolved on finding the truth where alone it exists. The mind becoming brighter and more clear to discover truth from error, after due deliberation the advanced thoughts lead to a fixed conclusion that Spiritualism is one of those shams started for the purpose of propping the falling walls of the Christian mythology. He now clearly sees that it is time to hav done with fables which hath for ages blinded and deceived millions of people, and still doth use every scheme, plot, and cunning to save this widespread cheat from being discovered and exposed by the multitudes.

But, sir, there is a power at work, and ere long it will be felt. Large numbers of thoughtful people are shaking themselvs from all these creedal and dogmatic superstitions, and claiming entire mental freedom from all the supernatural shackles forged and imposed on them by a tyrant priesthood, or the knavish tricksters. Sir, the triumph of Materialism is only a question of time, and the glory and happiness of man on earth largely depend on such triumph.

The man of the future will not be gulled by a glittering and impossible bauble, promised by priests and cranks after death, on condition that big moneys be placed in their pockets, in order to liv in idleness and knavery. No, sir, the coming man will make for himself a paradise on earth, well seasoned with the ingredients of truth, honesty, morality, charity, and brotherly love. Then, sir, the brimstone trade, and the harp business, also the shining shore fantasy, will be things of the past. Man will no longer bow and cringe to imaginary myths, or hav any faith in anti-natural bugaboos. What is solid and strictly in accord with nature and its laws will prevail, and the downfall of ignorance, which is the parent and factor of religious superstition. T. WINTER, Materialist.

LINESVILLE, PA., March 16, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I receive your valuable paper regular, and am always glad to get it. I like the way THE TRUTH SEEKER goes for hypocrits of all kinds. If the press of the country would go at it the same as THE TRUTH SEEKER does, the priesthood would hav to throw off the cloak that hides their flimsy religion.

We hav a goodly number here in Linesville who pretend to be followers of the pure and undefiled religion it is believed Christ taught. I will try and giv you a brief history of some of these before I am through. We also hav some who pretend to be Liberals; but if they were held for examination, their Liberalism would be found wanting. But as all other classes hav hypocrits, it is no wonder they can be found among the Liberals. If THE TRUTH SEEKER will keep the ball a-rolling, the time will come when men who make a profession that they do not follow will be viewed aright by people that are fair-minded. I am going to giv you a brief history of a circumstance that happened here a short time ago, and the fact that it happened in an intelligent community makes it look the more shameful. It cannot but remind your readers of the Blue laws of New England a hundred and fifty or two hundred years ago, and the circumstances show plainly what so-called Christians will do if they only hav the power.

One of our citizens was taken to prison a few days ago by the orders of our school board, on account of being unable to pay a small tax that they claimed was due. The man has no property to pay tax on, and the amount they claim is only a small amount. But the man is not able to work. He has not done a day's work for nearly a year, and having no means could not pay. So the Christians who compose the school board made out a warrant and sent him to jail. How long he will hav to stay is for our county commissioners to decide. If the man had been a member of some of the churches, and unable to pay, he, no doubt, would hav been exonerated; but being somewhat of an unbeliever, he stood no show.

We hope you keep on firing hot shot into their false system until they get the scales off their eyes, and are willing to do jnstice to all alike. I wish THE TRUTH SEEKER success. I will use the nom de plume of BISBEY.

CAMDEN, ARK., March 15, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Your "Story Hour" is a great deal better than I was expecting to find. It is well gotten up for children's reading, about the best I ever saw. There is nothing in it to strain their minds, as in other books for children. There ought to be a copy of it in every family; the price is so low, it is more like a gift, and Miss Wixon must be complimented for it. Yours, J. VICTOR PEDRON.

EAST PORTLAND, OR., Feb. 28, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to answer through your columns Mr. D. M. Devine, of Philadelphia, who criticised my letter of January 17th on "Materialism Against Spiritualism."

If we existed spiritually previous to our birth, we will exist after our death. But as far as our material existence is concerned, we hav always been and always will be. We find that a cord of wood made into charcoal will produce 28,000 cubic feet of smoke, which, if reduced, will produce 1.20 pounds of acetate of lime, two gallons of alcohol, and one quarter of a pound of tar. The wood is gone, but the matter is left in the charcoal and in the former articles. Should we reduce a human body in a furnace, undoubtedly we should find some of these articles and many others. Now, that is as far as our body is concerned. We hav drawn on matter for our growth, and to pay that debt we hav to die. As for the spirit, I know of no existence before birth, and do not believe in any after death. C. L. SILVERMAN.

MACON, GA., March 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: After an absence of nearly twelve months, I turn up again, like a bad penny, and you will not wonder that I turn up so bad when I tell you that I hav been reading my Bible, the great TRUTH SEEKER, but very little these last twelve months. I am glad to inform you that you hav not lost a subscriber, for when I left Franklin, Pa., a friend took the paper until such time as I could establish myself at the sunny South. But the grand savior of men from superstition captivated him, and he will not giv it up. I remain as ever, a true friend of THE TRUTH SEEKER, THOMAS V. WILLIAM.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., April 6, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: John Peck is entitled to thanks, and deserves the compliments of all Freethinkers and Liberals, for the grand way in which he has handled the Rev. Windbag Talmage, who, we hope for truth and decency's sake the next time he "donks" will hav some regard for both. It ought to be issued in pamphlet; that and the "Object-lesson" will go well together. J. VAN DENBURGH.

FARMINGTON, UTAH, March 8, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $1, for which please send me four copies of the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885. As I hav said before, I still think it will become an annual necessity, and, like your very valuable paper, be indispensable in every live Liberal's house. I read in your paper, with much interest and satisfaction, "Notes and News" from our standard bearers in the field, and note with much joy the progress of Liberalism throughout the country, which makes me eager for the time to come when our noted Watts and Putnam and other lecturers shall come to this priesthood-ridden Utah and start the ball rolling, for the Mormons as a people hav never heard our (the Secular) side, and this "vexed question" (Mormonism) may yet be settled more effectually by advancing Liberalism to them, and creating a leaven of inquiry with them, than by laws of Congress restricting them, which they consider as persecution—though, in my zeal, I sometimes wish Congress would vigorously restrict them, as I think thereby much of their superstition in their so-called God and priesthood power could be killed. I was born in polygamy and raised a Mormon, but became convinced of its falsity and and deception nearly seven years ago, and am glad to say there are many apostates from Mormonism in this territory who are good Infidels, and older heads than mine, and with more experience in the issue than I hav, whom I would like to see write to our Liberal papers showing Mormonism up in its true light, for the benefit of our many Liberal friends East.

Allow me further to say that President Ingersoll would be the most suitable or proper man to enlighten the Mormons, because his popularity would insure him audiences.

Yours, HECTOR W. HAIGHT.

STONE CREEK, OHIO, March 4, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5.00, for which please extend my subscription. I am hardly able to take the paper, but I do not see how I could get along without it. I am a Materialist of the Thomas Winter and Otto Wettstein kind, but do not intend to stop my paper on account of anything the Spiritualists can say. Thanking you for your leniency in waiting for your pay on subscription, and sending the paper so promptly, I remain, Fraternally yours, D. HOCHSTETLER.

CARTHAGE, MO., March 11, E.M. 285.

MR. EDITOR: I want to say a few words to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER concerning that masterpiece of Liberal works, "The Bible Analyzed," by Col. John R. Kelso. Through the courtesy of a generous friend, I was presented with a copy some time ago, and, after a careful pernsal, I think it is one of the very best arguments against the Bible that I ever read. The author has a way of dissecting the moldy carcass of Christianity, and of showing up the falsehoods and absurdities of their time-worn texts and pet doctrins, that cannot fail to convince an honest reader in spite of his faith, if he has not outgrown it. The book is brimful of keen logic, sound reasoning, and with ridicule mixed in to make it intensely interesting and spicy for a Freethinker, but terrible for the clergy. Every page is full of sledgehammer blows against orthodoxy, and every blow is dealt "straight from the shoulder" in a manly way that commands respect even from the enemy. Taken altogether it is a magnificent work, and its splendid author deserves the gratitude and encouragement of all true Liberals and lovers of truth. I am doing some missionary work among the pious heathen here by circulating Colonel Kelso's work, THE TRUTH SEEKER, Nonconformist, Lucifer, Paine's "Age of Reason," etc. They are as lamps unto the feet of lost and befogged wayfarers in the dark paths of Christian mud and superstition.

Inclosed I will send you a clipping from the Carthage Press concerning Clark Braden and some of his crookedness. I hav no doubt it is true, and that the nasty Campbellite deserves to be in the penitentiary. WATSON HESTON.

COLUMBIA CITY, IND., March 18, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: When Elmina starts out to investigate Spiritualism, she goes to Syracuse, visits Mr. Truesdell; he tells her a fine story, she writes it up for the Investigator or TRUTH SEEKER, and that is about the sum total of her investigation. I think the generous people who are furnishing the money for such worthless business would be doing a far better act by feeding and clothing the needy orphan children, of which there are plenty to be found everywhere.

If Joe Caffray is an impostor and humbug, it does not prove Spiritualism untrue. D. D. GLASS.

HAMILTON, ONT., April 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $4 for some more anti-theological dynamite to be used in this part of the Lord's vinyard, the particulars of which I hav confided to the business management. I hav also to inform you that our great iconoclastic champion, C. Watts, paid us another visit and gave us two of his grandest orations, viz. "Science, its Struggles and Triumphs over Theology," and second, "Agnosticism and Christian Theism: Which is the More Reasonable?" Being on what is understood as week nights, our audiences were not as large as we usually hav them, but they were more select and many came who possibly would not hav ventured on a Sunday. Many who heard our friend were astonished at the logic, profundity, and eloquence, and declared they had never heard anything like it, and now we hav them inquiring when does he return. The city clergy are deploring the fact that "Infidel" literature is being so freely circulated amongst the citizens, and warn their congregations agaist hearing or reading anything having a tendency toward Freethought.

Yours for truth, GEO. MADDOCKS.

CARROLLTON, ILL., Feb. 21, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I received the ANNUALS the 17th inst. I am very much abliged to you for the extra copy, and you will also be obliged to me when I say I gave it to a young man residing here, and to-day he, of his own free will and accord, brought to me $9.10 for books which he saw advertised in it. So you see your liberality beats the old bread that was cast upon the waters and that took "many days" to come back, for yours took only three. Your ANNUAL givs much satisfaction to all who read it. I expect to order more in a week or so. I cannot be as activ in the glorious cause of humanity as I would like to be. I am engaged in the profession of dentistry, and this being a little town of two thousand people and five spires run up over as many soul-factories, it is hard to "kick against the pricks," but in a quiet way I try to do some good for the cause of truth and righteousness.

I send you the order for the books as the yonng man gave it. I wish for myself one copy of "Bible Morals," by that deep thinker, John E. Remsburg. With a lively interest for the success of THE TRUTH SEEKER and all other means to advance human happiness, I remain, fraternally,

Yours most truly, G. P. BENNETT.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

What the Rain Did.

Little Ted's kite was Japanese,
He only longed for a brisk March breeze
To set its blue wings flying;
And Gold Locks' hoop—a steely rim—
With a dry, clean walk could whirl and and skim
Had it only a chance for trying.
But it rained, and kept on raining,
And both began complaining.

Through the parlor window's dripping glass
They watched whatever chanced to pass,
Wet horses, dripping people;
They studied the steady weather vane
That still said rain, and rain, and rain,
High up on the misty steeple.
And listlessly both together,
Kept fretting at the weather.

Fretted and pined; but presently
The little girl, Gold Locks, chanced to see
Through lashes dimmed with weeping,
In a cosy sheltered garden bed,
Many a timid pale green head,
Up from the dark ground peeping,
So fair, and shining, and tender,
Folded, pointed, and slender.

They were the early crocuses,
That, waiting for just such rain as this
Down in their darksome prison,
Had felt the sweet drops, warm and free,
And to be first the spring to see
Had roused, and stirred, and risen.
And at sight of the pretty token
Was Gold Locks' sorrow broken.

She pointed out with finger glad
The green, fresh things to the little lad;
"Oh, look at the garden, Teddy,
There wasn't a leaf there yesterday,
But see what the rain has done to-day,
And the buds will soon be ready!"
And though it kept raining, raining,
There was no more complaining."

Trip on the Canal.

To the youthful readers, interested in the Children's Corner, the changes that hav taken place in the past half-century border on the marvelous. In these days of steam and electricity, it seems almost impossible to fully appreciate the transformations. The "iron horse" rattling over the plains, climbing and piercing the mountains, and crossing the rivers; with the steamboats traversing the streams and crossing the oceans; telegraph lines threading the highways and byways, uniting the islands and continents with its cords of steel; the telephone, with its marvels of speech; and the electric light, with its splendors of illumination; with the grand promis of electricity as a motor and their combined results of improved methods of transportation, means of travel, and transmission of intelligence, prove very clearly a great degree of material progress; and as compared to the condition of fifty years ago, the contrast makes the methods and means of the grandfathers and grandmothers appear crude and comical. As one who beheld the former, and has participated in both conditions, I will endeavor to sketch one important phase of means of transportation of the earlier time. Schuylkill county, Pa., was then the anthracite coal center. The Schuylkill navigation was the water highway of carrying the coal to Philadelphia, at that time the great receiving and distributing point for the Eastern cities. Port Carbon was the head of navigation. The first and second dams were formed from the Schuylkill River. The first tributary was Mill Creek, and emptied in Dam No. 1. The length of the Schuylkill navigation was 110 miles to tide-water at the outlet of Fairmount Dam, Philadelphia. Most of the distance was by dams varying a good deal in length and width. The shortest not over one-third of a mile, from that to Fairmount, seven miles in length. The Schuylkill navigation being so unlike the Erie and regular canals, it required skill, judgment, and experience to take a loaded boat from its head to its terminus with safety, especially in case of high or low water. It has been a standing joke to talk about the "raging canal," as though such a thing as a rough passage or a wreck was out of the question. I hav seen the time when a trip in high or low water was no joke, for it was far from funny to get stuck on a rock or stump and work for hours in the water to get off, or to learn that a hole was stove in and see the boat giv way to the inrushing flood. In case of high water 'twas not pleasant to hav boats go over dams and get broken and ruined, with occasional loss of life, to say nothing of the hard savings of years vanishing in an instant. This fresh water sailor life had a good deal of excitement and romance about it. The crew of a boat found it no easy or pleasant task to run night and day for nearly seventy hours, and it was often amusing to see the efforts we would hav to make to keep awake. Dancing, singing, and frequent washing of the face and eyes in cold water were the common modes, as we stood at the helm, and yet, strange to say, very few accidents occurred at night in the more difficult parts of the channel. It was wonderful how quick the highest pitched notes would die away, how suddenly the most demonstrativ dancing would cease, and how soon the sleepy eyes would cease to note the effects of frequent ablutions. "Tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep," was so appealing. How sensitiv our bodies and minds were to their work, and the least "sheer" or wrong move of the boat would start us to the sense of danger; and the pendulum of danger and duty kept an even tick. Our cooking stove was a crude affair—simply an open cylinder for the coal with a grate at the bottom. Our cooking consisted of frying and boiling, such as coffee, tea, ham and eggs, onions, potatoes, stewed chicken, etc. Bread, pies, milk, etc., were bought at the storehouses and stores. We could move the stove at any time, or to any place, and, when cold, took it in the cabin, leaving an open hatch for the escape of the sulphur; neglect of this precaution often resulted seriously, or fatally. The route of the navigation is charming. From Port Carbon to Port Clinton, with hill, mountain, and dale, this portion of the anthracite section is interesting.

At Pt. Clinton and down the dam you get into the Blue Mountain range. In one of the spans of this chain we reach the first tunnel of the Reading Railroad, and from the foot of Blue Mountain Dam we emerge into a more open and finely diversified agricultural region, with, at that time, the old Dutch town of Hamburg, the only town of note between that place and Reading. Leaving the succession of small dams, we hav the Hamburg Canal of eleven miles in length, then a small dam, a three mile canal level, and nine miles of dams to Reading. This place (a very old town) was the paragon of neatness, good-living, and dancing. Every hotel had its ballroom, and dancing was the general amusement. It was the custom to pay the fiddler for each set, and parties would come and go at pleasure. From Reading to Philadelphia, sixty-five miles, what was called the twenty-two mile canal, five miles, four miles, and Maryunk level made one-half way, in connection with which were the Reading, Black Rock, Little and Big Catfish, Norristown, Plymouth, and Fairmount dams, all a fair to good length, and along which was scenery that would charm any artist or lover of nature. In those days were no reaping or mowing machines, the scythe and rake were the instruments, and sturdy men and boys, with ruddy, merry girls, made the workers in the hay fields. A boatman's life 'mid such scenes had its poetic side that in part compensated for its tiresome wearing monotony. Though our vessels only carried fifty or sixty tons, we took a great deal of pride in their looks and carrying qualities, and with feelings akin to the locomotiv engineer that makes a pet of his engin, we would endow our slow-going crafts with life, when in high water they seemed to be jubilant in their movements, or at any time when in deep, wide water. Never in a canal proper. Here the pace was two snail-like for any enthusiasm. I hav a very vivid recollection of sticking fast in the new channel in low water in Fairmount. I cannot forget how hard we worked for hours to get off the rock. How, when we did get off and swung into the old channel, the boat made water so fast that we expected to sink in very deep water. We can fairly see with what desperation we plied the pump, and urged the horse to drag us to Mud Point, below Falls Bridge, so that we could sink in shallow water, or stop the leak with mud. We feel the excitement as we stood at the helm watching the low-lying craft, the straining of the horse, and how in due time we reached the point, barely pulled over it, reached the scales in safety, and (by the aid of the mud in the hole) poled down the tide three miles, put in the slip (as the tide was high), and there rested on our laurels. In the race for life we had won; too tired almost to shout glory, but with a sense of satisfaction that "all's well that ends well." We felt that we had done as all should do under like circumstances, that is, their very best, to overcome the difficulties that beset us. It was a little past 4 P.M. when we made fast the lines; the tide had passed its flood, and in less than two hours the boat was out of water, as the slip was empty.

A rest of three hours put us in good trim to go to the old Walnut Street Theater. This was in the palmy days of Edwin Forrest, and I think I saw him that night as Claude Melnotte in Bulwer's "Lady of Lyons." I think this was a better conclusion to a weary day than it would hav been to attend a Methodist class or revival meeting. My brother, who was my "Twin Traveler," will recollect the upward journey of a trip when we took up a load of store goods for our firm. We had a large amount of new peanuts, English walnuts, almonds, etc. It is strange how many nuts were eaten by four or five persons in three days, and how well we roasted fresh peanuts in a frying-pan. Everyone knew the "open sesame" to those bags, and how strange it was that all the bags were so poorly sewn. This feature of a boatman's life was one of its weaknesses, analogous to our inability to pass an orchard in its bearing season; and yet as a rule the generous characteristics of the sailor were common to the boatman. As Mr. Sigourney says of the Indians, "they are passing away." The canals are doomed, like the stage-coach, flint and tinder, and the tallow candle—they will soon become obsolete. To hav seen them occupy so important a place, and to hav been among their toilers, is a source of many sunny memories.

GEORGE LYNN.

Pulling Callie's Tooth.

"That tooth must come out!" said mamma. Because, you see, it was loose, and there was a new tooth pushing right along behind it.

"It'll hurt!" said Callie, with a doleful quaver.

"Not much, I guess," answered mamma, cheerfully. "Open your mouth, dear," and she managed to tie a strong linen thread around the tooth before Callie shut her mouth again, tight.

"I ca-ant hav it pulled!" said she.

"Very well," said mother, vexed a little, "you must keep the string around it till you can."

Then Callie's trials began. Papa was going over to the village, and he said Callie might go with him. But how could she, with that awful string hanging out of her mouth?

"May-be I can pull it, now," said Callie. "Count ten, mamma."

"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, t-e-n," counted mamma, with long pauses.

"Oh, I can't!" cried Callie.

And she didn't; and papa went to the village without her.

It was almost Fourth of July, and there was to be a pinic in the grove, and Nannie Slater said her mother was going to make currant-pies; Callie liked currant-pies above everything else, to eat. "But you can't go to the picnic with that string," said mamma.

So, one day, Callie went out on the door-step and sat down to think it over.

Joe was splitting wood in the yard. Joe was papa's chore-boy.

"I'll tell you how to pull it," said he.

"How?" asked Callie.

"Hitch it to the door-knob and then open the door," said Joe. "If you're 'fraid 'twill hurt, you needn't open it but a little."

"Well, I will," said Callie; and she tied one end of her "tooth string" to the door-knob. But it wasn't a mite of use, for when she opened the door she walked right in after it.

Joe's eyes began to laugh.

"I guess I'll get a drink of water," said he. He went in, and pretty soon he wanted to come out again.

"Go e-easy! o-oh!" screamed Callie.

But Joe didn't go a bit easy. He banged the door open so quick that Callie couldn't keep up with it. And there hung her tooth on the door-knob.

"What made you?" she demanded, and she sat down to cry about it. But when she found it didn't bleed the least mite, or hurt any, she began to laugh instead.

"Anyway, now I can go to the picnic and hav some currant-pie," she said; "and that's one comfort."

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—CHARADE.

My first a word that's daily used,
My second an exclamation;
My whole a man that once got drunk,
Whose name means consolation.

2.—ENIGMA.

My 15, 10, 13, 9, 15, 3, 8, 6 is a number;
My 8, 4, 11, 14, 15 is to lift up;
My 1, 5, 9, 16, 17 is a man's name;
My 2, 3, 11, 7 is a mineral;
My 12, 5, 13, 7 is a girl.
My whole is the name of a statesman.

A. LAURIE SAILOR.

3.—ENIGMA.

My 3, 4, 5, 6 is an ornament;
My 7, 4, 6 is a fruit;
My 3, 4, 7, 10, 9 is a weapon;
My 2, 4, 6 is an animal;
My 1, 5, 8, 2, 9 is a bird;
My 10, 9, 11 is an irregular verb;
I am composed of eleven lettters;
My whole is a city.

ALBERT JAMES.

4.—CROSS WORD.

My first 's in day, but not in night,
My second 's in quarrel, but not in fight;
My third is in vine, but not in twig;
My fourth is in little, but not in big;
My fifth is in pen, but not in sty;
My sixth is in pupil, but not in eye;
My seventh 's in dove, but not in curlew;
My eighth is in wren, but not in smew;
My ninth is in granter, but not in giver;
My whole is a city on a western river.

KATIE BAKER.

NOW READY!

THE MAGNIFICENT

COLORED

LITHOGRAPHS

—OF THE—

D. M. BENNETT MONUMENT.

PRINTED IN SEVEN COLORS ON THE BEST LITHOGRAPH PAPER, SIZE, $22\frac{1}{2}$ x $28\frac{1}{2}$.

THE BRONZE MEDALLION

PRINTS AS LARGE AS A CABINET PHOTOGRAPH, THUS GIVING NOT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE MONUMENT, BUT AN ACCURATE

LIKENESS OF D. M. BENNETT.

The lithograph is designed for framing, and will be a treasure for all Liberals.

Sent, postpaid, and securely wrapped, to subscribers to the Monument Fund for 30 cents; to others, 50 cents. Address this office.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00

WAIFS AND WANDERINGS

A NEW AMERICAN STORY,

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

AUTHOR OF

"GOLDEN THRONE," "PROMETHEUS," "INGERSOLL AND JESUS," ETC.

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cts.

"A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day.—John Swinton's Paper.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK.

FACTS.

A Magazine Devoted to the Statements of Mental and Spiritual Phenomena.

Single Copies 10 cents.

39tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXO . Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellen work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALL in a LIFETIME,

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay.

" ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY

A Collection of Passages

Illustrating the

Purity and Morality of The Bible.

Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Pure Philosophy for Physiologists.

Please send me 5 cents for Foote's Health Monthly for March, and read articles on

DIANAISM AND ALPHAISM.

Send stamps (1 cent ones) to

ELMINA D. SLENKER,

4t13 Snowville, Va.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY,

OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who have helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

PRICE, - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place. New York.

John Swinton's Paper,

PLAIN, PRACTICAL, GENUIN, STRONG, AND FREE.

A WEEKLY PAPER OF AMERICAN IDEAS, PROGRESS, AND RIGHTS.

21 Park Row, New York.

$1 PER YER (post paid). 3 CENTS A COPY.

Specimens Free.

1—Boldly upholding the Rights of Man in the American way.

2—Battling against the Accumulated wrongs of Society and Industry.

3—Striving for the Organization and Interests of Workingmen, and giving the news of the trades and the unions.

4—Uniting the New Political Forces; searching for a common platform, and giving the news of the young bodies in the field.

5—Warning the American people against the treaonable and crushing schemes of millionaires, monopolists, and plutocrats, and against the coming billionaires whose shadow is now looming up.

6—Looking toward better times of fair play and public welfare.

7—Living views of public questions and social topics.

8—Literary sketches and stories.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 cents.

A BOOK FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

PRICE, $1.25; TWO COPIES, $2.00.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS. SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT

IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

THE

HISTORY OF FREETHOUGHT,

Its Rise, Progress, and Triumph.

BY CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS—Sec. I.: Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II.: What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III.: Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV.: Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V.: Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

"I hav read Mr. Watts's 'History of Freethought.' It is just what every thinking man needs, and those who do not think need it to make them do so."

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, $1 25

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.

The Greatest of all Anti-theological Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

"Little Lessons" for Little Folks,

Are now ready to mail to any address, at 30 cents for board cover, and 20 cents for paper. Address

Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Virginia.

"'Little Lessons' are grand. I hashed and rehashed the lesson on spiders this evening in the Sunday-school. I am running two Sunday-schools. The children are slow in learning the mystery of the God-head; in comprehending the Trinity; but their eyes brighten and they take kindly to discourses on snails, toads, spiders, and lizards, so I think I'll keep it up."—Bertie Stone.

Book Review.

Universal Mental Liberty.

CAN IT BE ACHIEVED? AND HOW?

THE RISE OF INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY FROM THALES TO COPERNICUS. By Frederick May Holland, Author of the "Reign of the Stoics." New York: Henry Holt & Co. Pp. 458, 8vo. Price $3.50. [Order through THE TRUTH SEEKER].

This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition.

The story is well told, and of absorbing interest. The Present and the Future are the children of the Past. What we can do is but a trifle compared with what we inherit. Heredity dominates. The mighty dead rule us from their urns and graves—unconscious though we are of the fact. Until Liberals and reformers learn to know this fact, they are but children paddling their little canoes on the bosom of ocean currents whose drift they know not. Until we open our eyes and let history unroll the chart before us, we shall never know whither we are being borne, or whither we ought to try to sail. The great defect of modern Freethought is its want of knowledge of the historical evolution and continuity of the human race. That is the true meaning of history and the only positiv Bible or explanation of our modern world and of our place and duties in it.

Yet who but Auguste Comte has ever mapped out and made a panorama of the successiv religious or social integrations of the past, so that we can see that they hav any meaning for us who hav inherited the grandest integration of all, the Church of the World and its Religion of Humanity?

We suppose that all who read this notice will read the book, but we cannot forbear to call attention to some things at its beginning, its middle, and its end.

The stream of Freethought had its origin in many a spring and rill away back in the dark beginnings and childhood of the human race—too far back to be penetrated by any very clear history view. But wherever they arose, those known to us were gathered into the general current of human evolution by the Greeks. There among the separated valleys and isles of Greece, the undercurrents of the human soul for the first time grew strong enough to emerge to the sunlight. There, lake-like, they were veiled and draped and crowned with the ever-changing hues of poesy, art, and philosophy, which has ever since filled the world with wonder and delight. The Roman republics, too, borrowed this light, and under Lucretius, the Stoics, and Cicero were making it a hopeful twilight to the then known world. Then came the Roman empire and Christianity whereby this stream of light and liberty was repressed and put underground to work through subterranean passages for about sixteen hundred years, till the new era should begin—to last how long?

Our author has told the story well, but, as he expressly tells us, he has not tried to giv us its lesson. Let us then ask, How came Freethought to strike the surface in this wonderful way in democratic Greece and republican Rome? Many, doubtless, were the causes, but two are noteworthy, in their bearings on our own future:

1. The Greek and Roman polities were composed of separate cities, families, or tribes, confederated but never consolidated.

2. They as polytheists were compelled to recognize and respect each other's gods, and, as belief in them declined, each other's opinions.

Thus were made possible Aristotle at Athens and Lucretius at Rome. The lesson is that liberty arose and is possible only under federal democratic republics, in the absence or decline of theologic dogma and control.

We hav no space here to enforce this lesson as we would wish, but this is the lesson of this book, and the one which of all things the ages past hav to teach us.

As if it were to enforce this view, our author shows how baleful were the effects of the establishment of the Roman empire over liberty of thought, and then finally and consequently over literature, art, patriotism, and morality. If Cæsar had been the Washington of the Roman republic (as poor Cicero wished), instead of its Napoleon, where would not the human family stand in its progress to-day!

The Augustan splendors were those of sunset, and soon a deep, dark night of superstition crept over the world from the East. That was "the Asiatic mildew," Christianity. For a thousand years this night gave us the Dark Ages. There was no more sunlight on stream or lake of liberty—nor free play of its waters in thought or art or song. The living waters sank in the earth to feed the hells, or were evaporated to veil the heavens from mortal gaze. Reader! let no modern Roman Catholic make you forget that the triumph of his church was the desolation of the civilization that the Freethought of Greece and Rome had created; that its happiness and glory, its science and art, its laws and protection, vanished before the priests, monks, and barbarians. History has put Christianity on record as the Religion of Blood. There is nothing of horror or pain or anguish that it has not made its own. Well might Voltaire continually exclaim, "Crush the Infamous!" (Ecrasez l'infame!)

How did this terrible spiritual despotism ever arise? Plainly it was the result—the very child—of the empire. When the lives and souls of men were crushed out of them and driven from the earth by oppression, despotism and slavery, then they took refuge in the heavens and the hells. The Christian pope's spiritual despotism was the inevitable shadow of the Cæsars.

It has been taught that this spiritual Roman empire called the Catholic church was founded in some way by or from a man called Jesus Christ, much as Mormonism has arisen from Joseph Smith. We regret to say that our author appears to give sanction to this notion, by crediting this supposed man with a life and certain sayings, and putting him in place between Augustus (p. 65) and the Stoics as a historical character. But there is not the slightest evidence that he ever was there at all. Not a word, not a ripple, ever came to the surface of him, or from him, or about him, at that time. To suppose him, and then to cold-bloodedly put him into history as a fact then and there, is the most astonishing error our author has committed, and one for which it is hard to find an apology—except the habit of following Christian historians, who hav done it in the belief that their Christ was a God. That such a man ever existed at that time in Palestine is a scientific, historical, evolutional impossibility. Jesus the Christ—i.e., Joshua the Anointed, as the phrase appears in Greek—was the incarnated Messiah-Logos, which did not beget Christianity, but which was begotten by it, and thrown back on the past as a historical personage. This is an old and now familiar process of the human mind which underlies the history of Greece and of Rome, and of every ancient religion. That our author should not hav given this Logos theory of Christ even a mention in treating of Christianity is the great omission of this work. The origin of Christianity is one of the test issues of history. Was it a god, a man, or a Messiah-Logos? As you answer this question you construe all history—nay, all the world, and even your own life.

If a God—join his church and be consistent. If a man—show how he did or could hav existed and how we know anything certain about his doings or sayings. If a Logos—then absorb and mold all the good that after centuries attributed to him into the Ideal Humanity. Thus continue it as an increasing light forever, as in Whittier's "Vision of Echard," the Mystic (A.D. 1300). This vision our author quotes (p. 223), as if in reproof of himself, and every Liberal should commit it to memory. It begins:

> Ye bow to ghastly symbols,
> To cross, and scourge, and thorn,
> Ye seek his Syrian manger
> Who in the heart is born.

And ends:

> The stern behest of duty,
> The doom-book open thrown,
> The heaven ye seek, the hell ye fear,
> Are with yourselvs alone.*

This mystic "ideal human realization of the Christ" brings us to a chapter towards the close of the Middle Ages with which Liberals are too little acquainted, and to which our author has done such justice that we forgiv him for mistaking Emanuel, "the God within us," for a man like Joseph Smith. We refer to the Mystics and Humanists who were the dawn of the new era (1300 to 1600), as the Reformer Protestants were the twilight, before the morning sun of Copernicus and Bruno arose. By them (in 1600) the new heavens and the new earth stood fully revealed.

These Mystics had a touch of liberty in their souls which makes them very lovable. This came from their realization of the kingdom of heaven within them. Thereby they became united with God and "the Christ," and had no, or little, need of pope or church. Therefore they fell under the ban of the orthodox, and, notwithstanding their almost Protean changes of sect and name, suffered untold persecution. But they had a phase of religiosity which cropped out in Echard, a-Kempis, and Dante, in Erasmus and in our modern Quakers, and finally in our Whittier.

Liberty of heart and head was possible to them because, as we hav before said, theological dogma had vanished. Their unity with the Infinit as an ocean of power and love had melted its bonds away. Instead of putting bonds on their brothers, they wished to free them by bringing them under the same emancipating influence of love. Thus the stream of liberty of the human soul came to the surface again in them. They form a singular oasis in the desert of papal and temporal tyranny and cruelty.

But why? The seventh chapter of our author shows that the old condition of a varied if not of a federal temporal power had arisen in Europe. The empire of Charlemagne had broken up, and Germany, France, and England were not consolidated, but were yet in more or less open rebellion against the papacy. Under these, the only possible conditions of liberty, as we hav pointed out, the Mystic Humanists came and brought the blush of the dawn. They appealed to the inner-light, the private judgment, and achieved for themselvs more liberty of soul than Luther was ever able to realize or even understand.

Yet they made Luther possible and all of the twilight of the Reformation, and their influence for good will remain imbedded forever in the human soul, when Protestantism as a dogma and a theocracy has failed and been replaced. But why will that fail? Because it became the enemy of liberty by alliance with temporal princes, and the enforcement of dogma. Thus the private judgment to which it appealed at first, as the law of liberty, was violated. The Bible, "the religion of Protestants," has wholly failed to withstand the attacks made upon it as an infallible revelation and guide of life. Protestantism can therefore be sustained only by authority temporal or social, and, therefore, it is doomed, for as fast as the Bible goes it has no ground to rest that authority upon.

Yet let us be grateful. Protestantism has been the bulwark of all our liberties, present and future. Luther, Calvin, and Knox did not mean it, but they hav builded wiser than they knew. "Reason is the Devil's own harlot," said Luther, but Humanity can never be redeemed until she is redeemed and enthroned as the chiefest minister of the Highest, however that may be conceived.

Yes, Protestantism has fought our battle against the papacy, and it has made the only fight that has been of any moment. All other spiritual heresies and temporal potentates, and they hav been many and strong, hav gone down before the curse of Rome. Our author's book is chiefly a record of them. Glory be to Luther! not that he or his hav won the battle, but that they hav made one possible for us and our successors.

This brings us to the end and concluding prophecy of our author, which is certainly cheerful: "The apprehension expressed in Count Goblet d'Alviella's richly stored history of free religion, 'L'Evolution Religieuse Contemporaine,' and in other Liberal publications, that liberty of thought is likely to be eclipsed again, as in ancient times, by the rise of some new religion, will not be felt by those who remember that classic unbelief was confined to the upper classes; that the Roman emperors sought to suppress mental independence; that science was then in its infancy, and that culture had not become so general as at present. This phase of history will never be repeated."

And again our author says: "That every yoke will yet be broken, and the doors of all prisons be unbarred, cannot be doubted by those who see how many movements are working together for emancipation. There are the various schools of thought which I hav described as scientific positivism, philosophic skepticism, independent mysticism, and pious rationalism, which last might be called Liberal Christianity if it did not include such other movements as independent Theism, and progressiv Judaism. Then, besides the efforts to establish these ways of thinking, there is the labor now going on for the growth of biblical criticism, the destruction of intolerance, the emancipation of women, the increase of political and social liberty, and the improvement of general culture. Here are nine distinct movements all working for universal liberty of thought. When any of these culminates, its force will be incorporated in the rest. That all the progressiv movements should fail together is no longer a possibility. No one of these movements has ever before reached its present perfection, or it could not hav been swept away. There is no more danger of the return of the Dark Ages than of the relapse of New England into Indian hunting-grounds, or of the revival of the mastodon and ichthyosaurus. Complete emancipation of thought may still be distant, but it must surely come" (p. 458).

With the general drift of these happy prophecies we concur, but we could not, if only the means upon which our author bases them (as above quoted) were all upon which they can be founded. We feel sure, after scanning the pages of history and of our author's book, that not any one, nor all of the influences he has named above, can ever withstand the papacy. If those are all of the defenses he has to offer, the Liberal cause is lost! The Pope and the Czar will finally inherit the earth, unless they meet a spiritual and a temporal power which can inaugurate a "higher integration" than the world has ever seen, and which will absorb and inwardly digest the Roman church and the Russian empire. Never forget it! These two R's, Rome and Russia, are the two great enemies of liberty and of the human race. They are the heirs and descendants of the Western and Eastern Roman empires, and like them mean death or domination. Protestantism now only stands in the breach, but her Bible is in ruins and she cannot advance a step, and cannot long hold her own ground. Her people are a few in Europe and North America; her churches are a rope of sand; her states are not even federated; her armies are fragments. The pope, relieved from the disgrace of a temporal power, is strengthening his spiritual power over the souls of men as never before in the history of the church since Charlemagne. The czar wields an army of two millions, and is gradually absorbing the whole of Asia. All of the elements that our author names as resistant to these spiritual and temporal dominations will be incorporated or else subdued by them step by step unless they can be organized as a Religion and a Republic of the whole human race. Neither the Catholic church nor the czar is really committed to the Bible, nor to any theory or dogma except their own universality (Catholicism), and their authority to enforce it. In a word, theirs is the ultimate church or integration of the human race on earth, to their view; and such will be the result, unless a higher spiritual and temporal integration includes them, as Christianity did the Roman empire of old. The fact that these two R's hav been hostil for centuries will deceive no one who remembers that they are both Christian and twins in their historical origins, and in their creeds. Theirs is but a difference of definition only, and the same sacraments and ceremonies prevail in both. When the czar is the chief of the world, and the pope the only mighty "medicin man," the Ecumenical counsel that will consolidate these powers to rule the world will be as easy as that which placed Charlemagne and the pope over Europe.

Our author promises to write another volume so as to bring the story of Freethought down from Bruno to the French Revolution—and all Liberals will await its appearance with no little interest. In that we shall look to see some adumbrations of the organized Religion of Humanity and Federation of the World which shall take the field against Rome in its contest for the soul of Man, and against Russia in its contest for the control of the earth. That new power must appear soon, and must consolidate and increase the various factors our author has specified as tending toward freedom, or the balance of power will be so greatly against it, from present appearances, that it can never succeed. There is no time to be lost. Russia must be met by a Federation of the civilized peoples and nations of the world, now apparently possible only under the lead of the English-speaking peoples. Rome must be met by the higher and truer integration of the Religion of Humanity sustaining that Federation. Liberty is only possible now as in the days of Greece and Rome, when the Feberal Republic of Man, as the higher integration, shall subordinate czar and pope, Devil and God, to Humanity as the supreme human interest. The law of evolution will then come in play, to wit, the higher the integration the more individualized the parts and organs. In a word, then, the conditions of a completer individualization will be realized, and consequently Universal Mental Liberty will then be possible, and with it a far greater practical liberty and a welfare and glory of human nature not as yet dreamed of in our Utopias.

For who shall set limits to the providence of the human race when actually applied to the achievement of its welfare? The powers which built the pyramids and the cathedrals, increased a thousandfold with the advancing years, cannot fail to realize a heaven on earth.

New York, April 3, 285. T. B. WAKEMAN.

*To follow this subject further, read "Creation or Evolution—Which?" being the reply of T. B. Wakeman to the Rev. Mr. Mitchell, at Rochester, 1884, to be had at this office, price 15 cents.—ED. T. S.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

MONKS, POPES,

AND

THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES. THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

FOR SALE.

I will sell the best storeroom in the town of Liberal; it is 70 feet deep, 21 feet wide, and 12 1-2 feet high in the clear; built of stone, iron roof, well plastered. Terms easy.

Address C. O. RICHEY,
2t16 Liberal, Mo.

A NEW BOOK OF DIRECTIONS

FOR

CLEANSING THE BLOOD,

And Curing all forms of Disease that the Human Family is Subject to,

Without the Use of Any Medicine Whatever.

By Professor Nathaniel Pierce.

Price, 30 Cents.

6tf Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Five numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

"REPUBLIC."

[Published in the rapidly growing young city, on Longfellow's "mountain of the prairie," Pipestone, Minn.]

Eight pages, weekly, $1.50 a year. Contains the news of the day, short stories, scientific miscellany, literary selections—but best of all, the REPUBLIC is unqualifiedly, uncompromisingly opposed to the LIQUOR TRAFFIC! It puts LIBERTY AGAINST LIQUOR! It opens its columns to Free Discussion. It challenges all opponents to meet it on the burning question of our time, PROHIBITION! The plea, that legal Prohibition annihilates PERSONAL LIBERTY will be met and refuted. All opponents to Prohibition will be accorded the right to reply. This is the WORKINGMAN'S REPUBLIC. And an advocate of WOMAN SUFFRAGE. When the mothers, wives, and daughters vote there will be an end to the RUM CURSE! When women vote we will hav a true Republic, and never before. The REPUBLIC is published to disseminate these principles. Shall we receive your aid?

Send all remittances to

W. F. JAMIESON, Editor and Publisher,
PIPESTONE, MINN.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. McDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By WILLIAM McDONNELL, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A romance of earth, heaven, and hell. Beautifully written by S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.

The Darwins. A Domestic Radical story. By Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By Mrs. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S

Popular Jewelry Store

Rochelle, Ill.

A FEW OF MY PRICES;

Solid silver stem-winding American Watches, hunting or open case; 2 oz. 7 jeweled, $10; 3 oz., $11; 4 oz $12; 5 oz. $14. Same cases with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13.50, $14.50, $16.50. Same case with full (15) jeweled movement, patent regulator, $17, $18, $19, $21. Same cases, with full jeweled adjusted patent regulator movements, $22, $23, $24, $26; key wind, $2 to $5 less; for best cases, silver caps and gold joints add $1.50, and for best filled gold cases (warranted for 20 years) add $10 to best silver cases, making a 11 jeweled hunting (filled case) stem-wind quick train watch only $28; same for ladies, $23. Ladies' solid gold stem-wind watches, latest styles, good American 11 jeweled moyements, 10 kt, $24; 14 kt, $32; same full jeweled, $32 and $40—for fancy engraving add $3 to $5.

Prices and specifications for finer ladies' and gents' watches, including all the finest, richest, and most elaborately finished watches in the world, sent upon application.

Watches cleaned for $1; main springs, $1. Bank time-locks, chronographs, music boxes, etc., repaired at lowest rates, and all work warranted the best in the world or no pay.

Best steel spectacle made, $1; genuin pebbles, $2; good common, 25 cents. Best tripleplated teaspoons, $2; tablespoons, $4; knives, $1.75; forks, $1.75—all per set of six.

Parties desiring silverware, jewelry, diamonds, etc., for presents will do well to order sample package on selection and save money. Cash will be refunded on all goods not satisfactory.

Watches, etc., may be safely sent in unsealed packages per registered mail, and will be returned at my expense. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

P. S.—Stop over and see me when near Rochelle, Ill.

ELEMENTS

OF

UNIVERSAL HISTORY

FOR

HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline, history the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1883, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PROSE POEMS

And Selections,

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued.

It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author.

The work is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it.

In the more elegant styles of binding, this volume is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.

In workmanship the volume is a masterpiece. The type is large and beautiful; the paper heavy and richly tinted; the presswork faultless; and the binding, as perfect as the best materials and skill can produce. The book is quarto in size, and contains 248 pages. No item of expense has been spared to make the work worthy of author and public.

PRICES:

Silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side,	$2 50
Half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style,	4 50
Full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine,	7 50
Full tree calf, highest possible style and finish,	9 00

Sent to any address, postpaid, on receipt of price. THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

CHRISTIANITY

A REWARD FOR CRIME.

Substantiated by the Bible.

BY

O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.

Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

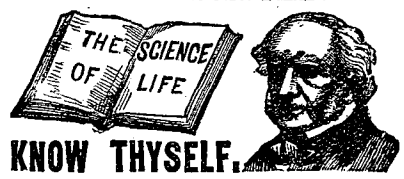
PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,

WITH AUTOGRAPH,

Price, 20 cents.



CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,

Price, 40 Cents.

Address this Office.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.

BY MAIL POST-PAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14

HEAL THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivily all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y3

ONE MILLION COPIES will soon be sold TWENTY YEARS OF CONGRESS—By James G. Blaine. The only history of our Government from 1861 to 1881. Hon. John S. Wise, M. C. from Va., says: Whoever takes it up, no matter whether he be Mr. Blaine's friend or enemy, will never put it down until he has read the whole. $200 per month to good agents. Apply at once. The Henry Bill Pub. Co., Norwich, Ct.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

Will Cure all Forms of Disease Witho Medicine.

CONSULTING ROOMS,

471 WEST MADISON ST., CHICAGO, IL

Something for Invalids to read and study over.—Stop Drugging and try Nature's Remedy, MAGNETISM.

For years past it has been known to the profession that Magnetism and Electricity were powerful agents for imparting vital force and energy to the worn-out sufferer from disease. Many humanitarians in the profession, thinking more of the alleviation of suffering than they did of the code of ethics by which they were bound, have resorted to magnetic treatment as a last resort and found themselves astonished at the effect upon their patients. They had been taught that medicine was an absolute essential in all cases, and that that failing, the patient must die, as nothing more could be done. Here and there an advanced thinker has flung aside the tie which bound him to his dogmatic brethren and has resorted to other and more scientific methods of treatment. As a result many, having broken the bonds which bound them to a system as barbarous as it was unscientific, have used their best energies to devise means for the alleviation of human suffering. Here and there the wondrous power of MAGNETISM was established, and many diseases hitherto classed as incurable readily submitted to its mild but potent influence. This agent to the intelligent observer was found everywhere. Being, as it is, the very essential of all life, it was found that the human body when in a diseased condition was almost bereft of this vital principle. If we can supply this vital force to the worn-out body the patient will get well.

Ah! but how is it to be done, says the physician. Science, however, came to the rescue, and solved the problem. Here and there throughout the world are fields of what are known as magnetic ore. It was observed that the ore, when carried upon the person, was found to be a safeguard against disease, and to this circumstance we are largely indebted for magnetic wearing apparel, for it was an easy transition from carrying magnetic ore to covering the body with permanently charged magnets, placed in garments fitted to every part of the body. Since the first introduction of magnetic appliances as a curative, there has been a number of these so-called magnetic garments foisted upon the public by men whose sole object was gain. Unscientific in construction, and having little if any magnetism in them, their life was of short duration; it was long enough, however, to demonstrate that when constructed upon scientific principles there was scarcely an ailment that human flesh is heir to that would submit to their healing influence.

THE EUREKA MAGNETIC APPLIANCES are superior to everything of a similar character heretofore offered to the public, being the only scientifically constructed appliance in the market; it is now two and a half years since they were first offered to the public, and during that time we hav treated thousands of patients, and not a single case of failure to receive benefit reported to us, while we are in daily receipt of testimonials of cures from all parts of the country. We know that disease cannot exist where these garments are worn in quantities as advised by us.

To all who may be afflicted with any of the following complaints, we say unhesitatingly, the Eureka Magnetic Garments will cure you:—Paralysis, Rheumatism, Nervous Debility, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Bleeding at the Lungs, Spinal Disease, Gout, Asthma, Bronchitis, Congestion of the Kidneys, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Loss of Energy, Heart Disease, Constipation, Consumption, Prolapsus Uteri, Chronic Peritonitis, Cancer, Ovarian Tumors Syphilis, Epilepsy, St. Vitus' Dance, and all form of chronic invalidism.

PRICE LIST.

Lung Invigorators,	$ 6 00
Gentlemen's Body Belts,	6 00
Sciatic Appliances,	5 00
Knee Caps,	3 00
Leg Belts,	4 00
Anklets,	4 00
Shoulder Appliances,	4 00
Wristlets, each,	1 50
Hat Bands,	1 00
Head Caps,	4 00
Sleeping Caps,	4 00
Abdominal Belts (ladies),	6 00
Gents' Vests,	15 00
Ladies' Jacket and Corset (combined),	18 00
Superfine Insoles (all leather),	1

While these garments can be procured at the above low prices no one can afford to be ill. Our ladies' supporters are just what every lady in the land needs, as it will be found a great assistance at certain periods; all these garments are made to measure, and a fit guaranteed. To ladies who are all dragged out a combination jacket and corset will restore you to new life and energy, and pay for itself an hundred fold in a few weeks' wear. This garment is only made from actual measure, and a perfect fit assured.

All communications answered free of charge. Address, DR. L. TENNEY, 471 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill. ☞ Agents wanted for Boston, New York Brooklyn, and Philadelphia.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Gems of Thought.

LET us then regard the men of science, teachers of nature, the expounders of her laws, the demonstrators of her forces, those who show us the danger in violating her exactions, as our best friends. Let us learn their lessons; let us study their works; let us studiously seek all the information they hav to impart.—D. M. Bennett.

IT will hardly be claimed, at this day, that the passages in the Bible upholding slavery, polygamy, war, and religious persecution are evidences of the inspiration of that book. Suppose that there had been nothing in the Old Testament upholding these crimes, would any modern Christian suspect that it was not inspired, on account of the omission? Suppose that there had been nothing in the Old Testament but laws in favor of these crimes, would any intelligent Christian now contend that it was the work of the true God? If the devil had inspired a book, will some believer in the doctrin of inspiration tell us in what respect, on the subjects of slavery polygamy, war, and liberty, it would hav differed from some parts of the Old Testamen ?—R. G. Ingersoll in the Christian Religion.

IT is our business, in the matter of opinion, to search simply for truth. Emotion, the love of the heart for systems in which we hav been trained, I feel as keenly as anyone, but I hav learned this one thing: emotion is called out by those things that we hav long associated with, that we hav learned to love, and with which we hav become familiar. No man can hav this sentiment concerning any thing or any person that is new. It needs time. The thought of the last century becomes the sentiment and poetry of this; and the thought of this century will be the emotion and poetry of the next. It is our business—for our own sake, for God's sake, for the world's sake—to find what is true and let the heart come after and learn to love and venerate and worship the truth. It is not the heart's business to lead the head, but the head's business to lead the heart.—M. J. Savage.

THE causes of superstition are, pleasing and sensual rites and ceremonies; excess of outward and pharisaical holiness; over-great reverence of traditions, which cannot but load the church; the stratagems of prelates for their own ambition and lucre; the favoring too much of good intentions, which openeth the gate to conceits and novelties; the taking an aim at divine matters by human, which can not but breed mixture of imagination; and, lastly, barbarous times, especially joined with calamities and disasters.—Bacon's Essays.

IN Bacon's Essays the superiority of his genius appears to the greatest advantage: the novelty and depth of his perceptions often receiving a strong relief from the triteness of the subject. The volume may be read from beginning to end in a few hours, and yet, after the twentieth perusal, one seldom fails to remark in it something overlooked before. This indeed is a characteristic of all Bacon's writings, and is only to be accounted for by the inexhaustible aliment they furnish to our own thoughts and the sympathetic activity they impart to our torpid faculties.—Dugald Stewart.

AT first David, the man after God's heart, took refuge with the Philistines and fought against his own countrymen. Next he turned brigand and was joined by all the criminals and outlaws of the land. The cave of Adullam was his lair, whence he sallied forth to levy blackmail on the rich farmers and graziers of the neighborhood, cutting their throats when they refused to pay. At the same time, he was a very religious man and never went on a plundering expedition without consulting a little image, which revealed to him the orders and wishes of Jehovah, just as the Bedouins always pray to Allah before they commit a crime and thank him for his assistance when it has been successfully performed. —Winwood Reade.

AFTER a shower the sun goes down,
Clear in the west unveiled sinks he;
And the crimson clouds the sun surround,
Making a picture grand to see.

A golden light is gilding the leaves,
Flickering far o'er the distant hills,
Up from the west comes a fragrant breeze,
The voices of birds the fresh air fills.
—Gracie Holmes.

AS to the great question, What becomes of man after death? we do not see that a highly educated European, left to his unassisted reason, is more likely to be in the right than a Blackfoot Indian. Not a single one of the many sciences in which we surpass Blackfoot Indians throws the smallest light on the state of the soul after the animal life is extinct. In truth, all the philosophers, ancient and modern, who hav attempted, without the help of revelation, to prove the immortality of man, from Plato down to Franklin, appear to us to hav failed deplorably.—Macaulay.

AMONG the many strange servilities, mistaken for pieties, one of the least lovely is that which hopes to flatter God by despising the world and vilifying human nature. The author of creation is the only author who is supposed to be flattered by the lavish assurance that his works are imbecil.—Lewes's Problems of Life and Mind.

THE reason why the genuin Liberal has rejected the old church faith is not because he desires to reject truth and to become immoral, but because he finds the church to-day standing directly in the way of the progress of truth and a better manhood. Believing that the best morality must come from accepting the facts of science and of all known truth, he cannot uphold a system of theology which is built upon tradition and exploded theories of life and the universe.—S. J. Stewart.

DO good to those that hate you; pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you.—Jesus. Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil; the Lord reward him according to his works.—Paul.

EVIL into the mind of God or man
May come and go, so unapproved, and leave
No spot or blame behind.—Milton.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	63
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,	Elizabeth Cady Stanton,	J. D. Shaw,

ORTHODOXY.

A Lecture by

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

"The clergy know that I know that they know that they do not know."

One of the best documents to circulate ever printed. Every man, woman, and child in the United States should read it. Every reader of the paper should send for a dozen. Price, singly, 10 cents; twelve for a dollar. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

INGERSOLL CATECHISED;

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies for a dollar. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."

Proving conclusively that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

COMPLETE WORKS, in One Volume. Half calf, 5.00

THIRD EDITION.

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

1 Vol. Royal 8vo. Cloth. About 600 pages.

Price, - - - - - $3.00

Sent postpaid, on receipt of price, Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER,

Odds and Ends.

"IF you skate for the glory of God," says Mr. Moody, "it is all right." It may be all right to skate for the glory of God; but we doubt whether this object will ever make falling all right.

BESOM'S head is pretty thinly thatched, and when a good man with a subscription paper reminded him that the hairs of the head are numbered, old Besom rubbed his poll and said, "I'll pay you if you will get me the back numbers."

THE women suffragists are logical. What could excel this from the recent speech of an English lady agitator: "I hav no vote, but my groom has. I hav great respect for that man in the stables; but I am sure if I were to go to him and say, 'John, will you exercise the franchise?' he would reply, 'Please, mum, which horse be that?'"

A SAN FRANCISCO church advertises for a minister who can preach two sermons, strictly original, every Sabbath—one in the morning for saints, and the other in the evening for sinners." This would seem to indicate that Californians are saints Sunday morning and sinners Sunday evening. In other places the change does not generally take place until Monday.

AN American, whilst on a visit to the old country, was talking to a group of cockneys about railway traveling, and remarked that some of the fast trains in this country ran long stretches at the rate of a mile a minute. "Oh, that's nothing to the rate they travel on this side," interrupted one of the Londoners, "I know the conductor of one of our fast express trains who aimed a blow with a club at man standing at a little wayside station through which they passed, and knocked down and killed a man standing at a station seven miles further on. That's what I call speed."

AT a suburban funeral not long ago, the clergyman was dilating upon the many virtues of the departed. As it happened, there was much justification for it, as the deceased was a man of large heart and many merits; yet the clergyman, probably feeling free to let his fervor of language play unrestrained, almost outdid his theme. Not content with couching his praise in simple and straightforward words, he mounted to imagery, and seemed to attribute angelic as well as human characteristics. When at the climax of his eloquence, his hearers charmed with the sweet incense, the spell was broken by a shrill voice, which cried out, "Facts, facts; giv us facts!" The sensible comment came from a sage and venerable parrot which had been removed to an ante-room, and then it was remembered that prominent among the virtues of the deceased master was a sturdy dislike for flattery and a habit of sharply rebuking "highfalutin."

A YOUNG lady, a Sunday-school teacher in a church pretty near the corner of Gilmor street and Lafayette avenue, was on Sunday defining faith to her class of young Americans, ages from six to ten years. She set about her task in a practical way. "Faith in anything," she said, "is to believe that something existed which could not be seen. Suppose," she said, "your papa should tell you he had put $10 in the bank for you, and that you might draw it from the bank when you grew older. You did not see the money put in, but you know it is there, because you believe what your papa tells you, and when you grow up and want the money, you dress yourself up with your gloves on, and your high hat, and your cane, and you——" At this juncture the teacher was startled by one of the boys, who cried out: "What are you giving us? Do you think I'm a dude?" The young lady says that she felt prostrated, and that it will be some time before she stirs up the question of faith again.—Baltimore Paper.

FIDDLERS' GREEN.

A long time ago, when the world was quite young,
There happened this story, that never was sung:
A cargo of sailors went down in the deep,
To take with old Davy their permanent sleep.

They waked from their nap and got "onto" their pins,
And wondered how stood the account of their sins;
They looked to the distance, where plainly they saw
The city of God and the book of the law.

So dancing, and shouting, and singing, they went
To see how the seasons in heaven were spent.
The watch and the lookout for Saint Peter call:
"Come up to the tower and look through the wall;

"A strange lot of people are down on the green,
Unlike anything that we ever hav seen."
Poor Peter took fright, and he hastened below
To lock up the doors, as if dreading a foe.

They call for admittance, with jolly good cheer,
But Peter exclaimed, "There's no room for you here.
We don't hav such folks in this region to stay;
So pack up your budgets and hurry away."

"All right," said the leader, a maritime swell,
"We can't get in here; let's go over to hell."
But Satan beheld them, and shouted in fright,
"If they get in here, they will rule us by night."

"Ahoy! Let us in, or we'll level you straight!"
The devil braced up with his back to the gate;
His tail through the lattice was sticking so fine,
The tars took a surge on the devil's stern line.

He couldn't cut loose, as they shouted and bawled.
At last for his cook and hot water he called,
So, scalding them off, he recovered his tail,
And gave them some blisters to wear and bewail.

Away ran the sailors till out of harm's way,
Then stopped and declared, "There's the devil to pay,
We can't go to heaven, nor get into hell,
'Tis better out here on the prairie to dwell.

"We'll start a new station for resting our bones
Below, when they pipe us to see Davy Jones;
No hell and no heaven shall ever be seen;
The home of the sailor is Fiddlers' Green."

ISAAC A. POOL.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 17. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, April 25, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

MAYOR SCOVILLE of Buffalo says that religious denominations own $4,200,000 worth of property in that city. Of this amount the Catholics own over $2,000,000.

LAST year's income of the Girard estate in Philadelphia was $950,000 Its real estate alone is valued at $7,346,000, besides the college buildings and grounds. The collieries of the estate produced 1,400,000 tons of coal during the year.

SUNDAY SCHOOL teacher: "What occupation did Paul follow prior to his conversion?" Boy: "Runnin' a hay-press." Teacher: "The idea! What makes you think that Paul was running a hay-press?" Boy: "'Cause he pressed Timothy and shipped to Rome."—Newman Independent.

THE entire force of the Salvation army was arrested at Utica, N. Y., on the 18th, on charges by citizens. People living in the vicinity of the barracks are bitterly incensed by the meetings held nightly. At a parade the other night crowds blocked the thoroughfares for three blocks. The case is to be made a test.

A GEORGIA farmer leased some land last year to a colored man for a third of the crop. A severe drought cut the crops short, and the negro gathered only two bales of cotton and two wagon loads of corn. The latter was stored and the cotton sold. When the landlord called for his share he was told that there was none for him. He asked, in surprise, "Didn't I rent you my land for a third of the crop?" "Yes, boss," said the darky, "but you see dere was no third. Dere was only two bales of cotton and two loads of corn; all mine, and nuffin for you by de contract."

THE Arabian papers publish the full text of the manifesto which the Mahdi has issued in reference to his claims to the Caliphate. In this document the Mahdi says: "I testify before God and the Prophet that I am drawing the sword, not for the purpose of founding an earthly empire for myself, nor to amass wealth, nor to liv in a magnificent palace, but in order that I may afford help and consolation to the faithful, with a view to their liberation from the slavery imposed upon them by infidels, and in order that the power of the Moslems may be restored in all its ancient splendor. I am therefore resolved to carry my sword from Khartoum to Berber. Thence I shall proceed to Dongola, Cairo, and Alexandria, restoring Moslem rule and government in all these cities. From Egypt I shall march to the land of the Prophet to drive out the Turks, whose government is no better than that of the infidels, and I shall restore the land of Arabia, with its two sacred cities, to Islam. Sons of Ismail, you may depend upon my soon making my appearance in your midst with the sword of faith."

A CORRESPONDENT in last Sunday's Herald asks any "genuin Catholic" the following questions, and wishes them answered: "If the Catholic is the only true religion, as held by the Roman Catholic church ('Syllabus of Errors,' v., 21), and the church and state should be united, as also held by her ('Syllabus of Errors,' vi., 55), does it not necessarily follow that wherever she really has the power she must, to be consistent with herself, cause the Roman Catholic religion to be made a state religion, to the exclusion of all other modes of worship? Consequently, if there ever should be a sufficient Catholic majority in this country to allow of its being done, would not all good Catholics be bound in conscience to establish the Catholic religion here in the United States as a state religion, and to prohibit all other modes of worship? Is not the conclusion that they would be so bound fully warranted by x., 78, 'Syllabus of Errors?' We ask how can the Roman Catholic church allow, if she hav the power to prevent, doctrins which she believes to be false, pernicious, and heretical preached to those whom she believes God has placed her here to keep from error and to guide unto salvation?"

THE Union Medicale is greatly pleased with a gigantic skeleton of the meridional elephant in the new gallery of paleontology in the Paris Musee. It is said to surpass in size the skeletons of the greatest mammoths and mastodons, and the fossil is exceptionally interesting in many ways But the intense satisfaction of the French editor seems to arise chiefly from the fact that his countrymen need no longer envy the British Museum its collection of skeletons, "which," says the writer, "is a great point indeed."

ACCORDING to the Freeman's Journal, our new embassador to France has no religion to speak of. The Journal says: "A funny incident happened regarding Mr. McLane, named ambassador to France. Mr. McLane is an experienced diplomatist—very fit to go to the bastard misgovernment called the French Republic. He is not, and never was, a Catholic. If he has any religion to speak of, his Baltimore neighbors hav never known it. Yet papers called Catholic hav called him a Catholic, and waxing warmer, hav portrayed his Catholic piety from youth to hoary age."

DR. NEWMAN, who, in the palmy days of imperialism at Washington, was known as the court chaplain, is reported as saying of General Grant: "If the improvement in his health continues, the general will soon be able to go to bed like a Christian and believe there is a divine providence behind all this." The Sunday Mercury thinks this is queer theology, and asks: "Does the eloquent preacher intend the public to infer that his distinguished patient has heretofore gone to bed like a heathen and held the creed of Bob Ingersoll in regard to providences? It would be edifying to know just what is the theological difference between Dr. Newman and the heathen Ingersoll in the matter of going to bed."

A WRITER in the St. James's Gazelle says that the leaders of the English bar make very large incomes. "But," he adds, "I doubt at this moment if there is any man who is really making more than £20,000 a year. It is within my knowledge that the late Mr. Benjamin considered it a very good average year when he had cleared £15,000. But there are men at present, without mentioning names, who certainly make more than did Mr. Benjamin, who was not greedy over fees, and who would not take cases to which he could not attend. Other men are not so scrupulous, and I dare say there may be five-and-twenty counsel who are clearing from £10,000 to £20,000 a year. There are at least twice as many who will be making from £2,000 to £10,000. If incomes of this kind were not to be made, few men of talent would go to the bar at all. But a little moderate calculation will show that these seventy-five prosperous gentlemen earn nearly £700,000 a year, to be deducted from the average of their struggling brethren."

THE beneficent effects of Christianity in Austria are shown in this dispatch from Vienna, dated April 12th: "The Easter week has been a bloody one. It is well known that the whole anti-Semitic agitation, specially in Hungary, is founded on the assertion that the Jews need the blood of Christians for the Easter festivities, and for that purpose kill Christian girls or boys. To that agitation must be ascribed this year three Easter murders. In Cracow a girl was killed by a Christian couple in the cellar of a Jewish house. Through accident the bloody deed was detected, and the fact established that the murder was committed for the purpose of stirring up an anti-Semitic riot. The plan miscarried, but the poor girl is dead. In the Liptoer comitat, in Hungary, a fourteen-year old girl was induced to tell a story to the effect that she had been threatened by two old Jews with butcher's knives. Persecution of the Jews was the result; a number of Jewish business houses were destroyed, and several people were wounded. The girl afterward confessed that anti-Semitic agitators had induced her to tell that story. The most horrible of all is the third case. A state official, named Valentics, chose the Jewish Easter for the purpose of killing his sweetheart, Veghpeczecd. The motiv of the deed was jealousy. He murdered the beautiful girl, who was twenty years old, by ripping her open. The deed was done in the house of a Jewish dentist, where the girl lived. Rosa Buday, the little eight-year-old cousin of the murdered girl, witnessed the act. The brutal murderer, noticing the little girl, also seized the child and cut her throat. The murderer then fled, and the anti-Semites of Budapesth declared the Jews responsible for the murder, for it was the Jewish Easter, they said, and they needed Christian blood. After two days of terrible excitement the murderer was captured. He confessed the deed, and it seems evident that he chose for his revengeful murder the Jewish Easter in order to cast suspicion upon the Jews. Most luckily the murderer was captured, else a formidable riot against the Jews would hav been the consequence."

MONCURE D. CONWAY writes from Paris to the San Francisco Sunday Chronicle: "Among the higher attractions of Paris just now are the lectures of Renan at the College of France, of which he is president. I do not think I hav heard anything so fine since Emerson went silent. Although no two men could be outwardly in stronger contrast, every perfection is related to every other. The old College of France is by no means adapted architecturally to the strange uses it has of late come to serve. For the one theological lecture that went on in every religious college for a thousand years the small lecture-room in which Renan lectures would hav been sufficintly commodious. A dozen or two neophytes dozing around the latest recital of the traditional dogma would appear to be implied in the plainness and proportions of this room. But now that a real master has appeared the room is crowded, overcrowded, so that many hav to stand, and some cannot get even standing room. When Renan enters he discloses no consciousness of the presence of two hundred gentlemen and ladies around him. He takes his seat and talks to the students making their notes on the long desk before him. He rises occasionally to illustrate the paleography of the scripture text on a blackboard, and then sits down again to his talk, his eyes never wandering beyond the book before him, or the class at hand. But how supreme is his art! All this time pearls are falling from his lips. The listeners are swayed by an enchantment as they witness the miracle. Even with my own poor knowledge of French, (though aided, perhaps, by some familiarity with his subject), the pure academic language of Renan, illumined by his poetry and the sweetness of his voice, is able to carry his meaning to me. Unquestionably Renan is the finest writer of the French—if not, indeed, of any language—now living, and this unwritten talk of his is as clear, simple, and finished as his writings. No wonder that the French Academy had to accept him despite his sweeping heresies. That academy exists for the preservation of the French language, for its perfection. And in the use of his language Renan has no equal. But what shall one think of the choice of such an arch-heretic for the presidency of the College of France? Well, Renan was about the only choice. A priest being out of the question, it would be difficult to find among the scholars of France any other who has enough interest in religion to study its history and literature, and enough sympathy with old forms and traditions to deal tenderly with them. Renan is such a skeptic that it is hard to make out whether he is even a Theist, yet when his friend Littre, the Positivist, was buried with Catholic rites and the aspersoir was handed around, Renan did not hesitate to sprinkle holy water on the coffin. There was a murmur of 'Shame!' among the angry Free-thinkers present, but it was not a mere complaisance on the part of Renan; it was a characteristic incident in the career of one who sympathizes with mankind in the decline of their faith. To him, indeed, the old beliefs are dead, but he tolls the bell solemnly for them, and sprinkles holy water over them, and will hav them laid to rest with soft music. Then he will rehearse their legends, and interpret their poetry, and beguile the mourners as well as he can with the romance and fable of what can no more be believed literally."

News of the Week.

LAST Saturday 5,000 emigrants landed at this port.

DAN MACE, the celebrated horse-trainer, died in this city last Sunday.

ARRESTS for breach of the Sunday law in this city are gradually dwindling in number. Last Sunday there were but thirteen.

MR. FRELINGHUYSEN'S deadly complaint is making steady progress. His death is looked for at any moment, though there is a possibility of life continuing for several days.

THIRTY-TWO New York boys were examined one day last week for cadet vacancies, at West Point and Annapolis, but only nine out of the number were found to be physically sound.

